Let me just emphasize that it is not the intention of this amendment and I do not believe that it is a provision which would have the effect of giving a blank check to the U.S. Postal Service. Quite the contrary. I think under present practice, by giving the U.S. Postal Service an automatic $920 million subsidy and then going through the practice every year where when they find out they do not have enough money to pay their bills, they go through the charade of "maybe" increasing the rates and "maybe" cutting out Saturday deliveries and "maybe" cutting out some small post offices to try to force the Congress at the end of the year, as was done in 1976, to come up with additional appropriations. I believe the procedure provided in the amendment would be that we give the agency authority to come up with a recommendation but we retain for the Congress the authority to appropriate the funds necessary to pay for these public service functions.

Mr. HANLEY. We are not providing $800 million per se to the agency. We are authorizing a figure that conceivably could rise to $800 million subject to the authorization process.

The gentleman has alluded to the possibility of various service cutbacks. We provide for that in the bill in that any universal service cutback would be subject to review and possible veto by either House, so we provide for that.

The language of the bill as written is very emphatic in that the agency is charged with the responsibility of providing the traditional scope and quality of postal service within this total limitation. The agency is also, as the gentleman knows, required to come up to the Post Office and Civil Service Committee each year with a budget review process for a colloquy on it and during the course of that we have the opportunity to question any expenditure that the agency might have made or might intend to make in the next fiscal year. We provide in H.R. 7700 for congressional review of any capital expenditure in excess of $9 million.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. HANLEY) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HANLEY was allowed to proceed for an additional 2 minutes.)

Mr. HANLEY. So we have built into the language of this bill so many restrictions to assure that the Congress has an excellent handle on every expenditure that the agency makes.

The gentleman will recall a great deal of talk about the Alexander amendment in 1976 and a great deal of support for the Alexander amendment. We have met the intent of the Alexander amendment in the language of this bill.

So again I feel badly that I have to oppose the gentleman from Illinois. I hope that he understands my position. I hope very much that the House will see fit to defeat the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CORCORAN).

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CORCORAN).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois) there were—ayes 19, noes 19.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 203, noes 189, not voting 42, as follows:

[Roll No. 197]

AYES—203

Abdnor	Coleman	Gibbons
Ambro	Collins, Tex.	Gilman
Andrews, N.C.	Conable	Glickman
Archer	Conte	Goldwater
Armstrong	Corcoran	Goodling
Ashley	Coughlin	Gore
Badham	Crane	Gradison
Bafalis	Cunningham	Grassley
Baucus	D'Amours	Gudger
Bauman	Daniel, Dan	Guyer
Beard, Tenn.	Daniel, R. W.	Hagedorn
Bedell	Davis	Hall
Benjamin	de la Garza	Hammer-schmidt
Bennett	Derwinski
Blanchard	Devine	Hansen
Boland	Dickinson	Harsha
Bowen	Dicks	Heckler
Breckinridge	Dornan	Heftel
Brinkley	Drinan	Hillis
Brooks	Duncan, Tenn.	Holt
Broomfield	Edwards, Ala.	Horton
Brown, Mich.	Edwards, Okla.	Hubbard
Brown, Ohio	Emery	Ichord
Broyhill	English	Jeffords
Buchanan	Erlenborn	Johnson, Colo.
Burke, Fla.	Evans, Del.	Jones, Tenn.
Burleson, Tex.	Fenwick	Kelly
Butler	Findley	Kemp
Byron	Fish	Ketchum
Caputo	Flowers	Kildee
Carr	Forsythe	Kindness
Carter	Fountain	Lagomarsino
Clausen, Don H.	Frenzel	Latta
	Frey	Leach
Clawson, Del	Gammage	Lehman
Cleveland	Gephardt	Lent
Cohen	Giaimo	Livingston
Lloyd, Calif.	Murphy, Pa.	Shuster
Long, Md.	Myers, Gary	Simon
Lott	Myers, John	Smith, Nebr.
Lujan	Natcher	Snyder
McClory	Nedzi	Spence
McCloskey	Nichols	Stangeland
McCormack	O'Brien	Stanton
McDade	Pettis	Stark
McDonald	Pickle	Stockman
McEwen	Poage	Stratton
McKay	Pressler	Studds
Maguire	Pritchard	Symms
Mahon	Pursell	Taylor
Mann	Quayle	Thone
Markey	Quie	Treen
Marks	Quillen	Trible
Marlenee	Railsback	Vander Jagt
Marriott	Regula	Walgren
Martin	Rhodes	Walker
Mathis	Robinson	Walsh
Mattox	Rogers	Wampler
Mazzoli	Rousselot	Watkins
Michel	Rudd	White
Mikva	Russo	Whitehurst
Miller, Ohio	Sarasin	Whitten
Mitchell, N.Y.	Satterfield	Wilson, Bob
Moffett	Sawyer	Winn
Montgomery	Scheuer	Wydler
Moore	Schroeder	Wylie
Moorhead, Calif.	Schulze	Yates
	Sebelius	Young, Alaska
Mottl	Sharp

NOES—189

Addabbo	Foley	Nix
Akaka	Ford, Tenn.	Nolan
Allen	Fowler	Nowak
Ammerman	Fraser	Oakar
Anderson, Calif.	Fuqua	Oberstar
	Garcia	Obey
Andrews, N. Dak.	Gaydos	Ottinger
	Ginn	Panetta
Annunzio	Gonzalez	Patten
Applegate	Green	Patterson
AuCoin	Hamilton	Pattison
Baldus	Hanley	Pease
Barnard	Hannaford	Pepper
Beard, R.I.	Harkin	Perkins
Beilenson	Harrington	Pike
Bevill	Harris	Preyer
Biaggi	Hawkins	Price
Bingham	Hefner	Rahall
Blouin	Hightower	Rangel
Boggs	Holland	Reuss
Bolling	Hollenbeck	Rinaldo
Bonior	Holtzman	Risenhoover
Bonker	Howard	Roe
Breaux	Huckaby	Rooney
Brodhead	Hughes	Rose
Brown, Calif.	Ireland	Rosenthal
Burgener	Jacobs	Roybal
Burke, Mass.	Jenkins	Ryan
Burlison, Mo.	Jenrette	Santini
Burton, John	Johnson, Calif.	Seiberling
Burton, Phillip	Jones, N.C.	Shipley
Carney	Jones, Okla.	Sikes
Cavanaugh	Jordan	Skelton
Chisholm	Kastenmeier	Skubitz
Clay	Kazen	Slack
Collins, Ill.	Keys	Smith, Iowa
Conyers	Kostmayer	Solarz
Corman	Krebs	St Germain
Cornell	LaFalce	Staggers
Cornwell	Le Fante	Steed
Cotter	Lederer	Steers
Danielson	Leggett	Stokes
Delaney	Levitas	Stump
Dellums	Lloyd, Tenn.	Traxler
Dent	Long, La.	Tsongas
Derrick	Lundine	Van Deerlin
Dodd	McFall	Vanik
Downey	McHugh	Vento
Duncan, Oreg.	Meeds	Volkmer
Early	Metcalfe	Waxman
Eckhardt	Meyner	Weaver
Edgar	Mikulski	Weiss
Edwards, Calif.	Miller, Calif.	Whalen
Eilberg	Mineta	Wilson, C. H.
Ertel	Minish	Wilson, Tex.
Evans, Colo.	Mitchell, Md.	Wirth
Evans, Ga.	Moakley	Wolff
Evans, Ind.	Mollohan	Wright
Fary	Moorhead, Pa.	Yatron
Fascell	Murphy, Ill.	Young, Mo.
Fisher	Murphy, N.Y.	Young, Tex.
Fithian	Murtha	Zablocki
Flippo	Myers, Michael	Zeferetti
Florio	Neal

NOT VOTING—42

Alexander	Ashbrook	Brademas
Anderson, Ill.	Aspin	Burke, Calif.

Cederberg	McKinney	Spellman
Chappell	Madigan	Steiger
Cochran	Milford	Teague
Diggs	Moss	Thompson
Dingell	Richmond	Thornton
Flood	Roberts	Tucker
Flynt	Rodino	Udall
Ford, Mich.	Roncalio	Ullman
Hyde	Rostenkowski	Waggonner
Kasten	Runnels	Whitley
Krueger	Ruppe	Wiggins
Luken	Sisk	Young, Fla.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Runnels for, with Mr. Teague against.

Mr. Young of Florida for, with Mrs. Spellman against.

Mr. Chappell for, with Mr. Krueger against.

Mr. Hyde for, with Mrs. Burke of California against.

Mr. Kasten for, with Mr. Richmond against.

Mr. Ashbrook for, with Mr. Whitley against.

Mr. Cederberg for, with Mr. Udall against.

Mr. Cochran of Mississippi for, with Mr. Flood against.

Mr. Thompson for, with Mr. Ruppe against.

Messrs. RHODES, DE LA GARZA, D'AMOURS, ASHLEY, DICKS, LLOYD of California, BAUCUS, WALGREN, and McCORMACK changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 3? If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POSTAL RATE COMMISSION BUDGETS

SEC. 4. Section 3604(d) of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The Commission shall prepare and submit to the President an annual budget of the expenses of the Commission. The President shall include the budget of the Commission, with his recommendations but without revision, as a separate item in the budget required by section 11 of title 31 to be transmitted to the Congress.".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 4? If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIZE AND WEIGHT LIMITS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 3682 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3682. Size and weight limits

"(a) The maximum size of mail, other than letter mail, is 100 inches, in girth and length combined, and the maximum weight is 70 pounds.

"(b) The Postal Service may establish size and weight limits for letter mail in the same manner prescribed for changes in the mail classification schedule under subchapter II of this chapter.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall not become effective until the zone rate for a parcel measuring over 84 inches in length and girth combined is at least equal to the rate for a 25-pound parcel addressed to the same zone.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 5 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 5? If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGAL REPRESENTATION

SEC. 6. (a) Section 409(d) of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(d)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Attorney General shall furnish the Postal Service, under section 411 of this title, any legal representation the Postal Service may require. With the prior consent of the Attorney General, the Postal Service may represent itself through its attorneys or through attorneys whose services may be obtained by contract.

"(2) The Postal Service may represent itself without obtaining the consent of the Attorney General in litigation arising under chapter 36 of this title through its attorneys or through attorneys whose services are obtained by contract.".

(b)(1) Subchapter I of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 3605. Legal representation

"The Commission may represent itself without obtaining the consent of the Attorney General in litigation arising under chapter 36 of this title through its attorneys or through attorneys whose services are obtained by contract.".

(2) The table of sections for subchapter I of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"3605. Legal representation.".

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 6 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I believe the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI) has an amendment.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, is the amendment to section 5 or section 6?

Mr. DERWINSKI. If the gentleman will yield, my amendment is to section 6.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I just asked unanimous consent that section 6 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point, so that the gentleman could offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether there are amendments at the desk to section 5?

The CHAIRMAN. The chair will state that the Clerk has read section 5.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I understand that; but if we go on to section 6, that preempts the possibility of offering an amendment to section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Clerk has already read section 5. We are now on section 6.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California that section 6 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DERWINSKI

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DERWINSKI: On page 8, beginning in line 12, strike out section 6, headed "Legal Representation", in its entirety and redesignate the succeeding sections accordingly.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DERWINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if this is the amendment that would strike out the section on legal representation?

Mr. DERWINSKI. Yes.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. If the gentleman will yield further, may I say to the gentleman that the only reason this is in the bill is that this is the one thing we did for the Postal Service. I think the gentleman has a good amendment. The administration has proposed this. I know the gentleman is representing the administration here on the floor. I personally will accept the amendment.

Mr. DERWINSKI. In that case, Mr. Chairman, as I understand the situation, my distinguished friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON) has properly advised the House that this is the administration's amendment; and as a loyal—temporary, at least—spokesman for the administration, I am pleased to offer it, and I gather I have the support from a number of the Members.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DERWINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want to commend the gentleman on his wisdom in offering this amendment. It is a great amendment. It is in line with what the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI) usually has to offer, and this Committee is delighted to accept it.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I do want the record to show, though, I am not a complete rubberstamp for the administration. I have very strong views about our Middle East and Cyprus policies.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to strike from the bill section 6 which would permit the Postal Service to represent itself in litigation of matters arising out of postal rates and classification without prior consultation or consent of the Attorney General. The effect of my amendment is to retain the existing law in title 39, United States Code, under which the Department of Justice furnishes the Postal Service such legal services as it may require.

The Department of Justice strongly opposes the language contained in H.R. 7700 and the Hanley substitute as an unjustified dilution of the traditional principle of maintaining central litigating control of Government legal matters within the Department of Justice.

By striking section 6 from the bill, the Attorney General's direction and control of litigation would be preserved.

Complaints about the fragmented legal affairs of the Government began in 1790, but it was not until 1870 when the Congress, concerned with the need to centralize control over Government litigation, created the Department of Justice, specifying that the Attorney General would supervise the conduct and proceedings of all "attorneys and counselors employed in any cases or business in which the United States may be concerned."

There are several reasons why centralized control of the Government's litigation is important.

First, the Government must take uniform legal positions, not only because uniformity is expected by both the bench and the bar, but also because the legal affairs of the agencies and departments must be conducted with some degree of predictability and certainty.

Second, lower court litigation must be governed in such a way that it can be better handled if it reaches the Supreme Court.

Third, the Government must be in the position to choose cases which put the Government's position in the best possible light.

And a fourth reason for centralized control and for supporting my amendment is that the President has directed the Office of Management and Budget's Reorganization Project to review the Federal Government's system for providing legal advice and representation to the various departments, agencies, and regulatory commissions. This report is expected to be presented to the Congress this summer and should contain the administration's answer to the question of how best to conduct the Government's legal business.

Therefore, the provisions of section 6 contained in the Hanley substitute are premature and unwise and should be set aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORGANIZATION OF THE POSTAL SERVICE

SEC. 7. (a) Chapter 2 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"Chapter 2.—ORGANIZATION

"§ 201. United States Postal Service

"There is established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the Government of the United States, the United States Postal Service.

"§ 202. Board of Governors

"(a) The Board of Governors of the Postal Service shall be composed of 9 Governors appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than 5 Governors may be adherents of the same political party. The President shall designate the Chairman from among the Governors serving on the Board. The Governors shall be chosen to represent the public interest generally, and shall not be representatives of specific interests using the Postal Service, and may be removed only for cause. Each Governor shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year plus $300 a day for not more than 30 days of meetings each year and shall be reimbursed for travel and reasonable expenses incurred in attending meetings of the Board. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to limit the number of days of meetings each year to 30 days.

"(b) The terms of the 9 Governors shall be 9 years, except that the terms of the 9 Governors first taking office shall expire as designated by the President at the time of appointment, 1 at the end of 1 year, 1 at the end of 2 years, 1 at the end of 3 years, 1 at the end of 4 years, 1 at the end of 5 years, 1 at the end of 6 years, 1 at the end of 7 years, 1 at the end of 8 years, and 1 at the end of 9 years, following the appointment of the first of them. Any Governor appointed to fill a vacancy before the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall serve for the remainder of such term.

"(c) The Governors are authorized and directed to establish procedures for the continuing review of postal operations, finances, and practices. The Governors shall retain the services of such officers and employees as they deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this subsection, and the officers and employees so appointed shall have complete access to all postal data, information, and operations. Such officers and employees shall be responsible solely to the Governors, and may not be under any jurisdiction or control of the Postmaster General or the Postal Service. There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this subsection.

"(d) Vacancies in the Board, as long as there are sufficient members to form a quorum, shall not impair the powers of the Board under this title. The Board shall act upon majority vote of those members who are present, and any 6 members present shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business by the Board. No officer or employee of the United States may serve concurrently as a Governor. A Governor may hold any other office or employment not inconsistent or in conflict with his duties, responsibilities, and powers as an officer of the Government of the United States in the Postal Service.

"§ 203. Postmaster General

"The chief executive officer of the Postal Service is the Postmaster General, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall serve for a term of 4 years, which shall coincide with the term of office of the President. A Postmaster General appointed to fill a vacancy shall serve for the remainder of the term to which his predecessor was appointed. A Postmaster General may continue to serve after his term expires until his successor has qualified.

"§ 204. Deputy Postmaster General

"The deputy chief executive officer of the Postal Service is the Deputy Postmaster General, who shall be appointed by, and serve at the pleasure of, the Postmaster General.

"§ 205. Assistant Postmasters General; General Counsel; Judicial Officer

"There shall be within the Postal Service a General Counsel, such number of Assistant Postmasters General as the Postmaster General shall consider appropriate, and a Judicial Officer. The General Counsel, the Assistant Postmasters General, and the Judicial Officer shall be appointed by, and serve at the pleasure of, the Postmaster General. The Judicial Officer shall perform such quasi-judicial duties, not inconsistent with chapter 36 of this title, as the Postmaster General may designate. The Judicial Officer shall be the agency for the purposes of the requirements of chapter 5 of title 5, to the extent that functions are delegated to him by the Postmaster General.

"§ 206. General authority of Postmaster General

"The Postmaster General shall direct and control the expenditures and review the practices and policies of the Postal Service and perform other functions and duties prescribed by this title.

"§ 207. Seal.

"The seal of the Postal Service shall be filed by the Postmaster General in the Office of the Secretary of State, judicially noticed, affixed to all commissions of officers of the Postal Service, and used to authenticate records of the Postal Service.

"§ 208. Reservation of powers

"Congress reserves the power to alter, amend, or repeal any or all of the sections of this title, but no such alteration, amendment, or repeal shall impair the obligation of any contract made by the Postal Service under any power conferred by this title.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 2 of title 39, United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"Sec.
"201. United States Postal Service.
"202. Board of Governors.
"203. Postmaster General.
"204. Deputy Postmaster General.
"205. Assistant Postmasters General; General Counsel; Judicial Officer.
"206. General authority of Postmaster General.
"207. Seal.
"208. Reservation of powers.".

(c) (1) Section 402 of title 39, United States Code, is repealed.

(2) The item relating to section 402 in the table of sections for chapter 4 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Delegation of authority" and inserting in lieu thereof "Repealed".

(d) Section 1011 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the word "Board" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Postmaster General".

(e) Section 2402 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2402. Annual report

"The Postmaster General shall submit to the President and the Congres an annual report on the conditions and operations of the Postal Service.".

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 7 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CORCORAN OF ILLINOIS

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois: Page 9, strike out line 15 and all that follows through line 15 on page 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following: Sec. 7 (a)(1) Section 202 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 202. Postmaster General

"The chief executive officer of the Postal Service is the Postmaster General, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall serve for a term of four years, which shall coincide with the term of office of the President. A Postmaster General appointed to fill a vancancy shall serve for the remainder of the term to which his predecessor was appointed. A Postmaster General may continue to serve after his term expires until his successor has qualified.".

(2) The table of sections for chapter 2 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 202 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"202. Postmaster General.".

(b)(1) Section 203 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 203. Deputy Postmaster General

"The deputy chief executive officer of the Postal Service is the Deputy Postmaster General, who shall be appointed by, and serve at the pleasure of, the Postmaster General.".

(2) The table of sections for chapter 2 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 203 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"203. Deputy Postmaster General.".

(c)(1) Section 205 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 205. General authority of Postmaster General

"The Postmaster General shall direct and control the expenditures and review the practices and policies of the Postal Service and perform other functions and duties prescribed by this title.".

(2) The table of sections for chapter 2 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 205 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"205. General authority of Postmaster General.".

(d)(1)(A) Section 102 of title 39, United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"§ 101. Definition

"As used in this title, 'Postal Service' means the United States Postal Service established by section 201 of this title.".

(B) The table of sections for chapter 1 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 102 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"102. Definition.".

(2) Section 204 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Board" and inserting in lieu thereof "Postmaster General".

(3) Section 207 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Board" and inserting in lieu thereof "Postmaster General".

(4)(A) Title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out section 402.

(B) The table of sections for chapter 4 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 402.

(5) Section 1001(d) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "of the Board or".

(6) Section 1002(a) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Governor or".

(7) Section 1011 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Board" and inserting in lieu thereof "Postmaster General".

And redesignate the following paragraphs accordingly.

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to accept this amendment on this side.

I think it is a good amendment. Is this the one which abolishes the Board of Governors?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. That is correct, and I thank the gentleman for his support.

Mr. Chairman, the reason I offer this amendment is that the function of the Board of Governors will no longer be necessary with the passage of H.R. 7700.

As reported out of committee, H.R. 7700 eliminated the Board of Governors, and I would like to see that provision reinstated. The question of whether or not there should be a Board of Governors seems to me to be a simple one. I am sure all of my colleagues join me in supporting the elimination of unnecessary bureaucracy, and my amendment will do just that.

The Board of Governors, in Mr. HANLEY's amendment, would be appointed by and responsibe to the President, and would serve an advisory and oversight function for the Postmaster General.

However, the Postmaster General is also an appointee of the President and is directly responsible to him, so I fail to see the necessity of the Board of Governors. The Postmaster General is capable of performing the duties of the Board of Governors, and will presumably be privy to the same policy decisions of the President as will the Board of Governors. In addition, the Postmaster General will be free to seek advice from any quarter that might be helpful. Thus, I feel that we are simply encouraging the proliferation of unnecessary bureaucracy that can only serve to duplicate the functions of the Postmaster General and offer an additional shield against assigning responsibility for the operation and policies of the Postal Service.

Furthermore the revised bill not only authorizes an unnecessary layer of bureaucracy, but authorizes unlimited staff and unlimited funds with which this Board can operate. Thus, it is essentially an authorization to permit uncontrolled growth in the Board of Governor's office.

Inasmuch as the Postmaster General is directly responsible to the President and capable of performing the duties of the Board, I see no reason why the House of Representatives should authorize the continuance of the Board of Governors, let alone unlimited staff and funds to work with. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this really is not that Earth-shaking an amendment since it applies to a handful of people, the nine people on the Board of Governors. However, there is a very practical consideration here; and again, I reluctantly am in a position where I am addressing myself especially to the majority side of the aisle because, as the majority understands, its man is in the White House.

The facts of life are that the Postal Service is not a political asset to anyone. The Postal Service is a political liability since so many people complain about the delays and problems in the service provided by the Postal Service.

When you remove the Board of Governors, you then remove the buffer between an irate public and the President. To be quite honest, if I were here being partisan, I would want to support this amendment. I do not think that, of all the problems the President of the United States has, he should have to be again saddled with the label of being the man who is misdirecting the Postal Service each time someone is frustrated with the Postal Service.

The President of the United States is not the man who is misdirecting the mail in Amarillo, Tex., or Miami, Fla., or wherever else it is being misdirected. I think that under the new management we have in the Postal Service, the Board of Governors has served a practical function. It has kept the political problem away from the Postal Service and, quite frankly, I say to the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle that this is the kind of amendment that they should have passed in 1973 and 1974. In 1978, I do not think this is a practical amendment for the majority to be supporting.

If the majority wants its President, with all the problems he has with energy, the Middle East, the Horn of Africa, the economy, social security, farm parity—if the majority also wants to put in his hands the hot potato of the Postal Service, fine, but if you want to keep the President at a proper distance from the complaints concerning the Postal Service, which he cannot solve and which he cannot control, then I think the majority should keep this Board of Governors.

If the majority wants to be practical in a political sense, it should protect its President by retaining the Board of Governors.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DERWINSKI. I yield.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Will the gentleman please tell me one thing the Board of Governors has done since the Postal Service has been in effect—one positive thing that they have done which would give us justification for keeping the Board of Governors?

Mr. DERWINSKI. They have set the general policy of the Postal Service. They have followed, of course, the law under requirements as it relates to the rate requests submitted to the Rate Commission. In other words, they fulfill the obligations they have under the law.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Have they not really just done what the Postmaster General told them to do?

Mr. DERWINSKI. Yes, but positively. They have been cooperating with the Postmaster General. They have not been an adversary group. But the point I am trying to make is this: Under this bill, we provide for Presidential appointment of the Postmaster General to coincide with the term of office of the President. This comes close to putting the direct spotlight of responsibility on the President. Now, if we remove the Board of Governors the President—the White House—has this extra headache. The practicality of the present law is that the President cannot be blamed for any malfunction of the Postal Service.

At the risk of sounding like a pessimist, and I really am not, I would advise the ladies and gentlemen of the House that the Postal Service will never be acceptable to the public. The public expects perfection. The Postal Service will never reach it. No President will ever be able to get the post office functioning perfectly. The Lord himself would probably fail if he tried it. As a result, we are moving back to the point where there is an implication of political control, Presidential control of the post office. This is not good politics; it is not good management.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CORCORAN).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POSTAL RATES AND MAIL CLASSIFICATION DECISIONS

SEC. 8. (a)(1) Section 3623(a) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "make a recommended" and inserting in lieu thereof "render a".

(2) Section 3623(b) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out "submit" the first place it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "render";

(B) by striking out "submit to the Governors" and inserting in lieu thereof "render"; and

(C) by striking out "recommended".

(3) Section 3623(c) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "make a recommended" and inserting in lieu thereof "render a".

(b)(1) The heading for section 3624 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Recommended decisions" and inserting in lieu thereof "Decisions".

(2) Section 3624(a) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "recommended" and inserting in lieu thereof "render".

(3) Section 3624(c)(1) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out "recommended" the first place it appears therein;

(B) by striking out "transmit its recommended" and inserting in lieu thereof "render its"; and

(C) by striking out "to the Governors under subsection (d) of this section".

(4) Section 3624(d) of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The Commission shall determine the date or dates on which the new rates, fees, mail classification schedule, and changes in the schedule shall become effective. The decisions of the Commission shall be final.".

(c)(1) Title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out section 3625.

(2) The matter describing section 3624 and section 3625 in the table of sections for subchapter II of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"3624. Decisions of Commission.
"3625. Repealed.".

(d)(1) The first sentence of section 3628 of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out "decision of the Governors to approve, allow under protest, or modify the recommended"; and

(B) by inserting "under section 3624(c) of this title" immediately after "Postal Rate Commission".

(2) The second sentence of section 3628 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "and the Governors".

(3) The last sentence of section 3628 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "or Governors".

(e)(1) Section 3641(a) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out "transmit a recommended" and inserting in lieu thereof "render a"; and

(B) by striking out "to the Governors".

(2) Section 3641(d) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out "transmits its recommended" and inserting in lieu thereof "renders its";

(B) by striking out "to the Governors under section 3624(d) of this title"; and

(C) by striking out "Governors" and inserting in lieu thereof "Commission".

(3) The first sentence of section 3641(e) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out "transmit to the Governors" and inserting in lieu thereof "render a decision"; and

(B) by striking out "recommended".

(4) The second sentence of section 3641(e) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "transmitted its recommended decision to the Governors" and inserting in lieu thereof "rendered its decision."

(f) Section 3684 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Governors" and inserting in lieu thereof "Postmaster General".

(g) Section 5206(c) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Board" each place it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "Postmaster General".

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 8 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 8? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST OFFICE CLOSINGS AND CONSOLIDATIONS

SEC. 9. (a) Section 404(b)(1) of the title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Postal Service shall conduct a hearing relating to a proposed closing or consolidation during the 60-day period in the area which would be affected by a proposed closings or consolidation.".

(b) Section 404(b)(2)(A) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the word "effect" a comma and the words "including social effect,".

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 9 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 9? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURPLUS AND EXCESS PROPERTY

SEC. 10. (a) Section 410(b)(4) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (E);

(2) by redesignating subparagraph (F) as subparagraph (G); and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (E) the following new paragraph:

"(F) chapter 10 (relating to management and disposal of Government property), except that the provisions of such chapter shall apply only to property held by the Postal Service at the time of its establishment by section 201 of this title, as enacted by section 2 of the Act of August 12, 1970, Public Law 91–375; and".

(b) Section 401(5) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by inserting before "to acquire" the following: "subject to the provisions of section 410(b)(4)(F) of this title,".

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON OF California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 10 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 10? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

REVIEW OF PROPOSED CAPITAL INVESTMENT

SEC. 11. (a) Chapter 20 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 20.11 Review of proposed capital investments

(a) The Postal Service may not carry out any capital investment project having a total estimated cost exceeding $9,000,000 unless the Postal Service, before commencing such project, transmits a report to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House of Representatives. Such report shall contain a detailed description of the project involved, together with a justification for such project.

"(b) The Committee on Governmental affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House of Representatives, upon receiving any report from the Postal Service under subsection (a) of this section, shall review the project involved and conduct such hearings with respect to such project as each committee considers necessary. Each committee shall transmit recommendations to the Postal Service with respect to such project no later than 4 months after receiving a report under subsection (a) of this section.

"(c) The Postal Service may not commence any capital investment project with respect to which a report has been transmitted by the Postal Service under subsection (a) of this section until the Postal Service has received recommendations with respect to such project from the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House of Representatives under subsection (b) of this section. The Postal Service shall take such recommendations into account in making its final determination with respect to carrying out the project involved.

"(d) For purposes of this section, the term 'capital investment project' means any project the cost of which is not properly chargeable, under generally accepted accounting principles, as an expense of operation and maintenance.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 20 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"20.11. Review of proposed capita investments.".

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 11 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 11? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRANSPORATION OF MAIL BY VESSEL

SEC. 12. (a) Section 5605 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 5605. Transportation of mail on United States vessels

"(a) The Postal Service shall contract for the use of vessels of United States registry to originate any international sea transportation of mail of the United States in any case in which the common carrier which operates or controls such vessel is engaged in the provision of regular transportation services to the destination specified by the Postal Service. The Postal Service shall not be required to enter into any such contract if no such vessels are available at the time the Postal Service seeks to arrange for the transportation of such mail.

"(b) Any rate charged for the sea transportation of mail of the United States under subsection (a) of this section shall comply with the provisions of the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended. Any such rate shall not be less than the sum of—

"(1) the fully distributed costs of common carriers; and

"(2) a fair and reasonable profit.

"(c) In any case in which 2 or more common carriers seek to enter into a contract offered by the Postal Service under subsection (a) of this section, the Postal Service shall award such contract by competitive bidding. The duration of any such contract may not exceed 1 year.

"(d) The Postal Service shall not give any preference to any common carrier upon the basis of length, height, or width of cargo containers. No advertisement or invitation to bid for the carriage of mail may specify carriage of mail in containers of any specified length, height, or width.

"(e) For purposes of this section, 'common carrier' means any common carrier, other than any ferry boat running on regular routes, engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property between the United States (or any of its districts, territories, or possessions) and any foreign country, whether in the import or export trade, except that a cargo boat commonly referred to as an ocean tramp shall not be considered to be a common carrier.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 56 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 5605 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new item:

"5605. Transportation of mail on United States vessels.".

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 12 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 12? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RATES FOR BOOKS, FILMS, AND OTHER MATERIALS

SEC. 13. (a) Section 3683(b) of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, any—

"(1) book (including any book published or otherwise issued as a supplement to any other book) which—

"(A) consists exclusively of reading matter, schloarly bibliography, or reading matter with incidental blank spaces for notations; and

"(B) contains no advertising, other than incidental announcements of books;

"(2) 16 millimeter film, narrow-width film, film strips, transparencies for projection, slides, or micro film;

"(3) sound recording;

"(4) museum materials, specimens, or collections;

"(5) scientific or mathematical kit, instrument, or other device;

"(6) teaching aid, guide, map, or other interpretative material for use in conjunction with any item specified in paragraph (1) through paragraph (5); and may be mailed at the rates currently in effect for mail matter specified in former section 4554(b)(1) of this title in any case in which any such item is mailed to or from any institution, organization, or association specified in subparagraph (A) or subparagraph (B) of former section 4554(b)(1) of this title or to or from any school, college, university, or library.".

"(7) catalog or similar publication which contains a listing of any item specified in paragraph (1) through paragraph (6);

(b) The catchline for section 3683 of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3683. Uniform rates for publications, films, and other materials".

(c) The table of sections for subchapter V of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item relating to section 3683 and inserting in lieu theref the following new item:

"3683. Uniform rates for publications, films, and other materials.".

Mr. HANLEY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 13 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 13? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. (a) Section 3661 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3661. Changes in postal services

"(a) When the Postal Service determines that there should be a change in the level or types of postal services, and such a change would have nationwide or substantially nationwide impact, a detailed statement of the proposed change, including estimates of impact upon the public, business mail users, service levels, postal finances, and postal employment shall be submitted to the Congress in accordance with this section.

"(b) No proposed change in the level of postal services shall become effective unless during the period of the first 60 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress (after the date on which the Postal Service transmits to the House of Representatives and to the Senate a document setting forth the text of the detailed statement of the proposed change) neither House adopts a postal service resolution referred to in subsection (e)(2) of this section.

"(c) Any document described in subsection (b) of this section shall be immediately referred in the House of Representatives to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and in the Senate to the Committee on Government Affairs.

"(d) For purposes of subsection (b) of this section—

"(1) continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment of Congress sine die; and

"(2) the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain are excluded in the computation of the 60-day period.

"(e)(1) The provisions of this section are enacted by the Congress—

"(A) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively, and they are deemed a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in that House in the case of postal service resolutions described in paragraph (2) of this subsection, and they supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

"(B) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules (so far as they relate to the procedure of that House) at any time, and in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'postal service resolution' refers to a joint resolution of either House of Congress—

(A) the effect of which is to prohibit the change in the level or type of postal services described in the document which is transmitted to the Congress pursuant to subsection (b) of this section; and

"(B) which is reported from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate, not later than 45 days after the date on which the document described in subsection (b) of this section relating to such change is transmitted to the Congress.

"(3) Any resolution upon being reported shall immediately be placed on the appropriate calendar.

"(4)(A) A motion in the House of Representatives to proceed to the consideration of any postal service resolution shall be highly privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

"(B) Debate in the House of Representatives on any postal service resolution shall be limited to not more than 6 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. A motion further to limit debate shall not be debatable. It shall not be in order to move to recommit any postal service resolution or to move to reconsider the vote by which any postal service resolution is agreed to or disagreed to.

"(C) Motions to postpone, made in the House of Representatives with respect to the consideration of any postal service resolution, and motions to proceed to the consideration of other business, shall be decided without debate.

"(D) All appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the Application of the Rules of the House of Representatives to the procedure relating to any postal service resolution shall be decided without debate.

"(E) Except to the extent specifically provided in the preceding provisions of this subsection, consideration of any postal service resolution shall be governed by the Rules of the House of Representatives applicable to other bills and resolutions in similar circumstances.

"(f)(1) For the purpose of this section, a change in the level or types of postal services includes—

"(A) a change in the number of days each week mail is delivered over letter carrier, rural, and star routes;

"(B) a change in the number of days each week and hours each day post offices are open to the public to transact business;

"(C) an increase in the periods of time used as the standard for the timely delivery of mail matter as of September 1, 1977;

"(D) a change in the standards which would further restrict the eligibility to receive mail by letter carrier, rural, or star route delivery; and

"(E) changes in other nationwide or substantially nationwide levels and types of postal services which have been provided to the public generally.

"(2) For purposes of this section, a nationwide or substantially nationwide change in service includes any such change which would have e ect in more than one geographic or administrative region established by the Postal Service.".

(b) The subchapter heading appearing immediately above section 3661 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"SUBCHAPTER IV.—CHANGES IN POSTAL SERVICES AND RATE AND SERVICE COMPLAINTS".

(c) The catchline appearing at the beginning of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the matter relating to subchapter IV and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SUBCHAPTER IV.—CHANGES IN POSTAL SERVICES AND RATE AND SERVICE COMPLAINTS

"3661. Changes in postal services.
"3662. Rate and service compalints.".

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 14 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 14? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. (a) Subchapter I of chapter 36 of title 39. United States Code, is amended by adding the following new section:

"§ 3606. Public disclosure of costs and subsidies

"(a) The Postal Rate Commission shall, by regulation, create procedures by which the public shall be apprised of the attributable cost and institutional cost of each class or subclass of mail or type of postal service, the costs actually paid by users and the subsidies which benefit such class or subclass of mail service.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) 'attributable cost' means those costs which vary with the volume of the class or subclass of mail or type of postal service over a period of not more than 3 years;

"(2) 'institutional cost' means those costs apportioned by section 3622(b) of this title minus the proportionate share of such costs which are attributable costs apportioned under section 3622(b)(2) by operation of section 3622(b)(1); and

"(3) 'subsidies' means the attributable costs plus the institutional costs minus the actual rate or fee paid by the mailer, and may be further broken down by the Commission into subsidies paid by other mail classes and subsidies paid out of appropriations, whether statutorily or administratively assigned.

"(c) The information, provided under regulations of the Commission by this section, shall be posted in all post offices, shall be required as an appendix to the notices required under section 3685 of this title, and shall otherwise be made available to the public for examination. The information shall be stated in a manner which is readily understandable, including breakdowns in cents and fractions of cents as to the average costs and subsidies of individual pieces of mail within a class or subclass.".

(b) The table of sections for subchapter I of chapter 36 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new item:

"§ 3606. Public disclosure of costs and subsidies.".

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 15 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 15? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POSTAL EXECUTIVE SALARIES

SEC. 16. (a) Section 1003(a) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out the third sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, no officer or employee shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of the maximum rate of basic pay then currently paid for GS–18 of the General Schedule of section 5332 of title 5.".

(b) Section 1003 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c), and by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) The maximum rate of compensation—

"(1) for the Postmaster General shall not exceed the rate of basic pay then currently in effect for level I of the Executive Schedule of section 5312 of title 5;

"(2) for the Deputy Postmaster General shall not exceed the rate of basic pay then currently in effect for level II of the Executive Schedule of section 5312 of title 5;

"(3) for not more than 6 Assistant Postmasters General, shall not exceed the rate of basic pay then currently in effect for level III of the Executive Schedule of section 5314 of title 5;

"(4) for the General Counsel, for the Chief Postal Inspector, and for not more than 5 regional Postmasters General, shall not exceed the rate of basic pay then currently in effect for level IV of the Executive Schedule of section 5315 of title 5; and

"(5) for not more than 10 other positions (as determined by the Postmaster General) shall not exceed the rate of basic pay then currently in effect for level V of the Executive Schedule of section 5316 of title 5.".

(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, any officer or employee of the Postal Service serving on the date of the enactment of this Act whose rate of compensation would, but for this paragraph, be reduced by reason of the limitations contained in section 1003 (a) or (b) of title 39, United States Code, as amended by this Act, may continue to receive compensation at the rate in effect on such date so long as such officer or employee continues without a break in service of more than 3 days to perform the duties of the position occupied on such date.

(2) A person employed by contract under section 1001(c) of title 39, United States Code, whose compensation would otherwise be reduced by reason of section 1003 of title 39, United States Code, as amended by this Act, may continue to receive compensation at the rate prescribed in the contract until term of employment in the contract expires. No contract under such section 1001(c) may be made, extended, or renewed at a rate of compensation in excess of the rates of basic pay prescribed under section 1003 of title 39, as amended by this Act.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 16 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 16? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. Section 1001(b) of title 39, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "Officers" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(1) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (2) and (3) of this subsection, officers"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) In making any appointment to the position of postmaster at any post office, the Postal Service shall give preference to—

"(A) an eligible employee in the post office where the vacancy occurs who has resided within the delivery area of that post office or within the city or town where the post office is located for not less than 1 year; or

"(B) an equally qualified individual who has resided within the delivery area of that post office, or within the city or town where the post office is located for not less than 1 year; over any individual who has not resided within the delivery area of that post office or the city or town where the post office is located, for at least 1 year.

"(3) The Postal Service shall publish in the Federal Register the qualifications for appointments under this subsection. Such qualifications shall not limit consideration to individuals who are employees of the Postal Service. The Postal Service shall provide adequate notice for a period of at least 30 days to postal patrons at the post office where a vacany occurs that any individual may apply for the position of postmaster under this subsection, and such notice shall include basic requirements, qualifications standards, and an explanation of selection procedures.".

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 17 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 17? There being none, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

SEC. 18. (a) Section 403(b) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) striking out the period at the end of paragraph (3), and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(2) adding the following new paragraph:

"(4) to develop and maintain a program of research and development to ensure a modern system of postal equipment and facilities. Beginning in fiscal year 1982, the annual expenditures of the research and development program shall be not less than 1 percent of total postal expenditures.".

(b) The Postal Service shall undertake a study of the feasibility and desirability of the Postal Service establishing a system for the electronic transmission of mail matter. The Postal Service shall report its findings and recommendations to the President and the Congress not later than December 31, 1979.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 18 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ROUSSELOT

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROUSSELOT: Page 34, after line 13, insert the following new sections and redesignate the subsequent sections accordingly:

PRIVATE CARRIAGE OF LETTERS

SEC. 18. (a) Chapter 6 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out sections 601 and 602 and by redesignating section 603 through section 606 as section 601 through section 604, respectively.

(b) The table of sections for chapter 6 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec.
"601. Searches authorized.
"602. Seizing and detaining letters.
"603. Searching vessels for letters.
"604. Disposition of seized mail.".

SEC. 19. (a)(1) Chapter 83 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out sections 1694, 1695, 1696, and 1697.

(2) The table of sections for chapter 83 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the items relating to sections 1694, 1695, 1696, and 1697.

(b) Section 1698 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "(other than letters or packages carried by private express)" after "cargo".

(c) Section 1699 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "except where carried by private express and" after "nearest post office," and after "under my power of control,".

Mr. ROUSSELOT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman what section this amendment is in?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, this amendment relates to first class mail.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. But what section is it in?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. This provides for a new section.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would repeal the private express statutes and open up first-class mail to competition from the private sector.

The amendment I am offering today is not unfamiliar to Members of this body. During debate on H.R. 8603, the so-called Postal Reorganization Act Amendments of 1975, my distinguished colleague on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, JIM HANLEY, a primary sponsor of H.R. 7700, opposed my amendment, saying:

Give this Postal Service a little time. We have the finest Postal Service in the world . . .

My amendment was defeated, Mr. HANLEY's bill (H.R. 8603) passed, and here we are again—trying to make the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 work.

That will not happen. H.R. 7700 is not the answer to the serious problems facing the U.S. Postal Service. However, I believe that the repeal of the private express statutes, bringing an end to the postal monopoly for first-class mail would introduce the stimulus of private competition into the nearly moribund body of the U.S. Postal Service.

Mr. Chairman, it is ironic that if we do not repeal the private express statutes today, modern technology will end the postal monopoly of first-class mail in a very few years without a fight. According to a study done by the Postal Service itself, the volume of first-class mail has been steadily reduced by industry and Government use of electronic mail, sometimes referred to as EFTS, or electronic funds transfer system.

It has been estimated that by 1985 over 40 percent of all first-class mail will be sent by electronic message. As my colleague, JIM HANLEY, well knows because he chairs the subcommittee which has held hearings on this question, 15 percent of all social security checks are already being electronically transferred directly to the recipient's bank. The postal study further reveals that by 1985, nearly 60 percent of all transactional first-class mail, the most highly profitable mail to the U.S. Postal Service, will be sent outside the postal system. This statistic is important because transactional mail contains the lucrative computerized and presorted billings and advertising flyers which are sent at the first of the month.

During hearings held before the Subcommittee on Postal Operations on April 6, 1977, Dr. Louis T. Rader, Chairman of the U.S. Postal Service Support Panel, Committee on Telecommunications, National Research Council, testified that the Support Panel has "reservations about the ability of the U.S. Postal Service to meet the Nation's need for a complete mail service in the future." I think this is an important comment because, historically, Americans have found faster and more efficient ways of transferring their messages. Thus, the postal monopoly on first-class mail will be eliminated in a kind of "natural selection," because private industry cannot afford the luxury of an inefficient, overly expensive postal system.

I urge my colleagues to consider the elimination of the postal monopoly of first-class mail. We have only to recognize what the alternatives will be—ever-increasing Federal subsidies, skyrocketing postal rates, and rapidly deteriorating service.

The statutory first-class postal monopoly has no economic justification. As John Haldi writes in the American Enterprise Institute study on the postal monopoly:

The monopoly is no longer an important source of government revenue and in no way promotes better or cheaper mail service. In fact, it probably impedes the development of better systems for delivering written communications.

Support for the repeal of the private express statutes is essential to any serious attempt to reform the Postal Service and save it from a bloody and expensive death.

Repealing the private express statutes is not the new and radical proposal some Members may believe it to be. The U.S. Department of Justice, in a January 1977, study, stated that—

Since their inception, the express laws and the postal monopoly have been a matter of some public policy concern.

The Justice Department study goes on to assert that—

There is little, if any, evidence that the Postal Service is in actuality a "natural monopoly," i.e., that its operations demonstrate pervasive declining average costs per unit of production to scale . . .

USPS is not a natural monopoly—if it were, it would not need the protection of the private express statutes, for over time, any competition would be inexorably vanquished by virtue of the laws of economics.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious, therefore, that the private express statutes continue to exist simply to protect a large, inefficient, costly bureaucracy. Some in the postal unions oppose this amendment because they rightly fear the competition which would occur with private enterprise should the repeal take place. The United Parcel Service experience has conclusively proven that it is possible, if not easy, to attract customers away from the U.S. Postal Service and take reasonable profits.

The U.S. Postal Service would eventually benefit from competition with private enterprise, as the telephone industry experience has indicated, and the American public would receive a broader—and cheaper—range of services.

It is time to make the Postal Service competitive with private enterprise. It is time to have tax revenues from private postal corporations coming into the Federal Treasury rather than billions going out to support an organization which has no pressure or reason to operate economically and efficiently.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes for the repeal of the private express statutes.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I would be less than candid if I did not say that I have some reservations about the Postal Service's interpretation of the private express statutes, but responsibly I have to remind the Members that the private express statutes are the heart of the U.S. Postal Service, and without it we cannot expect that agency to deliver universally with universal rates.

It is the intent of this committee immediately after the disposition of H.R. 7700 to move in the direction of hearings on the private express statutes to allow the opportunity for various entities who have complaints about it to come forth and cite their complaints. I have talked with a number of people who, in my judgment, provide pretty good arguments with respect to waiver, and I have assured the groups that have come to me that I will make a very honest effort to hear them out and then let the committee decide what it should do from the standpoint of waiver.

With due respect to my very dear friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT), it would be highly irresponsible at this point in time to move in the direction of carving the heart out of the Postal Service by eliminating the private express statute. If we do that, we might just as well have the agency fold up its tent, because there is no way that it could really function.

I would ask that the gentleman would be patient with the committee for a bit, give us the opportunity to run through this set of hearings and then let us collectively make a judgment with respect to whatever changes we would deem to be appropriate with respect to the private express statute.

The gentleman from California knows and I know that our dear friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. TRENT LOTT, has some serious reservations about numerous aspects of the statute.

I can only repeat what I say that I think we should be opposed to trying to make a judgment on this all-important facet of the Postal Service here and now on this floor. Let us be patient. Let us get into the hearing process and let us sit as a committee and determine what best suits the national interest now from the standpoint of the private express statute.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANLEY. I yield.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate my colleague yielding.

Second, I appreciate the gentleman's commitment, as I know the gentleman has made in the past, to make sure that the committee has full and total hearings on this subject and has a wider range than we have already had of people testifying on this subject. I am very appreciative of that and hope we can do it soon.

Now, as to the argument that it takes the heart and soul out of the postal office, I find that very difficult to believe, when the main argument against repealing the private express statute, or the monopolistic control the post office has, is that it would be the remote areas that would be hurt, that the major metropolitan areas already have private delivery systems in the private sector already operating very efficiently, in many cases at less cost than the post office itself.

Therefore, the gentleman's concern for the remote areas, I think, is a correct one, but most of those areas are served by rural route carriers. I support that route system and would want to make sure that those numbers of people serviced by that system is continued and would pledge my support to make sure that it is, so that the very remote rural areas would be continued to be supported.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment does nothing to do damage to those, because many of them are either contracted and actually those people that make that kind of delivery service already are people that are private contractors.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HANLEY was allowed to proceed for an additional 3 minutes.)

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, it is hard for me to understand why the gentleman is raising the argument, which I have not heard before, that the heart is being carved out of the Postal System. Does the gentleman mean that the only thing holding up the Post Office is their monopoly on first-class mail? That is incredible.

Mr. HANLEY. The gentleman will agree, we have a nationwide distribution system that has to be maintained if the traditional scope of service is to be provided. Now, I would be delighted to take the franchise for the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Well, the gentleman has got it.

Mr. HANLEY. And we would serve it very well, or Pasadena, Calif., for that matter. I will take the franchise and I will deliver it. I will provide a good quality of service at a figure less than what the Postal Service provides; but I will be somewhat reluctant to assume the same responsibility or the same franchise with sparsely populated areas of this great country.

That is what it is all about. So if we are going to maintain a universal service and if we are going to maintain a universal rate structure so that that person in rural America does not have to pay $6 to get a letter delivered, then we must maintain the private express statutes.

Without belaboring the subject any further, let me say I do respect the gentleman's effort. However, once again I prevail upon him to be patient with us. He is a part of this committee. I suggest he let us conduct the hearings to which I have alluded and then let us sit down and make collective and responsible judgments as to which direction we should move with respect to the private express statute.

Mr. Chairman, again I respectfully ask the House to defeat the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I would like to conclude by saying that the gentleman from New York (Mr. HANLEY) and I had a long discussion when there was some talk in the Post Office Department about eliminating Saturday delivery service. The gentleman said to me—and, I think, quite properly—that if in fact they did that, there might be an even better reason to repeal the private express statute. So far the Post Office Department has not done that, although they are thinking seriously about doing it.

I also remember the arguments the gentleman made—and very properly—as to why we should repeal the private express statute if that occurred.

Mr. Chairman, I am saying there are more than enough reasons already existent to take that action, and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if the Postal Service were to lose large segments of its large first-class mail revenue, it would be left with only two options: a sharp increase in rates, or a request to Congress for a massive increase in subsidies.

It also seems likely repeal of the private express statutes would result in nonuniform first-class rates.

There are also other considerations involved. A Government operated national postal system makes it easier to enforce the laws governing the sanctity and security of the mail. Who would be responsible for forwarding of mail between areas served by different private mail organizations? There also is the question of international mail which is subject to international mail agreements.

Repeal of the private express statutes conceivably could serve some members of the business community, but it could not meet the needs of the larger business community and the general mail-using public.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Chair announces that pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, he will vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the Committee appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred Members have appeared. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

The pending business is the demand of the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) for a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 18?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CORCORAN OF ILLINOIS

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois: Page 34, line 22, strike out "1982" and insert in lieu thereof "1981".

Page 35, lines 4 and 5, strike out "December 31, 1979" and insert in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979".

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to speed up the time period contained in the bill for requiring a feasibility study of electronic communications and the earmarking of research and development funds for such purposes. The amendment does not change the language of this section of the bill except to change the dates involved from fiscal year 1982 to fiscal year 1981 and December 31, 1979 to September 30, 1979.

I offer this amendment because we must accelerate the serious attention of the Postal Service to electronic communications. Private industry spends money on research and development in order to beat the competition. The Postal Service, with its monopoly on first-class mail, doesn't make the necessary commitment to research and development to keep abreast of new developments in the rapidly expanding field of electronic communications.

Both in the 1977 report of the Commission on Postal Service and in response to my questions of the Chairman of that Commission, Mr. Gaylord Freeman, the evidence of Postal Service inattention to this field is very disturbing. Unless the Postal Service comes of age in this regard, there won't be much first-class business left for the Postal Service. Congress must mandate quick action, and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, all the gentleman's amendment does is to change the effective date of the transfer program in the research and development section; is that correct?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. It does; it shortens it one year.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, this is a good amendment, and we are happy to accept it.

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DERWINSKI. I have no objection, but I do have, I suppose a parliamentary inquiry.

This is the third amendment the gentleman is having adopted. Will we now start calling this the Corcoran bill?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I do not believe that was a parliamentary inquiry Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CORCORAN).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HUCKABY

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUCKABY: Page 34, strike out line 13 and all that follows through line 5 on page 35.

Redesignate the subseqeunt sections accordingly.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to delete entirely the section in the bill entitled, "Research and Development." I offer this for several reasons. First of all, I think it is an extremely poor management technique for us to legislate an amount of money that the Post Office must spend for research and development. We are saying here that by 1981—now—we must spend $180 million, which is estimated to be 1 percent of the entire postal expenditures, and that it must go into research and development. This is extremely poor management policy.

Now, most of the emphasis here would probably be directed toward electronic media. I submit to this legislative body that the research and development that has been done, and should be done in the future in electronic communications, should be undertaken by companies such as A.T. & T., IBM, RCA—private enterprise participation instead of Government involvement in this area. If the potential is there, private enterprise will develop these facilities, and the Government can, at that time, acquire such transmission facilities.

In addition to that, the administration pointed out that they thought this was very foolish, and would lead to excessive Government waste by mandating such a tremendous increase in the research and development budget. With those comments, I urge that the House adopt the amendment.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I will not take the full time.

I just want to say that one of the principal criticisms that we have had in our committees, both Mr. HANLEY's subcommittee and my own subcommittee, is the failure of the Postal Service to proceed with a reasonable research and development program. Everyone else in industry has a certain percentage of their budgets allotted for research and development. The Postal Service has just not followed suit, and as a result this is one of the problems we have had with the management of the Postal Service. They have bad equipment, faulty equipment in use, and that is why this is an extremely important section.

As far as the electronic transfer of mail is concerned, there is nothing in the section that interferes with the rights of A.T. & T. and anyone else to pursue the research and development work on electronic transfer. This does not provide that there is going to be any Government interference in the private sector in so far as electronic transfer is concerned.

The Postal Service is looking forward to the loss of a great deal of business as a result of their failure to proceed with a reasonable research and development program and to get into the electronic transfer field themselves. It is conceivable that if they do get into electronic transfer themselves, they would be using the systems from private industry to implement whatever program they have. I think we need this research and development section in here, and I hope we vote the amendment down.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. I yield.

Mr. HUCKABY. The gentleman must agree that if my amendment is adopted, there will still be a research and devolopment budget: What I am proposing is that we not mandate the expenditure of $180 million by 1981, and more each and every year thereafter. There is no limit to this.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. They have not been doing anything, and that is why we felt we had to have some guidelines for them. They have not done such a good job of keeping up with modern technology. That is why they are not able to compete as well with the United Parcel Service. That is the reason they have had so many problems. We are trying to help them along. We feel they have to develop a good R. & D. program and that is the whole purpose of this bill, and I would hope we would retain this section.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we are getting near the end of the bill and I hope this is the last time the Members have to put up with my comments, but again I point out that the position I take is consistent with that recommended by the White House. I read to the Members from the letter by Mr. Stuart E. Eizenstat, Assistant to the President for Domestic Affairs and Policy, when he was analyzing in the letter to Chairman NIX the White House view on this bill. I quote Mr. Eisenstat's comments on this particular section:

> The section currently specifies that certain services are to be continued and that 2 percent of the postal budget ($320 million for FY '79) must be used for research and development. The Postal Service has $59 million budgeted for R&D for FY '79. To increase that budget allocation five times without the benefit of specific projects or programs can only result in waste, inefficiency and questionable practices.

I should add, since the bill has been revised to cover 1 percent, it would be $160 million, but the logic of the Eisenstat and the White House position still prevails.

The gentleman from Louisiana pointed out there is no point to dictating a precise item of this nature to management. The new Postmaster General in just the few weeks he has been in charge has indicated a great interest in research and development and indicated he would do everything possible to bring the Post Office into the modern age.

I think this amendment is superfluous. The principle the gentleman from Louisiana makes is a sound one. His point is that this is a management decision. This is not the kind of thing that should be dictated in legislation. It is a fine thing to add in a report, it is a fine thing to give this advice to the Postal Service, but I support the gentleman from Louisiana in his efforts to take this precise language out of the bill.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DERWINSKI. I yield to my distinguished colleague and friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, really all my colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana, has done is to eliminate the mandate to spend money in a given way. The authority to do this would remain under present law. Am I not correct, I ask my colleagues?

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, that is correct.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, so we will just eliminate the part of this bill that mandates that money be spent?

Mr. HUCKABY. That is correct. They are now spending approximately one-third of what this mandates.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. As a member of the Budget Committee, I say to my colleague this is an excellent amendment, because we have so many mandates in the whole budgetary process, it would be a relief not to have another one added. I compliment the gentleman on his amendment.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

If we were to single out any one reason why this institution is in the trouble it is in, we would have to relate to its shortcomings from the standpoint of R. & D. If any entity or any industry in the private sector ever tried to survive in the atmosphere of the U.S. Postal Service with respect to R. & D., they would have gone bankrupt many, many years ago. It is for this same reason that we have to go to the taxpayers today and ask for this additional subsidy.

I would remind the Members that this industry remains 87 percent labor intensive, far higher than anything else in our American economy. So what we are saying is this. I would remind the Members further that private industry invests between 2 percent to 5 percent of its budget to keep abreast of the times, to stay with it and keep on top, so they can fight off competition and be ahead. Unfortunately this agency has dribbled and dribbled, and it was only a few years ago, less than 10 years ago, that they did anything at all in the way of research and development.

We are trying to negate the necessity of pumping more and more millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money into this agency in an effort to bring it into the 20th century from the standpoint of sophisticated technology.

I would suggest that we compare our postal system with that of any other country in the modern world and we will find that essentially ours is a horse and buggy system. That is the rut that we are trying to get this agency out of.

I respectfully ask that the gentleman's amendment be defeated.

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, ordinarily as a matter of philosophy, I would agree wholeheartedly with the remarks made by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. HUCKABY). The problem, however, is that the Postal Service is different. It is different in this respect, the Postal Service has a monopoly on first class mail and, as a result, the Postal Service has never had to engage in the kind of research and development that is needed in order to beat the competition that private business organizations have to consider or soon find themselves out of business.

The reason we became involved in our committee in the requirement that a certain percentage of the funds be earmarked was because of the failure of the Postal Service to modernize in this respect. First of all, there would be a feasibility study and then, subsequently, the earmarking of the funds for the research and development, if justified. I believe we have to recognize that if we are going to encourage the Postal Service to continue with the distribution of parcel post and the other mail that we assign to them through the actions of Congress then this legislative direction is needed. This is needed because the management has not been responsive to the importance of the development of electronic communications. And because of the present monopoly for first class mail they have not been forced to keep up with competition. Thus the need for our action. The primary focus of this section is to recognize that unless the Postal Service engages in a good research and development program, with the changes that are taking place in electronic communications we are going to lose much of the business mail which now constitutes 80 percent of the first class mail service. If that happens then the cost of the subsidy to the taxpayers of our country will be far beyond anything that is contemplated now because the very existence of the U.S. Postal Service will be threatened. There will be very little mail left it to deliver; it will have been siphoned off because of technological changes ignored by the Postal Service.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that many of us can disagree with what the gentleman has just said about the failure of the Postal Service to do a satisfactory job of research and development, especially in allocating funds transferred for such purposes that really have been required of them. The problem is that this bill mandates that they spend 1 percent. Presently that refers to some $16 or $17 billion, so that it mandates the expenditure of $170 million.

My point, is, which I believe is also the point raised by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. HUCKABY) why do we have to put into this legislation a mandated amount? We are sending a message, I am sure, from here today so I do not believe it is necessary to mandate that amount.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I would be glad to yield but I do not have control of the time.

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, it really stems from the negligence on the part of the agency to offer a program. They have had it on a voluntary basis throughout the years but have never adopted it, so it becomes necessary for us to provide the agency with this direction. That is unfortunate but necessary.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HUCKABY. All we are doing is going out and forcing them to spend the money, but they will have the same set of managers there, and they have got to implement it if they want to do it. They now have the authority to go ahead and spend the money on research and development and implement a program and spend the money but you will have the same people doing it, only mandating them to use the money.

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. The trouble is that with the passage of the legislation back in 1970 there was a change in the guiding philosophy of the Postal Service. Then the idea was that we were going down the road that would put the Postal Service on a profitmaking basis, or at least on a break-even basis. At the some time we required the Postal Service to perform the same service functions always given it—universal delivery of the mails and parcel post at reasonable rates.

I think most people now recognize that was, at least in part, a mistake. Some part of the budget of the Postal Service must come from the U.S. Treasury. And at the same time that we regain control over the management and the major policy decisions of the Postal Service, I think the requirements of this section are indeed justified.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HUCKABY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

How are we to sit here in an ivory tower and determine that in 1981 the amount is $180 million? Do we have $50 million, or are we $50 million short? That is no way to run a business.

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. First, I think we must recognize that the section the gentleman is eliminating with his amendment does not trigger in the requirement that the expenditure take place until the feasibility study is made, and only on the condition that the feasibility study shows it would be a worthwhile expenditure of public funds.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman has given as his reason for opposing this amendment that the Post Office, the Postal Service, has a monopoly on first-class mail. Is the mandating of a certain amount of R. & D. limited to first-class mail? Of course not, and so the R. & D. can be done, R. & D. on trucks in finding a better truck to handle the mail for them. It will not accomplish the purpose. The amendment should be supported.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word. I think the author of the amendment has raised a valid point. Believing in the legislative system, I think we should have debate on it. My concern, however, is if we accept the amendment in its entirety, which is the only way it is before us, are we going to imply to the Post Office that we want no R. & D., or would it not be better to possibly revise the amendment and say we want R. & D., but not specify the dollars and leave that as a management decision?

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HUCKABY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

What the gentleman outlines is an existing situation. We have an R. & D. program today, and under my amendment it will continue.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I appreciate that, and I would like to hear somebody else confirm that so I am sure we are all saying the same thing, because here I understand that this is, you might say, a postal reform act, and I would not want to be guilty of striking research and development as a proper motivation for an efficient Postal Service.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DERWINSKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the issue is not whether there will be an R. & D. program; there obviously will be. The issue is the precise mandated figure. It could well be that under Postmaster General Bolger they will go far beyond the figure contained in the 1-percent figure now in the bill. That rightfully should be a management decision. As Mr. Eisenstat's letter clearly pointed out, we do not dictate the spending until they have the proper plans and the steps in hand to carry them out. So I think that the amendment is practical, and practicality does not preclude any interference with R. & D. I think I could advise the Members accurately that the new Postmaster General is R. & D. conscious.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HUCKABY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

In fiscal year 1979, $59 million is budgeted for R. & D.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I thank the gentleman, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. HUCKABY).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 18?

Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word. I rise in opposition to this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the committee amendment. I am opposed to the bill.

This is a bad proposal. It guarantees increased and continued taxpayer subsidies, primarily to business mailers, and Federal bailout of inefficient postal management.

The authorization for appropriation of $800 million additional for fiscal years 1979, 1980, and 1981—a total of $2.4 billion right there—is only part of the story. This proposal would also cut out of the existing law those provisions that look toward a steadily declining public-service postal subsidy. It would fix the existing public-service subsidy at $920 million each year. This action would eliminate the existing schedule which reduces the $920 million to $460 million by fiscal year 1984 and requires a plan for further reduction after 1984.

Add up just the obvious long-range costs of this bill: A $2.4 billion cost for the overt increase in subsidy plus $1.4 billion added cost from striking the reduction schedule—a total of $3.8 billion.

What are going to be the effects of such a proposal?

All incentives for sound management of the Postal Service are destroyed. What postal management is going to take a hard line on costs if a handout from the Federal Treasury is assured? How can postal management insist on reasonable labor contract terms if all parties know that Uncle Sam is standing ready to ante up more cash? In what way are the consequences of management action—or inactions—to be brought home to those responsible if those consequences are merely transferred to the Treasury and the general taxpayer?

This proposal strikes at the heart of the concept that those who use the mails should pay for the mails. That was the whole point of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970. That act provided an extended period for adjusting to its financial consequence—at least 12 years—and Congress has already granted a further phasing-in period for certain classes of mailers. If this proposal is enacted, we can say goodby to hopes for an efficient, effective, and financially responsible postal service. We can say goodby to hopes that business mail users will pay the costs of the service they demand, knowing that the taxpayer will subsidize them.

Mr. Chairman, this proposal by itself is not a "spending bill." It is an authorization for subsequent appropriation. Thus, the impact of this bill on the budget is not finally determined by our action today. Appropriation of these funds—if they should be authorized—is not mandatory in any sense. We should insist that every dollar actually appropriated in the future under this ill-conceived authorization be intensively scrutinized.

I can say in all candor that I would be more reassured about this point if I thought that we would have the courage to take a good hard look at postal requirements through the appropriations process.

One final word about our budget problems. Members are certainly aware of the multitude of contingencies that we are going to have to face in connection with the 1979 budget. The House Budget Committee is presently working up the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1979. I can inform Members that we are going to face an unending series of tough choices. Even if this ill-conceived proposition is enacted, I shall continue to insist that Congress act responsibly when the real budget problem ultimately arises—that is the appropriations to fund this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EFFECT ON COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS

SEC. 19. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect—

(1) any collective bargaining agreement entered into by the United States Postal Service which is in effect on the effective date of this Act;

(2) the authority of the United States Postal Service under chapter 12 of title 39, United States Code, to engage in collective bargaining with respect to any collective bargaining agreement into which the United States Postal Service may enter; or

(3) any obligations entered into by the Postal Service in any future collective bargaining agreement.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 19 be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to section 19?

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. CHARLES H. WILSON OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California: On page 35, after line 18, insert the following new section 20:

"SEC. 20. Section 404(a) of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"'(10) to negotiate, notwithstanding any other provision of this title, the rates of postage applicable to mail matter formerly entered at rates under former section 4556 of title 39, United States Code, when the Postal Service determines that the volume of mail of one or more mailers justifies a negotiated contract rate, or the needs of the Postal Service require such negotiated rates.'"

And redesignate the following sections accordingly.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed to improve the efficiency of the Postal Service by giving the Postmaster General some leeway in the manner in which he handles transportation and delivers mail. In the private sector, although transportation rates are established by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the overwhelming majority of actual rates for rail transportation are made on the basis of negotiations between the railroads and the customers of the railroads.

In Great Britain, for some time now, the Postmaster General has had the authority to contract when the volume of a particular mailer justifies the situation. The Postmaster General of the United States does not have that authority under existing law, and as a result, regardless of how advantageous it might be to the Postal Service and mail users generally to have a contract, it cannot be done.

This amendment would simply provide the Postmaster General with some contracting authority, so that when the volume of mail of a particular mailer or groups of mailers justify such an arrangement. it could be undertaken.

We have been looking for ways to improve the Postal Service and insure that mail volume continues at a satisfactory level. I think this approach would help, and I would hope that the gentleman from New York (Mr. HANLEY) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI) would agree it is an addition to the bill which would be helpful.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman's amendment, and the gentleman had the courtesy to send it over earlier, that it permits the Postal Service to negotiate based on volume for a better contract which would produce the volume they pursue.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. That is right.

Mr. DERWINSKI. In other words, it gives them that management tool or business tool.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. That is right.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. I yield to my colleague from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, does this affect rural delivery?

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. It should help rural delivery.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I mean, does it help particularly in the renegotiation of the contract?

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. No; it has no effect on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LOTT

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LOTT:

On page 35 immediately following line 18 insert a new section 20, to read as follows:

SEC. 20. (a) section 601 of title 39, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 601. Items not letters; letters carried out of the mail

"(a) As used in this chapter and in sections 1693 through 1699 of title 18, the term "letter" shall not include the following:

"(1) telegrams;

"(2) newspapers, periodicals, books, catalogs, directories, microfilms and other microfilms, magnetic tapes and other similar materials;

"(3) checks, drafts, promissory notes, stock certificates, bonds, securities, other negotiable and non-negotiable financial instruments, insurance policies, and title policies when shipped to, from, or between financial institutions;

"(4) abstracts of title, mortgages, deeds, leases, articles of incorporation, papers filed in lawsuits for formal quasi-judicial proceedings, and orders of court;

"(5) letters being sent in bulk to or from storage or to destruction;

"(6) letters being sent in bulk from a printer or other supplier to his customer;

"(7) written or printed matter enclosed with cargo or merchandise, including invoices, circulars, advertising, labels, instructions, and messages printed on the merchandise or container;

"(8) data processing materials, including electromechanical or electronic processing materials and all other types of materials that are ready for data processing or for conversion into a form ready for data processing, and the output of data processing when sent back from the processing center to the location originating the data processing materials;

"(9) any business communications between business organizations which are members of an affiliated group if transmission is completed within 12 hours or by noon of the addressee's next business day; and,

"(10) any means of communication which, as of January 1, 1977, was not in existence or was not generally considered to be a letter.

"(b) A letter may be carried out of the mails when—

"(1) it is enclosed in an envelope;

"(2) the amount of postage which would have been charged on the letter if it had been sent by mail is paid by stamps, or postage meter stamps, on the envelope;

"(3) the envelope is properly addressed;

"(4) the envelope is so sealed that the letter cannot be taken from it without defacing the envelope;

"(5) any stamps on the envelope are canceled in ink by the sender; and

"(6) the date of the letter, of its transmission or receipt by the carrier is endorsed on the envelope in ink.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b), the sending or carrying of letters outside the mails is permissible if if they are sent by or addressed to the individual carrying them or if they are sent by or addressed to an officer of employee of a carrier, including an officer or employee of an affiliate or subsidiary of a carrier, on the current business of such carrier.

"(d) The Postal Service may permit the carriage of letters, other than letters falling within the exceptions provided in subsections (b) an (c) above, outside the mails upon a determination that such carriage is consistent with the public interest.".

(b) The analysis for chapter 6 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by striking out and inserting in lieu thereof:

"601. Letters carried out of the mail."

"601. Items not letters; letters carried out of the mail.".

On page 34 line 15 strike "SEC. 20" and insert "SEC. 21".

Mr. LOTT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment would give the responsibility of defining first-class mail back to Congress by codifying the present regulations with minor changes. Let me emphasize that this amendment does not seek in any way to repeal the private express statutes. Furthermore, the amendment responds to a specific recommendation made by the Commission on Postal Service after its 6-month study of the U.S. Postal Service, and I quote:

The Commission recommends that Congress enact legislation defining the scope of the private express statutes. The legislation should respond to the need of businesses for expedited delivery of extremely time-sensitive matter and to the public interest in maintaining a nationwide postal system. It is this Commission's view that exclusions from the private express statutes should be based not merely on the content of mail, but also in recognition of service requirements which the Postal Service is not prepared to meet.

The Postal Service's interpretation of the private express statutes has justifiably aroused a great deal of rancor within the business community. There are a number of reasons for this concern:

First. The most recent interpretation of a "letter" has included intracompany communications and data processing materials.

Second. Statutes are so unclear and unwieldy that compliance is difficult at best. Recent interpretations have lumped everything from IBM cards to engraved tombstones under the same heading requiring the item to be placed in an individually addressed envelope, sealed, and stamped.

Third. Present requirements are wasteful and inflationary. Thousands of manhours are lost annually when interoffice communications and data processing materials qualifying as so-called "letters" must be segregated then addressed, sealed, and stamped.

Fourth. The Postal Service's capricious interpretation of the law and the penalties that await violation require businesses to have a "lawyer" in every shipping room to determine whether such items as data disks or bills of lading qualify as "letters" and are subject to the postal "tax."

Fifth. Finally, the Postal Service cannot provide rapid and reliable service such as same-day or overnight delivery. Companies are therefore forced to seek a more costly alternative for delivery of vital correspondence. The effect has been to pass these additional costs to the consumer.

It is clear that something can and should be done.

My amendment will not repeal the private express statutes. Nor will it open the door to "cream-skimming" or unduly affect the level of Postal Service revenues.

It will codify—with some modification—what generally are the current Postal Service regulations relating to the private carriage of mail. It will prevent arbitrary and whimsical changes by the Postal Service and place in the hands of Congress the authority for determining the extent and pervasiveness of the Government's mail monopoly.

The term "letter" is not defined under existing law. Therefore, the Postal Service has regulated what may or may not be carried outside the mail. This singular authority is justifiable cause for concern.

Recently testimony before the Commission on Postal Service charged that Postal Service interpretations have expanded the scope of the law to include items that should not be considered "letters." For example, the transmission of data processing materials and correspondence between companies with a subsidiary or affiliate relationship have been included by the Postal Service under the broad "letter" umbrella. The effect, according to the testimony, has been to increase costs and to reduce efficiency.

In the final analysis, the Postal Service—as the title implies—has been created to serve the best interest of the American people. When a significant portion of our society feels that these interests are being violated, it is time for the Congress to take corrective action.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I am delighted to yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I have given a great deal of thought to the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman and I have chatted about it, we have chatted with the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) on a similar subject matter, and I have committed myself to hearings shortly after the disposition of this bill.

Hindsight has it that I see no great harm in our accepting this amendment at this time, and I think in this way that perhaps we may be transmitting a message with respect to what the outcome of a committee deliberation might be on the subject matter.

So, Mr. Chairman, after due consideration I am prepared to accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Chairman, I certainly appreciate the gentleman's decision.

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment will give Congress responsibility for codifying, with some modifications, existing Postal Service regulations relating to letter mail. The term "letter" is not defined under existing law. As a result, the Postal Service has regulated what may or may not be carried outside of the mail.

The Commission on Postal Service recommended Congress enact legislation defining the scope of the private express statutes. The Lott amendment does not seek in any way to repeal the private express statutes.

The most recent interpretation of a "letter" has included intracompany communications and data processing materials.

Under the Lott amendment, any business communications between business organizations which are members of an affiliated group would not be considered "letter" material, if transmission was completed within 12 hours, or by noon of the addressee's next business day.

The business community has expressed concern about the Postal Services' broadening interpretation of a "letter." If the Postal Service cannot provide the rapid, dependable service required by the business community, it should not prohibit others from doing so unless penalty postage is paid.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DERWINSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the subject matter that has been brought up here is extremely important and very relevant. In my opinion, it is probably a wise decision to accept this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 20. The provisions of this Act, and the amendments made by this Act, shall take effect 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

● Mrs. MEYNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT) and I urge the House to join me in approving this important amendment.

In April 1977, the President and the Congress received, pursuant to Public Law 94–421, the report of the Commission on Postal Service. That report included the following recommendation:

. . . that Congress enact legislation defining the scope of private express statutes. The legislation should respond to the need of business for expedited delivery of extremely time-sensitive matter and to the public interest of maintaining a nationwide postal system. It is the Commission's view that exclusions from the private express statutes should be based not merely on the content of mail, but also in recognition of service requirements which the Postal Service is not prepared to meet.

Mr. Chairman, I can think of no service requirement that the Postal Service is less equipped to meet than same-day delivery. For this reason, I am pleased that the gentleman has chosen this forum to correct an existing inequity and to respond to the recommendation of the Commission.

Current law allows the Postal Service to define "letter" for the purpose of the private express statutes. The result has been that postal patrons who opt to send certain material by private carrier pay not only that carrier's fees, but a penalty fee to the Postal Service as well. The argument regarding the validity of the Postal Service's power to define "letter" for these purposes would be different if it were capable of providing those same services. But, in light of that inability, the existing power is unacceptable. I am pleased to have this opportunity to support an amendment to correct this inequity.

The amendment before the House is of particular concern to the real estate industry. It is largely in response to mail that I have received on this issue that I rise in support of the amendment. As many of us have heard in recent weeks, the real estate industry often depends on the delivery of time-sensitive materials. The inability of the Postal Service to meet this need through same-day delivery precludes realtors from utilizing the Postal Service in this regard. Nonetheless, they face a situation where the Postal Service can define these time-sensitive, multiple listing service materials as "letters" within the meaning of the private express statutes. The result, Mr. Speaker, is that realtors will pay not only the cost of the courier, but a penalty fee to the Postal Service as well. This occurs, despite the fact that the local post office will never handle this material.

It is for these reasons that I rise in support of the amendment and urge my colleagues to do so as well. Much of today's debate has centered around the role of private industry in competition with and as a supplement to the services of the Postal Service. I support H.R. 7700 because I believe that this legislation recognizes the service aspect of mail delivery. That service to the public is enhanced by private industry. I am unwilling to allow the Postal Service to become the vehicle by which we hinder private enterprise. In the immediate case, we know that private industry can best meet the needs of the community. I urge my colleagues to recognize that need and to lend their support and encouragement to the private sector.●

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments? If not, the question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. HANLEY) as amended.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. PATTISON of New York, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 7700) to amend title 39, United States Code, to establish congressional review of postal rate decisions, to increase congressional oversight of the U.S. Postal Service, to abolish the Board of Governors of the U.S. Postal Service, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 1078, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 384, nays 11, not voting 39, as follows:

[Roll No. 198]

YEAS—384

Abdnor	Butler	Ertel
Addabbo	Byron	Evans, Colo.
Akaka	Caputo	Evans, Del.
Alexander	Carney	Evans, Ga.
Allen	Carr	Evans, Ind.
Ambro	Carter	Fary
Ammerman	Cavanaugh	Fascell
Anderson, Calif.	Chisholm	Fenwick
Anderson, Ill.	Clausen, Don H.	Findley
Andrews, N.C.	Clawson, Del	Fish
Andrews, N. Dak.	Clay	Fisher
Annunzio	Cleveland	Fithian
Applegate	Cohen	Flippo
Armstrong	Coleman	Florio
Ashley	Collins, Ill.	Flowers
AuCoin	Conable	Foley
Badham	Conte	Ford, Mich.
Bafalis	Conyers	Ford, Tenn.
Baldus	Corcoran	Forsythe
Barnard	Cornell	Fountain
Baucus	Cornwell	Fowler
Bauman	Cotter	Fraser
Beard, R.I.	Coughlin	Frenzel
Beard, Tenn.	Crane	Frey
Bedell	Cunningham	Fuqua
Beilenson	D'Amours	Gammage
Benjamin	Daniel, Dan	Garcia
Bennett	Daniel, R. W.	Gephardt
Bevill	Danielson	Gibbons
Bingham	Davis	Gilman
Blanchard	de la Garza	Ginn
Blouin	Delaney	Glickman
Boggs	Dellums	Goldwater
Boland	Dent	Gonzalez
Bonior	Derrick	Goodling
Bonker	Derwinski	Gore
Bowen	Devine	Grassley
Breaux	Dickinson	Green
Breckinridge	Dicks	Gudger
Brinkley	Dingell	Guyer
Brodhead	Dodd	Hagedorn
Brooks	Dornan	Hall
Broomfield	Downey	Hamilton
Brown, Calif.	Drinan	Hammer-schmidt
Brown, Mich.	Duncan, Oreg.	Hanley
Brown, Ohio	Duncan, Tenn.	Hannaford
Broyhill	Early	Hansen
Buchanan	Eckhardt	Harkin
Burgener	Edgar	Harrington
Burke, Fla.	Edwards, Ala.	Harris
Burke, Mass.	Edwards, Calif.	Harsha
Burleson, Tex.	Eilberg	Hawkins
Burton, John	Emery	Heckler
Burton, Phillip	English	Hefner
	Erlenborn	Heftel
Hightower	Michel	Ryan
Hillis	Mikulski	Santini
Holland	Mikva	Sarasin
Hollenbeck	Miller, Calif.	Satterfield
Holt	Miller, Ohio	Sawyer
Holtzman	Mineta	Schulze
Horton	Minish	Sebelius
Howard	Mitchell, Md.	Seiberling
Hubbard	Mitchell, N.Y.	Sharp
Huckaby	Moakley	Shipley
Hughes	Moffett	Shuster
Hyde	Mollohan	Simon
Ichord	Montgomery	Sisk
Ireland	Moore	Skelton
Jeffords	Moorhead, Calif.	Skubitz
Jenkins	Moorhead, Pa.	Slack
Jenrette	Moss	Smith, Iowa
Johnson, Calif.	Murphy, Ill.	Smith, Nebr.
Johnson, Colo.	Murphy, N.Y.	Snyder
Jones, N.C.	Murphy, Pa.	Solarz
Jones, Okla.	Murtha	Spence
Jones, Tenn.	Myers, Gary	St Germain
Jordan	Myers, John	Stangeland
Kasten	Myers, Michael	Stanton
Kastenmeier	Natcher	Stark
Kazen	Neal	Steed
Kemp	Nedzi	Steers
Ketchum	Nichols	Stockman
Keys	Nix	Stokes
Kildee	Nolan	Stratton
Kindness	Nowak	Studds
Kostmayer	O'Brien	Stump
Krebs	Oakar	Symms
LaFalce	Oberstar	Taylor
Lagomarsino	Obey	Thone
Latta	Ottinger	Traxler
Le Fante	Panetta	Treen
Leach	Patten	Trible
Lederer	Patterson	Tsongas
Leggett	Pattison	Van Deerlin
Lehman	Pease	Vander Jagt
Lent	Perkins	Vanik
Levitas	Pettis	Vento
Livingston	Pickle	Volkmer
Lloyd, Calif.	Pike	Walgren
Lloyd, Tenn.	Poage	Walker
Long, La.	Pressler	Walsh
Long, Md.	Preyer	Wampler
Lott	Price	Watkins
Lujan	Pritchard	Waxman
Lundine	Pursell	Weaver
McClory	Quayle	Weiss
McCloskey	Quie	Whalen
McCormack	Quillen	White
McDade	Railsback	Whitehurst
McEwen	Rangel	Whitten
McFall	Regula	Wiggins
McHugh	Reuss	Wilson, Bob
McKay	Rhodes	Wilson, C. H.
Madigan	Rinaldo	Wilson, Tex.
Maguire	Risenhoover	Winn
Mahon	Robinson	Wirth
Mann	Roe	Wolff
Markey	Rogers	Wright
Marks	Roncalio	Wydler
Marlenee	Rooney	Wylie
Marriott	Rose	Yates
Martin	Rosenthal	Yatron
Mathis	Rostenkowski	Young, Alaska
Mattox	Rousselot	Young, Mo.
Mazzoli	Rudd	Young, Tex.
Meeds	Ruppe	Zablocki
Metcalfe	Russo	Zeferetti
Meyner

NAYS—11

Bolling	Gradison	Mottl
Burlison, Mo.	Jacobs	Schroeder
Collins, Tex.	Kelly	Staggers
Giaimo	McDonald

NOT VOTING—39

Archer	Flynt	Scheuer
Ashbrook	Gaydos	Sikes
Aspin	Krueger	Spellman
Biaggi	Luken	Steiger
Brademas	McKinney	Teague
Burke, Calif.	Milford	Thompson
Cederberg	Pepper	Thornton
Chappell	Rahall	Tucker
Cochran	Richmond	Udall
Corman	Roberts	Ullman
Diggs	Rodino	Waggonner
Edwards, Okla.	Roybal	Whitley
Flood	Runnels	Young, Fla.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mrs. Spellman with Mr. Archer.

Mr. Runnels with Mr. McKinney.

Mr. Biaggi with Mr. Steiger.
Mr. Teague with Mr. Young of Florida.
Mr. Luken with Mr. Aspin.
Mr. Thompson with Mr. Flynt.
Mrs. Burke of California with Mr. Ashbrook.
Mr. Chappell with Mr. Brademas.
Mr. Krueger with Mr. Cederberg.
Mr. Richmond with Mr. Cochran of Mississippi.
Mr. Flood with Mr. Diggs.
Mr. Whitley with Mr. Edwards of Oklahoma.
Mr. Corman with Mr. Gaydos.
Mr. Roybal with Mr. Milford.
Mr. Pepper with Mr. Sikes.
Mr. Rahall with Mr. Thornton.
Mr. Roberts with Mr. Tucker.
Mr. Udall with Mr. Scheuer.
Mr. Waggonner with Mr. Ullman.

Ms. KEYS changed her vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title was amended so as to read: "An Act to amend title 39, United States Code, to ensure the continuation of public services performed by the United States Postal Service, and for other purposes.".

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING CLERK TO MAKE CHANGES IN SECTION NUMBERS, CROSS REFERENCES AND OTHER TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 7700

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk, in the engrossment of the bill (H.R. 7700) be authorized and directed to make such changes in section numbers, cross references, and other technical and conforming corrections as may be required to reflect the actions of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous material, on the bill, H.R. 7700, just passed by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

RE-REFERRAL OF H.R. 11757 TO COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

Mr. HANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the bill, H.R. 11757, and that the bill be re-referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL BANKING ACT OF 1978

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 1114 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 1114

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10899) to provide for Federal regulation of participation by foreign banks in domestic financial markets. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BOLLING) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON). Pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this rule is an open rule providing for 1 hour of general debate. It was controversial in the Committee on Rules. The vote bringing it out was 6 to 5. However, I am not aware that there is going to be a major effort to fight the rule. The controversy has to do with section 5 of the bill itself, and there will be an adequate opportunity under this rule for people to deal with that particular problem. I, therefore, reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1114 is a 1-hour, open rule providing for the consideration of the bill H.R. 10899, the International Banking Act of 1978. This rule narrowly passed the Rules Committee yesterday by a vote of 6 to 5. Despite my own reservations about the committee amendment to section 5 of the bill, dealing with domestic and foreign interstate branching, I voted for this rule because I thought the House should have the opportunity to work its will.

This legislation was reported from the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee by a vote of 46 to 0 on February 23 of this year. A nearly identical bill passed the House in the last Congress by a voice vote. I think there is overwhelming bipartisan agreement on the need for further regulation of foreign banks operating in this country. The House Republican Policy Committee, on Tuesday, April 4, issued a statement in support of passage of H.R. 10899, stating in part, and I quote:

> The Federal government needs the umbrella of jurisdiction provided by this bill to monitor these foreign-owned banking operations.

The greatest source of controversy regarding this bill, at least as evidenced in the Rules Committee discussion yesterday, is the committee amendment to section 5 which would require States to permit domestic banks to branch in their States if they wanted to host foreign branches. I think most of you have received a couple of "Dear Colleague" letters from the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) in which he has stated that this amendment, if adopted, would "cause chaos in the banking industry and would have the effect of allowing New York State, because it is the major money center, to have all the foreign banks in this country." The gentleman from Illinois will be leading the fight to defeat that committee amendment, and, if it is defeated, the bill will revert to the language in the subcommittee-passed bill which leaves the question of foreign branch banking up to the individual States.

I have received a letter from the Commissioner of Banks and Trust Companies in Illinois, the Honorable William C. Harris, in which he stated, and I quote:

> The net effect of H.R. 10899 would be to require foreign branches to choose a one-state limitation. Under this condition, foreign branches would undoubtedly locate in New York or California to the exclusion of other states that now, or in the future, desire such financial development.

Commissioner Harris further points cut in his letter that, and again I quote:

> We need foreign branches in Illinois to support Midwest industries engaged in international commerce and to increase Illinois' role in international banking matters. Our domestic banking needs are being adequately filled by our own domestic banks. We certainly don't need interstate branching from New York, for example, for that purpose. No other State is anxious to have out-of-state domestic banks branching into its area.

As further evidence that other States are just as opposed to the committee amendment to section 5 I call the attention of my colleagues to the letters placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 3 by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MOAKLEY), at pages 8488–8495. Our colleagues have inserted letters from Bank Commissioners representing 28 different States, all in opposition to the section 5 amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I support this rule but did want to alert my colleagues to the controversy surrounding the section 5 amendment which was adopted in full committee by a vote of 25 to 18. Making foreign bank branching in the States conditional on their permitting domestic bank branching from other States does raise serious implications for the future of the banking industry in our respective States. I urge my colleagues to consider this matter very carefully before casting their votes on the committee amendment. In the meantime, I urge adoption of the rule so we can proceed to the consideration of the International Banking Act of 1978.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. St GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10899) to provide for Federal regulation of participation by foreign banks in domestic financial markets.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 10899, with Mr. NOLAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN).

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation has been under discussion for several years by the Banking Committee. The FINE Study analysis of foreign banking operations and discussions between Members of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation and Insurance, and bank officials produced evidence that legislation to regulate foreign banks operating in the United States was needed. In April 1976, we introduced a bill to provide Federal, as well as State, regulation for foreign bank branches and agencies, thus putting them on an equal footing in competing with domestic banks in the United States.

This bill was reported from the subcommittee in May 1976 by a vote of 14 to 1 and was reported by the Full Committee with a vote of 29 to 3. It passed the House on July 29, 1976 by a voice vote. Because the Senate was unable to act on the legislation, the bill was reintroduced on May 23, 1977 and hearings were held last July.

During subcommittee action on the bill in October, it became apparent that there were strong and differing opinions on the issue of the national interest versus States' rights. Accordingly, compromise amendments to these sections were offered during the full committee markup of the bill and were accepted. The compromise amendment to section 5 was adopted by a vote of 30 to 16.

In its present form, the bill provides for some Federal regulation of foreign banking activities in the United States and will assure more equal treatment for foreign banks chartered in the United States than has been the case to the present time. A brief description of its provisions will indicate the ways in which the bill accomplishes these objectives.

Section 1 provides the necessary definitions of foreign bank operations and sections 2 and 3 authorize waivers in the National Bank Act and the Edge Act to permit foreigners to serve on boards of directors of these institutions. Section 4 provides for chartering of Federal branches and agencies by the Comptroller and defines their powers. Currently the only provisions for operation of these types of offices by foreign banks are in State laws. Thus, this section provides foreign banks the choice of a regulatory option—a choice available to domestic depository institutions.

Section 5 deals with one of the more controversial issues of the bill—the question of interstate branching. Currently foreign banks can have branches in more than one State and many foreign banks do accept deposits in two or three States. U.S. banks—even those with loan production offices, Edge Act subsidiaries and finance and other affiliates—cannot accept deposits outside their home State unless they were grandfathered under the 1956 Bank Holding Company Act. In the spirit of that act the bill grandfathers multi-State branches of foreign banks, but prohibits the establishment of new branches outside the home State unless, in the case of Federal branches, national banks are allowed to engage in interstate branching, or in the case of State chartered branches, State legislatures enact laws permitting interstate branching by domestic nonmember banks.

The home State of a foreign bank is defined as a State in which it accepts deposits. The intent of the legislation is to restrict the acceptance of domestic deposits to one State without restricting the establishment of agency operations in more than one State.

The bill also provides deposit insurance for branches of foreign banks for the first time. Federal branches are required to obtain FDIC coverage and coverage is mandatory for State chartered branches in States which require that banks operating under their laws be federally insured. Again, only domestic deposits are at issue here and they alone are subject to the insurance provision.

Section 7 authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to impose reserve requirements on federally chartered foreign bank banches and agencies in the same manner and to the same extent as if these offices were members banks. The provisions also extend discount and borrowing privileges to branches, agencies and commercial lending companies. There is a recognition, however, that these offices differ in some important respects from domestic banking operations and the Board is directed to take these differences into account both while setting reserve requirements and accommodating requests for discounts and advances. The Federal Reserve Board, after consultation with State authorities, may set reserve ratios for branches and agencies chartered by the States.

The committee believes that it is necessary to give the Federal Government some overall authority over foreign banks while at the same time preserving a strong role for the states in regulating State chartered foreign banks in this country. The absence of a reserve requirement gives foreign banks a competitive edge over domestic banks and has the additional disadvantage that domestic monetary policy has less influence on the lending activities of foreign banks than those of domestic banks. Almost 18 percent of all commercial and industrial loans by banks in the United States are made by foreign banks. The absence of a direct influence on these activities by the Federal Reserve may undermine the effectiveness of monetary policy. Moreover, the sizable shifts of funds to and from foreign sources to branches and agencies of foreign banks has an important effect on the dollar exchange rate. This additional and very important concern makes it necessary to give the Federal Reserve some overall authority in this area.

Section 8 of the bill extends the restrictions on nonbanking activities of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 to foreign bank branches, agencies, and commercial lending companies. It makes clear, however, that these restrictions do not apply to the banking and nonbanking operations of foreign banks outside the United States and following previous legislative precedent the bill provides for permanent grandfathering of existing nonbanking activities in the United States, including the securities affiliates of foreign banks.

Section 9 expresses the legislative intent to provide parity of treatment between domestic and foreign banks and to "foster participation by foreign interests in international financial markets in the United States. * * *" The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to set guidelines to assist those responsible for chartering foreign banks in processing applications.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 10899 is needed to provide a more rational regulatory structure for foreign banks operating in the United States. Foreign banks have grown rapidly and with assets of $93 billion at yearend 1977 are now a significant portion of the U.S. banking market. Their activities require better coordination between State and Federal regulators than is currently provided under present law. Their impact on the economy and their significance in U.S. credit and foreign exchange markets requires that they be subject to the influence of Federal Reserve monetary policy.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS).

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, this is a vitally important bill. I want to give the utmost praise to the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN), and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT), as well as the members of the subcommittee, for crafting a truly workable piece of legislation.

We have let the matter of foreign banks in the United States go unattended for too long. It is time that we acted. We did act in the last session. We acted affirmatively, but for reasons of closing deadlines the other body was not able to act on the matter. I have as close to an assurance as one is able to obtain that the legislation we vote out of this body this afternoon will receive prompt attention in the other body.

The chairman of the subcommittee has fully outlined the provisions of the bill. Let me, however, state why it is important that we act.

As matters stand now, a large proportion of the deposits in this country, specifically those deposits contained in foreign banks doing business in the United States, is utterly beyond the control of our monetary authorities. If we are interested in fighting inflation and if we are interested in getting the dollar off its back, it is necessary that we pass the bill before us, because it gives power to act to the monetary authorities.

As the law now stands, a depositor in a foreign bank is at the mercy of economic circumstances which may cause a foreign bank to go under. Our bill would remedy that by providing an FDIC-like guarantee to the individual depositor.

As the law now stands, a foreign bank may do in this country what since 1933 no domestic bank has been allowed to do, and that is to commingle commercial banking and investment banking matters.

In days and years to come, we may want to take a look at this provision, but meanwhile, that is the law. So our bill, as appropriately grandfathered, forbids the future mingling by foreign as well as domestic banks of commission and investment banking features.

The fourth major thing that the bill does is to measurably assimilate the branching functions of foreign banks in this country with what happens to American banks.

By and large, a bank in this country cannot branch interstate. Indeed, in many a State there are very severe limitations on whether it can even branch within the State. But now the power of the foreign bank doing business within our shores to branch is unlimited.

The bill as it emerged from the subcommittee of the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN) contained a provision which I thought was the ultimate in good sense. It said that where the State of destination, where the State in which a branch is sought, through its properly constituted banking authority, says, "Yes, we will allow a branch to come in," that, I thought, seemed a sensible approach.

The distinguished gentleman from Rhode Island had a slightly different view. And I say "slightly different," because I do not think this is really of the essence. To him, he preferred an arrangement whereby it would take an act of the legislature of the receiving State before a branch could be set up. The matter was before the full committee. By a narrow margin, I think of some four votes, the amendment was adopted. Thus, in the bill before us, the mere acquiescence of the banking authorities of the receiving State is not enough; it takes something vastly more heavy, more powerful—namely, an act of the legislature of the receiving State—to permit a branch to be set up.

Ordinarily, my rapport and agreement with the chairman of the Banking Subcommittee, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN), is close to perfection. In this, however, I felt that the work of his subcommittee—the language adopted by the proposition put forth by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO)—was the better view.

And thus, when the vote comes on the so-called committee amendment of section 5, I will vote against the committee amendment, thus reinstating what I think is the rule of reason of the subcommittee bill, namely, that where the banking authorities of the State of reception say, "Yes, let the branch come in," then the branch may do so.

The House will work its will on that, and naturally I hope it will work its will in favor of the subcommittee's original version, and not accept the committee amendment. But I say that with full knowledge that the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN), and others, will put up a well-reasoned argument to the contrary.

But the purpose of this body is to consider well-reasoned arguments and pick the better one. For that reason, I have confidence that the bill that emerges from this Chamber this afternoon will be a good one, that it will go to the other body, that they will act expeditiously on it, that in conference we can iron out any differences, and then present the country something that it so desperately needs, a bill that for the first time regulates that vast amount of banking done in our country by foreign banks.

They should be welcomed in our country. We want to welcome them. But let the general principle be that they should be treated the same as American banks, no better and no worse.

So I hope that our debate this afternoon will not be overlengthy. I hope we will hit a meeting point. I hope we can vote on this amendment to section 5 with reason and understanding, and that the result will be a bill of which all can be proud.

I point out—and this will surprise many—that the Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs is capable of acting with unanimity, and here the vote in favor of the bill before us was 46 to nothing. I hope that the vote on the floor this afternoon will express an almost equal unanimity. I hope the bill will be slightly perfected along the lines I have described. And, once again, I want to congratulate the leadership on the subcommittee, and all the members of the subcommittee, for 3 years of hard work which has brought to this floor something worthy to be remembered.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the product of the full committee markup of the "International Banking Act" is a bill which could ultimately achieve, to the extent that it can be achieved, the worthy goal of equality of treatment between domestic and foreign banking institutions. To the extent that this bill still contains any defects, these defects result from lack of understanding of the real differences between domestic and foreign banks—differences which will not and cannot be eliminated as a result of this legislation.

For the most part, foreign banks do business in this country for the same reason that the large U.S. banks do business abroad—to serve the international banking needs of the large multinational corporations which are the backbone of their business at home. Those foreign banks which operate "branches" in this country generally conduct a strictly "wholesale" business; foreign banks which do a "retail" banking business and which accept deposits from individual customers, are almost invariably organized as "subsidiaries." This means that they are separately chartered and capitalized entities which are subject to the supervision, regulation, and insurance provisions which apply to State-chartered domestic banks. There presently is not provision for the Federal chartering of foreign banks, disparity of treatment which will be remedied by this bill.

The differences between the nature of the business conducted by most foreign banks, as contrasted with that of most domestic banks, have two major consequences as far as this bill is concerned. First, these differences might create interest on the part of State officials who are involved in the efforts of a State to attract industry and commerce, including the bank superintendent of a given State, in chartering one or more foreign banks for the convenience of foreign firms which may be planning to locate in that State. For these State officials, any restriction on the right of a State to charter foreign banks will be viewed as a Federal action which will seriously restrict their ability to promote economic growth and development. By requiring foreign banks which enter the United States to declare a "home" State and to confine branching to that State alone, unless the States in question also permit branching by domestic banks, section 5 of this bill will insure that future foreign banking activity will be confined to New York, California, and Illinois, the States which already have the lion's share of foreign banking, and will deny to other States which want to attract a foreign bank the opportunity to do so.

The wholesale nature of the business conducted by foreign banks accounts for the desire of approximately 30 States to retain the option to charter foreign banks in order to promote economic growth and employment, without necessarily permitting domestic banks to conduct retail operations in their respective States. Why should a State not be permitted to charter a wholesale bank from Brazil without having to charter all of the retail banks in New York? I have no quarrel with the right of States which do not believe that foreign banks will be helpful to their economies to refuse to charter such banks, but the present section 5 enforces this restrictive policy on all but the major international banking states.

The second major defect in this bill is the provision in section 6 of a mandatory deposit insurance program for foreign banks. As noted above, foreign banks almost never take deposits from retail customers unless the banks are organized as subsidiaries, in which case they are eligible for Federal deposit insurance on the same basis as domestic banks. However, section 6 could have the perverse effect of encouraging foreign banks to expand their domestic deposit taking activity, since they will be paying mandatory deposit insurance premiums.

Chairman George A. LeMaistre, of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, during his testimony on this bill, described the mandatory insurance provisions of section 6 as "unnecessary * * * onerous and impractical." The FDIC also pointed out that,

> In the event of the insolvency of a foreign bank, it is possible that assets could be easily and quickly shifted from the U.S. branch and out of U.S. jurisdiction, while deposits could be shifted to the U.S. branch.

The FDIC has consistently told the committee that it would prefer its own voluntary deposit insurance program for foreign banks to the more complex mandatory program provided by the present section 6.

There have been several noteworthy improvements in this bill since it was first introduced. Section 7, as amended by the Brown amendment, provides the Federal Reserve with the oversight authority which it needs with respect to foreign banks but maintains the regulatory and supervisory authority which is properly exercised by State bank supervisors under the "dual banking" system. Section 8, as amended by the Hanley amendment, provides for the "grandfathering" of securities affiliates of foreign banks, in fairness not only to the affiliates but also to the regional stock exchanges which are heavily dependent on the business of securities affiliates of foreign banks. In the event that abuses develop, the Federal Reserve Board will be empowered to terminate such activities. Finally, section 9, as amended by the Grassley amendment, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury, in setting guidelines for the operation of foreign banks, which in turn may serve as guidelines for State chartering authorities, shall "take into account the treatment by foreign governments of financial institutions domiciled in the United States which do business in their respective countries." It is our belief that this provision will give the administration additional flexibility which it can use to promote the objective that all countries shall extend equal treatment to their domestic and foreign banks.

It is hoped that when the amendment process is completed, the desirable features of this legislation will be retained and that the deficiencies will be corrected, so that the final product will be a truly equitable and workable International Banking Act.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STANTON), our distinguished ranking member.

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10899, the International Banking Act of 1978.

It represents a balanced and equitable approach to a neglected area of our Nation's financial community. There is, at present, no Federal regulation of the activities of foreign banks in this country.

Foreign bank activities in the United States are regulated by State governments. I should add that these State governments are quite capable and competent in their regulation of our banking institution. However, inasmuch as foreign banks may carry on their activities in more than one State, those State governments are unable to affect the operations of foreign banks in other States. Thus, a regulatory gap exists between our domestic banks and those foreign banks which operate within the United States. This bill will provide the Federal framework for foreign banks operating in the United States so that a foreign bank will have the option of selecting a State or Federal charter.

Foreign banks are not subject to many of the basic Federal laws that are applicable to U.S. banks. For instance, foreign banks operating in the United States are not subject to the Glass-Steagall Act; they are not required to maintain FDIC insurance; they are not required to maintain reserves with our Federal reserve system; and they are not subject to any restrictions on interstate branching. H.R. 10899 is designed to remove the regulatory gap and to equalize the competitive advantages which heretofore have existed in favor of the foreign banks.

H.R. 10899 is designed to continue the open-door policy which has been maintained toward the operation of foreign banking and foreign investment in the United States. It provides a minimum amount of Federal regulation without imposing any unfair restrictions on the operations of foreign banks. Except where other more broad national interests are concerned, it provides for equality of treatment with U.S. banks.

The activities of foreign banks in the United States have continued to expand so that now total assets of foreign banks are about $75 billion and the commercial loans extended to domestic borrowers by U.S. offices of foreign banks amount to approximately $23 billion as of March 1977. There are approximately 96 foreign banks with over 200 facilities in the United States. We have serious need for this legislation.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, H.R. 10899 represents a reasonable approach to a most complex and difficult issue. This bill is a product of much compromise and accommodation by all parties concerned. I urge the support of our colleagues in passage of this legislation.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time at this point.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE).

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) for yielding me this time to explain my position with reference to this bill.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill and should be passed with a couple of refinements, which I will try to make a little later on.

When the National Bank Act of 1863 was passed, opponents, State bank regulators, made the same arguments which we will hear today, that we did not need a National Bank Act.

But Abraham Lincoln, who was the President, took a different view, and we have our dual banking system as we know it today. Back at the turn of the century the dual banking system had its greatest impetus. State chartering worked well for satisfying the needs of rural America.

In providing for a system of national banks, it was decided to keep State-chartered banks in place, and thus our dual banking system began in 1863 when the United States was increasing in influence in world banking.

Some foreign countries decided that they would establish banks through the State charter vehicle. As a matter of fact, some foreign banks had chartered branches through State banks even before 1863. So, the dual banking system as we know it is well grounded, is here to stay, and no one would want it otherwise.

No one worried about foreign banks being outside the Federal Reserve System, I might say, when it was created in 1913. Their monetary operations in the United States were relatively insignificant, but in my first term in Congress, in 1967, then Chairman Wright Patman sounded the first alarm. Now, no one paid any attention to him or to William McChesney Martin, who was the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, because foreign bank operations in the United States were still, 100 years after the National Bank Act, relatively insignificant, although foreign bank assets had reached a total of about $6 billion to $7 billion.

As Senator Dirksen once said, you add a billion here and a billion there, and it soon adds up to some real money. Well, by 1973 it had added up to some real money. By that time, Dr. Arthur Burns, then Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, sounded a louder alarm about foreign bank operations in the United States that had now reached $18 billion. Last year, foreign bank assets were conservatively estimated at $70 billion in the United States. Now, the Federal Reserve Board estimates that foreign bank assets in the United States are in the neighborhood of $93 billion. Now, we have added up to some real money, as Senator Dirksen would say—from $6 billion to $7 billion 10 years ago to more than $93 billion today.

So, Wright Patman knew a few things back in 1967 when he was attempting to sound the alarm. The reason foreign banks have been able to expand more rapidly than U.S.-based banks is because we have passed laws giving them a decided competitive edge over U.S. banks. We have done something that no other country in the world permits; that is, to allow a foreign bank to operate in our country outside the influence and supervision of the National Government. No other country in the world does that.

Japan, for example, has been most aggressive in beating us out of world markets, both commercially and financially. The Bank of Tokyo, with over $5 billion in assets in the United States alone, is the second largest bank in the whole State of California. Now, opponents of this bill, if there be any, will say that in bringing the State-chartered foreign banks under Federal control, a bank which is chartered under the State of California such as the Bank of Tokyo, should be treated as a State-chartered bank in Mississippi or Iowa or Nebraska or Ohio. But, the Government of Japan, on the other hand, has a much more restrictive attitude toward U.S. banks operating in Japan than they do toward their own national banks. So, it makes no sense to me that we allow this decided competitive edge.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE).

So foreign banks do have a competitive advantage over U.S. banks which we do not enjoy in other countries and which puts our own national banks at a distinct competitive disadvantage. To me this is the issue. They have a competitive disadvantage because foreign banks can State charter and operate across interstate lines. And I will get into this a little bit more when we get into the amendment stage later on, but there is no question in my mind that we need to have this bill today. I will have a couple of amendments which I think will refine the bill and make it even better, but we must change the law as it is today before it is too late, when we may wake up and find it is too late.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO).

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today merely to congratulate the chairman of the subcommittee for his hard work and perseverance and dedication. As the ranking Democrat on the subcommittee I have had the opportunity to sit next to the gentleman and I know the long hours that he has placed in trying to come to the floor with a bill with which the majority of the Members would be satisfied.

There has been some discussion today about the fact that in the subcommittee we adopted my amendment to section 5 and that in the full committee my section 5 was amended. I will talk on that later.

But to me it is a healthy sign when a committee of this Congress can disagree and then vote out a bill 46 to 0. That is where we are at today.

So I want to congratulate the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN), for all of the hard work and effort he has made, and especially I want to congratulate the chairman of the full committee (Mr. REUSS) for the leadership that he has shown and displayed since becoming chairman of the full committee.

I do hope as we go on to mark up the bill under the 5-minute rule that the Members in their wisdom will do what is right for the American people.

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment to section 9, an amendment which I offered during the full committee markup and which was agreed to by a voice vote. My amendment is addressed to the second sentence in section 9(a), which reads:

> It is the purpose of this Act to establish a basic statutory framework which, giving due consideration to the structure of our domestic monetary mechanisms and out national interests, will, to the extent practical, allow foreign banking institutions to have the same rights, duties, and privileges and be subject to the same limitations, restrictions, or conditions as our domestic banking institutions.

It has been pointed out that the Federal chartering alternative will attract few international banks, so the standard I have quoted might be considered unimportant, except for the next sentence:

> It is the intent of the Congress that this Act shall establish a pattern for equitable treatment which State regulators may adopt in their regulation of foreign banking institutions.

I do not wish to quarrel with the principles of equity and national treatment as general principles, but my language recognizes that in some instances these principles can best be promoted in the long run by giving the administration the flexibility to apply the principle of reciprocity rather than that of national treatment in instances where the government of a country whose bank proposes to operate in the United States imposes greater restrictions against U.S. banks operating in a given country than it imposes against its domestic banks. We should not expect foreign governments to extend favored treatment to U.S. financial institutions, but we should expect our financial institutions to be treated the same way that domestic institutions are treated.

There are a number of specific cases which prompt me to offer this amendment. For example, the February 6, 1978, edition of Business Week contained an article on page 54 entitled "Japan—Foreign Banks Chafe at Official Controls." The article stated that Japan places foreign—"Gaijin"—banks in a special category. According to the article:

> To foreign bankers, Tokyo's stringent controls smack more of an insecure developing nation than an industrial giant. Gaijin banks are, for example, prohibited from seeking savings deposits. They are also subject to quotas on loans, "administrative guidance" on the amounts they can fund through local markets, limits on the foreign exchange they can bring in, and controls on currency swaps.
>
> The Finance Ministry will not even countenance such routine procedures as the issuance of bonds or debentures. "We cannot incorporate here," says B of A's Mulkern, "and we cannot buy into any Japanese bank. They blanch at the Ministry of Finance when you raise such concepts."
>
> PULLING OUT?
>
> For Americans, such restrictions are doubly rankling. For one thing, the aggressively expanding overseas branches of Japanese competitors, such as Fuji Bank, are free to engage in a full range of financial activities in the U.S. Says one U.S. official in Tokyo: "I don't think they're going to relax the controls on foreign banks until they are forced to, and the only way is if the U.S. starts applying reciprocal treatment to foreign banks in the U.S."

Examples of other inequities are provided in a May 1976 Committee Print entitled "International Banking: A Supplement to a Compendium of Papers Prepared for the FINE Study." Chapter 4, of part II, entitled "Foreign Banking Laws and Regulations Governing Overseas Operations of U.S. Banks" is particularly instructive.

In conclusion, I believe my amendment recognizes the fact that there are instances in which inequities exist which are more likely to be corrected if our administration is given the flexibility to adjust our policies to take account of the policies of other countries. This is the policy which some of our States, most notably New York, now apply, and there is no reason why the Federal Government should be locked into a position in favor of "national treatment" when such treatment is not warranted in all cases.●

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of speedy legislation we have no further requests for time, and we yield back the balance of our time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time having expired, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 10899

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE; DEFINITIONS AND RULES OF CONSTRUCTION

SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the "International Banking Act of 1978".

(b) For the purposes of this Act—

(1) "agency" means any office or any place of business of a foreign bank located in any State of the United States at which credit balances are maintained incidental to or arising out of the exercise of banking powers, checks are paid, or money is lent but at which deposits may not be accepted from citizens or residents of the United States;

(2) "Board" means the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System;

(3) "branch" means any office or any place of business of a foreign bank located in any State of the United States at which deposits are received;

(4) "Comptroller" means the Comptroller of the Currency;

(5) "Federal agency" means an agency of a foreign bank established and operating under section 4 of this Act;

(6) "Federal branch" means a branch of a foreign bank established and operating under section 4 of this Act;

(7) "foreign bank" means any company organized under the laws of a foreign country, a territory of the United States, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, or the Virgin Islands, that has the power to engage in the business of banking, or any subsidiary or affiliate, organized under such laws, of any such company. For the purposes of this Act, the term "foreign bank" includes, without limitation, foreign commercial banks, foreign merchant banks and other foreign institutions that engage in banking activities usual in connection with the business of banking in the countries where such foreign institutions are organized or operating;

(8) "foreign country" means any country other than the United States, and includes any colony, dependency, or possession of any such country;

(9) "commercial lending company" means any institution, other than a bank or an organization operating under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act, organized under the laws of any State of the United States, or the District of Columbia which maintains credit balances incidental to or arising out of the exercise of banking powers and engages in the business of making commercial loans;

(10) "State" means any State of the United States or the District of Columbia;

(11) the terms "bank", "bank holding company", "company", "control", and "subsidiary" as used in this Act shall have the same meanings assigned to those terms in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, and the terms "controlled" and "controlling" as used in this Act shall be construed consistently with the term "control" as defined in section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956; and

(12) "consolidated" means consolidated in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles in the United States consistently applied.

DIRECTORS OF NATIONAL BANKS

SEC. 2. Section 5146 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 72) is amended by striking out the period at the end of the first sentence and adding the following new provision: ", except that in the case of an association which is a subsidiary or affiliate of a foreign bank, the Comptroller of the Currency may in his discretion waive the requirement of citizenship in the case of not more than a minority of the total number of directors.".

EDGE CORPORATIONS

SEC. 3. (a) The second sentence of the fourth paragraph of section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 614) is amended by striking out ", all of whom shall be citizens of the United States" after "to elect or appoint directors".

(b) The thirteenth paragraph of section 25(a) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 619) is deleted and the following paragraph is inserted in lieu thereof:

"Except as otherwise provided in this section, a majority of the shares of the capital stock of any such corporation shall at all times be held and owned by citizens of the United States, by corporations the controlling interest in which is owned by citizens of the United States, chartered under the laws of the United States or of a State of the United States, or by firms or companies, the controlling interest in which is owned by citizens of the United States. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this section, any foreign bank or any bank organized under the laws of the United States, any State of the United States, or the District of Columbia, the controlling interest in which is owned by a foreign bank, group of foreign banks, or institution organized under the laws of a foreign country which owns or controls a foreign bank may, with the prior approval of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and upon such terms and conditions and subject to such rules and regulations as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may prescribe, own and hold 50 per centum or more of the shares of the capital stock of any corporation organized under this section, and any such corporation shall be subject to the same provisions of law as any other corporation organized under this section. For the purposes of the preceding sentence of this paragraph the terms 'controls' and 'controlling interest' shall be construed consistently with the definition of 'control' in section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, and the term 'foreign bank' shall have the meaning assigned to it in the International Banking Act of 1977.".

FEDERAL BRANCHES AND AGENCIES

SEC. 4. (a) Except as provided in section 5, a foreign bank which engages directly in a banking business outside the United States may, with the approval of the Comptroller, establish a Federal branch or agency in any State in which (1) it is not operating a branch or agency pursuant to State law and (2) the establishment of a branch or agency, as the case may be, by a foreign bank is not prohibited by State law.

(b) In establishing and operating a Federal branch or agency, a foreign bank shall be subject to such rules, regulations, and orders as the Comptroller considers appropriate to carry out this section, which shall include provisions for service of process and maintenance of branch and agency accounts separate from those of the parent bank. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this Act or in rules, regulations, or orders adopted by the Comptroller under this section, operations of a foreign bank at a Federal branch or agency shall be conducted with the same rights and privileges as a national bank at the same location and shall be subject to all the same duties, restrictions, penalties, liabilities, conditions, and limitations that would apply under the National Bank Act to a national bank doing business at the same location, except that (1) the requirements of section 5240 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 481) shall be met with respect to a Federal branch or agency if it is examined at least once in each calendar year; (2) any limitation or restriction based on the capital stock and surplus of a national bank shall be deemed to refer, as applied to a Federal branch or agency, to the dollar equivalent of the capital stock and surplus of the parent bank, and if the parent bank has more than one Federal branch or agency the accounts of all such branches and agencies shall be aggregated in determining compliance with the limitation; (3) a Federal branch or agency shall not be required to become a member bank, as that term is defined in section 1 of the Federal Reserve Act; and (4) a Federal agency shall not be required to become an insured bank as that term is defined in section 3(h) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

(c) In acting on any application to establish a Federal branch or agency, the Comptroller shall take into account the effects of the proposal on competition in the domestic and foreign commerce of the United States, the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the applicant foreign bank and the branch or agency, and the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, a foreign bank shall not receive deposits or exercise fiduciary powers at any Federal agency. A foreign bank may, however, maintain at a Federal agency for the account of others credit balances incidental to, or arising out of, the exercise of its lawful powers.

(e) No foreign bank may maintain both a Federal branch and a Federal agency in the same State.

(f) Any branch or agency operated by a foreign bank in a State pursuant to State law and any commercial lending company controlled by a foreign bank may be converted into a Federal branch or agency with the approval of the Comptroller. In the event of any conversion pursuant to this subsection, all of the liabilities of such foreign bank previously payable at the State branch or agency, or all of the liabilities of the commercial lending company, shall thereafter be payable by such foreign bank at the branch or agency established under this subsection.

(g)(1) Upon the opening of a Federal branch or agency in any State and thereafter, a foreign bank, in addition to any deposit requirements imposed under section 6(a) of this Act, shall keep on deposit, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Comptroller may prescribe, with a member bank designated by such foreign bank, dollar deposits or investment securities of the type that may be held by national banks for their own accounts pursuant to paragraph "Seventh" of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, in an amount as hereinafter set forth. Such depository bank shall be located in the State where such branch or agency is located and shall be approved by the Comptroller if it is a national bank and by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System if it is a State bank.

(2) The aggregate amount of deposited investment securities (calculated on the basis of principal amount or market value, whichever is lower) and dollar deposits for each branch or agency established and operating under this section shall be not less than the greater of (1) that amount of capital (but not surplus) which would be required of a national bank being organized at this location, or (2) 5 per centum of the total liabilities of such branch or agency, including acceptances, but excluding (A) accrued expenses, and (B) amounts due and other liabilities to offices, branches, agencies, and subsidiaries of such foreign bank. The Comptroller may require that the assets deposited pursuant to this subsection shall be maintained in such amounts as he may from time to time deem necessary or desirable, for the maintenance of a sound financial condition, the protection of depositors, and the public interest, but such additional amount shall in no event be greater than would be required to conform to generally accepted banking practices as manifested by banks in the area in which the branch or agency is located.

(3) The deposit shall be maintained with any such member bank pursuant to a deposit agreement in such form and containing such limitations and conditions as the Comptroller may prescribe. So long as it continues business in the ordinary course such foreign bank shall, however, be permitted to collect income on the securities and funds so deposited and from time to time examine and exchange such securities.

(4) Subject to such conditions and requirements as may be prescribed by the Comptroller, each foreign bank shall hold in each State in which it has a Federal branch or agency, assets of such types and in such amount as the Comptroller may prescribe by general or specific regulation or ruling as necessary or desirable for the maintenance of a sound financial condition, the protection of depositors, creditors and the public interest. In determining compliance with any such prescribed asset requirements, the Comptroller shall give credit to (A) assets required to be maintained pursuant to paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection, (B) reserves required to be maintained pursuant to section 7(a) of this Act, and (C) assets pledged, and surety bonds payable, to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to secure the payment of domestic deposits. The Comptroller may prescribe different asset requirements for branches or agencies in different States, in order to ensure competitive equality of Federal branches and agencies with State branches and agencies and domestic banks in those States.

(h) A foreign bank with a Federal branch or agency operating in any State may (1) with the prior approval of the Comptroller establish and operate additional branches or agencies in the State in which such branch or agency is located on the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations and restrictions as are applicable to the establishment of branches by a national bank if the principal office of such national bank were located at the same place as the initial branch or agency in such State of such foreign bank and (2) change the designation of its initial branch or agency to any other branch or agency subject to the same limitations and restrictions as are applicable to a change in the designation of the principal office of a national bank if such principal office were located at the same place as such initial branch or agency.

(i) Authority to operate a Federal branch or agency shall terminate when the parent foreign bank voluntarily relinquishes it or when such parent bank is dissolved or its authority or existence is otherwise terminated or canceled in the country of its organization. If (1) at any time the Comptroller is of the opinion or has reasonable cause to believe that such foreign bank has violated or failed to comply with any of the provisions of this section or any of the rules, regulations, or orders of the Comptroller made pursuant to this section, or (2) a conservator is appointed for such foreign bank or a similar proceeding is initiated in the foreign bank's country of organization, the Comptroller shall have the power, after opportunity of hearing, to revoke the foreign bank's authority to operate a Federal branch or agency. The Comptroller may, in his discretion, deny such opportunity for hearing if he determines such denial to be in the public interest. The Comptroller may restore any such authority upon due proof of compliance with the provisions of this section and the rules, regulations, or orders of the Comptroller made pursuant to this section.

(j)(1) Whenever the Comptroller revokes a foreign bank's authority to operate a Federal branch or agency or whenever any creditor of any foreign bank shall have obtained a judgment against it arising out of a transaction with a Federal branch or agency in any court of record of the United States or any State of the United States and made application, accompanied by a certificate from the clerk of the court stating that such judgment has been rendered and has remained unpaid for the space of thirty days, or whenever the Comptroller shall become satisfied that such foreign bank is insolvent, he may, after due consideration of its affairs, in any such case, appoint a receiver who shall take possession of all the property and assets of such foreign bank in the United States and exercise the same rights, privileges, powers, and authority with respect thereto as are now exercised by receivers of national banks appointed by the Comptroller.

(2) In any receivership proceeding ordered pursuant to this subsection (j), whenever there has been paid to each and every depositor and creditor of such foreign bank whose claim or claims shall have been proved or allowed, the full amount of such claims arising out of transactions had by them with any branch or agency of such foreign bank located in any State of the United States, except (1) claims that would not represent an enforceable legal obligation against such branch or agency if such branch or agency were a separate legal entity, and (2) amounts due and other liabilities to other offices or branches or agencies of, and wholly owned (except for a nominal number of directors' shares) subsidiaries of, such foreign bank, and all expenses of the receivership, the Comptroller or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, where the Corporation has been appointed receiver of the foreign bank, shall turn over the remainder, if any, of the assets and proceeds of such foreign bank to the head office of such foreign bank, or to the duly appointed domiciliary liquidator or receiver of such foreign bank.

INTERSTATE BANKING OPERATIONS

SEC. 5. (a) No foreign bank may operate a branch, agency, commercial lending company subsidiary, or subsidiary bank outside its home State unless (1) in the case of a State branch, agency or commercial lending company, it is approved by the regulatory authority of the State in which such State branch, agency, or commercial lending company is to be operated, (2) in the case of a Federal branch or agency, its operation is expressly permitted by the State in which it is to be operated, and (3) in the case of a bank, its acquisition would be permissible under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 if the foreign bank were a bank holding company the operations of whose banking subsidiaries were principally conducted in the foreign bank's home State.

(b) For the purposes of this section, the home State of a foreign bank—

(1) which has no branch or subsidiary bank in the United States, but which has an agency or commercial lending company in one or more States, is whichever of such States is determined by election of the bank, or, in default of such election, by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

(2) which has a branch or subsidiary bank in one State only, is that State.

(3) which has a branch or subsidiary bank in more than one State, is whichever of such State is determined by election of the bank, or, in default of such election, by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. An initial election under this subsection shall be made by means of a written declaration filed with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System not more than one year after the date of enactment of this Act by the foreign bank concerned. After the home State of a foreign bank has been determined pursuant to this subsection, it may be changed only by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, either upon the application of the bank, or upon its own motion, for cause shown. Any foreign bank that does not maintain a branch, agency, or commercial lending company subsidiary, or that is not a bank holding company or a subsidiary thereof on the date of enactment of this Act, shall have its home State deemed to be the State in which it establishes its initial branch, agency, commercial lending company subsidiary, or bank subsidiary (including any commercial lending company subsidiary or bank subsidiary acquired by a company of which it is a subsidiary) in the United States.

INSURANCE OF DEPOSITS

SEC. 6. (a) No foreign bank may establish or operate a Federal branch unless the branch is an insured branch as defined in section 3(s) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

(b) After the date of enactment of this Act no foreign bank may establish a branch, and after one year following such date no foreign bank may operate a branch, in any State in which the deposits of a bank organized and existing under the laws of that State would be required to be insured, unless the branch is an insured branch as defined in section 3(s) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

(c)(1) The Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1811–1832) is amended as set forth hereinafter in this subsection, in which section numbers not otherwise identified refer to sections of that Act.

(2) Section 3(h) is amended by inserting "(including a foreign bank having an insured branch)" immediately after "(h) The term 'insured bank' means any bank."

(3) Section 3(j) is amended by inserting "or of a branch of a foreign bank" immediately before the period at the end thereof.

(4) Section 3(m) is amended (A) by changing "(m) The" to read "(m)(1) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (2) of this subsection, the", and (B) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) In the case of any deposit in a branch of a foreign bank, the term 'insured deposit' means an insured deposit as defined in paragraph (1) of this subsection which—

"(A) is payable in the United States to—

"(i) an individual who is a citizen or resident of the United States,

"(ii) a partnership, corporation, trust, or other legally cognizable entity created under the laws of the United States or any State and having its principal place of business within the United States or any State, or

"(iii) an individual, partnership, corporaton, trust, or other legally cognizable entity which is determined by the Board in accordance with its regulations to have such business or financial relationships in the United States as to make the insurance of such deposit consistent with the purposes of this Act; and

"(B) meets any other criteria prescribed by the Board of Directors by regulation as necessary or appropriate in its judgment to carry out the purposes of this Act or to facilitate the administration thereof.".

(5) Section 3(q) is amended to read as follows:

"(q) The term 'appropriate Federal banking agency' shall mean—

"(1) the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of a national banking association, a District bank, or a Federal branch of a foreign bank;

"(2) the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System—

"(A) in the case of a State member insured bank (except a District bank), and

"(B) in the case of any provision of the Federal Reserve Act which is made applicable under the International Banking Act of 1977 to any branch or agency of a foreign bank, and

"(3) the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in the case of a State nonmember insured bank (except a District bank) or a foreign bank having an insured branch.

Under the rule set forth in this subsection, more than one agency may be an appropriate Federal banking agency with respect to any given institution.".

(6) Section 3 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(r) The terms 'foreign bank' and 'Federal branch' shall be construed consistently with the usage of such terms in the International Banking Act of 1977.

"(s) The term 'insured branch' means a branch of a foreign bank any deposits in which are insured in accordance with the provisions of this Act.".

(7) Section 5 is amended (A) by changing "SEC. 5." to read "SEC. 5. (a)" and (B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(b) Subject to the provisions of this Act and to such terms and conditions as the Board of Directors may impose, any branch of a foreign bank, upon application by the bank to the Corporation, and examination by the Corporation of the branch, and approval by the Board of Directors, may become an insured branch. Before approving any such application, the Board of Directors shall give consideration to—

"(1) the financial history and condition of the bank,

"(2) the adequacy of its capital structure,

"(3) its future earnings prospects,

"(4) the general character of its management, including but not limited to the management of the branch proposed to be insured,

"(5) the convenience and needs of the community to be served by the branch,

"(6) whether or not its corporate powers, insofar as they will be exercised through the proposed insured branch, are consistent with the purposes of this Act, and

"(7) the probable adequacy and reliability of information supplied and to be supplied by the bank to the Corporation to enable it to carry out its functions under this Act.

"(c)(1) Before any branch of a foreign bank becomes an insured branch, the bank shall deliver to the Corporation or as the Corporation may direct a surety bond, a pledge of assets, or both, in such amounts and of such types as the Corporation may require or approve, for the purpose set forth in paragraph (4) of this subsection.

"(2) After any branch of a foreign bank becomes an insured branch, the bank shall maintain on deposit with the Corporation, or as the Corporation may direct, surety bonds or assets or both, in such amounts and of such types as shall be determined from time to time in accordance with such regulations as the Board of Directors may prescribe. Such regulations may impose differing requirements on the basis of any factors which in the judgment of the Board of Directors are reasonably related to the purpose set forth in paragraph (4).

"(3) The Corporation may require of any given bank larger deposits of bonds and assets than required under paragraph (2) of this subsection if, in the judgment of the Corporation, the situation of that bank or any branch thereof is or becomes such that the deposits of bonds and assets otherwise required under this section would not adequately fulfill the purpose set forth in paragraph (4). The imposition of any such additional requirements may be without notice or opportunity for hearing, but the Corporation shall afford an opportunity to any such bank to apply for a reduction or removal of any such additional requirements so imposed.

"(4) The purpose of the surety bonds and pledges of assets required under this subsection is to provide protection to the deposit insurance fund against the risks entailed in insuring the domestic deposits of a foreign bank whose activities, assets, and personnel are in large part outside the jurisdiction of the United States. In the implementation of its authority under this subsection, however, the Corporation shall endeavor to avoid imposing requirements on such banks which would unnecessarily place them at a competitive disadvantage in relation to domestically incorporated banks.

"(5) In the case of any failure or threatened failure of a foreign bank to comply with any requirement imposed under this subsection (c), the Corporation, in addition to all other administrative and judicial remedies, may apply to any United States district court, or United States court of any territory, within the jurisdiction of which any branch of the bank is located, for an injunction to compel such bank and any officer, employee, or agent thereof, or any other person having custody or control of any of its assets, to deliver to the Corporation such assets as may be necessary to meet such requirement, and to take any other action necessary to vest the Corporation with control of assets so delivered. If the court shall determine that there has been any such failure or threatened failure to comply with any such requirement, it shall be the duty of the court to issue such injunction. The propriety of the requirement may be litigated only as provided in chapter 7 of title 5 of the United States Code, and may not be made an issue in an action for an injunction under this paragraph.".

(8) The first sentence of section 7(a)(1) is amended by inserting "and each foreign bank having an insured branch which is not a Federal branch" immediately before "shall make to the Corporation".

(9) The first sentence of section 7(a)(3) is amended (A) by inserting "and each foreign bank having an insured branch (other than a Federal branch)" immediately before "shall make to the Corporation" and (B) by inserting ", each foreign bank having an insured branch which is a Federal branch," immediately before "and each insured district".

(10) Section 7(a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) In respect of any report required or authorized be supplied or published pursuant to this subsection or any other provision of law, the Board of Directors or the Comptroller of the Currency, as the case may be, may differentiate between domestic banks and foreign banks to such extent as, in their judgment, may be reasonably required to avoid hardship and can be done without substantial compromise of insurance risk or supervisory and regulatory effectiveness.".

(11) Section 7(b) is amended (A) by changing "(4) A bank's assessment base" to read "(4)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, a bank's assessment base" and (B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) in determining the assessment base and assessment base additions and deductions of a foreign bank having an insured branch, such adjustments shall be made as the Board of Directors may by regulation prescribe in order to provide equitable treatment for domestic and foreign banks.".

(12) Section 7(j)(1) is amended (A) by changing "(j)(1) Whenever" to read "(j)(1)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, whenever", and (B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) The Board of Directors may by regulation exempt from the reporting requirements of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph any transaction in the stock of a foreign bank to the extent that the making of any such report would be prohibited by the laws of the country of domicile of the foreign bank in effect at the time such bank makes its application under section 5(b) of this Act, or rendered impracticable by the customs and usages of such country, but the Board of Directors shall weigh the existence of any such prohibition or impracticability in connection with its consideration of the factors enumerated in sections 5(b)(4) and 5(b)(7).".

(13) Section 7(j)(2) is amended by changing "(2) Whenever" to read "(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, whenever" and by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(B) The requirements of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall not apply in the case of a loan secured by the stock of a foreign bank if the lending bank is a foreign bank under the laws of whose domicile the report otherwise required by subparagraph (A) would be prohibited.

"(C) No foreign bank under the laws of whose domicile a report in compliance with subparagraph (A) of this paragraph would be prohibited in the case of a loan to acquire the stock of an insured bank which is not a foreign bank may make, acquire, or retain any such loan. Each report of condition filed under subsection (a) by any foreign bank to which this subparagraph applies shall contain either a statement of the amount of each loan made, retained, or acquired by the foreign bank in violation of this subparagraph during the period from the date it became an insured bank or the date of its last report of condition, whichever is later, to the date of the report of condition, or a statement that no such loans were made and no such loans were outstanding during such period.".

(14) The first sentence of section 8(a) is amended by inserting ", a foreign bank having an insured branch which is a Federal branch, a foreign bank having an insured branch in any State in which State-chartered banks are required to be insured," immediately after "(except a national member bank").

(15) Section 8 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"Except as otherwise specifically provided in this section, the provisions of this section shall be applied to foreign banks in accordance with this subsection.

"(2) An act or practice outside the United States on the part of a foreign bank or any officer, director, employee, or agent thereof may not constitute the basis for any action by an officer or agency of the United States under this section, unless—

"(A) such officer or agency alleges a belief that such act or practice has been, is, or is likely to be a cause of or carried on in connection with or in furtherance of an act or practice within any one or more States which, in and of itself, would constitute an appropriate basis for action by a Federal officer or agency under this section; or

"(B) the alleged act or practice is one which, if proven, would, in the judgment of the Board of Directors, adversely affect the insurance risk assumed by the Corporation.

"(3) In any case in which any action or proceeding is brought pursuant to an allegation under paragraph (2) of this subsection for the suspension or removal of any officer, director, or other person associated with a foreign bank, and such person fails to appear promptly as a party to such action or proceeding and to comply with any effective order or judgment therein, any failure by the foreign bank to secure his removal from any office he holds in such bank and from any further participation in its affairs shall, in and of itself, constitute grounds for termination of the insurance of the deposits in any branch of the bank.

"(4) Where the venue of any judicial or administrative proceeding under this section is to be determined by reference to the location of the home office of a bank, the venue of such a proceeding with respect to a foreign bank having one or more branches in not more than one judicial district or other relevant jurisdiction shall be within such jurisdiction. Where such a bank has branches in more than one such jurisdiction, the venue shall be in the jurisdiction within which the branch or branches involved in the proceeding are located, and if there are more than one such jurisdictions, the venue shall be proper in any such jurisdiction in which the proceeding is brought or to which it may appropriately be transferred.

"(5) Any service required or authorized to be made on a foreign bank may be made on any branch located within any State, but if such service is in connection with an action or proceeding involving one or more branches located in any State, service shall be made on at least one branch so involved.".

(16) The first sentence of section 10(b) is amended (A) by inserting "any insured branch of a foreign bank, any branch of a foreign bank making application to become an insured bank," immediately after "(except a District bank)", and (B) by inserting "or branch" before the comma after "any closed insured bank".

(17) The third sentence of section 10(b) is amended by inserting ", and in the case of a foreign bank, a binding commitment by such bank to permit such examination to the extent determined by the Board of Directors to be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act shall be required as a condition to the insurance of any deposits" immediately before the period at the end thereof.

(18) Section 11(c) is amended by inserting ", insured Federal branch of a foreign bank," immediately before "or insured District bank,".

(19) The first sentence of section 11(e) is amended by inserting "or any insured branch (other than a Federal branch) of a foreign bank" immediately before "shall have been closed".

(20) The second sentence of section 11(e) is amended by changing "such insured State bank," to read "such insured State bank or insured branch of a foreign bank,".

(21) Section 11(f) is amended by inserting "or insured branch of a foreign bank" immediately before "shall be closed".

(22) The first sentence of section 11(g) is amended by inserting ", insured branch of a foreign bank," immediately before "or District bank,".

(23) The third sentence of section 11(g) is amended by changing "In the case of any closed insured bank," to read "In the case of any closed insured bank or closed insured branch of a foreign bank,".

(24) Section 12(a) is amended by inserting ", branch of a foreign bank," immediately after "a closed national bank".

(25) Section 13 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) The powers conferred on the Board of Directors and the Corporation by this section to take action to reopen a closed insured bank or to avert the closing of an insured bank may be used with respect to an insured branch of a foreign bank if, in the judgment of the Board of Directors, the public interest in avoiding the closing of such branch substantially outweighs any additional risk of loss to the insurance fund which the exercise of such powers would entail.".

(26) Section 18(c) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(11) The provisions of this subsection do not apply to any merger transaction involving a foreign bank if no party to the transaction is principally engaged in business in the United States.".

(27) Section 18(d) is amended by inserting the following new sentence immediately after the first sentence thereof: "No foreign bank may move any insured branch from one location to another without such consent.".

(28) The first sentence in section 18(g) is amended by inserting "and in insured branches of foreign banks" immediately after "in insured nonmember banks".

(29) Section 18(j) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to any foreign bank having an insured branch with respect to dealings between such bank and any affiliate thereof which is principally engaged in business outside the United States, and with respect to any dealings involving such bank to which the provisions of this subsection apply, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may make such exemptions or exceptions as it determines to be reasonable and appropriate in the light of the different organizational structure or character of business conducted by such bank or any branch, agency, subsidiary, or affiliate thereof.".

(30) Section 21 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) The provisions of this section shall not apply to any foreign bank except with respect to the transactions and records of any insured branch of such a bank.".

(31) The first sentence of section 25(a) is amended by inserting "insured branch of a foreign bank," immediately after "No insured bank,".

AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

SEC. 7. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), (f), (g), (i), (j), (k), and the second sentence of subsection (e) of section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act shall apply to every Federal branch and Federal agency of a foreign bank in the same manner and to the same extent as if the Federal branch or Federal agency were a member bank as that term is defined in section 1 of the Federal Reserve Act; but the Board either by general or specific regulation or ruling may waive the minimum and maximum reserve ratios prescribed under section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act and may prescribe any other ratio, not more than 22 per centum, for any obligation of any such Federal branch or Federal agency that the Board may deem reasonable and appropriate, taking into consideration the character of business conducted by such institutions and the need to maintain vigorous and fair competition between and among such institutions and member banks. The Board may impose reserve requirements on Federal branches and Federal agencies in such graduated manner as it deems reasonable and appropriate.

(2) A Federal branch or Federal agency shall be subject to this subsection only if (A) its parent foreign bank has total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; (B) its parent foreign bank is controlled by a foreign company which owns or controls foreign banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; or (C) its parent foreign bank is controlled by a group of foreign companies that own or control foreign banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000.

(b) Section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Subject to such restrictions, limitations, and regulations as may be imposed by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, each Federal Reserve bank may receive deposits from, discount paper endorsed by, and make advances to any Federal branch or agency of a foreign bank in the same manner and to the same extent that it may exercise such powers with respect to a member bank if such Federal branch or agency is maintaining reserves with such Reserve bank pursuant to section 7 of the International Banking Act of 1977. In exercising any such powers with respect to any such Federal branch or agency each Federal Reserve bank shall give due regard to account balances being maintained by such Federal branch or agency with such Reserve bank and the proportion of any such Federal branch or agency's assets being held as reserves under section 7 of the International Banking Act of 1977. For the purposes of this paragraph, the terms 'Federal branch,' 'Federal agency,' 'foreign bank,' and 'commercial lending company' shall have the same meanings assigned to them in section 1 of the International Banking Act of 1977.".

(6) Each branch or agency of a foreign bank, other than a Federal branch or agency, and each commercial lending company controlled by one or more foreign banks or by one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank, shall be subject to the provision requiring reports of condition contained in paragraph 6 of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 324) to the same extent and in the same manner as if the branch, agency, or commercial lending company were a State member bank. In addition to any requirements imposed under section 4 of this Act, each Federal branch and agency shall be subject to subparagraph (a) of section 11 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 248(a)) and to paragraph 5 of section 21 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 483) to the same extent and in the same manner as if it were a member bank.

NONBANKING ACTIVITIES

SEC. 8. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this section (1) any foreign bank that maintains a branch or agency in a State, (2) any foreign bank or foreign company controlling a foreign bank that controls a commercial lending company organized under State law, and (3) any company of which any foreign bank or company referred to in (1) and (2) is a subsidiary shall be subject to the provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, and to sections 105 and 106 of the Bank Holding Company Act Amendments of 1970 in the same manner and to the same extent that bank holding companies are subject thereto, except that any such foreign bank or company shall not by reason of this subsection be deemed a bank holding company for purposes of section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956.

(b) After December 31, 1985, no foreign bank or other company to which subsection (a) applies on the date of enactment of this Act may retain direct or indirect ownership or control of any voting shares of any nonbanking company in the United States that it owned, controlled, or held with power to vote on the date of enactment of this Act or engage in any nonbanking activities in the United States in which it was engaged on such date unless authorized by subsection (c) of this section or by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System under section 4 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956.

(c) After December 31, 1985, notwithstanding the prohibitions of subsection (b) of this section, a foreign bank or other company to which subsection (a) applies on the date of enactment of this Act may continue to engage in nonbanking activities in the United States in which directly or through an affiliate it was lawfully engaged on December 3, 1974 (or on a date subsequent to December 3, 1974, in the case of activities carried on as the result of the direct or indirect acquisition, pursuant to a binding written contract entered into on or before December 3, 1974, of another company engaged in such activities at the time of acquisition) and may retain direct or indirect ownership or control of any voting shares of any nonbanking company that it (1) owned, controlled, or held with power to vote on December 3, 1974 (or on a date subsequent to December 3, 1974, if acquired by a written contract entered into on or before such date) and (2) that does not engage in any activities other than those in which such foreign bank, company, or affiliate may engage by virtue of this subsection or section 4 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956; except that the Board by order, after opportunity for hearing, may terminate the authority conferred by this subsection (c) on any such foreign bank or company to engage directly or through an affiliate in any activity otherwise permitted by this subsection (c) if it determines, having due regard to the purposes of this Act and the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, that such action is necessary to prevent undue concentration of resources, decreased or unfair competition, conflicts of interest, or unsound banking practices in the United States. Notwithstanding any exercise of the authority conferred upon the Board by this subsection (c), in the case of any such foreign bank or company that engages directly or indirectly through an affiliate in the business of underwriting, distributing, or otherwise buying or selling stocks, bonds, and other securities in the United States, such foreign bank or company may continue to engage in such business in the United States to the extent not prohibited for national banks by paragraph Seven of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (12 U.S.C. 24) and, in addition, may continue to engage in the United States in the business of underwriting and distributing securities to the extent necessary to participate in customary and usual syndicate activities in the United States by the managing underwriters or other underwriters on behalf of all syndicate members in connection with underwritings of such securities so long as the individual selling and distribution activities of any such foreign bank or company (whether direct or indirect through an affiliate) in connection with any such underwriting are confined to jurisdictions other than the United States. Nothing in this subsection (c) shall be construed to authorize any foreign bank or company referred to in this subsection (c), or any affiliate thereof, to engage in activities authorized by this subsection (c) through the acquisition, pursuant to a contract entered into after December 3, 1974, of any interest in or the assets of a going concern engaged in such activties. Any foreign bank or company that is authorized to engage in any activity pursuant to this subsection (c) but, as a result of action of the Board, is required to terminate such activity may retain the ownership of control of shares in any company carrying on such activity for a period of two years from the date on which its authority was so terminated by the Board. As used in this subsection, the term "affiliate" shall mean any company more than 5 per centum of whose voting shares is directly or indirectly owned or controlled or held with power to vote by the specified foreign bank or company.

(d) Nothing in this section shall be construed to define a branch or agency of a foreign bank or a commercial lending company controlled by a foreign bank or foreign company that controls a foreign bank as a "bank" for the purposes of any provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, or section 105 of the Bank Holding Company Act Amendments of 1970, except that any such branch, agency or commercial lending company subsidiary shall be deemed a "bank" or "banking subsidiary", as the case may be, for the purposes of applying the prohibitions of section 106 of the Bank Holding Company Act Amendments of 1970 and the exemptions provided in sections 4(c)(1), 4(c)(2), 4(c)(3), and 4(c)(4) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1843(c)(1), (2), (3), and (4)) to any foreign bank or other company to which subsection (a) applies.

(e) Section 2(h) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 is amended (1) by striking out "(h) The" and inserting in lieu thereof "(h)(1) Except as provided by paragraph (2), the", (2) by striking out the proviso, and (3) by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(2) The prohibitions of section 4 of this Act shall not apply to shares of any company organized under the laws of a foreign country (or to shares of any subsidiary of such company principally engaged in activities incidental to the business of the parent) that is principally engaged in business outside the United States if such shares are held or acquired by a bank holding company organized under the laws of a foreign country that is principally engaged in the banking business outside the United States, except that (1) such company (A) may engage in the business of underwriting, selling or distributing securities in the United States only to the extent that a bank holding company may do so under this Act and under regulations or orders issued by the Board under this Act, and (B) may engage in the United States in any banking or financial operations or types of activities permitted under section 4(c)(8) or in any order or regulation issued by the Board under such section only with the Board's prior approval under that section, and (2) no domestic office or subsidiary of a bank holding company or subsidiary thereof holding shares of such company may extend credit to a domestic office or subsidiary of such company on terms more favorable than those afforded similar borrowers in the United States.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, (A) a bank holding company may not in any case be considered to be 'principally engaged in the banking business outside the United States' if its principal banking subsidiary is located in the United States; and (B) 'domestic' means located in the United States or organized under the laws of the United States or any State thereof."

GUIDELINES FOR FOREIGN BANK OPERATIONS

SEC. 9. (a) The Secretary of the Treasury in issuing guidelines under this section, and the Federal regulatory agencies in the administration of this Act, shall seek to achieve a parity of treatment for foreign banks, branches, agencies, and commercial lending companies relative to their domestic counterparts. It is the purpose of this Act to establish a basic statutory framework which, giving due consideration to the structure of our domestic monetary mechanisms and our national interests, will, to the extent practical, allow foreign banking institutions to have the same rights, duties, and privileges and be subject to the same limitations, restrictions, or conditions as our domestic banking institutions. It is the intent of the Congress that this Act shall establish a pattern for equitable treatment which State regulators may adopt in their regulation of foreign banking institutions.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall issue guidelines with respect to the banking operations of foreign banks, companies, and individuals in the United States, in order to assist Federal and State banking agencies in acting on applications by such foreign banks, companies, and individuals to establish branches or agencies of foreign banks in any State or to acquire interests in banks, corporations organized under sections 25 or 25 (a) of the Federal Reserve Act, or commercial lending companies organized under State law.

(c) Whenever the Comptroller of the Currency receives an application to establish a national bank that will be controlled by a foreign company or group of foreign companies, or a Federal branch or agency of a foreign bank, he shall send a copy to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the bank supervisory authority of the State where the bank, branch, or agency is to be located. He shall wait thirty days for such officials to submit their views before acting on the application.

(d) Whenever a State bank supervisory authority receives an application to establish a branch or agency of a foreign bank or to organize a bank or a commercial lending company that will be controlled by a foreign company or group of foreign companies, he shall transmit a copy of such application to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of State, and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and shall allow a thirty-day period within which their views and recommendations may be submitted.

(e) Whenever the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System receives an application from a foreign company or group of foreign companies for approval under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1842) or receives an application from a foreign bank under section 25 or 25 (a) of the Federal Reserve Act and whenever the responsible Federal banking agency under the Bank Merger Act (12 U.S.C. 1828 (c)) receives an application under that Act involving a bank that is controlled by a foreign company or group of foreign companies, it shall transmit a copy of such application to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State and allow a thirty-day period within which their views and recommendations may be submitted.

(f)(1) Every branch or agency of a foreign bank and every commercial lending company controlled by one or more foreign banks or by one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank shall conduct its operations in the United States in full compliance with provisions of any law of the United States or any State thereof which—

(A) prohibit discrimination against any individual or other person on the basis of the race, color, religion, sex, marital status, age, or national origin of (i) such individual or other person or (ii) any officer, director, employee, or creditor of, or any owner of any interest in, such individual or other person; and

(B) apply to national banks or State-chartered banks doing business in the State in which such branch or agency or commercial lending company, as the case may be, is doing business.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no application for a branch or agency under this Act shall be approved by the Comptroller and no application referred to in subsection (c), (d), or (e) of this section shall be approved by the Comptroller, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, or a State bank supervisory authority, as the case may be, unless the entity making the application has agreed to conduct all of its operations in the United States in full compliance with provisions of any law of the United States or any State thereof which—

(A) prohibit discrimination against individuals or other persons on the basis of the race, color, religion, sex, marital status, age, or national origin of (i) such individual or other person or (ii) any officer, director, employee, or creditor of, or any owner of any interest in, such individual or other person; and

(B) apply to national banks or State-chartered banks doing business in the State in which the entity to be established is to do business.

REPRESENTATIVE OFFICES

SEC. 10. (a) Any foreign bank that maintains an office other than a branch or agency in any State shall register with the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with rules prescribed by him, within one hundred and eighty days after the date of enactment of this Act or the date on which the office is established, whichever is later.

(b) This Act does not authorize the establishment of any such office in any State in contravention of State law.

CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDERS

SEC. 11. Subsection (b) of section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1818(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4) This subsection and subsections (c), (d), (h), (i), (k), (l), (m), and (n) of this section shall apply to any branch, agency, and any commercial lending company controlled by one or more foreign banks or by one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank, as those terms are defined in the International Banking Act of 1977, in the same manner as they apply to an insured bank, and for that purpose the appropriate Federal banking agency shall be the Comptroller of the Currency with respect to a Federal branch or agency of a foreign bank and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System with respect to a branch, agency, or commercial lending company subsidiary operating pursuant to State law.

"(5) This subsection and subsections (c), (d), (h), (i), (k), (l), (m), and (n) of this section shall apply to any foreign bank or company to which subsection (a) of section 8 of the International Banking Act of 1977 applies and to any subsidiary (other than a bank) of any such foreign bank or company in the same manner as they apply to a bank holding company and any subsidiary thereof (other than a bank) under subparagraph (3) of this subsection. For the purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'subsidiary' shall have the meaning assigned to it in section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956.".

AMENDMENTS TO THE BANKING ACT OF 1933

SEC. 12. Section 21 of the Banking Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 378) is amended by striking clause (B) of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(B) shall be permitted by the United States, any State, territory, or district to engage in such business and shall be subjected by the laws of the United States, or such State, territory, or district to examination and regulations,".

REGULATION AND ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 13. (a) The Comptroller and the Board are authorized and empowered to issue such rules, regulations, and orders as each of them may deem necessary in order to perform their respective duties and functions under this Act and to administer and carry out the provisions and purposes of this Act and prevent evasions thereof.

(b) In addition to any powers, remedies, or sanctions otherwise provided by law, compliance with the requirements imposed under this Act or any amendment made by this Act may be enforced under section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act by any appropriate Federal banking agency as defined in that Act.

(c) In the case of any provision of the Federal Reserve Act to which a foreign bank or branch thereof is subject under this Act, and which is made applicable to nonmember insured banks by the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, whether by cross-reference to the Federal Reserve Act or by a provision in substantially the same terms in the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, the administration, interpretation, and enforcement of such provision, insofar as it relates to any foreign bank or branch thereof as to which the Board is an appropriate Federal banking agency, are vested in the Board, but where the making of any report to the Board or a Federal Reserve bank is required under any such provision, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation may require that a duplicate of any such report be sent directly to it. This subsection shall not be construed to impair any power of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to make regular or special examinations or to require special reports.

Mr. ST GERMAIN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 14, strike out lines 2 through 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 5. (a) Except as provided by subsection (b)—

(1) No foreign bank may directly or indirectly operate a Federal branch outside its home State unless the State is one in which it could operate a branch if it were a national bank located in its home State.

(2) No foreign bank may directly or indirectly operate a State branch outside its home State unless—

(A) the statute laws of the State in which such branch is to be located specifically authorize a State bank organized under the laws of such foreign bank's home State to establish or operate such branch, by language to that effect and not merely by implication, and

(B) the State branch is approved by the bank regulatory authority of the State in which such branch or agency is to be located.

(3) No foreign bank or company of which it is a subsidiary may directly or indirectly acquire any voting shares of, interest in, or substantially all of the assets of a commercial lending company located outside of its home State unless—

(A) the statute laws of the State in which such company is to be located specifically authorize a State bank organized under the laws of such foreign bank's home State to acquire any such company, by language to that effect and not merely by implication, and

(B) the acquisition is approved by the bank regulatory authority of the State in which such commercial lending company is to be located.

(4) No foreign bank may directly or indirectly acquire any voting shares of, interest in, or substantially all of the assets of a bank located outside of its home State unless such acquisition would be permissible under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 if the foreign bank were a bank holding company the operations of whose banking subsidiaries were principally conducted in the foreign bank's home State.

Mr. ST GERMAIN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WYLIE TO THE COMMITTEE AMENDMENT

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WYLIE to the committee amendment: Page 14, strike out line 16 and all that follows thereafter through page 16, line 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 5. (a) Except as provided by subsection (b), no foreign bank may operate a branch, agency, commercial lending company subsidiary, or bank subsidiary outside its home State unless (1) in the case of a Federal or State branch, the State is one in which it could operate a branch if it were a national bank located in its home State, (2) in the case of a State branch, agency, or commercial lending company, it is approved by the regulatory authority of the State in which such State branch, agency, or commercial lending company is to be operated, and (3) in the case of Federal branch or agency, its operation is not prohibited by the State in which it is to be operated, and (4) in the case of a bank, its acquisition would be permissible under section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 if the foreign bank were a bank holding company the operations of whose banking subsidiaries were principally conducted in the foreign bank's home State.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would restore the language of section 5 which was passed by the 94th Congress.

As I stated earlier, I think it is necessary because this makes it unmistakably clear that foreign banks cannot engage in business in more than one State without being subjected to Federal rules and regulations which govern U.S. banks.

The St Germain amendment would permit State legislatures to enact laws permitting State chartered banks to branch interstate or across State lines and thus permit branches of foreign banks to do so as well.

Again we are comparing apples and oranges when we compare State banks and foreign banks because foreign banks are so much larger in their operations than most State banks that it seems to me that by dragging foreign banks through the State bank loophole does not make any sense. Only a few State banks would want to use this law or operate under it because they would not have the resources to operate interstate.

As I mentioned a little earlier the U.S. banks are at a competitive disadvantage at the present time because they are prohibited from engaging in interstate operations by the McFadden Act, but U.S. banks are also required to maintain reserves as fixed by the Federal Reserve Board. That will be addressed in section 3 a little later on. U.S. banks are required to put up reserves to guard against bank failures like those that were experienced in the 1930's.

Further, foreign banks are not required to have Federal deposit insurance. That also will be addressed a little later on.

It seems to me that if through this means which allows State legislatures to say that a foreign bank can branch interstate between two States, that we are getting away from the principle purpose of this bill, and that is to provide equity and parity with U.S. national banks operating in the United States.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest an aye vote on my amendment which, as I say, was passed by this House in the 94th Congress. It is clean, not ambiguous and does not involve State legislatures which may be unconstitutional.

My amendment allows the Federal Reserve to regulate the operations of foreign banks coming into the United States. I think in this time of national economic emergency that we need to act in the national interest and give the Federal Reserve Board the final say and the final authority as to whether a foreign branch would be allowed to branch interstate. The Fed should, as I say, have say over foreign branches. They should be brought under the umbrella of the Federal Reserve Board as far as monetary policy is concerned. I think that allowing the State legislatures to make this determination puts our foreign bank operation further into politics, from which we are about to extract them, I hope. I would urge an aye vote on my amendment.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I rise to oppose the amendment offered by my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE). His amendment is much more restrictive than the St Germain amendment. There has already been enough controversy on this particular section, so that as a matter of saving time I want to inform the Members of the House that I oppose the Wylie amendment.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I yield to my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REUSS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO). I think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE), while well intended, has long since been overtaken by events. The great weight of authority of the bank regulatory agencies of the several States feels that there should be this slight differentiation in the case of foreign banks, and that it would create unnecessary chaos to accept the amendment. I, therefore, hope that the Wylie amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to ask the distinguished chairman what he means that my amendment has been taken over by events. The chairman supported this section in the bill when it passed in the 94th Congress. Does not the distinguished chairman think that by passing my amendment, which provides that State legislatures can provide for interstate branching of foreign banks, only serves to confuse the issue before us today, whereas my amendment makes it quite plain and quite clear that that determination would be left up to the Federal Reserve Board? It seems to me that is where we wanted to come out, at least in the 94th Congress.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so that I can respond to my friend, the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REUSS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Consistency, it has been said, is the hobgoblin of little minds; while I would be the first to say that 3 years ago, I voted for a bill which contained language substantially like that now proffered by the gentleman from Ohio, all the members of our committee have undergone a course of advanced higher education since then. We have heard from the rank and file of the regulatory apparatus throughout the country, and in my view, in order to get a bill which will pass and a bill which will be fair to the foreign banks and not lead to retaliation against our own banks when they do business overseas, for those reasons I think that the amendment now offered, in April of 1978, is an amendment whose time has passed. If we are really interested in getting to the important portions of this bill, the portions which give the monetary authorities the power to see that rampant inflation does not come about through the uncontrolled presence in this country of foreign banks, we would do best to recognize that our attention was a little diverted 3 years ago, and that we can improve what we then produced. This is precisely why the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) and I, and I think many others, simply cannot go along with the gentleman's amendment, although historically he is on his usual splendidly sound ground.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think basically this amendment by my very distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, is unnecessary. The gentleman assumes that the regulatory agencies in each State are doing nothing or they are just standing there letting foreign banks run all over domestic banks. That is not true. We have heard extensively from the State regulatory authorities.

I think the gentleman believes that all wisdom resides in the Federal Reserve Board, and we have certainly found that is not always true.

The gentleman also assumes that domestic banks cannot have offices in other States if they are not chartered in other States. That is also false. A lot of banks maintain limited offices in other States, for purposes other than taking deposits but which tend to generate deposits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ANNUNZIO was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I conclude that although the gentleman from Ohio usually takes very meritorious positions, this is just basically an unnecessary amendment, because no showing has been made that additional Federal Reserve authority is needed. The Fed is being granted substantial additional powers under this bill without this amendment, and I believe these powers are more than adequate to do the job that is required. I support the position of my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

It has been said that inconsistency is a feminine characteristic, but I think there are principles and it seems to me that one of the principles we ought to stick to is reciprocity, mutuality. I do not know and I do not think anybody in this Chamber knows of a single American bank operating abroad that is allowed to have privileges not accorded to local banks; but I think we all know there are American banks required in foreign countries to do things we do not require of foreign banks here.

Every one of us realizes that control by the States is splendid in all things affecting local matters; but certainly the different banking authorities in the 50 States are of changing and inconstant and varied competence. I think it is wise to have foreign banks operating under our Federal Reserve Board controls which are common to all our own banks.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, we are constantly in America expected to be the only grownups in the world. We have to allow foreign banks and institutions from other countries privileges not accorded to our own. The time has come when we have to admit that we are all in this world together. There is no reason to give special standing or privileges to foreign banks.

This bill now provides that foreign banks are grandfathered in forever. I hope eventually to introduce an amendment that will stop grandfathering after a certain period of time. Our own banks are not allowed to deal in securities. Maybe a lot of foreign banks in New York and Chicago and California are happy with this, but that does not mean it is good for the country. If we found it necessary to separate securities from banking in general, why should we grandfather in foreign banks and allow them to do it in perpetuity? It seems to me there should be a limit.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. FENWICK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the chairman that this is not a "foolish" inconsistency, that there comes a time when consistency is meritorious.

I would also suggest we are looking to the States collectively. Ninety-seven percent of all the foreign banking operations in the United States are centered in four cities: New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, and San Francisco—four cities located in three States.

We are now talking about an amendment which would permit the bank regulators in Iowa, in Louisiana, in Connecticut, in Mississippi, in Tennessee, and, yes, in Ohio determine whether a foreign bank should operate in the United States.

It just seems to me that my amendment has more validity today than it ever had before, because in the 2 years since we were on the House floor in the 94th Congress on this matter there have been billions of dollars more in assets brought into this country by foreign branch banks than were here 2 years ago, in 1976, when this bill was on the floor. As I said earlier, those assets have increased substantially over the $48 billion estimated then.

I think that those operations ought to be brought under the aegis of the Federal Reserve Board, not that the Board is all powerful and all knowing, but we did set up a Federal Reserve System to establish monetary policy in this country, and the members of the Board cannot do that when one-fifth of all the banking operations in the United States is conducted by foreign banks.

Mr. Chairman, I urge an aye vote on my amendment, and I thank the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. FENWICK) for yielding and for her excellent support.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. FENWICK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

What we have here, for those Members who have been listening to the debate, is two different approaches to the committee bill. We have, of course, the approach of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE), which I oppose. One approach to this subject matter is that of the Federal Reserve Board. Then we have the approach of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) and State regulators on this subject.

Mr. Chairman, in reality what the majority of the committee came out with is the committee amendment authored by the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN), which is a compromise between both approaches, and in fairness to all concerned I think the committee bill is good. Therefore, I ask for a "no" vote on the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, my distinguished committee chairman has reminded us of an adage that "consistency is the hobgoblin of small minds." There is also another saying I remember, an even older adage, that "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

I think the argument that our distinguished chairman made previously in support of the position now taken by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) is far more persuasive than the argument he made today against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE). Admittedly, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN), in the interest of getting the bill passed, agreed to a compromise. I am not going to ask him to respond to this, but I would bet if we could look into his mind and perceive what he would say if he said what is really on his mind, we would find that he prefers the Wylie language over the language that he felt compelled to agree to in the compromise bill.

I say this because he started out with one purpose in mind. That was to stop this practice of giving foreign banks preferential treatment over the national banks of the United States.

If we believe that foreign banks should have an advantage competitively over the national banks of our own country, then we will vote down the Wylie amendment. If, on the other hand, we think they should have to meet the exact same regulations and restrictions that must be met by our national banks, then we will vote for the Wylie amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I for one am going to vote for the Wylie amendment.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much for his eloquent and articulate support. I think there might be—and the gentleman is a very excellent lawyer—a constitutional question. Of course, we are not supposed to decide that here on the floor of the House, but this might create a so-called interstate compact arrangement which would be unconstitutional, of course, under the Constitution of the United States, in that two legislatures can get together and make an arrangement for interstate branching.

Has the gentleman thought about that? Maybe I am bringing up something that I have had an opportunity to think on more than the gentleman has. But that question occurred to me.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman, in all candor, I have not thought of that. But I do know this: I know that a State banking examiner does not have access to the same information that the Federal Reserve and the Federal bank examiners have. That is one of the reasons that the distinguished member of the subcommittee started out on the course that he did, in that he wants all banks, foreign and domestic and national, to be properly regulated, without discrimination.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I find myself in a very difficult position here, in that I have to get up and disagree with some very dear friends, for whom I have such high respect, on both sides of this issue. However, in all truth, I am basically and primarily seeking a piece of legislation that will effectively produce equality and parity of treatment. I am seeking legislation that will insure the continued existence of the many small independent banks around this country. I am concerned, deeply concerned, about another point: If one of these foreign banks is established, let us say in New York, and it is supervised and regulated by the New York State banking authorities, but also establishes another branch, a full banking facility, in another State, how in God's name does the New York bank supervisor regulate and supervise that other branch? It just cannot be done. You are going to have a bank operating in different States, with full banking privileges to make automobile loans, farm loans, loans on your TV sets, accept deposits, sell certificates of deposit, and yet be regulated by two separate banking authorities—one not knowing what the other is doing. That bothers me. And I am not raising an imaginary specter when I make the statement that I do. I am talking about real situations.

In yesterday's Wall Street Journal, a story appeared to the effect that the Bank of Hong Kong is purchasing Marine Midland Bank in New York, one of the largest banks in the country. Once that holding company purchases Marine Midland, the Bank of Hong Kong, if the committee amendment does not prevail, can then go into each and every State of the Union, operate a full banking facility in competition with our domestic banks, the big ones, but particularly the small ones. The Bank of Hong Kong has very adequate capital. Marine Midland is buckling under to the Bank of Hong Kong because they need capital, an infusion of capital that they cannot acquire on the equity market today.

They are not the only bank in that position. According to the bank analysts, there are 20 other major foreign banks shopping around for acquisitions.

Mr. Chairman, I say to my colleagues that we have a very dangerous situation existing here, and the potential is enormous. Today the foreign banks in this country control $96 billion in assets. That is not small potatoes. For that reason, we want to grant equality of treatment for domestic and foreign banks; but this Member cannot see why we should give an advantage to the foreign banks. We want them functioning. We want them to help our economy, but we do not want them to ruin our economy. That is why we want the Federal Reserve to be able to set reserve requirements and examinations so that those banks compete on an equal, sound, and fair basis with our domestic banks.

Mr. Chairman, as I say, I have very dear friends for whom I have the highest respect on both sides of this issue.

I have been working with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) on this matter for many years now. I would like to support his amendment. However, I feel that I might have a little difficulty in so doing were the Annunzio amendment then to be offered.

The compromise I offered in the full committee, I feel, will protect the interests that have to be protected. It will give equal treatment to foreign banks, and it will take care of the problems I foresee if the committee amendment is not sustained.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, with reluctance, I cannot support my dear colleague, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE).

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN) has expired.

(On request of Mr. ROUSSELOT and by unanimous consent, Mr. ST GERMAIN was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I must say that I agree with everything the gentleman has said. We have worked together very hard and very diligently on this bill. We have traveled in Europe and have talked to central bank officials all over Europe about this matter. We are trying to come out at the same place, but would not the gentleman agree that my amendment tightens up foreign bank operations in the United States even more than does the amendment which was reported out of committee?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. There is no doubt that it is a stronger amendment.

Mr. WYLIE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that I appreciate the gentleman's bringing up the Hong Kong Bank. However, that has nothing to do with this amendment. That is addressed to the whole bill, perhaps; but that bank is regulated by the Federal Reserve Board right now as the gentleman well knows, under the Bank Holding Company Act.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I beg to differ.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. It has nothing to do with this amendment.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Yes, it does.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I feel that to drag this issue into the subject of this particular amendment confuses the issue. That is my humble judgment.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman that in a few minutes when we debate section 5, I will read a letter that I have from the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Although it does not name the Hong Kong Bank, it illustrates that that is what can happen under these circumstances.

If the Bank of Hong Kong purchases the Marine Midland Bank, there is nothing in the Annunzio amendment to prevent it from also establishing branches in every State of this Nation.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

(Mr. BROWN of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the debate we have had really gets to the crux of the problem.

Most of us—in fact, I think I could say that all of us—the 46 members of the Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs agreed that legislation was needed and is needed. That is why we reported this bill out by a 46 to 0 vote.

If legislation is needed, it seems to me that it is very unwise for us to adopt amendments which could very likely lead to the defeat of the legislation that we all agree is needed.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) is offering this amendment. He intends to offer an amendment to section 7 also, I believe. What he would do by these two amendments is to return the legislation, for all intents and purposes, right back where it was when it was introduced, at which time it was a pure Federal Reserve Board measure, in which condition, I will assure the Members, it did not have the chance of the proverbial snowball of getting through the Congress.

And yet, the Fed is most desirous of having legislation. Now, we can argue the relative merits of the dual banking system until we are blue in the face. The fact remains that we do have a dual banking system, and it is popular, and we are not going to change it if we tried. If we do not reflect that dual banking system in this legislation, we are not going to get the legislation.

I commend all of my friends over at the Federal Reserve Board for all their efforts to try to get their bill, but their bill is not going to pass this Congress.

Now, how do banks get to branch interstate, if they wish to branch interstate? First of all, the chartering State would have to agree that a bank chartered in that State could branch elsewhere. Secondly, the recipient State, the State to which the bank would branch, would have to agree to receive that bank, or a branch of that bank. So, it seems to me that unless Members do not want States to have any rights with respect to this matter, they should not adopt the Wylie amendment, and probably need not adopt the St Germain committee amendment; although I probably am inclined to support it because I thought we had an understanding when the bill came out of committee that we would leave it pretty much as we reported it out of committee.

Not only that, my friends and colleagues, the Wylie amendment is not sound in the first place under our dual banking system. Second, if Members want to make sure that they do not get legislation, or take a step that is counterproductive to what Mr. WYLIE and the Fed are trying to accomplish—if they do not want to do these things, then they should vote down the Wylie amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) to the committee amendment.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Chair announced that pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, he will vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the Committee of the Whole appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred Members have appeared. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to rule XXIII, clause 2, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

The pending business is the demand of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) for a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was refused.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand a division.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WYLIE) there were—ayes 13, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I rise in opposition to the committee amendment to section 5.

Mr. Chairman, the Congress is often criticized for legislating after the fact, or in more common terms, locking the barn door after the horse has run away. If we adopt the committee amendment to section 5, we will be locking the barn door before we even buy the horse.

The committee amendment to section 5 is an extremely complicated one, but also a highly important amendment. Every Member of this body should realize, however, that his vote on section 5 could forever affect the economic climate of their own individual State. By voting in favor of the committee amendment to section 5, it may well mean that your State will never have the opportunity to have foreign banks. The prospects of foreign banks in your State might not be appealing at this time, but with more and more States seeking ways to increase foreign trade it may well be that at some point in the future your State would want to encourage foreign banks to locate there so as to facilitate foreign trade without bringing undue competitive advantage to domestic banks. Your State will never have the opportunity for foreign banking if you support the committee amendment to section 5.

Very simply, the committee amendment says that a foreign bank may operate in only a single State unless the State where that foreign bank seeks to open additional branches, and as the State where the main office of the foreign bank is located are agreeable to allow reciprocal branching not only of State banks, but also of foreign banks.

Let me cite an example of how that would work. Suppose that the State of Iowa wanted to increase its export of agricultural products to Germany and Iowa determines that it would facilitate the trade by having a branch of a German bank operate in Iowa. This bank would not accept deposits or in any other way compete for the consumer business of other Iowa banks; its sole function may well be to handle trade matters. The main office of the German bank is in New York City and under the committee amendment to section 5, the only way that bank could open a branch in Iowa would be for the State of Iowa to agree to allow New York State domestic banks to branch into Iowa and for New York State to allow Iowa banks to branch into New York. That would mean that one of the giant New York banks could move into Iowa and siphon off all of the banking business in that State.

You can easily see that the State of Iowa, trying to increase foreign trade and helping citizens to improve their economic conditions, would have to virtually sell its banking soul in order to accomplish that goal.

Every Member of this body is vitally concerned about the weakness of the dollar abroad. One of the main reasons for that weakness is our large deficit balance of payments. Each month that deficit sets new records. As long as we continue such deficits, we will never see the dollar return to its position of greatness as an international currency.

One of the best ways to reduce the trade deficit is not only to decrease imports, but to expand the export of U.S.-produced goods and services. I know of no better way to facilitate exporting than to allow foreign banking to expand in this country. If a small manufacturer wanted to export his product where would he turn to learn about overseas markets, international financing, and the other problems that go hand in hand with exporting? A foreign bank could easily perform that function without in any way taking away the business of an American bank which normally does not possess such information.

The foreign bank could provide market information, plant locations, shipping assistance and, of course, capital. Since these foreign banks would be fully taxed by our Government, we would not be losing at that end of the scale.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ANNUNZIO was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS).

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to associate myself with the Annunzio proposition that the committee amendment be voted down and the subcommittee language thus automatically restored.

What that would do is very simple: The Annunzio language would insure that if any one of the 47 States which are not now favored with the presence of a foreign bank, in the judgment of its duly constituted banking authorities, wants to have a foreign branch, it may do so. That is a slightly different rule from that which we have for domestic banks, but this, in the considered judgment of those zealous guardians of the principle of dual banking, the State regulatory authorities, is an adequate workout.

So I think on the merits, in order to prevent the monopolization by foreign banks, with their life-giving, deposit-receiving and asset-lending powers, and in order to prevent a monopoly from arising in just a few cities and States, the point of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) is well taken.

I would say one more thing. I do not think the issue involved in this amendment is one between the white hats and the black hats. I think the position espoused by our distinguished subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN), has much to be said for it. I happened to vote against it in the full committee. Normally when I take my lickings in the full committee, I go along with that position on the floor.

Here, however, I have a distinct feeling in my bones that if we want to get a bill through the Congress, that bill must have in it language that is substantially similar to that advocated by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO).

Thus, Mr. Chairman, I hope we will go along and vote down the committee amendment and automatically reinstate the language contained on page 14.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon (Mr. AUCOIN).

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding. I wish to associate myself with the remarks he has made.

I particularly appreciate the gentleman making the linkage between his position and that of the need in this country to overcome our record quarterly trade deficits and the instruments that foreign banks can provide for doing precisely that, that is, stimulating export activity in this country. He also makes the unassailable point when he says that many States would like to have an opportunity to have foreign banking activities, and those States may be off the "beaten path" in terms of being a major population center. Oregon happens to be one of them.

Mr. Chairman, I want my colleagues to know that as this committee amendment is written, it is so restrictive that in the State of Oregon, which is progressively trying to increase foreign trade, we would have the spectacle of at least one branch divestiture on the part of some foreign banks that are already doing business today. I just think, for all of the reasons that the gentleman from Illinois has mentioned, plus the tightness of the language of the committee amendment, that my colleagues should defeat that committee amendment.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. The subcommittee agreed to my amendment which would leave the question of foreign banks operating in more than one State up to each individual State. Under my amendment using the Iowa situation, that State would merely have to determine whether or not it wanted foreign banks, and if it did it would not have to also allow interstate branching of domestic banks.

In short, my amendment is a State's rights amendment, and allows each State to determine for itself whether or not that State wants foreign banking. What my amendment does not do is to tell each State that the Congress sets down virtually insurmountable conditions that you will have to meet before you can have foreign banking.

We have all had this experience. We have all talked about Big Brother. We have all talked about Government interference in the States.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is not what Congress should tell the States. And I further submit that that is not what Congress wants to tell the States.

Let us take a closer look at foreign banking in this country. The majority of foreign banking in this country is presently centered in three States: New York, Illinois, and California. Because New York is the country's leading money market nearly all foreign branches operating in this country have an operation in New York. There are 59 foreign branches in New York City while Chicago has 29 foreign branches, most of which also operate in New York. California has a large number of foreign banks but because of technical legalities in the State law they cannot be classified as branches. There are also a handful of foreign branches in other States such as Massachusetts, Oregon, and Washington.

A few years ago the State of Illinois decided it would be advantageous to have foreign branches and we permitted foreign branches to have a single location in our Chicago Loop area and nowhere else. These branches are serving a useful purpose for our citizens, are active in stimulating international trade and investment for our area, and in enlarging our State's role as an international financial center. Other States are showing an interest in the opportunity to attract foreign branch banking. But if the International Banking Act becomes law as now written Illinois and other States would find it impractical or impossible under Federal law to permit any of the many foreign banks operating branches in New York to establish branches in the cities which are able to compete for international business.

Under the committee amendment in order to get another branch of that bank operating in New York, Illinois would have to submit to a tie-in arrangement that would let New York send us its domestic banks to take business, profits and capital out of our State.

It will be argued that the purpose of the committee amendment is to give domestic banks the same privileges as foreign banks, that is to branch across State lines.

We have no evidence that most domestic banks are interested in interstate branching. In fact, most banks oppose such interstate banking and that is the reason why Congress has enacted legislation to prohibit such interstate banking for domestic banks. However, the very banks that do not want interstate bank branching for themselves find nothing wrong with allowing foreign banks to operate in more than one State in our country. Our domestic banks do not feel threatened by the foreign banks, which for the most part are highly specialized financial institutions, and do not compete for public deposits.

Most of you have received letters, telegrams or phone calls from your State bank supervisor urging you to vote against the committee amendment and to support the Annunzio position. Many of you may have also received similar communications from your Governor's office since both the Conference of State Bank Supervisors and the Association of Governors support my position on this legislation. Both of these groups feel that the States should have the opportunity to decide for themselves about foreign banking, and I agree.

I have received copies of letters from 27 State banking commissioners urging their members to support my position on section 5. All of these letters were published in Monday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and they make it clear that the question of foreign bank branching should be decided by the individual States.

If you share my belief that the States should decide for themselves on this issue then you should vote against the committee amendment. If, however, you feel that your State banking officials are not competent enough to handle the question of foreign banking in your State then you should vote for the committee amendment.

Now let us examine the so-called unfair competitive advantage of foreign banks that opponents of my amendment claim would result from the multi-State presence of foreign bank branches. The multi-State locations of foreign bank branches, as I have said, are principally confined to New York and Chicago, although a handful are in other States like Massachusetts, Oregon, and Washington. In Illinois the 29 foreign bank branches are confined to single locations in our downtown loop area, which preclude them from effectively competing for Illinois retail deposits. They are primarily in upper levels of office buildings, handling a wholesale, international type of banking business.

Well, what about our domestic banks? The subcommittee hearing record contains 13 articles that appeared during 1975–76 in the American Banker, a leading financial newspaper. These articles deal with only 13 of our large domestic banks.

What these articles show is that these 13 banks alone have some 1,483 offices which in fact generally conduct a banking type business in some 43 States, outside the State in which they are headquartered. This includes Edge Act corporations, organizations handling international banking matters for domestic banks; loan production offices which solicit loans throughout the country and do everything but actually finalize these loans, and subsidiary banks and bank-related businesses which are grandfathered or otherwise exempted under the Bank Holding Company Act. Although these domestic interstate activities may not be deposit-taking in a technical sense, as a practical matter they take deposit business away from local banks and service it in their home State. Of these 13 banks, 12 though their out-of-State subsidiaries engage in interstate consumer and sales finance, and in mortgage banking activities; 10 in leasing activities; 9 in selling and reinsuring credit-related insurance; 8 are in factoring; 6 are in investment management advisory services, and in real estate advisory services; 5 are providing venture capital to small businesses, and handling computer services; 2 provide trust services and market traveler's checks. At least 1 of these 13 banks also provide credit card services, travel services, and underwrite insurance.

There is very little competition between local banks and foreign bank branches which concentrate principally on wholesale international banking. As a matter of fact, there is far more interstate domestic banking through these 13 banks alone than is engaged in through the interstate activities of a relatively small number of foreign bank branches with their multi-State presence confined principally to New York and Chicago. And those who want the tie-in arrangement imposed by section 5(a) of this bill, either wittingly or unwittingly, are saying that they want to legislate the already dominant position of New York in both the foreign banking and the domestic banking field and make into a full-scale monopoly in the international banking field. That will not be tolerated by the citizens of my State, and it should not be tolerated by yours.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ANNUNZIO was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, the Members have read the RECORD of the past 2 days. I have placed in the RECORD letters that I have received from all of the various banking commissioners who support this legislation, and they are from the following States: Arkansas, California, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, Wyoming, and my own State of Illinois.

I am not prepared to stand in this well this afternoon and to say to my colleagues that the banking commissioners in all of these States know nothing about regulations, are incompetent in regulating State banks. I take the well this afternoon to point out to you the things that I have mentioned.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

In reciting all of these States, the gentleman is referring to letters he has received from the financial institution supervisors of those States; is that not correct?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. The bank supervisors of each State.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The gentleman is not suggesting that those States permit chartered institutions to branch interstate?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. No.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I wanted to make that clear.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. That is absolutely right.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I will be glad to yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California, one of the most knowledgeable members of the Banking Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) has expired.

(On request of Mr. ROUSSELOT and by unanimous consent, Mr. ANNUNZIO was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ROUSSELOT. As I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, the National Governors Association, has supported the position of the gentleman in the well, as those of us on the subcommittee did; and we regret that the full committee, by a very narrow margin, changed the language of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge my colleagues to support the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) in his effort to return to the language which the subcommittee voted out, which would continue to permit the State supervisory authorities to control this issue, although in this bill there are some new powers granted to the Federal Reserve to enable it to set reserves in cooperation and consultation with the State bank supervisors and to monitor the activities of foreign banks doing business in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I support the statement of my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO), who has made a continual effort to be well informed on these issues of banking which affect the entire Nation.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

I want to conclude. Mr. Chairman, if the Members share my belief that the States should decide for themselves on this issue, then they should vote against the committee amendment. If, however, they feel that their State banking officials are not competent enough to handle the question of foreign banking in their State, then they should vote for the committee amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are debating in a tempest in a teapot sort of way.

The so-called St Germain amendment, the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN), basically says that both the home and recipient State have to agree to permit interstate branching and that if it is done for foreign banks, it has to be done for their domestically chartered banks.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) says that we should not have that kind of provision because it is terrible, and so forth.

Let us look at this in a practical way. Let us say that a foreign bank decides to establish a branch in the State of New York and does it with a State charter. What is to stop the State of New York from saying, "If you want a charter in this State, you have to agree that you will not, nor will your parent, branch elsewhere, and if you do, you forfeit your charter in the State of New York"?

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the gentleman in the well that I will make a small wager that they will never do that.

Mr. BROWN Michigan. They will never do which? I am not quite sure. I said a couple of things.

Mr. FASCELL. Either one.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. In any case, Mr. Chairman, what I am saying is that the State, both the parent State, the father State, the home State, as well as the recipient State, under present law, pretty much have control of the situation.

In the situation which the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) has been referring to, where the State of New York might refuse to permit a branch to go into Iowa, the State of New York can do it now by merely saying, "You will forfeit your charter in the State of New York if you attempt or if your parent attempts to branch into another State."

I doubt very much that in order to get a branch in the State of Iowa, that a foreign bank is going to want to give up its charter in New York.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, it just seems to me that we are doing an awful lot of debating about a relatively insignificant thing if we recognize that States can, if they wish to, act responsibly and can, in effect, do that which the St Germain amendment would propose to do and not do that which the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) would have them do in the absence of the St Germain amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to associate myself with the eloquent statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO). That is the opinion, almost unanimously, of the banks of my State. It is the opinion of 14 of the 15 members of the Florida delegation, regardless of party, expressed in a letter to the chairman of the rules committee. It is also the strong opinion of the commissioner of banking of our State.

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am absolutely amazed to hear the gentleman say that. In the litany of the States, our State of Ohio supervisor of banks is all for this, but on the other hand, there is not a bank that I know of in the State of Ohio—and I know many of the bankers in the gentleman's State of Florida—that definitely do not want this legislation. The State supervisors want to control and to bring under their jurisdiction foreign banks, but the gentleman should check his facts.

The National Bank of Miami does not want, necessarily, the Bank of Tokyo coming down there. They are not asking for it to come unless there is fair competition. But, I think it is clear to state that the Federal Reserve Board is totally against this.

Mr. PEPPER. May I say to the gentleman that only a few moments ago I discussed this matter with a representative of the Florida Bankers Association, and he authorized me to say that this morning he had had a conference with the president of the Florida Bankers Association; that he has also been in contact with the national representatives insofar as Federal regulation regarding banking was concerned, and that all of them including, in his opinion, almost unanimously the banks of Florida, were opposed to section 5.

I will tell the gentleman why. I have a lettter here in my hand from our State banking commission, and it is dated March 31, 1978. It says:

As you are aware, H.R. 10899 would limit our ability to realize Florida's full potential in this area, because of the restrictive nature of section 5.

As of January 1, 1978, Florida law allowed foreign banks to establish agencies and representative offices in Florida. Already the Department has approved four applications and have two pending applications.

There is a foreign bank from Tel Aviv; another one from Tel Aviv; another from Toronto, and another from London that have already been approved for existence in Miami, and two others—one from Brazil and another one from London—pending for consideration.

Our hope is that we will be able to establish in Florida international financial connections that will further the economic interests of our State, and our legislature wants to be free to authorize foreign banks to establish agencies or branches in the State of Florida upon conditions that may be imposed by the legislature and the banking authorities of our State. We do not want to be denied the right to do that, as section 5 would so provide.

That is the reason that our people are almost unanimously opposed to section 5. I want to associate myself with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, who made a very strong statement to that effect; furthermore, the subcommittee of the distinguished Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, chaired by my able friend from Pennsylvania, also took the same position, as does the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

So it would seem to me that we and our Florida people are in good company when we want to associate ourselves with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO).

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further just so I can clarify for the record, I certainly want to thank the gentleman for clarifying for the record. I appreciate his clarifying for the record and I just wonder what is wrong with the Ohio banks.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman gave the list I thought he said that applications for agencies were established.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. STANTON. He stated that agencies are permitted to do everything including giving advice and helping on international transactions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

(On request of Mr. ST GERMAIN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. PEPPER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further so I may finish my question, agencies can do everything except or other than accept deposits, so they can give advice, help on international transactions, and lend money for that purpose. It seems to me from what the gentleman read he stated that we allowed agencies to establish, and certainly the gentleman understands that the bill as it stands before us with the committee amendment permits agencies to establish.

Mr. PEPPER. May I respond to my friend, we so far by legislative action of the Florida Legislature have authorized only agencies and representatives to be established. Of those, four have already been approved and two are pending. However our chamber of commerce people and our banks and those who are interested in the matter want to preserve the right of our State legislature to authorize branches if they choose to do so, and under the old language which the committee amendment would displace, the local authorities were granted control over the matter of admitting branches and allowing the authority of those branches. We do not want to be denied the right to authorize those.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. May I ask the gentleman one other question? Is he in favor of interstate branching of our domestic banks? In other words, would he be in favor of the Citibank, the Chase Manhattan, the Bank of America establishing a branch bank in Florida?

Mr. PEPPER. No. One of the reasons I object to section 5 is that today if our legislature in Florida authorizes the branches to be established of a foreign bank, we can do so only, if that foreign bank had a branch in New York, upon our accepting a branch of a New York bank along with the foreign branch, and why should we take the burden of that branch so we could have a foreign bank?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. In other words he is saying we should allow the foreign bank to branch but not the State branch.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The gentleman from Rhode Island has worked very hard and we can all understand his position. The gentleman is right that Florida does not allow branch banking, and I do not know that they will ever get around to branch banking. It is a very sensitive subject in our State and has been ever since I have been there.

So we go the bank holding company route. We do not go the branch bank route. But the experience of Florida with foreign bank agencies has moderated the opinion and thinking both in the industry and in the legislature about foreign banking. When they started the agency route they were not too sure. Now they have some experience with foreign bank agency route they have lost some of that doubt.

What we are saying now is just do not shut the door on the possibility of branches for foreign banks. We are not sure we are going the foreign branch bank route. But our experience in Florida so far has been favorable with respect to foreign bank agencies. We would like to have it open in the future to maybe think about foreign branch banking under whatever conditions the legislature might seek to impose. In those States where by legislation they already have branch banking, that is a different kind of problem.

Frankly, it is the first time I have heard the argument raised by the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. AUCOIN) that in those cases where the branch banks exist that this legislation, in some way, would adversely affect them. I am not competent to speak on that subject, but I think that is an important issue.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. The gentleman from Oregon (Mr. AuCoin) was not referring to branches within the State, he was referring to the fact that some of the banks in Oregon, foreign banks there, are also established in other States and therefore they are branches but not intrastate but interstate.

Mr. FASCELL. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee amendment as now written would affect that situation adversely.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, what we have in the State of Oregon is a situation in which some foreign banks that are chartered in other States, but have branches in Oregon, would actually find themselves, under the restrictive language of the committee amendment, having to divest themselves of branches in Oregon.

Mr. FASCELL. So that raises the other side of that issue which we are addressing which says if a bank now exists in another State and wants to set up a branch in a different State, they come within the restrictions of section 5. That is what the fuss is all about, and that is the reason we are against it.

Mr. MOORHEAD of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, in the report accompanying this legislation it is said that the bill has two principal policy objectives. The first objective is to provide a system of Federal regulation of foreign banking activities.

With the defeat of the Wylie amendment, there may be some question as to whether we have adequately provided for Federal regulation. But certainly if we have State regulators whose experience in America has been limited only to regulating banks which are located within their State, they are not trained to regulate banks which are multi-State banks, and how does the State of Iowa pass a law that governs a bank whose home State is in New York or Germany?

However, we decided, in full committee, not to go as rigidly as that but to seek a compromise. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. St Germain) did not take the extreme view of one side or the extreme view of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Annunzio) on the other side, but sought a middle ground the result of which was that the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs could report a bill to this floor by a vote of 46 to nothing—which is no mean feat for our committee which handles some controversial legislation.

The second objective, and I think that this is very important, is to provide, to the extent possible or appropriate, equal treatment for foreign and domestic banks operating in the United States. If you adopt the Annunzio amendment you are not giving equal treatment to foreign and domestic banks. You are saying that foreign banks can branch nationwide in 50 States whereas U.S. banks are limited to 1 State of the United States and that just is not fair treatment.

So if we want to stick to the objective that we are not going to put foreign banks at a disadvantage in competing with U.S. banks, but we also are not going to give them an advantage, I suggest we support the compromise offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. St Germain).

Finally, those of us who are concerned about our small banks, who believe that small banks should continue in existence, should recognize that if we have nationwide banking by foreign banks, there is going to be tremendous pressure from the banking system to permit nationwide banking by U.S. banks, and this is going to be the demise of the small local neighborhood bank. I seriously question whether this is what this Congress wants to do.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GREEN TO THE COMMITTEE AMENDMENT

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Green to the committee amendment: On page 16, line 10, strike "May 1, 1978" and insert in lieu thereof "May 23, 1977."

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I will be very happy to accept the amendment. We have no objection.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REUSS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I hate to dim all the happiness, but I would envisage an "Oklahoma land rush" situation under the gentleman's amendment. Therefore, I must regretfully oppose the gentleman's amendment and hope that we will go with the pure and pristine Annunzio language.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is very simple. On the basis of action in the subcommittee in which the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. St Germain) accepted an amendment which would move the effective date to May 23, 1977, some additional branches were opened to various banks. The effect of my amendment is simply to restore that May 23, 1977, date, which was accidentally moved back during the deliberations of the full committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to announce that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Green) is technically an amendment to the second committee amendment which is not before the committee at this time. Therefore, it can be offered at the appropriate time, when the next committee amendment has been reported.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I want to say that I stand before the Members with some regret because I thought, frankly, when we voted in the full committee that we could come to the floor as a committee and be united. This has not occurred, and with regret I have to oppose some of my very distinguished and respected colleagues.

However, I would like to clarify a few points. No. 1, the legislation, the committee amendment, in no way affects agencies as they are now functioning. The restriction of interstate branching in the compromise amendment would not restrict further interstate operations by foreign bank agencies. As I stated earlier to the distinguished gentleman from Florida, agencies do not accept deposits and, therefore, they operate very much as Edge Act corporations and loan production offices. There is no need to restrict their activities. They can perform all the functions of a bank but for the fact that they cannot take in deposits.

With respect to the State bank supervisors, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Moorhead) made a very important point, and that is that the supervisors and their staffs over the years have built up expertise to handle the banks within their jurisdiction. However, they have not and are not equipped to examine branches outside their own States—and there would be no way for them to know what the real status of these institutions is. In addition, the State of New York, the State of Illinois, and the State of California have large supervisory agencies.

They are quite efficient; however, unfortunately, in many of the States the State supervisory agency, no matter what its title, is woefully inadequate.

I look at a Member who sits before me. I spent some time in Texas. With all due deference to the great State of Texas, they could not regulate the bank in Carrizo Springs which was a $12-million institution—the Mexican champion came over, took over and bled it dry. If we allow that fellow, unfortunately, with the staff and equipment he has down there to take on the foreign banks, I am a little concerned about what would happen, and I mean that very seriously.

Now, what would happen if the compromise is not agreed to and adopted? No. 1, we put the stamp of approval on interstate branching by foreign banks. It has been said here repeatedly today we do not allow our domestic banks to branch into States. Why is it we allow foriegn banks to branch into the States? My compromise amendment contains language that states that in the event that our domestic banks are allowed to branch into State, automatically the foreign banks would be accorded the same privilege. We are not treating them any differently than we do our State banks in the committee amendment.

Certainly, if the compromise is not adopted, we are opening the door for a further drive by the foreigners to contol a significant portion of our domestic economy. We create a futher impetus for retail banking by foreign banks. Remember, these foreign banks when they come in participate in consumer and commercial lending. They accept domestic deposits. They are looking for big CD's. As a consequence, we are seeing a decline in the share that our domestic banks are getting.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ST GERMAIN was allowed to proceed for an additional 3 minutes.)

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, this means that the foreign banks will be competing with our banks, our savings and loans, our credit unions, all our financial institutions, for car loans, home mortgage loans, farm loans, television set loans, and everything else. I predict that unless the compromise amendment is agreed to, there will be a further erosion, if not a complete repeal, of the McFadden Act; that is the act that prohibits interstate branching by our domestic banks.

The minute we open the door and allow the big banks and the big money centers to branch into the States and to go into every State, we have spelled the beginning of the end of the small independent banker in this country. I do not care how we slice it, that is bound to come. Once that happens, then our dual banking system goes down the drain, because all of it will be by the big national banks. We will not any longer have the local banker who knows what the needs of his community are to rely upon.

They will accept the deposits of the farm towns and bring the money to the big city and lend it to overseas ventures. That is the kind of banking we will have.

Just yesterday in the Wall Street Journal—and I mentioned this earlier—it was announced that the Hong Kong Bank is acquiring Marine Midland.

Marine Midland is short of capital, and we know what that means. They are not able to sell their stock, and they are not doing all that well on deposits.

All right. Once this occurs, if this is approved by the State Banking Commission of New York and by the Federal Reserve Board, then the Hong Kong Bank could establish branches, if our compromise is defeated, in every State in the Union.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read a short letter first, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, I have a letter dated April 6, 1978, addressed to me from the Chairman of the Board of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. Chairman, the letter reads as follows:

BOARD OF GOVERNORS, OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM,
Washington, D.C. April 6, 1978.

Hon. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation and Insurance, Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System has strongly supported passage of the International Banking Act of 1978. I wish to make clear my personal support of this legislation. The dramatic growth of foreign banks operating in the U.S. makes it vitally important to act promptly to establish a national policy over such operations and to create a Federal regulatory role.

One of the key provisions in the bill as reported out of the House Banking Committee would prohibit future multi-state branching by foreign banks. I can appreciate that many States are interested in having foreign bank offices within their borders. There are serious questions of equity, however, if foreign banks, unlike domestic banks, are to be permitted to establish deposit-taking branches outside their home States. It should also be noted that foreign banks can buy control of a domestic bank and still establish branches on a multi-state basis. These are significant competitive advantages favoring foreign banks which would be appropriately addressed by the provisions of the bill as reported by the Committee. The Board believes that in keeping with the principle of national treatment the banking laws should be applied in a uniform manner to both domestic and foreign banks.

I hope that the House will bear in mind the issue of competitive equality when it considers the International Banking Act.

Sincerely,

BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ST GERMAIN was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Will the gentleman please explain, if everything he is saying is true, why all these banking commissioners and governors that I mentioned from various States are in favor of my position on this bill?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I cannot speak for them, particularly when, as I said, the compromise amendment would allow agencies. The agencies could make loans and could give commercial advice. They could also help in international transactions. They could do everything other than accept deposits.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's frank answer. In other words, he is not able to tell me why they support my position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. BROWN of Michigan and by unanimous consent, Mr. ST GERMAIN was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not quite follow the gentleman's recitation that the Hong Kong Bank-Marine Midland situation is exactly parallel or fits perfectly four-square with what we are talking about here.

The charter of the Marine Midland Bank does not change by the acquisition of 51 percent of the stock by a foreign bank. It is still a domestically chartered bank, and it does not fit the situation of direct branches and affiliates of foreign banks that we are talking about here.

Mr. Chairman, if we want to talk about the Hong Kong-Marine Midland situation, we can do that, but let us not clutter up the issue here today with that matter.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, let me point out that I have read the letter from the Fed, from Chairman Miller, and let me repeat what he pointed out:

It should also be noted that foreign banks can buy control of a domestic bank—and 51 percent is control—and still establish branches on a multistate basis.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, an often overlooked fact in the current debate on this legislation is that in no other country in the world are foreign banks permitted to operate outside the influence and supervision of the national government of the country involved. The bill we are now considering, H.R. 10899, was intended to provide Federal supervision of foreign banks in the United States. Because the operations of these banks affect national policies, those who are opposed to this amendment have raised objections which do not address this problem. They argue for States rights and the dual banking system without recognizing that foreign banking institutions in the United States have the potential for economic influence which greatly transcends the economic powers of the 8,000 or so State banks which serve our local communities.

Opponents of the legislation ignore the fact that there are already 55 foreign banks with operations in more than one State in the United States, that there is no coordination of regulation and supervision of their activities and that they pose a substantial competitive threat to even some of our larger national banks. The assets worldwide of the 113 foreign banks in the United States are in fact larger than all the domestic assets of U.S. banks, well in excess of $1 trillion. A foreign bank can decide to double or triple its assets in a given year, a possibility which would be out of the question for any domestic banking institution.

Another argument which has been made against the bill involves the issue of reciprocity. Opponents making this argument say that if we impose stronger regulations on foreign banks, U.S. banks overseas might suffer additional restrictions on their operations. This, I think, is a false argument and one which can be easily proved wrong. In August 1975, I was one of the members of the Subcommittee on Financial Institlutions Supervision, Regulation, and Insurance who traveled to Europe and met with central bankers in the United Kingdom, France, West Germany, and Switzerland. We found that all the central banks we visited require that foreign banks, including U.S. banks, meet reserve requirements on deposits in their national currencies. The United Kingdom, France, and Switzerland do not impose reserve requirements on deposits denominated in other currencies, including dollars. West Germany, however, puts reserve requirements on all liabilities and the Bank of Japan does as well. In no other major country does the national government allow foreign banks to operate outside the regulatory framework necessary to control domestic money and credit markets.

In some of the countries we visited there is a greater degree of regulatory freedom for foreign banks than in others. The German and French authorities do examine foreign banks while the British and Swiss authorities do not. In Switzerland banks are not examined because of the bank secrecy laws. In the United Kingdom there is less surveillance currently but Bank of England officials told us that should the sterling business of foreign banks increase, a greater degree of surveillance would be required.

In all the countries we visited foreign banks are subject to the same exchange and capital controls as are domestic banks. Most countries also require that foreign banks meet certain liquidity ratios. In Switzerland, foreign banks are subject to the same lending restrictions as are domestic banks, and in Germany, they are subject to the same investment restrictions as are domestic banks.

There are few stated restrictions on entry for foreign banks in these European countries, however Switzerland has a strict requirement for reciprocity and will not allow U.S. banks with a home office in a State of the United States to establish branches if Swiss banks cannot operate in that State. The Bank of England requires that foreign banks employ authorized dealers in foreign exchange and the pool of available personnel may limit entry or expansion of operations. The Bank of England also tends to discourage entry by smaller banks. We discovered, for example, that one fairly sizable U.S. bank, the Pittsburgh National Bank, had not been allowed to establish a branch in London and had opened a branch in Paris instead.

In Japan, foreign banks are subject to more restrictive regulation than are domestic banks, especially with respect to limits on capital inflows. The Central Bank of Japan also imposes reserve requirements, interest rate limits and exchange controls on foreign banks and prohibits them from engaging in trust activities and securities underwriting.

Comparing the assets of Japanese banks in the United States with U.S. banks in Japan, at year end 1975, Japanese banks had $20 billion of assets here, while U.S. banks had only $10 billion of assets in Japan.

As this description of the treatment of foreign banks in other countries indicates, not only are foreign banks regulated by national authorities in those countries, they are regulated on the same basis as domestic banks. No other country in the world gives foreign banks privileges greater than those given their own domestic banks. I see no reason why the United States should be in the unique position of providing a givewaway for foreign banks at the expense of our own banking system.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I will be brief. What the gentleman has just said would be just terrific if other countries had a dual banking system. But the other countries do not have a dual banking system. We believe in the legitimacy of State government in this country because we believe it has a very rational and positive function. One of the functions of the State governments today is the regulating of State institutions. Most foreign banks have been regulated—and I say regulated very well in my own State—by the State regulators. So the gentleman can stand up and say no other country will allow a bank from our country to be chartered any other way than going through the central bank. So what? That is because there is no dual banking system.

Mr. Chairman, the issue is whether you support the dual banking system or whether you are against it.

If there are those who want the Federal Reserve Board to regulate the State banking systems of this country, they should vote for this committee amendment because they are helping to erode and destroy a very fine dual banking system if they vote for this committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to read from a communication from the National Governors Association because I think it has stated it much better than has the new chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. I read as follows:

> As reported out of the House Banking Committee last month, the International Banking Act of 1978 contains provisions in Section 5 that would deny nearly all States the opportunity to invite into their receptive area a foreign bank branch that happened to be also operating in another State.

Mr. Chairman, if the Members believe in the concept of freedom of choice of each State which has an appointed regulator, they have the option to vote "no" on the committee amendment. We would then return to the position of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO), which was the original position taken at the subcommittee markup.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I will be delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, who, unfortunately, refused to yield to me.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am sorry that I did not see him standing before. If he had said something, I would have heard him and I would have yielded. However, I do appreciate his yielding.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned a little earlier, the same arguments were made against the National Banking Act which created our national bank system back in 1863.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman cannot carry me back to that time because I was not here then. We are not arguing that today.

Mr. WYLIE. Abraham Lincoln thought our national bank system was pretty good.

Mr. Chairman, I think our U.S. banks are particularly vulnerable today because of the decline of the American dollar vis-a-vis the yen, vis-a-vis the deutsche mark, and vis-a-vis the Swiss franc.

I think it is one thing for the U.S. banks to compete where all the players are all dealing the cards, but I think it is another situation where the Federal Government deals foreign banks competing in the United States all the aces first. That is what happens. There is not competitive parity between foreign banks operating in the United States through State chartering and U.S. national banks. That is why this bill is here.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. That is why I favor the concept of requiring that the Treasury, under this bill, have the responsibility to make sure that competitive equity is maintained.

That is another part of this bill, as the gentleman well knows. Therefore, if he support, as many of us do, the concept of dual banking and its viability, he will support the Annunzio position, which is the position of the State regulators of this country. I say that many of those States compete very aggressively all over the world in exporting products and importing products; and second, the Association of Governors supports the Annunzio position.

Therefore, when we get to this vote, I would suggest that those Members who support that position vote "no" on the committee amendment and return to the Annunzio position, which was originally voted out of the subcommittee.

Mr. WYLIE. If the gentleman would yield further, Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman admit that the foreign branch banks operating in the United States operate at a competitive disadvantage with our U.S. banks?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. No; I do not believe that that is true in the States of California, Illinois, and New York, especially in view of the extensive interstate operations, short of taking deposits, but which generate deposits, in which domestic banks can engage.

If the gentleman's State does not wish to have foreign banks, all his State has to do is to have its bank supervisor say, "No charter."

Mr. WYLIE. No. We cannot branch interstate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I shall not take 5 minutes. Two minutes will be more than sufficient.

Mr. Chairman, I was handed the letter that was received by the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN), which he read rather hurriedly.

I would just like to repeat for the careful consideration of the Members these sentences:

> The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve system has strongly supported passage of the International Banking Act of 1978.

Mr. Chairman, that is the one that was voted out of our committee unanimously.

It winds up by saying:

The Board believes that in keeping with the principle of national treatment, the banking laws should be applied in a uniform manner to both domestic and foreign banks.

With respect to the State banks to which my distinguished friend from California referred, if a State bank belongs to the Federal Reserve System—and most of the large ones do—it would be subject to exactly the same kind of regulation from the Federal Reserve Board that the foreign banks would. I just think that we should not be giving foreign banks a competitive advantage over American banks. I think, for the protection of the depositors in this country, they should be subject to the same regulations and supervision.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Is that the same letter that says something about the Hong Kong Bank and the Midland Bank? I want to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that the members of the Federal Reserve Board have a good case of the Hong Kong flu, because none of the rhetoric in that letter is true. The foreign banks are subject to the regulation and control of the State regulators.

Mr. ALLEN. But they are not subject to national supervision, and that is the only kind of supervision that can be effective when we are dealing with international banks which are billions of dollars in size.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was refused.

So the committee amendment was rejected.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 16, line 4, insert the following:

(b) Unless its authority to do so is lawfully revoked otherwise than pursuant to this section, a foreign bank may continue to operate, outside its home State, any branch, agency, or commercial lending company subsidiary, or bank subsidiary whose operation was lawfully commenced, or whose establishment had been approved by the appropriate State authority, prior to May 1, 1976.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in view of the action just taken, and having stricken the first part of the committee amendment, this second committee amendment really has no significance.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not stating a parliamentary inquiry. Does the gentleman wish to debate the amendment?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have not had a chance to check this out very carefully, but as I recall the second committee amendment, the committee amendment that has just been read is a grandfather's clause of sorts to the first committee amendment. Inasmuch as the first committee amendment has failed, the adoption of the second committee amendment would make no sense at all. Therefore, I would urge a no vote on the committee amendment.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, in view of what the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN) has just said, I have to concur. Therefore, I do oppose the committee amendment, the second committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 16, line 11, strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)".

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 30, line 5, strike out "be" and insert in lieu thereof "have been".

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I recommend the adoption of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 32, strike line 14 and all that follows through line 7 on page 35, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

SEC. 7. (a)(1)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), (f), (g), (i), (j), (k), and the second sentence of subsection (e) of subsection 19 of the Federal Reserve Act shall apply to every Federal branch and Federal agency of a foreign bank in the same manner and to the same extent as if the Federal branch or Federal agency were a member bank as that term is defined in section 1 of the Federal Reserve Act; but the Board either by general or specific regulations or ruling may waive the minimum and maximum reserve ratios prescribed under section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act and may prescribe any ratio, not more than 22 per centum, for any obligation of any such Federal branch or Federal agency that the Board may deem reasonable and appropriate, taking into consideration the character of business conducted by such institutions and the need to maintain vigorous and fair competition between and among such institutions and member banks. The Board may impose reserve requirements on Federal branches and Federal agencies in such graduated manner as it deems reasonable and appropriate.

(B) After consultation and in cooperation with the State bank supervisory authorities, the Board may make applicable to any branch or agency, or (except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection) any commercial lending company controlled by one or more foreign banks or one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank, any requirement made applicable to, or which the Board has authority to impose upon, any Federal branch or agency under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

(2) A branch or agency shall be subject to this subsection only if (A) its parent foreign bank has total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; (B) its parent foreign bank is controlled by a foreign company which owns or controls foreign banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; or (C) its parent foreign bank is controlled by a group of foreign companies that own or control foreign banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000.

(3) A commercial lending company shall be subject to this subsection only if it is controlled (A) by a foreign bank that has total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; (B) by a group of foreign banks that, in the aggregate, have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; (C) by a foreign company that owns or controls a foreign bank or banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; or (D) by a group of foreign companies that own or control a foreign bank or banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000.

(b) Section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Subject to such restrictions, limitations, and regulations as may be imposed by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, each Federal Reserve bank may receive deposits from, discount paper endorsed by, and make advances to any branch or agency of a foreign bank, and any commercial lending company in the same manner and to the same extent that it may exercise such powers with respect to a member bank if such branch, agency, or commercial lending company is maintaining reserves with such Reserve bank pursuant to section 7 of the International Banking Act of 1977. In exercising any such powers with respect to any such branch, agency, or commercial lending company, each Federal Reserve bank shall give due regard to account balances being maintained by such branch, agency, or commercial lending company with such Reserve bank and the proportion of any such branch, agency, or commercial lending company's assets being held as reserves under section 7 of the International Banking Act of 1977. For the purposes of this paragraph, the terms 'branch,' 'agency,' 'foreign bank,' and 'commercial lending company' shall have the same meanings assigned to them in section 1 of the International Banking Act of 1977."

(c)(1) The applicable State banking authorities when requested by the Federal Reserve shall submit to the Board a copy of any examination report made by the applicable State bank supervisory authority on each branch or agency of a foreign bank established or operating pursuant to State law and each commercial lending company controlled by one or more foreign banks or by one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank. The Board is authorized to require submission of additional information regarding the examination reports submitted under this subsection.

(2) Each branch or agency of a foreign bank, other than a Federal branch or agency, and each commercial lending company controlled by one or more foreign banks or by one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank, shall be subject to paragraph 20 and the provision requiring the reports of condition contained in paragraph 6 of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 335 and 324) to the same extent and in the same manner as if the branch, agency, or commercial lending company were a State member bank. In addition to any requirements imposed under section 4 of this Act, each Federal branch and agency shall be subject to subparagraph (a) of section 11 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 248(a)) and to paragraph 5 of section 21 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 483) to the same extent and in the same manner as if it were a member bank.

(d) On or before two (2) years after enactment of this Act, the Board after consultation with the appropriate State bank supervisory authorities shall report to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the U.S. House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs of the U.S. Senate its recommendations with respect to the implementation of this Act, including any recommended requirement such as limitations on loans to affiliates or capital adequacy requirements which should be imposed on banks covered by this Act to assure the safety and soundness of such banking operations.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WYLIE AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE COMMITTEE AMENDMENT

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WYLIE as a substitute for the committee amendment:

Page 35, strike out line 8 and all that follows thereafter through page 39, line 20, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 7. (a) (1) Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), (f), (g), (i), (j), (k), and the second sentence of subsection (e) of section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act shall apply to every branch and agency of a foreign bank and every commercial lending company controlled by one or more foreign banks or by one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank in the same manner and to the same extent as if the branch, agency, or commercial lending company were a member bank as that term is defined in section 1 of the Federal Reserve Act; but the Board either by general or specific regulation or ruling may waive the minimum and maximum reserve ratios prescribed under section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act and may prescribe any other ratio, not more than 22 per centum, for any obligation of any such branch, agency, or commercial lending company that the Board may deem reasonable to effectuate monetary policy objectives, taking into consideration the character of business conducted by such institutions and the need to maintain vigorous and fair competition between and among such institutions and member banks. The Board may impose reserve requirements on branches, agencies, and commercial lending companies in such graduated manner as it deems reasonable and appropriate.

(2) A branch or agency shall be subject to this subsection only if (A) its parent foreign bank has total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000; (B) its parent foreign bank is controlled by a foreign company which owns or controls foreign banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; or (C) its parent foreign bank is controlled by a group of foreign companies that own or control foreign banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000.

(3) A commercial lending company shall be subject to this subsection only if it is controlled (A) by a foreign bank that has total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; (B) by a group of foreign banks that, in the aggregate, have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; (C) by a foreign company that owns or controls a foreign bank or banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000; or (D) by a group of foreign companies that own or control a foreign bank or banks that in the aggregate have total worldwide consolidated bank assets in excess of $1,000,000,000.

(b) Section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Subject to such restrictions, limitations, and regulations as may be imposed by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, each Federal Reserve bank may receive deposits from, discount paper endorsed by, and make advances to any branch or agency of a foreign bank, and any commercial lending company in the same manner and to the same extent that it may exercise such powers with respect to a member bank if such branch, agency, or commercial lending company is maintaining reserves with such Reserve bank pursuant to section 7 of the International Banking Act of 1977. In exercising any such powers with respect to any such branch, agency, or commercial lending company each Federal Reserve bank shall give due regard to account balances being maintained by such branch, agency, or commercial lending company with such Reserve bank and the proportion of any such branch, agency, or commercial lending company's assets being held as reserves under section 7 of the International Banking Act of 1977. For the purposes of this paragraph, the terms 'branch,' 'foreign bank,' and 'commercial lending company' shall have the same meanings assigned to them in section 1 of the International Banking Act of 1977."

(c) Each branch or agency of a foreign bank, other than a Federal branch or agency, and each commercial lending company controlled by one or more foreign banks or by one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank, shall be subject to (1) paragraphs 7, 8 and 20 and the reporting requirements of paragraph 6 of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C., 325, 326, 335, and 324). (2) subparagraph (a) of section 11 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 248 (a)), and (3) paragraph (5) of section 21 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 483), to the same extent and in the same manner as if the branch, agency, of commercial lending company were a State member bank. In addition to any requirements imposed under section 4 of this Act, each Federal branch and agency shall be subject to subparagraph (a) of section 11 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 248 (a)) and to paragraph 5 of section 21 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 483) to the same extent and in the same manner as if it were a member bank.

(d) Each branch or agency of a foreign bank established or operating pursuant to State law and each commercial lending company controlled by one or more foreign banks or by one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank shall also be subject to such other duties, restrictions, conditions, limitations, or civil penalties or liabilities applicable under the Federal Reserve Act to a State member bank, which the Board, by regulation or order, determines appropriate to insure the safety and soundness of banking operations, or to maintain competitive equality with State member banks, or to otherwise carry out the purposes of this Act except that (1) the Board may make such exemptions or exceptions from such duties, restrictions, conditions, limitations, or civil penalties or liabilities that it deems to be reasonable and appropriate in light of the different organizational structure or character of business conducted by such branches, agencies or commercial lending companies, and (2) any limitation or restriction based on the capital stock and surplus of a member bank shall be deemed to refer, as applied to a branch or agency, to the dollar equivalent of the capital stock and surplus of its parent foreign bank, and if the parent foreign bank has more than one branch or agency the accounts of all such branches and agencies, including Federal branches and agencies, shall be aggregated in determining compliance with the limitation or restriction.

(e) No foreign bank may, after the date of enactment of this Act, establish any branch or agency pursuant to State law and no foreign bank, group of foreign banks, or one or more foreign companies that control a foreign bank may acquire control of a commercial lending company without first obtaining approval of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Whenever the Board receives an application from any such foreign bank, group of foreign banks, or foreign companies to establish a branch or agency, or to control a commercial lending company, the Board shall send a copy to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury and the bank supervisory authority of the State where the branch or agency or commercial lending company is to be located and shall allow thirty days within which their views and recommendations may be submitted. In acting any such application, the Board shall take into account the effects of the proposal on competition in the domestic and foreign commerce of the United States, the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the applicant foreign bank, group of foreign banks, or one or more foreign companies and the branch, agency or commercial lending company concerned, and in convenience and needs of the community to be served.

Mr. WYLIE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered as a substitute for the committee amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to section 7 in clarification. The amendment which was adopted by the committee says that reserve requirements will be set after consultation and cooperation with State authorities. Now, it seems to me as if this amendment is incomplete. For example, who has the final decisionmaking authority as far as reserve making requirements? Does the State have the right to withhold its decision over an extended period of time and thereby defeat the purpose of the amendment? Who determines the adequacy or the degree of consultation and cooperation?

It just seems to me as if we are inviting a whole host of legal questions with the committee amendment the way it is. So I have asked that the language be restored to the bill which was voted out by this House in the last Congress. It is much more precise. It is much more clear. It gives the Federal Reserve Board the right to establish reserve requirements.

I think, in view of the ambiguity and uncertainty of the committee language which we have now before us, that it really in effect is not enforceable. It is not an enforceable mechanism in that I say there is no indication as to who has the final decisionmaking authority.

Because of these legal problems and the ultimate difficulty in attempting to prove who has the power in this instance, I would suggest that we should go back, even now, after we have approved the present arrangement to allow dual chartering by the States, that the banks which are chartered through a State chartering arrangement ought to have their reserves fixed by the Federal Reserve.

If the Federal Reserve Board is to control monetary policy it seems to me as if it should have to have this authority. I just think that the language in the bill as we presently find it is not clear, and with this ambiguity it seems to me as if we might come to an impasse. I just do not know what the phrase "consultation and cooperation" means. I would therefore hope that in the interest of clarity and trying to set some standard or some direction in this regard we go back to the bill which was passed by this House in the last session of Congress, the 94th Congress.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE).

Mr. Chairman, once again this amendment comes from one of the most industrious, intelligent, and hardworking members of our committee, and I regret having to oppose it. But, really, the language is so carefully crafted in the committee bill before us that the so-called committee amendment I believe ought to stand.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) is apparently disturbed because of our effort to meld the dual banking system to allow the matter of regulation basically to the State regulatory authorities, with some residual surveillance by the Federal Reserve, and then to lodge the vital power of money creation and reserve requirements in the only body in which it can be lodged, the Federal Reserve Board System.

Now, true, the statement says, and I am quoting from the committee amendment, that the Federal Reserve Board would impose reserve requirements "after consultation and in cooperation with the State bank supervisory authorities."

That is in there because we want to give the State supervisory authorities their day in court. But subsequent language makes it doubly clear, and the report on page 12 makes it trebly clear, and here again I read from the report:

> If the cooperation on the part of the State banking authorities were not forthcoming in any instance, that would in no way diminish the power conferred on the Board to impose reasonable reserve requirements, or the legal obligation imposed on the branches, agencies, and commercial lending companies to comply therewith.

So the net of it is that there has been fashioned here a reasonable compromise whereby the ultimate money creation power is in the only place where it can be, in the Federal Reserve Board, but we allow the State regulatory authorities to put in their advice, their input.

I think it is a good compromise.

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REUSS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to join our chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS) in opposition to this amendment. The only thing I could add to what the gentleman has already said—and the gentleman has clearly stated that this is compromise language—is that there also is language now in the committee bill giving us the opportunity for the Fed to see how the foreign banks are acting under this legislation, and we further ask them within 2 years to make a report back to Congress as to how things are working out.

So for that added reason, along with what the gentleman has just said, I would rise in opposition to the amendment and hope that we can stick with the committee bill. I believe it is a good compromise and was the principal creation of the primary sponsor, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. REUSS. That is an important addition, and I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STANTON) for mentioning it.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REUSS. I now yield to the master artificer, the compromiser, the craftsman who put this all together, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN) who I trust will speak in favor of it.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I intended to get my own time, but maybe it is not necessary to take it.

I would like to take this opportunity, however, to urge the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) to withdraw the amendment. I think that it does constitute a good compromise. I think that a very bad vote on his amendment would jeopardize possibly the retention in the bill of the Fed to the extent that it is presently involved. I think that involvement is necessary. Under the bill and under section 7 the Fed has the umbrella superintendency, the ability to monitor. Two things are done by section 7. First, the Federal Reserve Board is the authority, the ultimate authority, to set reserve requirements even with regard to State-chartered branch affiliates of foreign banks.

Secondly, the Federal Reserve Board under the law has access to State bank examination reports when it requests them. That gives the Fed an opportunity to monitor State-chartered operations.

Finally, the Fed has under this section the reserve authority, and the authority to monitor and to examine State bank examination reports. If this is not enough, the Fed can come in any time in 2 years and say, we need additional authority if we are going to perform our proper function with respect to the financial institutions, financial system, and monetary policy of this Nation. I think it would be an easy compromise and should be supported.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(At the request of Mr. WYLIE, and by unanimous consent, Mr. REUSS was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. REUSS. I would say to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN) who has just spoken that I agree with every word that he has said. I think this is the most important section of the entire bill.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REUSS. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE).

Mr. WYLIE. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I agree with the gentleman that this is the most important section of the entire bill, but the words "consultation and cooperation," I would submit from the report of the record, and I read on page 48, had two different interpretations by two different members of our committee. The distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS) said:

> But on balance I come out in favor of the Brown proposal which in essence says, leave it to the state regulators, for better or worse, with our dual banking system. We have them. But on the nationally vital issue of whether the national government through the Federal Reserve can properly regulate the money supply by the power to impose reserve requirements there; make that a power.

On the other hand, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) said:

> I think the amendment presents a strong balance between the role of the Federal Reserve System and the State bank supervisors in regulating foreign banks. It calls for consultation and cooperation between the Fed and the States, and I know that the gentleman is sincere in using the phrase "consultation and cooperation."

Which does it mean? There are two very different interpretations by two very distinguished and learned gentlemen of our committee.

Mr. REUSS. If I may respond to the gentleman, it is my view that there is not an iota of difference between what the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) is saying in the record and what I was saying, although my words may lack that precision and artistry to which I should have aspired. What I was saying was that in regulatory matters, let the State regulators have their first go at it, but in money creation matters, in reserve requirement matters, there the Federal Reserve shall be supreme, doing, of course, the courtesy of consulting with the State regulators who might have an idea or two which would appeal to the Federal Reserve. I do not think there is any inconsistency there.

Mr. WYLIE. If the gentleman will yield further, does the gentleman think the States can veto the reserve requirements that might be set by the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. REUSS. No, I do not.

Mr. WYLIE. So the consultation and operation would not mean anything.

Mr. REUSS. On the other hand, I think a State regulator who comes before the Fed and says, "Gentlemen, you are proceeding wrong in this matter; you should do this business of setting reserve requirements for foreign banks slightly differently from what your regulation published in the Federal Register said you were going to do"—I think if his words were persuasive, the seven middle-aged and elderly gentlemen on the Federal Reserve Board might pay some attention to it, and that is precisely what is wanted. That is what consultation is.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I think if nothing else, we have clarified the record.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his constructive service.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say very briefly that in the language of the Brown amendment it states:

The Board—

The Federal Reserve Board—is authorized to require submission of additional information regarding the examination of reports submitted under the subsection.

I think that covers the concern that my good colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, has.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Wylie amendment to section 7 and in support of the present Brown language. The Brown amendment adopted by the full committee attempted to strike a fair compromise between the demands of the Federal Reserve for additional examination and regulatory authority and the desire of State banking authorities to continue to supervise foreign banks.

To date, the Federal Reserve has utterly failed to demonstrate the need for any authority beyond that which is provided by the committee amendment. The committee amendment would give the Federal Reserve 2 years to make its case for an additional grant of authority, and this is more than fair in view of the failure of the Fed to prove its point over the years during which it has sought full regulatory authority over domestic banks as well before it lowered its sights to obtaining authority over State-chartered foreign banks.

The committee amendment also establishes a procedure whereby the Fed would consult with the State bank supervisors concerning the setting of reserves for State-chartered foreign banks. It is my hope and expectation that the parties involved in these consultations will do their utmost to make the process work, so that the dual banking system can be preserved, as Congress intends it to be.

In my judgment, the committee amendment is fair and workable, and I urge my colleagues to retain it intact.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I shall be very brief.

Had the committee wished to provide that the setting of reserve requirements was a joint effort, that there could be a veto, the words, "The Federal Reserve Board will set reserve requirements with the approval of the State agency."

We do not say that. We say cooperation and consultation and, after all, insofar as legislative history is concerned and insofar as the committee is concerned, it is in the committee report and the report says that the ultimate authority in setting reserve requirements is the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. Chairman, I urge defeat of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE) as a substitute for the committee amendment.

The amendment offered as a substitute for the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 42, line 2, strike "Notwithstanding" and all thereafter through and including "United States."

Mr. ST GERMAIN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining committee amendments be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

The remaining committee amendments are as follows:

Committee amendments: Strike the date "December 3, 1974", wherever it appears in section 8 and insert in lieu thereof "May 23, 1977". On page 39, line 20, immediately before the period insert the following: ", but the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to take into account the treatment by foreign governments of financial institutions domiciled in the United States which do business in their respective countries".

On page 45, line 2, insert "or" after "regulations".

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ST GERMAIN

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a technical amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Technical amendment offered by Mr. ST GERMAIN: On page 5, line 24, and wherever else it appears, strike out "International Banking Act of 1977" and insert in lieu thereof "International Banking Act of 1978".

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very momentous and controversial amendemnt. I hope the gentleman will agree to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. ST GERMAIN).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments? If not, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore. (Mr. WRIGHT) having assumed the chair, Mr. NOLAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 10899) to provide for Federal regulation of participation by foreign banks in domestic financial markets, pursuant to House Resolution 1114, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 367, nays 2, answered "present" 1, not voting 64, as follows:

[Roll No. 199]

YEAS—367

Abdnor	Andrews, N. Dak.	Baldus
Akaka	Annunzio	Barnard
Alexander	Applegate	Baucus
Allen	Archer	Bauman
Ambro	Armstrong	Beard, R.I.
Ammerman	Ashley	Beard, Tenn.
Anderson, Calif.	AuCoin	Bedell
Anderson, Ill.	Badham	Beilenson
Andrews, N.C.	Bafalis	Benjamin
		Bennett

Bevill	Garcia	Michel
Biaggi	Gaydos	Mikulski
Bingham	Gephardt	Mikva
Blanchard	Giaimo	Miller, Calif.
Blouin	Gibbons	Miller, Ohio
Boggs	Gilman	Mineta
Boland	Ginn	Minish
Bolling	Goldwater	Mitchell, Md.
Bonior	Gonzalez	Mitchell, N.Y.
Bonker	Goodling	Moakley
Bowen	Gore	Moffett
Brademas	Gradison	Mollohan
Breaux	Grassley	Montgomery
Brinkley	Green	Moore
Brodhead	Guyer	Moorhead, Calif.
Brooks	Hagedorn
Brown, Calif.	Hall	Moorhead, Pa.
Brown, Mich.	Hamilton	Moss
Brown, Ohio	Hammer-schmidt	Motti
Broyhill		Murphy, Ill.
Buchanan	Hanley	Murphy, N.Y.
Burgener	Hannaford	Murphy, Pa.
Burke, Fla.	Hansen	Murtha
Burke, Mass.	Harkin	Myers, John
Burleson, Tex.	Harrington	Myers, Michael
Burlison, Mo.	Harris	Natcher
Burton, John	Harsha	Neal
Burton, Phillip	Hawkins	Nedzi
Butler	Heckler	Nichols
Byron	Hefner	Nolan
Caputo	Heftel	Nowak
Carney	Hightower	Oakar
Carr	Hillis	Oberstar
Carter	Hollenbeck	Obey
Cavanaugh	Holt	Ottinger
Clausen, Don H.	Holtzman	Panetta
	Horton	Patten
Clawson, Del	Howard	Patterson
Cleveland	Hubbard	Pattison
Coleman	Huckaby	Pease
Collins, Ill.	Hughes	Pepper
Conable	Hyde	Perkins
Conte	Ichord	Pettis
Conyers	Ireland	Pickle
Corcoran	Jacobs	Pike
Corman	Jeffords	Poage
Cornell	Jenkins	Pressler
Cornwell	Jenrette	Preyer
Cotter	Johnson, Calif.	Price
Coughlin	Johnson, Colo.	Pritchard
Crane	Jones, N.C.	Pursell
D'Amours	Jones, Okla.	Quayle
Daniel, Dan	Jones, Tenn.	Railsback
Daniel, R. W.	Jordan	Regula
Danielson	Kasten	Reuss
Davis	Kastenmeier	Rinaldo
de la Garza	Kelly	Risenhoover
Delaney	Keys	Robinson
Dellums	Kildee	Roe
Derrick	Kindness	Rogers
Derwinski	Kostmayer	Roncalio
Devine	Krebs	Rooney
Dickinson	LaFalce	Rose
Dicks	Lagomarsino	Rosenthal
Dingell	Latta	Rostenkowski
Dornan	Le Fante	Rousselot
Downey	Leach	Roybal
Drinan	Lederer	Rudd
Duncan, Oreg.	Lehman	Ruppe
Duncan, Tenn.	Lent	Russo
Early	Levitas	Sarasin
Eckhardt	Livingston	Satterfield
Edgar	Lloyd, Calif.	Sawyer
Edwards, Ala.	Lloyd, Tenn.	Scheuer
Edwards, Calif.	Long, La.	Schroeder
Edwards, Okla.	Long, Md.	Schulze
Emery	Lott	Sebelius
English	Lujan	Seiberling
Erlenborn	Lundine	Sharp
Ertel	McClory	Shipley
Evans, Colo.	McCloskey	Shuster
Evans, Del.	McCormack	Simon
Evans, Ga.	McDade	Sisk
Evans, Ind.	McDonald	Skelton
Fary	McEwen	Skubitz
Fascell	McFall	Slack
Fenwick	McHugh	Smith, Nebr.
Findley	McKay	Snyder
Fish	Madigan	Solarz
Fisher	Maguire	Spence
Fithian	Mahon	St Germain
Flippo	Mann	Staggers
Florio	Markey	Stangeland
Flowers	Marks	Stanton
Foley	Marlenee	Stark
Ford, Mich.	Marriott	Steed
Ford, Tenn.	Martin	Steers
Forsythe	Mathis	Stockman
Fountain	Mattox	Stokes
Fowler	Mazzoli	Stratton
Fraser	Meeds	Studds
Frenzel	Metcalfe	Stump
Frey	Meyner	Symms
Thone	Walgren	Wilson, Tex.
Traxler	Walker	Winn
Treen	Walsh	Wirth
Trible	Wampler	Wright
Tsongas	Watkins	Wydler
Ullman	Waxman	Wylie
Vander Jagt	Weaver	Yates
Vanik	Whalen	Yatron
Vento	Whitehurst	Young, Mo.
Volkmer	Wiggins	Young, Tex.
Waggonner	Wilson, Bob	Zablocki

NAYS—2

Glickman Myers, Gary

ANSWERED "PRESENT" 1

O'Brien

NOT VOTING—64

Addabbo	Gudger	Sikes
Ashbrook	Holland	Smith, Iowa
Aspin	Kazen	Spellman
Breckinridge	Kemp	Steiger
Broomfield	Ketchum	Taylor
Burke, Calif.	Krueger	Teague
Cederberg	Leggett	Thompson
Chappell	Luken	Thornton
Chisholm	McKinney	Tucker
Clay	Milford	Udall
Cochran	Nix	Van Deerlin
Cohen	Quie	Weiss
Collins, Tex.	Quillen	White
Cunningham	Rahall	Whitley
Dent	Rangel	Whitten
Diggs	Rhodes	Wilson, C. H.
Dodd	Richmond	Wolff
Eilberg	Roberts	Young, Alaska
Flood	Rodino	Young, Fla.
Flynt	Runnels	Zeferetti
Fuqua	Ryan
Gammage	Santini

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Addabbo with Mr. McKinney.
Mr. Thompson with Mr. Steiger.
Mr. Zeferetti with Mr. Young of Florida.
Mrs. Spellman with Mr. Aspin.
Mr. Runnels with Mr. Cochran of Mississippi.
Mr. Teague with Mr. Diggs.
Mr. Luken with Mr. Sikes.
Mrs. Burke of California with Mr. Thornton.
Mr. Chappell with Mr. Tucker.
Mr. Krueger with Mr. Ashbrook.
Mr. Richmond with Mr. Collins of Texas.
Mr. Flood with Mr. Quie.
Mr. Whitley with Mr. Ketchum.
Mr. Rahall with Mr. Quillen.
Mr. Roberts with Mr. Broomfield.
Mr. Udall with Mr. Taylor.
Mrs. Chisholm with Mr. Cunningham.
Mr. Wolff with Mr. Kemp.
Mr. Charles H. Wilson of California with Mr. Young of Alaska.
Mr. Breckinridge with Mr. Cederberg.
Mr. Clay with Mr. Dent.
Mr. Dodd with Mr. Cohen.
Mr. Eilberg with Mr. Flynt.
Mr. Fuqua with Mr. Whitten.
Mr. Santini with Mr. Ryan.
Mr. Nix with Mr. Smith of Iowa.
Mr. Van Deerlin with Mr. Milford.
Mr. Weiss with Mr. Leggett.
Mr. White with Mr. Kazen.
Mr. Rangel with Mr. Holland.
Mr. Gammage with Mr. Gudger.

Mr. GLICKMAN changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the bill H.R. 10899, just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS TO FILE REPORT

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs may have until 5 o'clock tomorrow to file a report on H.R. 39, the Alaskan National Lands Conservation Act, even if the House is not then in session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman from Ohio can tell us if this matter has been cleared with the minority and with the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the request has been cleared as a result of the request of the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) to have 1 more day for the minority to file its views. I said that I would agree to that provided we could get this request approved.

Mr. BAUMAN. I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF APRIL 10, 1978

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I take this time for the purpose of inquiring of the acting majority leader the program for the balance of this week and the program scheduled for next week.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, this completes the program for this week.

The program for the week of April 10 is as follows:

On Monday the House will meet at noon, and there are no bills for the District of Columbia.

There will be six bills to be considered under suspension of the rules, but the votes on the suspension bills will be postponed until the end of all suspensions. The bills to be considered under the suspension of the rules are:

H.R. 10730, Marine Mammal Protection Act authorizations, 1979–81;

H.R. 10878, Fishermen's Protective Act insurance program extension;

H.R. 10882, Public Lands Conservation program authorizations, 1979–81;

H.R. 10732, Fishery Conservation and Management Act authorizations, 1979;

H.R. 10884, Office of Environmental Quality authorizations, 1979–81; and

H.R. 11445, SBA programs amendments and authorizations.

On Tuesday, the House will again meet at noon and consider five bills under suspension of the rules, and again votes will be postponed on those until the end of all suspensions. The bills under suspension of the rules are:

H.R. 8099, water rights for Ak-Chin Indians;

H.R. 7101, Riverside County, Calif., land claims amendments;

H.R. 2497, restore Federal recognition of four Oklahoma Indian tribes;

H.R. 11092, increase authorizations for Navajo-Hopi Indians relocation; and

H.J. Res. 767, Education Day, U.S.A.

We will also consider H.R. 11662, establish Lowell National Historical Park, under an open rule with 1 hour of debate.

On Wednesday the House will meet at 3 p.m. and will first consider the conference report on the bill H.R. 6782, Emergency Agricultural Act of 1978, subject of course to a rule being granted.

Then we will consider H.R. 1, Ethics in Government Act, also subject to a rule being granted.

On Thursday the House will meet at 11 a.m. and consider H.R. 11003, White House authorizations, subject to a rule being granted; and H.R. 11302, EPA authorizations for the fiscal year 1979, under an open rule with 1 hour of debate.

On Friday the House will meet at 11 a.m. and consider the bill H.R. 3161, basic workweek of Federal firefighters, under an open rule with 1 hour of debate; and H.R. 3787, Zuni Indians Court of Claims case, subject to a rule being granted.

The House will adjourn by 3 p.m. on Friday and by 5:30 p.m. on all other days except Wednesday.

Conference reports may be brought up at any time.

Any further program will be announced later.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I have two questions of the acting majority leader.

No. 1, with respect to the business scheduled for Wednesday, H.R. 1, Ethics in Government Act, when this bill was reported last November the committee left title I blank with the intention that the committee of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PREYER) would wed their congressional ethics package to this bill. Is that the intention of the other side? I realize that then this would require action by the Rules Committee. Would the gentleman respond to that?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. It is my understanding that there are four bills dealing in ethics presently pending and it will be up to the Rules Committee to decide whether they will combine all four or send them to the floor individually.

It is my understanding that decision will be made the early part of next week in the Rules Committee.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman from Illinois.

Finally, in view of the two bills scheduled for Friday, is there a possibility that the same thing next week might happen as happened this week?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Of course we again have the problem of the committees needing to meet, and certainly the leadership would like very much to have the House in session so that committees can meet to report authorizing legislation. We, of course, hope that we will have a calendar on Friday next and we are scheduling toward that end.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I thank my colleague for yielding. I wonder, does he know the numbers of the bills that are to be inserted or folded in or somehow merged into H.R. 1?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I certainly would like to make that information available in the RECORD if the gentleman would like. At the present time I do not have the information.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. The gentleman will then attempt to insert the numbers of those bills in the RECORD?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. That is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the numbers of those bills which may be considered in the Committee on Rules be inserted for the edification of the Members of the House at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

(The information follows:)

H.R. 6954, part I (Committee on Post Office and Civil Service); H.R. 6954, part II (Committee on Armed Services); H.R. 1 (Committee on the Judiciary); and H.R. 7401 or H.R. 11941 (Select Committee on Ethics).

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I have listened very carefully to what the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) had to say about the possibility of next Friday's session, and I say that the sooner we have the facts for our schedules as to the possibility of a Friday session, the better it will be.

I would merely wish to advise the distinguished minority leader so that he may advise the acting majority leader that one of the bills that has been scheduled for next Friday involves the basic workweek of Federal firefighters, which is vehemently opposed by the administration. So that I would suggest that if you would wish to ease the pressure down there on 16th Street that you can drop that one from the calendar.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. I thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DERWINSKI) for his observation.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule may be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1978

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

DISCHARGING COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES FROM FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 1075 AND RE-REFERRAL TO THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be discharged from further consideration of House Resolution 1075 and that the resolution be re-referred to the Select Committee on Intelligence.

(Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1075 was received in this committee on March 21, 1978, and brought to the attention of the appropriate staff member on the morning of March 23, 1978, although the resolution was introduced on March 14, 1978.

Under the House Rules the committee is allowed 7 legislative days from the date of introduction to report on the resolution. Under that rule, the final day to report was April 4—the date following the return from the Eastern district work period. Accordingly, the committee did not have the full 7-day period to work on the resolution since it was not printed by the Government Printing Office as a priority matter, and, thus, the request for re-referral at this date.

Aside the foregoing, upon consideration of the resolution it was determined that the substance was basically of an intelligence nature and, therefore, the resolution would have been more properly referred to the Select Committee on Intelligence. That matter was brought to the attention of the select committee on April 5 and the General Counsel asked that House Resolution 1075 be referred to the select committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO HAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT, APRIL 6, 1978, OR MIDNIGHT APRIL 7, 1968, TO FILE A CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 6782, EMERGENCY AGRICULTURAL ACT OF 1978

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tonight, April 6, 1978, or until midnight tomorrow, Friday, April 7, 1978, in which to file a conference report to accompany the bill H.R. 6782, the Emergency Agricultural Act of 1978.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY)?

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY) give us an idea of what the rule accompanying this legislation will be?

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, as the gentleman from California I am sure knows, this particular conference report is probably subject to a point of order, and quite clearly subject to a point of order, in that it violates section 303 of the Budget Act.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Yes, I am aware of that.

Mr. FOLEY. So that the reference to this legislation that the acting majority leader read to the Members is, of course, subject to having a rule being granted. It is my intention to ask the Committee on Rules to grant a waiver on the conference report to make it eligible for consideration next Wednesday.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, suppose the chairman of the Committee on the Budget feels that the waiver should not be granted, then what?

Mr. FOLEY. That is a matter for the Committee on Rules to determine.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. The legislation involves just a slight amount of sloshing over the budget, in fact, a rather substantial wave.

Mr. FOLEY. All I can tell the gentleman is that the resolution is a question of what waivers are to be granted on this bill by the members of the Committee on Rules and, in addition to that, any rule must, of course, receive the approval of the Members of the House before the matter can be considered.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

SOUTH AFRICA MUZZLES POET

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year internationally renowned writer and academician, Ezekial Mphahlele, was denied a teaching post at the University of the North in Turfloop by the South African Government.

Professor Mphahlele and his family had returned to South Africa after some 20 years in exile because the university council at the University of the North had unanimously approved his application for a teaching post. Upon resigning his teaching post at the University of Pennsylvania last year and moving back to South Africa, Professor Mphahlele, who was nominated for the Nobel Prize in literature in 1969, was suddenly told by South African authorities that he could not teach. No reason was given.

This case illustrates the moral bankruptcy of South Africa's policy of separate development of African controlled homelands. The University of the North is located in Lebowa, a so-called African controlled homeland. Yet the white South African Government stepped in and canceled Professor Mphahlele's teaching invitation.

Moreover, Professor Mphahlele is still under a banning order in South Africa; he cannot be quoted and his books, like "Down Second Avenue" and "The Wanderers," cannot be read. He simply does not exist in the eyes of the South African Government.

I urge my colleagues to join me in lodging protests with the South African Government over its attempt to silence Professor Mphahlele.

H.R. 10899, INTERNATIONAL BANKING ACT

(Mr. GONZALEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I supported the committee positioned on the IBB bill just approved.

I believe that all banks operating in this country should operate under essentially the same ground rules.

For that reason I believe that foreign banks should not be permitted to branch across State lines, since no domestic bank enjoys that privilege.

I believe that foreign banks should not have the right to exercise nonbanking powers such as acting as stockbrokers, since domestic banks cannot do so. There is a case for permitting those banks now having such powers to continue exercising them, but there is no reason to otherwise permit foreign banks to conduct business that is not open to our own citizen-owned banks.

We need not shun foreign banks, and this bill does not do so. At the same time we need not grant special favors to foreign banks, particularly when our own banks may be discriminated against by other countries.

This country is plainly an attractive market for foreign banking institutions, and their holdings here are growing apace. This bill does not place any undue restrictions on that growth; it does not close any doors. All it does is to establish a reasonable and fair set of ground rules under which all banks, of whatever origin, would operate.

I am a believer in competition, and believe that it creates economic and business efficiency. We would be foolish, though, in the name of competition, to allow the continuation of a situation in which we restrain our own banking institutions, but allow others to move ahead.

I support the committee position—it is equitable, it is sensible, and it is timely.

THE 1978 ACREAGE LIMITATION REPEAL ACT

(Mr. STUMP asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the 1978 Acreage Limitation Repeal Act. This effort will once and for all put to rest the problem that we have been experiencing regarding the limitation that has been placed on the amount of water that a person might receive from Federal reclamation projects. Purely and simply, it is a comprehensive bill to repeal the 160-acre limitation and remove the residency requirement.

This obsolete law, enacted in 1902, has at best been very loosely enforced. We like to analogize this to the State legislator who discovered an obsolete State law which says that "more carriages" must pull over to the side of the road when they approach within 100 yards of any horse or horse-drawn vehicle. Now this State law had not been enforced for over 75 years. The legislator brought this obsolete law before a committee of the State legislature. The committee rather than deciding to repeal this obsolete law elected to increase the distance that the "motor carriages" had to pull over from 100 to 500 yards.

Mr. Speaker, we have the same situation as it relates to the acreage limitations of the 1902 and subsequent acts. Some are suggesting that we increase the limitation from 160 acres to some other "magic" number. We, however, are dealing with an obsolete law that has been loosely enforced. While the original purpose was meritorious, it has long since become obsolete.

As presently interpreted by the courts, the 1902 Reclamation Act will limit farm income, abuse private property rights, set up a Government-run lottery for land, dictate to whom one can sell, sanction a philosophy of land redistribution, limit farmers to some arbitrary farm operational size, and destroy the free enterprise incentive. As Senator WALLOP so succinctly said on March 10, 1978:

> The problems with the present excess land laws are many. One hundred sixty acres is no longer an economical farm unit for virtually all lands within reclamation projects. Variations in productive potential of various lands are ignored in all but a few isolated instances. Residency requirements are unduly strict. The limitations apply equally to those receiving only a supplemental supply of water, as well as those who are totally dependent on water from Federal reclamation projects. Many irrigators are now being denied the benefit of payout contracts which they entered into in good faith. Their Government has breached its faith.

While the social experimenter flippantly tried to give the opposite impression, the family farm is not an obsolete concept. It is the rule. Corporate farming is the exception. The 160-acre limitation, together with the residency rule, the Interior Department would like to impose is tantamount to expropriation by the Government of private property.

This bill allows continued control of ownership in reclamation areas, but would not place a limit on the size of farming operations. I believe it was not the intent of the 1902 reclamation law to limit farm income by controlling the business end of the operation.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come to do away with this outdated difficult to enforce, and unnecessary law. My bill will do just that. In short it will provide reasonable restrictions in return for the use of the public investment.

CONGRESSMAN JACK KEMP TESTIFIES BEFORE THE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE AS TO WHY CONGRESS SHOULD DUPLICATE PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S TAX CUTS FROM THE EARLY SIXTIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FARY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. KEMP) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on why I believe the Congress should adopt across the board, permanent tax rate reductions similar to those proposed by President Kennedy 15 years ago in lieu of President Carter's proposal. Reducing tax rates would do more to create jobs, expand economic output, increase aftertax incentives to workers and investors, and produce greater tax equity and efficiency than any other action the Congress or the administration have proposed.

THE KENNEDY TAX CUTS

Let me start off by reviewing the Kennedy program. As you may remember, President Kennedy announced the proposed tax cuts in his economic report in January 1963. In that report he made the following statement:

> The main block to full employment is an unrealistically heavy burden of taxation. The time has come to remove it.

I believe that those words are as true today as they were in 1963, and perhaps even more so, given the current state of the economy.

The Kennedy program consisted of two main elements: A reduction of all individual income tax rates by an average of about 25 percent; from 20 to 14 percent at the bottom and from 91 to 70 percent at the top, and a reduction in the corporate tax rate from 52 to 48 percent. This package became law in 1964.

We now remember the years 1964 through 1967 as the most prosperous in recent times, and the statistics bear out this belief: The unemployment rate for all workers fell from 6.7 percent in 1961 to 3.8 percent in 1967. The unemployment rate for black Americans fell from 12.4 percent in 1961 to 7.4 percent in 1967, and the unemployment rate for black males over 20 years old fell from 11.7 to 4.3 percent over the same period—a dramatic improvement. Real gross national product increased by 74 percent between 1962 and 1969, and prices throughout the period were relatively stable, with consumer prices going up less than 3 percent during most of the 1960's.

Since 1969 the Congress has passed four tax reductions, most recently just last year. Yet these tax cuts have failed to have the same effect as the Kennedy tax cuts. Indeed, rather than paying less taxes as the result of these tax cuts most Americans are paying much more of their income in taxes than they were 10 years ago.

Why has this happened?

I believe there are two reasons primarily:

First, none of the tax cuts since 1964 have reduced the high marginal tax rates. The rates themselves are exactly where they were after the Kennedy cuts. More recent tax cuts have emphasized changes in the personal exemption and standard deduction and implementation of a tax credit, which primarily benefit those in lower-income brackets, rather than across-the-board rate reductions. Unfortunately, we have now reached the point where those with low incomes are paying almost none of the taxes. According to recent data 94 percent of all individual income taxes are paid by families with incomes above $10,000. This means the tax burden has been shifted upward onto those with middle and upper incomes and that progressivity has been increased.

Second, inflation has been allowed to reach unacceptable levels, due to vast increases in Government spending, debt, and the money supply. This has pushed people up into higher tax brackets and increased both their effective and marginal tax rates.

The marginal tax rate, because it is the tax rate applied to each additional dollar that is earned, is the tax rate which has the most influence on economic decisions. As marginal tax rates increase the tradeoffs between work and leisure, investment and consumption are reduced. This is called the substitution effect. In other words, high marginal tax rates reduce the cost of foregoing additional income, whether through investment or work, and taking more leisure or buying more consumption goods. Consequently, an increase in marginal tax rates will produce less work and less investment, to the point where a 100-percent marginal tax rate will eliminate all work and investment.

Today in the United States marginal tax rates go from 14 percent on incomes above $2,200 for a single person up to 70 percent on incomes above $102,200. Thus as one's income rises, whether through inflation, real growth in the economy, or through hard work and entrepreneurial skill the tax system takes progressively more out of each additional dollar earned. To see what this is doing to incentive, imagine what it would be like if we had a tax system which taxed 10 percent of your income on Monday, 20 percent on Tuesday, 30 percent on Wednesday, and so on until you are taxed 70 percent on Sunday, should you work so long. At what point would you decide it is no longer worth while to work? Obviously, a few people would choose to work regardless, but the majority of people would choose leisure over work sometime around Wednesday or Thursday.

By contrast, imagine a tax system which works the opposite way, and taxes you 70 percent on Monday, 60 percent on Tuesday, and so on. Obviously, were someone to work all 7 days in each case the exact same amount of revenue would be raised. But in the first case incentive is suppressed while in the second case it is stimulated. In the second case there will be a very strong incentive to continue work through Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, when more of the fruits of one's labor can be retained.

It seems obvious to me that not only would there be greater economic growth under the second system, but the Government would raise more revenue as well.

Of course, I am not necessarily advocating such a tax system, I am merely pointing out that we are paying a heavy price for extreme progressivity in terms of lost economic output.

TAX RATES AND TAX REVENUES

I have alluded to the fact that high marginal tax rates may reduce Government revenues below what would be collected at a lower tax rate. This notion stems from the commonsense observation that there are always two tax rates which will raise the same given amount of tax revenue: A high tax rate on a small productive base and a low tax rate on a large productive base.

I believe that tax rates in the United States are presently so unnecessarily high that they are discouraging work and production to a large extent, thereby shrinking the potential economic base. Furthermore, these tax rates have led to growth of a large subterranean economy, in which people work and produce outside the tax economy, and bias investment into tax shelters, such as municipal bonds, which reduce the potential tax base.

Recent estimates by Prof. Peter Gutmann put the size of the subterranean economy at $200 billion per year. Since much of this output results from people attempting to avoid taxes, we can assume that it would return to the conventional economy if tax rates were lower. This would lead to an increase in the tax base.

As to tax shelters, one can see what a powerful motivation there is to put one's money into municipal bonds, rather than some other kind of investment, from the following table showing after tax yields to people in New York, which appeared in an advertisement for municipal bonds:

FOR NEW YORK CITY RESIDENTS

[In percent]

Joint return taxable income	Federal New York City and New York State taxes	A tax exempt rate of
		6.25 percent	6.50 percent	6.75 percent	7 percent
		Is approximately equivalent to a taxable rate of
$16,000 to $20,000	38	10.08	10.48	10.88	11.29
$20,000 to $24,000	42	10.78	11.21	11.63	12.07
$24,000 to $28,000	48	12.01	12.50	12.98	13.46
$28,000 to $32,000	51	12.75	13.26	13.77	14.28
$32,000 to $36,000	53	13.29	13.82	14.36	14.89
$36,000 to $40,000	56	14.20	14.77	15.34	15.90
$40,000 to $44,000	58	14.88	15.47	16.07	16.66
$44,000 to $52,000	60	15.62	16.25	16.87	17.50
$52,000 to $64,000	62	16.45	17.10	17.76	18.42
$64,000 to $76,000	64	17.36	18.05	18.75	19.44
$76,000 to $88,000	66	18.38	19.11	19.85	20.58
$88,000 to $100,000	68	19.53	20.31	21.09	21.87
$100,000 to $200,000	69	20.16	20.96	21.77	22.58
Over $200,000	76	26.04	27.08	28.12	29.16

FOR NEW YORK STATE RESIDENTS

[In percent]

Joint return taxable income	Federal and New York State taxes	A tax exempt rate of
		6.25 percent	6.50 percent	6.75 percent	7 percent
		Is approximately equivalent to a taxable rate of
$16,000 to $20,000	36	9.76	10.15	10.54	10.93
$20,000 to $24,000	41	10.59	11.01	11.44	11.86
$24,000 to $28,000	45	11.36	11.81	12.27	12.72
$28,000 to $32,000	48	12.01	12.50	12.98	13.46
$32,000 to $36,000	51	12.75	13.26	13.77	14.28
$36,000 to $40,000	53	13.28	13.82	14.36	14.89
$40,000 to $44,000	56	14.20	14.77	15.34	15.90
$44,000 to $52,000	57	14.58	15.11	15.69	16.27
$52,000 to $64,000	60	15.62	16.25	16.87	17.50
$64,000 to $76,000	62	16.44	17.10	17.76	18.42
$76,000 to $88,000	64	17.36	18.05	18.75	19.44
$88,000 to $100,000	66	18.38	19.11	19.85	20.58
$100,000 to $200,000	68	19.58	20.31	21.09	21.87
Over $200,000	74	24.03	25.00	25.96	26.92

Thus, if we had considerably lower marginal tax rates, money would flow out of municipal bonds and tax shelters and into tax-producing investments automatically. This point was emphasized by Treasury Secretary Andrew Mellon in his book, "Taxation: The People's Business":

> The history of taxation shows that taxes which are inherently excessive are not paid. The high rates inevitably put pressure upon the taxpayer to withdraw his capital from productive business and invest it in tax-exempt securities or to find other lawful methods of avoiding the realization of taxable income. The result is that the sources of taxation are drying up; wealth is failing to carry its share of the tax burden; and capital is being diverted into channels which yield neither revenue to the Government nor profit to the people.

More recently, the same point was made in a somewhat different way by Mr. Andrew Knight, editor of "The Economist," in an article for the New York Times about taxes in Great Britain. He writes:

> Just for the record, I am being paid a pittance by the New York Times for this article. Why did I not chisel The Times for more? Because 83 percent of the money will already go in taxes to pay for other people's false teeth and spectacles, so why bother? I refuse all freelance, including lucrative television work, for the same reason. On a gross annual salary of about $45,000 my marginal tax rate is 83 percent. Still, I'm lucky. A friend of mine who has built one of Britain's most successful businesses pays 98 percent: This is because the dividends on his shares in the business are regarded as "unearned."

TAXES AND THE WEDGE

More importantly, we must realize that all taxes constitute a wedge between effort and reward. Thus workers do not work for gross wages but for net wages, and employers will make employment decisions based upon the total cost of hiring a new worker, which may be more than twice the worker's net wages. Thus whenever tax rates are reduced it reduces the wedge and simultaneously increases aftertax wages for workers and the cost of employment to employers. This is why tax rate reductions are such a powerful tool for reducing unemployment and increasing productivity.

Take, for example, a single worker in New York State earning $13,000 per year. On each additional dollar he earns the following taxes will be paid: 29 percent Federal income tax, 9 percent State income tax, and 12.1 percent social security tax (worker and employer combined), for a total of 50.1 percent tax. This means there is a 50-percent wedge between total wages and aftertax wages. And it means that his employer will have to pay this worker $2 in order to give him $1 of additional income.

Since anything which increases costs to employers goes into the wedge one can see that all business taxes and regulations also increase the wedge and reduce employment. Consequently, a reduction in taxes, whether on individuals or businesses, and a reduction in Government regulations will lead to the creation of more jobs.

WHEN TAX RATES WENT DOWN AND REVENUES WENT UP

The test of this theory that a reduction in tax rates can lead to greater revenues through an expansion of the economic base and the tax base came during the Kennedy administration. As the following table demonstrates, revenues were predicted to go down but actually went up:

FEDERAL REVENUE GAINS FROM TAX RATE REDUCTION, 1963-68

[In billions of dollars]

	1963	1964	1965	1966	1967	1968	Tota
U.S. Treasury estimated revenue losses	−2.4	−5.2	−13.3	−20	−23.7	−24.4	−$89
Actual revenue gains	+7.0	+6.0	+4.0	+14.0	+19.0	+4.0	+54
Difference in estimates							143

Recently, Prof. Walter Heller, who was Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors under Kennedy, was asked to comment on these figures during testimony before the Joint Economic Committee. He replied:

> What happened to the tax cut in 1965 is difficult to pin down but insofar as we are able to isolate it, it did seem to have a tremendously stimulative effect, a multipled effect on the economy. It was the major factor that led to our running a $3 billion surplus by the middle of 1965 before escalation in Vietnam struck us. It was a $12 billion tax cut which would be about $33 or $34 billion in today's terms, and within one year the revenues into the Federal Treasury were already above what they had been before the tax cut . . . Did it pay for itself in increased revenues? I think the evidence is very strong that it did.

Furthermore, examination of the tax returns after the Kennedy tax cuts shows that tax revenues from the rich increased substantially, despite the reduction in the highest marginal rate from 91 to 70 percent:

Percent of Federal Income Tax Revenues Paid By Individuals With Incomes Above $100,000

Year:	Percent
1963	5.1
1964	6.3
1965	7.6
1966	7.5
1967	8.5
1968	9.2

THE EFFECT OF INFLATION

All the beneficial effects of the Kennedy tax cuts were eventually dissipated by inflation, which pushed individuals up into higher tax brackets and led to the overtaxation of capital gains and corporate profits. The following table shows how Federal taxes—both income and social security—have affected a family of four earning the median income over the past decade, taking into account changes in the tax law:

Changes in taxes and disposable income for a family of four earning the median income, 1967–77

	1967	1977
Income (current dollars)	$8,400	[1] $17,000
Real Income (1967 dollars)	$8,400	$9,366
Personal exemption	$2,400	$3,000
Standard deduction	$1,240	$3,200
Taxable income	$4,760	$10,800
Federal income tax	$764	$1,822
Social security tax	$174	$965
Total Federal tax	$938	$2,787
Disposable income	$7,462	$14,213
Real disposable income	$7,462	$6,579
Effective tax rate	11.2%	16.4%
Marginal tax rate	19%	22%
Increase in tax	——	197%
Increase in real income	——	—12%

[1] Approximate.

(NOTE.—Between 1967 and 1977 the Consumer Price Index increased 81.5%.)

As one can see, both the effective tax rate and the marginal tax rate have been increased.

Some may say to this: Well, it is only proper that if one's income doubles one ought to pay more taxes.

But here it is only the nominal income which has increased. Since the Consumer Price Index has gone up more than 80 percent, a family with the median income does not have twice the purchasing power it had in 1967. In fact, because the increase in taxes is real, the real disposable income of a family with the median income has gone down 2 percent, despite all the tax cuts Congress has implemented. This fact is confirmed by Department of Labor statistics which earnings have been virtually unchanged for 10 years, even though nominal wages have increased substantially:

	1967	1976
Gross average weekly earnings (current dollars)	$101.84	$176.29
Gross average weekly earnings (1967 dollars)	101.84	103.40
Spendable average weekly earnings, worker with no dependents (current dollars)	83.38	143.90
Spendable average weekly earnings, worker with no dependents (1967 dollars)	83.38	84.40
Spendable average weekly earnings, worker with 3 dependents (current dollars)	90.86	156.50
Spendable average weekly earnings, worker with 3 dependents (1967 dollars)	90.86	91.79

Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics.

If one projects this trend into the future, assuming a modest 6-percent inflation rate, with incomes rising at the same amount for a family presently earning the median income, the results are startling.

Year	1978	1979	1980	1981
Adjusted gross income in 1978 dollars	$17,000	$17,000	$17,000	$17,000
Adjusted gross income in current dollars	17,000	18,020	19,101	20,248
Federal income tax	1,822	2,042	2,311	2,586
Marginal tax rate (percent)	(22)	(22)	(25)	(25)
Social security tax	1,028	1,105	1,171	1,346
Total taxes	2,850	3,147	3,482	3,932
Disposable income	14,150	14,873	15,619	16,316
Real disposable income	14,150	13,853	13,518	13,068
Increase in nominal income over 1978 (percent)		6	12.4	19.1
Increase in taxes over 1978		10.4	22.2	38.0
Increase in disposable income over 1978		5.1	10.4	15.3
Increase in real disposable income over 1978		−2.1	−4.5	−7.6

THE CARTER PLAN

The Carter tax plan will do virtually nothing to correct this situation because he leaves the tax rates virtually intact while increasing progressively through elimination of the personal exemption and substitution of a tax credit. The following table from the Joint Economic Committee's report for 1978 illustrates how marginal tax rates for many taxpayers will increase under the Carter plan:

MARGINAL TAX RATES, JOINT RETURNS, AFTER RATE REDUCTION AND CHANGEOVER TO $240 CREDIT

Current taxable income [1]	Marginal rate		Family of 2		Family of 4
	Present law	Tax proposal	Taxable income after loss of $1,500 exemption	Marginal rate	Taxable income after loss of $3,000 exemption	Margin rate
0 to 500	14	12	1,500 to 2,000	[2] 14	3,000 to 3,500	[2] 17
500 to 1,000	14	12	2,000 to 2,500	[2] 16	3,500 to 4,000	[2] 17
1,000 to 2,000	15	14	2,500 to 3,500	16/17	4,000 to 5,000	[2] 18
2,000 to 3,000	16	16	3,500 to 4,500	17/18	5,000 to 6,000	[2] 18
3,000 to 4,000	17	17	4,500 to 5,500	[2] 18	6,000 to 7,000	[3] 18
4,000 to 8,000	19	18	5,500 to 9,500	[3] 18/19	7,000 to 11,000	[3] 18/19
8,000 to 12,000	22	19	9,500 to 13,500	19/20	11,000 to 15,000	19/20
12,000 to 16,000	25	20	13,500 to 17,500	20/23	15,000 to 19,000	20/23
16,000 to 20,000	28	23	17,500 to 21,500	23/27	19,000 to 23,000	23/27
20,000 to 24,000	32	27	21,500 to 25,500	27/32	23,000 to 27,000	[3] 27/32
24,000 to 28,000	36	32	25,500 to 29,500	[3] 32/36	27,000 to 31,000	[3] 32/36
28,000 to 32,000	39	36	29,500 to 33,500	[3] 36/39	31,000 to 35,000	[3] 36/39
32,000 to 36,000	42	39	33,500 to 37,500	[3] 39/42	35,000 to 39,000	[3] 39/42
36,000 to 40,000	45	42	37,500 to 41,500	42/44	39,000 to 43,000	42/44
40,000 to 44,000	48	44	41,500 to 45,500	[3] 44/48	43,000 to 47,000	[3] 40/48
44,000 to 48,000	50	48	45,500 to 49,500	48	47,000 to 51,000	48
48,000 to 52,000	50	48	49,500 to 53,500	[3] 48/51	51,500 to 55,000	[3] 48/51
52,000 to 54,000	53	51	53,500 to 55,500	51	55,000 to 57,000	51
54,000 to 62,000	53	51	55,500 to 63,500	51	57,000 to 65,000	[3] 51/54
62,000 to 64,000	53	51	63,500 to 65,500	[3] 51/54	65,000 to 67,000	[3] 54
64,000 to 76,000	55	54	65,500 to 77,500	[3] 54/57	67,000 to 79,000	[3] 54/57
76,000 to 88,000	58	57	77,500 to 89,500	57	79,000 to 91,000	[3] 57/60
88,000 to 90,000	60	57	89,500 to 91,500	[3] 57/60	91,000 to 93,000	[3] 60
90,000 to 100,000	60	60	91,500 to 101,500	[3] 60	93,000 to 103,000	[3] 60
100,000 to 110,000	62	60	101,500 to 111,500	[3] 60/62	103,000 to 113,000	[3] 60/62
110,000 to 120,000	62	62	111,500 to 121,500	[3] 62	113,000 to 123,000	[3] 62
120,000 to 130,000	64	62	121,500 to 131,500	[3] 62/64	123,000 to 133,000	[3] 62/64
130,000 to 140,000	64	64	131,500 to 141,500	[3] 64	133,000 to 143,000	[3] 64
140,000 to 150,000	66	64	141,500 to 151,500	64/65	143,000 to 153,000	64/65
150,000 to 160,000	66	65	151,500 to 161,500	65	153,000 to 163,000	65
160,000 to 175,000	68	65	161,500 to 176,500	65/66	163,000 to 178,000	65/66
175,000 to 180,000	68	65	176,500 to 181,500	66	178,000 to 183,000	66
180,000 to 200,000	69	66	181,500 to 201,500	66/68	183,000 to 203,000	66/68
200,000 and over	70	68	201,500 and over	68	203,000 and over	68

[1] The zero bracket is not shown in this table. To include the zero bracket, increase all taxable incomes shown by $3,200.

[2] The $240 credit eliminates tax for returns with total taxable income falling in this bracket.

[3] Brackets in which many taxpayers could experience either no reduction, or an increase, in marginal rates.

Earlier I mentioned the substitution effect, which says that as tax rates go up the tradeoffs between work and leisure, savings, and consumption go down. To this economists will sometimes reply that there is an opposite effect at work: The so-called incomes effect, which says that as taxes go up and disposable income goes down people must work and invest more to maintain the same level of disposable income. Thus economists can say the following things about taxes in general:

First. If average tax rates and marginal tax rates go up or down simultaneously, it is impossible to determine the effect on incentive, because the incomes effect and the substitution effect are operating in opposite directions.

Second. If the average tax rate goes up while marginal tax rates stay the same, work effort will increase, due to the incomes effect.

Third. If average tax rates remain constant while marginal tax rates go down, incentive will increase due to the substitution effect.

Fourth. If average tax rates go down and marginal tax rates go up, incentive will be reduced, since the incomes effect and the substitution effect are operating in the same direction (negatively).

Fifth. If average tax rates go up and marginal tax rates go down incentive will be increased, since, once again, the incomes effect and the substitution effect are operating in the same direction (positively).

With this model in mind, it seems clear that President Carter's program fits No. 4. He is going to lower average tax rates and increase marginal tax rates simultaneously through his plan to eliminate the personal exemption—which will increase taxable income—while reducing tax liability through a tax credit. Consequently, there is no doubt whatsoever that the President's plan will reduce incentive and work effort.

I should also note that an increase in marginal tax rates will increase the tax bias against savings and investment. At a marginal tax rate of 25 percent; for example, an investor would require a before-tax return of 13.33 percent to get an after-tax yield of 10 percent. If his marginal rate bracket goes up to 50 percent he will require a before-tax yield of 15 percent, or conversely if the before-tax yield remains at 13.33 percent his after-tax yield will fall to 6.66 percent.

Incidentally, inflation acts as a tax on after-tax returns in exactly the same way. If your after-tax return is 6 percent and there has been 6 percent inflation, your real return is zero. If your before-tax return is 6 percent, there is 6 percent inflation, and you then pay taxes, the return becomes negative. Thus virtually every person in this country holding bonds today are getting negative returns on their investment.

The resulting reduction in savings and capital formation ultimately reduces jobs and economic growth.

THE KEMP-ROTH PLAN

By contrast, the Kemp-Roth Tax Reduction Act seeks to increase incentive and capital formation by reducing marginal tax rates. This legislation would do the following:

First. Reduce all individual income tax rates by an average of 30 percent across the board. This will reduce the highest marginal rate from 70 to 50 percent and the lowest tax rate from 14 to 8 percent over 3 years.

Second. Reduce the corporate income tax rate from 48 to 45 percent over 3 years.

Third. Increase the corporate surtax exemption from $50,000 to $100,000 to help small business.

This program attempts to duplicate as closely as possible President Kennedy's program from 15 years ago, and I expect similar results.

I have had the Kemp-Roth bill analyzed econometrically and the results are very positive.

Of course, there are serious problems with such econometric forecasts, since they are heavily weighted toward changes in demand, rather than supply, and because they are limited to estimating only a small number of the factors which influence economic output.

As Dr. Paul Craig Roberts recently wrote:

> Everyone has heard of supply and demand except the builders of econometric models, who apparently have heard only of demand. As a result the models cannot take into account two additional reasons why people produce: for income and for profit. Since they cannot simulate supply side effects, they cannot show the impact that alternative policies have on these two powerful economic motives.
>
> A correct model would show the relationships between quantities of productive inputs and their prices. However, the models upon which economic policy depends only relate numbers of people employed to levels of spending. Thus, the models show that a tax rebate and a personal income tax rate reduction stimulate GNP and employment by stimulating spending. But they cannot show that only a rate reduction also stimulates production by increasing the after-tax rewards to work and investment.

Nevertheless, Chase Econometrics, one of the leading economic forecasting companies, predicts the following positive effects of the Kemp-Roth proposal:

CHASE ECONOMETRICS FORECAST, YEARLY CHANGES

	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982
Unemployment rate (percent):
Kemp-Roth	5.94	5.41	4.75	4.13	3.97
No change	6.10	6.00	5.97	5.86	5.75
Increase in GNP (percent):
Kemp-Roth	10.5	10.5	10.6	10.6	9.9
No change	10.0	9.5	9.2	9.2	9.1
Increase in gross private investment (percent):
Kemp-Roth	10.9	11.0	13.2	15.5	11.5
No change	9.9	8.3	9.0	11.5	10.0
Increase in disposable personal income (percent):
Kemp-Roth	11.7	10.7	11.1	9.2	9.2
No change	10.5	9.0	8.9	7.9	8.2
Increase in corporate aftertax profits (percent):
Kemp-Roth	9.8	11.0	12.6	13.3	11.5
No change	7.0	7.2	7.3	8.4	9.5
Savings rate (percent):
Kemp-Roth	6.6	6.8	7.5	7.0	6.9
No change	6.0	5.7	5.7	5.2	5.1
Capacity utilization rate (percent):
Kemp-Roth	84.5	86.0	87.6	88.3	87.4
No change	83.8	83.9	83.6	83.3	82.9
Consumer price index (percent):
Kemp-Roth	6.2	6.4	6.4	6.6	6.8
No change	6.2	6.3	6.1	6.0	5.8
Federal budget deficit (billions):
Kemp-Roth	$68.6	$79.1	$89.8	$70.1	$64.6
No change	56.2	54.2	51.9	36.9	31.8
Difference	12.4	24.9	37.9	33.2	32.8
Federal deficit as a percentage of GNP:
Kemp-Roth	3.3	3.4	3.5	2.5	2.1
No change	2.7	2.4	2.1	1.4	1.1
Personal savings (billions):
Kemp-Roth	$96.8	$110.6	$134.9	$137.6	$148.9
No change	87.0	89.4	98.7	96.2	101.5
Difference	9.8	21.2	36.2	41.4	47.4
Increase in net fixed investment:
Kemp-Roth (billions)	$88.0	$95.0	$112.0	$141.0	$161.0
No change (billions)	$86.0	$88.0	$93.0	$109.0	$121.0
Percent change	2.3	8.0	20.4	29.4	34.7

COMPOUND ANNUAL GROWTH RATES, 1978–87

Indicator	Kemp-Roth	No change
Gross national product	9.61	8.87
GNP (1972 dollars)	3.38	3.25
Index of industrial production (total)	4.16	3.85
Index of industrial production (manufacturing)	4.26	3.92
Gross private investment	10.96	9.34
Fixed investment	11.19	9.57
Nonresidential	12.26	10.38
Structures	13.32	10.03
Equipment	11.67	10.58
Residential	8.60	7.55
Personal income	9.28	8.50
Disposable personal income	9.12	8.14
Corporate profits before tax	9.56	7.89
Corporate profits after tax	9.86	7.86
Unemployment rate	−3.40	−1.57
Savings rate	.24	−1.72
Implicit GNP deflator	6.03	5.44
Consumer price index	6.31	5.54
Wholesale price index	5.78	5.32
Federal Government receipts	9.27	9.08
Transfer payments	8.32	8.36
Individual income tax receipts	8.32	9.04
Corporate income tax receipts	8.45	7.33
Social security taxes	10.98	10.12
Transfers for unemployment compensation	.82	2.36
State and local government receipts	10.12	9.77

An analysis by Norman B. Ture, Inc. shows similar positive results:

[Dollar amounts in constant 1977 dollars]

Major economic magnitudes	1978	1980	1982	1987
Employment (thousands of full-time equivalent employees)	2,080	4,240	4,540	5,320
Annual wage rate	$920	$1,110	$1,210	$1,530
Grsss national product (billions):
Total	170	260	295	395
Business sector	139	219	249	327

[Dollar amounts in constant 1977 dollars]

Major economic magnitudes	1978	1980	1982	1987
Capital outlays (billions):
Gross	91	184	246	134
Net	91	168	205	57
Consumption (billions)	79	76	49	261
Federal tax revenues (billions):
Initial impact	(27)	(81)	(91)	(109)
Net of feedback	1	(40)	(43)	(43)
Net revenue (loss) gain per additional full-time equivalent employee (dollars par employee)	480	(9, 430)	(9, 470)	(8, 080)

The reason why we get these kinds of economic magnitudes is that marginal incentive is massively increased. Consider a person in the 70-percent tax bracket. At present he retains 30 cents out of each additional dollar he earns. Under the Kemp-Roth proposal he would retain 50 cents, or an increase of 66 percent in aftertax return. The following table estimates this increase in marginal incentive for each tax bracket under the Kemp-Roth proposal. As one can see, although the rates are reduced more in the lower brackets the increase in incentive is greatest in the upper brackets, where the greatest expansion of output would occur:

Increase in marginal incentive resulting from Kemp-Roth proposal:

[In percent]

Present marginal tax bracket	Under Kemp-Roth proposal	Percent rate reduction	Percent increase in aftertax reward
70	50	28	66
69	49	29	65
68	48	29	63
66	47	29	56
64	46	29	50
62	44	29	47
60	42	29	45
55	40	27	33
50	37	26	26
45	36	20	16
40	35	12	8
38	33	13	8
36	31	14	8
34	29	15	8
31	27	16	8
29	24	17	8
27	21	22	8
25	19	24	8
24	17	25	8
21	15	28	8
19	13	31	7
17	11	35	7
16	10	37	7
15	9	40	7
14	8	43	7

Some people may look at these figures and conclude that this proposal is aimed at the rich, because it increases their incentive the most, despite the fact that tax rates are reduced most in the lower brackets. I reply to this by saying that we cannot help the poor of this country by punishing the rich. In fact, the tax code ought not to be used for any purpose other than raising revenue.

I would also argue that a reduction in high marginal tax rates will increase the total amount of taxes paid by the rich, because they have a greater capability to reduce or expand their economic activities in response to changes in tax rates than do those with lower incomes. In this respect, my goal is to tax the rich as much as possible. Earlier I noted that tax revenues from the rich went up after the Kennedy tax cuts. The same thing happened in the 1920's, when the highest tax rate was reduced to 25 percent. At the time President Calvin Coolidge said:

> I agree completely with those who wish to relieve the small taxpayer by getting the largest possible contribution from people with large incomes. But if the rates on large incomes are so high that they disappear, the small taxpayer will be left to bear the entire burden. If, on the other hand, the rates are placed where they will produce the most revenue from large incomes, then the small taxpayer will be relieved.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion I will only say this: The tax proposal I am making is not a cure-all for the economy. But a reduction in marginal tax rates is the first step if we are to have economic growth without inflation.

I would also recommend that this committee take a hard look at capital gains, which are presently overtaxed to the point where those with capital gains are getting negative rates of return, according to a recent study by the National Bureau of Economic Research. And according to a study done for the Securities Industry Association by Data Resources, Inc., an elimination of all taxes on capital gains would increase Federal revenues by $38 billion in 4 years.

It should be kept in mind that whenever the marginal tax rate on income is reduced the effective tax rate on capital gains is automatically reduced, since the tax on capital gains is half the ordinary rate. Thus the Kemp-Roth proposal would reduce the highest tax rate on capital gains from 35 to 25 percent. Ultimately, however, I would like to see no taxes at all on capital gains, since I believe that it would do more to increase entrepreneurial activity and create investment and jobs than anything else we could do.

To close I will quote former Ways and Means Committee Chairman Wilbur Mills, who said during the debate on the Kennedy tax bill:

> Many believe we can spend our way to prosperity. On the other hand, I am firmly convinced that if Congress adopts a tax reduction and revision bill of the type which is before this body today, we can also achieve this more prosperous economy by loosening the constraints which the present Federal tax system imposes on our free enterprise system. These tax reductions will bring about a higher level of economic activity, fuller use of our manpower, more intensive and prosperous use of our plant and equipment, and with the increase in wages, salaries, profits, consumption and investment, there will be increases in Federal tax revenues.

DEATH IN TRANSIT—II

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ) is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, back in 1970 the House unanimously enacted a bill to improve railroad safety. This was the most far reaching rail safety bill since the turn of the century, and it was enacted because of a tremendous increase in the number of rail accidents during the 1960's. In fact, during the 5 years prior to enactment of the law, rail accidents increased by a total of 60 percent.

The Rail Safety Act of 1970 gave the Department of Transportation all the powers it needed to establish new safety regulations and to levy penalties against railroads that failed to comply.

Today, 8 years after enactment of that statute, we still have an appalling number of railroad accidents. The number of derailments has not declined at all—indeed we have an average of 7,700 derailments a year.

The lethal potential of these accidents is on the rise, because railroads are using far bigger cars than they did in earlier years, so that loads of toxic or explosive materials present an ever-increasing degree of danger.

As far back as 1969 the National Transportation Safety Board has issued recommendations designed to make tank cars safer, so as to reduce the hazard of leaks or explosions resulting from rail accidents.

The Board unfortunately can only make recommendations. It is up to the Department of Transportation, acting through the Federal Railroad Administration, to issue and enforce new safety standards.

Back in 1969 the Transportation Safety Board recommended that tank cars be equipped with shields at the head end, in order to reduce the danger of puncture or explosion from accidents.

This recommendation was repeated in 1972, 1974, 1975, and is still being repeated today. The Federal Railroad Administration has yet to act, except for writing responses that say the recommendations are too expensive and too complicated to be worthwhile.

The National Transportation Safety Board has likewise repeatedly recommended that improved types of couplers be used on cars, to prevent the occurrence of car over and underride, during a derailment. This again is a recommendation meant to reduce the hazard of leaks of toxic or flammable or explosive materials. Again, the Department of Transportation has failed to act.

Finally this year the National Transportation Safety Board has put on a kind of seminar, to demonstrate through an actual car modification, just how simple and quick it would be to produce safer tank cars.

The Department of Transportation and its Railroad Administration don't really need to be shown how simple it would be to promote safety; they already know it. The fact is that they are just not interested.

The reason is that the Department of Transportation sees its mission as fostering the interests of the carriers, not acting in behalf of the general public.

The Department of Transportation spends its energies on finding ways and means to rationalize the structure of the rail industry, as they put it, in order to guarantee the financial health of that industry.

The Department likewise spends its time promoting high freight rates, even though these same rates drive traffic away from the railroads and eventually leave them weaker than ever before. The Department buys, hook, line, and sinker, railroad arguments that they need to maximize their profits in the short run, charge all the traffic will bear, and thus commit longrun suicide. It matters not to the Department that the only theory of ratemaking the railroads have ever followed consistently is one that deprives them of traffic, because they make themselves uncompetitive; it matters not that the railroads put their profits into real estate and other speculations, instead of back into improvements, and then cry poverty; it matters not that incompetence and near-criminal mismanagement plagues the industry. No, the Department of Transportation sees itself as a steward of the industry, not a guarantor of the overall public interest.

It is no wonder that the National Transportation Safety Board's recommendations are not acted upon. Rail management does not want to act on these matters, and so neither does the friendly Department of Transportation.

It seems a miracle that there have not been more deaths resulting from rail accidents involving loads of toxic or flammable or explosive materials.

In 1971 there were 80 trains derailed, with loads of hazardous materials; in 1975 there were 186 derailments involving deadly loads. Train crews suffer death and injury; people who are living near or passing by tracks are injured, killed or evacuated to prevent injury or death. In 1973, 30,000 people had to leave their homes because of rail accidents involving lethal materials.

With this number of accidents, it is a sheer miracle that there have not been more deaths.

The experience this year suggests that the luck may be running out. Twenty innocent people have been incinerated or gassed to death in just two accidents, thousands have been evacuated, and no one knows how many were injured in one degree or another. Property losses remain to be reckoned.

In every one of the nearly 200 derailments we can expect this year, in which there will be toxic loads or flammable or explosive loads, there is the potential for disaster.

And yet, for 9 years the Department of Transportation has resisted issuing regulations to require simple safety improvements.

Mr. Adams should redesign the departmental logo, to change it from a stylized wheel to a skull and crossbones. Does he care about death in transit? The record does not show that whatever concern he may have has yet to be translated into any action.

That is why we have the sad and incredible scene of the National Transportation Safety Board patiently demonstrating, step by step, just how easy it really would be to make the rail movement of deadly cargoes safer. Meanwhile, death rides the rails in thousands of tanker cars.

INTRODUCTION OF ANTITERRORIST LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. ANDERSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be introducing this afternoon legislation which should strike a major blow against terrorism in this country. Those criminals who use explosives to intimidate, maim, and kill, will not like it at all. On the other hand, I look forward to receiving the support of all those interested in preserving life and property.

Several months ago, I attended a demonstration presented by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms at Fort MacArthur in San Pedro, Calif. They showed me a method by which the materials in a bomb, after detonation, could be traced to the last legal owner. This can be done simply by mixing in with the explosive material, small color-coded plastic taggants that will survive the blast.

This bill being introduced today, will phase in, over the next 3 years, provisions prohibiting the manufacture, distribution, and importation of explosive materials that do not contain identification taggants.

Remember the terrible incident in New York's La Guardia Airport at the end of 1975. Ten people were killed, seventy were injured, and more than $1 million worth of damage was caused. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, alone, has spent over 1,800 man-days of investigative time searching for the criminals, with no results. The reason is; any clues the bombers may have left were destroyed with the explosion. According to ATF. and I quote-

> It is believed that taggants in this case would have provided immediate investigative leads, reduction in man-hours, and more immediate direction to the violators.

The amount of criminal bombings in this country is on the rise. There were 11.8 percent more bombings in 1977 than the previous year. It is important that we be able to track down the explosive that was used, and my bill will enable us to do that. But wouldn't it be more helpful if we could detect the presence of the bomb before it goes off, taking with it lives and property?

We will soon be able to do this, with the introduction to the explosive materials of a vapor, undetectable to humans, but easily recognized with inexpensive detection devices. This legislation I am introducing will phase in requirements that explosive materials manufactured, distributed, or imported contain predetonation taggants.

As chairman of the House Aviation Subcommittee, I feel a special need for this legislation, as I know the problems of airport and airplane security. These were painfully evidenced by the La Guardia incident. The people of this nation are concerned about crime and terrorism. I feel certain that my colleagues, the people's representatives in Congress, share my feelings for this need. I invite your support, and solicit your cosponsorship of this important legislation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. WIRTH) is recognized for 15 minutes.

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult enough to get the Congress to deal with a major issue quickly, and conventional wisdom has it that once Congress acts on an issue; it's principally impossible to get it to reconsider.

Last year, in an effort to avert the predicted bankruptcy of the social security system, Congress enacted stiff new payroll taxes that will affect nearly every working American. Under the provisions of this legislation, by 1985 75 percent of all taxpayers would be paying more in social security than in general income taxes. Only 57 Members, including myself, voted to send those regressive taxes back for rewriting; but now there is movement that is defying the conventional wisdom. Barely 4 months after those tax increases were voted, it appears that a majority in the Congress will support a rollback in social security taxes in a form similar in part to a bill that five of us have offered. Clearly something has happened.

But before going into a discussion of the merits and drawbacks of our proposal, I think it would be helpful to outline how we have gotten where we are, and reach an understanding of the problem. It seems to me that this is the only way we can find a cure that is not worse than the disease.

Our social security system has three component programs: Old-age and survivors' insurance (OASI), which is the original social security program, disability insurance (DI), which was added in the 1950's to cover layoffs caused by a job-related disability, and hospital insurance, or medicare (HI) which was added in the 1960's.

The two newer programs have placed an enormous burden on the social security trust fund. Disability Insurance coverage has grown from 1.7 million persons in 1965 to over 4.5 million persons today and payments under the program have risen from $1.5 billion to $11.1 billion during the same period. Hospital insurance payments have gone from $2.6 billion to $15.2 billion during the last decade. Further, these two programs, while sensible social policy, bear little, if any, resemblance to the basic income insurance purpose of social security. Yet they were added to the social security trust fund.

It is easy to say that this is the cause of the system's present problems: Too many benefits have been added to an already overstrained system. But that is not the only answer. The current high unemployment rate—hovering around 7 percent for the past 2 years—and the general inflationary spiral that continues to drive up the costs of housing, food, utilities, consumer goods and especially health care, are also tied to the current crisis in social security. In fact, the complexity of the situation can best be illustrated by noting that when the last social security financing legislation was passed in 1973, the economic and actuarial predictions which formed the foundation of that legislation said that, based on long-range wage and price rise estimates, and projected unemployment and birth statistics, the social security trust fund was sound for both the short and long term.

Obviously, those predictions were inaccurate, and our current situation makes any prediction for social security difficult at best. Although decreases in inflation and unemployment are predicted, those problems will continue to plague us, and I am not convinced that our job training and employment programs are sufficient to get enough people into the work force. Our economic programs, now so dependent on foreign market fluctuations, are equally unpredictable, and the administration has not yet settled on a discernible anti-inflation program.

In the meantime, the ratio of working people to retired people moves steadily closer to 1 to 1, and the American wage earner will be forced increasingly, under the present system, to carry more of the burden of financing our retirement system.

The options for dealing with this growing problem are chiefly three: Reducing benefits, raising taxes, or finding alternative methods of financing.

Reducing benefits is not a viable option. It is not fair to those who have paid into the system in expectation of certain benefits, especially given the current rates of unemployment and inflation.

Raising taxes, as the recent congressional action shows, is similarly problematic. The payroll tax is severely regressive, hitting low- and middle-income wage earners and small businesses the hardest. Moreover, it is a stopgap solution; it addresses none of the previously mentioned structural problems which are the major cause of the trust fund's difficulties.

The third option, shifting some of the financing burden off the trust fund onto general funds, is now being explored and is gaining momentum daily. The growing popularity of this route results from its ability to solve both the financial and structural problems of social security.

The proposal which four of my colleagues and I introduced 2 months ago was the first of several financing programs now being examined; the others are variations on the same theme. All would, to a greater or lesser degree, remove the disability and hospital insurance programs from the social security trust fund and finance them instead from general funds.

Our proposal which would shift both programs in their entiretv, would reduce the current social security payroll tax by one-third, return the system to its original purpose as a retirement income program, and even under the most conservative estimates, insure its solvency well into the next century. In net cost, it would differ only slightly from the income tax cut/reform package currently being offered by the administration—and that is where its real significance lies. We have proposed that our program for a social security tax cut be substituted for the President's general tax reduction.

More than the administration program, ours will have a greater—and more favorable—impact on the rate of inflation, particularly by breaking the wage/price spiral. A reduction in social security taxes would directly reduce business costs, thus dampening the need for price increases. At the same time, it will increase the take-home pay of wage earners, thereby decreasing demands for inflationary wag increases. A recent Congressional Budget Office report stated that the shift in DI and HI financing would reduce the rate of inflation by at least a full percentage point a year.

Our proposal would also help to reduce the rate of unemployment. Currently, if a business is considering hiring new workers, it is often cheaper to pay overtime, or to invest in new machinery, than it is to pay the higher rates of taxation. This is primarily because of the increased base against which social security taxes are assessed, one of the biggest faults in the system. By rolling back the payroll tax to its 1974–75 level, employers would at least not be discouraged from adding new employees.

Further, our proposal is certainly more equitable than a general income tax cut. We propose to lower the regressive payroll tax, and maintain the philosophy that Government based on income rather than payroll taxes is fairer and more progressive. The social security tax does not rise in direct relation to income; it is levied on the first dollar of income, no matter how much that income may be. Consequently, a reduction in the payroll tax would do more for the cause of progressive taxation than any of the reforms the President has proposed, and would carry more reform than the elimination of the so-called three martini lunch.

Finally, by subjecting the HI and DI benefit programs to the appropriations process, our proposal would force better oversight and assure more efficient administration of these increasingly large and costly Federal programs.

For years, general revenue financing has been resisted because of the fear that access to general revenues would encourage interest group pressure for increased benefits.

Or the argument is made that shifting DI and HI to general revenues is a first step toward a means test for these programs. Clearly these arguments must and can be dealt with effectively, particularly as soon as a majority of Congress begins to look carefully at the present system and what it portends.

Our proposal is not a cure-all. But it is a much needed step, and one long overdue. And momentum for our approach is gathering. From our original band of 57, we now have endorsement of an approach similar to ones from the Democratic Caucus and the Joint Economic Committee. The Committee on Ways and Means is holding hearings, and the Budget Committee will include at least part of our recommendation in its budget targets. I have spoken with Treasury Secretary Blumenthal, Economic Adviser Charles Schultz, and Chief Domestic Adviser Stuart Eizenstat; and Speaker "TIP" O'NEILL reportedly has told the President that the Congress appears ready to move.

The conventional wisdom suggests that Congress will not alter a bill once it has been passed. But it looks to me like we have another chance to change the traditional way of doing business in Congress, by rolling back the social security tax passed last year.●

EXPLANATION OF VANIK TUITION TAX CREDIT LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. VANIK) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, on March 22, I introduced H.R. 11776, the Tuition Tax Credit Act of 1978. The Ways and Means Committee will be marking up this legislation on Monday, April 10, and Tuesday, April 11. For the information of interested parties, a summary of this legislation follows:

EXPLANATION OF TUITION TAX CREDIT ACT OF 1978

(Introduced by Mr. Vanik, March 22, 1978)

This bill provides a Federal income tax credit for tuition paid to elementary and secondary schools which are privately operated and to post-secondary vocational schools and colleges. When fully implemented, the bill would allow a taxpayer to claim a credit equal to 50 percent of tuition paid for himself, his spouse, and each of his dependents who are full-time students, with a maximum credit of $100 per student at the elementary and secondary level and a maximum credit of $250 per student at the post-secondary level.

The credit would be phased in in three stages. It would become effective August 1, 1978. For 1978, taxpayers would be allowed a maximum credit of $50 for elementary and secondary school students and $100 for post-secondary students for education furnished between August 1 and December 31, 1978. In calendar 1979, the maximum credits would increase to $100 at the elementary and secondary level and $150 at the post-secondary level. In calendar 1980, the maximum post-secondary credit would increase to $250.

The credit would be available only with respect to tuition paid for individuals who are full-time students during any four calendar months of a calendar year. No credit would be allowed for part-time students, for graduate study, for education below the first grade level, or for attendance at a kindergarten or nursery.

The credit could be claimed only for tuition paid by the taxpayer for enrollment or attendance at an eligible institution. It would not apply to amounts paid for books, supplies, equipment, or personal living or family expenses.

In order to qualify as an eligible educational institution, elementary and secondary schools must be nonprofit, private schools which do not discriminate on the basis of race and which are accredited or approved under State law or meet State compulsory school attendance requirements. Tuition paid for special education for physically and mentally handicapped individuals would be eligible for the credit if the special education is a substitute for public elementary or secondary education.

The bill would require that tuition expenses taken into account for the credit be reduced by certain tax-free scholarships, fellowships and other nontaxable educational assistance. This offset rule would pro-rate tax-free educational awards between tuition and other expenses which are ineligible for the credit, except when an award must be used only for tuition.

No credit would be allowed to a taxpayer who is claimed as a dependent by any other person. In addition, no other tax deduction or tax credit (for example, the business expense deduction or child care credit) would be allowed with respect to any amount paid for tuition, except to the extent that the total tuition payment exceeds the amount necessary to claim the maximum tuition credit allowable under the bill.

Reductions in individuals' Federal income tax liability attributable to tuition tax credits would not be permitted to be taken into account in determining their eligibility for, or the amount of their or other individuals' benefits or assistance under, any Federally funded educational assistance program.

The bill would provide for expedited judicial consideration of the constitutionality of any of its provisions.

The bill would take effect August 1, 1978, with respect to amounts paid on or after that date for education furnished on or after that date. It would terminate with respect to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1980.

REVENUE ESTIMATE OF H.R. 11776

[In millions]

Fiscal year	Elementary and secondary	Post-secondary	Total
1978	$11	$22	$33
1979	285	523	808
1980	461	821	1,282
1981	394	1,008	1,402

OBSERVATIONS OF A LOW LEVEL PENETRATION FLIGHT ON BOARD A SAC B–52H

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. LLOYD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. LLOYD of California. Mr. Speaker, Time correspondent Jerry Hannifin recently flew as observer on board a SAC B–52H in a low-level penetration flight to targets in the spectacular terrain of Arizona's Painted Desert. These are his observations which, I think, are both thought-provoking and worthy of presentation:

Actually, it was a simulated flight over the Soviet Union . . . a 98 hour mission, including an hour and 50 minutes at very low level, hugging the nap of the desert ridges and mountains, where the U.S. Air Force has programmed a combat avionics network duplicating features of the Soviet's latest warning, intercept and surface-to-air missile systems, designed to hit fast-moving targets as low as 150 feet. The flight, commanded by Major William O. McCabe of the 77th Squadron, 28th Bomb Wing (H), of Ellsworth AFB, South Dakota, was high scorer on the range that day, successfully evading and jamming the "Soviet's" electronic net.

The "RN", the radar navigator of the 17-year old B–52H set his radio altimeter for 400 feet over the pine-forest floor of a rocky ridge of Arizona's Great Painted Desert, and we began an hour and 50 minute, low-level penetration run to lay nine nuclear weapons on simulated targets. A number of the targets were behind several ridges and mountains—remote terrain at altitudes well above the prescribed flight penetration level of the B–52H.

Mesquite, Yucca and pink, cactus-studded desert, streaked in austere beauty beneath the 185-foot wings of McCabe's camouflaged aircraft as we entered the PEPC, the primary entry control point, for penetration.

Lurking in unidentified installations on the desert peaks on the track ahead was an array of simulated Soviet radar warning and SAM (Surface-to-Air Missile) sites. Many of them are crewed by skilled young women of the USAF.

"Entering target grid. It's the power plant first," crackled in the earphones. That was the "RN", Capt. Vaughn Nun. In major McCabe's tightly disciplined ship, everybody has only initials for a name.

"Rog, and ECM is coming up," said the veteran electronic countermeasures (ECM) operator. That was Maj. Ross Myers, electronic warfare specialist in command of a floor-to-ceiling panel of cathode ray tubes, digital read-outs, and pulsing, flickering lights. Myers' hands moved across the big panel pushing switches and turning dials so swiftly that his nomex-gloved fingers literally blurred in the observer's vision.

Below his ECM avionics compartment in the aircraft's belly "RN" Nun, and "N," meaning navigator 1st Lt. Richard Johnston, were sharing their own aircraft control yoke, a sausage-like toggle on a small platform, peering at green and red cathode tube displays of their own. Their panel displayed both "FLIR" and low level TV, and radar pictures of the swiftly moving terrain ahead and around the B–52H. Nun and Johnston could "see" outside electronically almost as well as aircraft commander McCabe and "CO," co-pilot Capt. Nicholas Hinch on the flight deck upstairs. Using that toggle, the "RN" could control the aircraft for precision adjustments in attitude at moment of bomb release.

Almost instantly, the "Soviet" surveillance and warning radar, called "Face-Plate"—the system the Soviets installed around Hanoi, matching the USSR's internal system, sited around their own landmass—began "painting" our aircraft. The USSR's borders are lined with more than 8,000 of these early warning radars. As "Face-Plate" snagged us in its net, another, high-pitched whine sounded in the crew's headsets—the dreaded "Fansong" of a Soviet surface-to-air missile newly modified for low-level kills. The "Soviets" had "locked-on" to us, electronically, and a missile was homing on our B–52H, a new missile that can kill at 150-foot flight levels; the giant old B–52H lurched and the wings bent like a buzzard's as McCabe rammed the big ship to still lower altitude behind a ridge of the Kaibab Plateau.

Portrayed electronically on the "Rivet Ace" cathode tube in front of "ECM" Myers was the wavy radar signature of the simulated Soviet radar, pinning us down for an electronic "kill." The "SAM" battery had locked on to us, but the skills honed by "ECM" Myers over North VietNam enabled him to successfully pick a combination of our own counter avionic signals ("smart noise") to jam the "Soviets" on the ground. One day soon, the ECM's problem will include spoofing Soviet "look-down" radar or infra-red tracking by satellite.

McCabe's modified B–52H, originally designed for other wars and at other times at 50,000-foot altitudes, was totally engaged now in the most realistic possible simulation of a war mission.

The B–52H's long wings flexed again, rising and falling at 400 MPH with the contours to the eroded desert below. In McCabe's hands, that aircraft was moving to target in a fashion no bomber pilot ever dreamed of when the B–52H's were designed two decades and a half ago. It boggles the civilian mind that a combat machine conceived so long ago, even with fancy new avionics and fan engines, can perform such a mission, absorb so much punishment—and still be the main foreseeable penetrating bomber element in the U.S. defense Triad through the 1980's and beyond.

"I've got 385 miles an hour ground speed," came the sharply edged voice of the "RN" Nun. "You are a little east of target. That's okay. Missile away! Counting. Weapon detonation in five seconds. One, two, three, four, five. . . ."

McCabe's crew delivered nine such "weapons"—SRAM's, the supersonic, short-range attack missiles—and gravity fall bombs, employing the B–52H's "synchronous" (all avionics systems) capabilities under control of "RN" Nun.

The scores were awaiting us back at Ellsworth, including bulls' eye hits that required the popping of a number of champagne corks. There was a special quiet toast to aircraft commander McCabe, "ECM" Myers, "RN" Nun, and "N", navigator Johnston.

The stress of low-level penetration flight is severe, demanding an extremely high level of crew coordination, with emphasis on precision timing. "We practice and practice," said McCabe. The keen edge of efficiency and high morale of his crew proved the results.

At a time when the Soviets are building new weapons (seven new missile systems for a total of 13 in the last 12 years), and producing the TU–26 "Backfire" intercontinental bomber—the Soviets "B–1"—in unlimited quantities, the U.S. only at great peril can live in a gossamer dream that the crewed, air-breather weapons we can deploy—represent an effective hedge in the strategic balance of the future. The Soviets have just informed the U.S. that they want all U.S. cruise missile carrying B–52's and FB–111's distinctively marked for purposes of strategic verification. The U.S. has agreed, under proposed new terms of SALT.

There was an urgent message for the observer on that 1.8 hour penetration flight over the craggy Arizona terrain just east of the Grand Canyon: the U.S. has patched up its fine old war bird B–52's to make tactical bombers out of strategic systems, pretending that they are "B–1 Bomber" equivalents, and they are not.

Instead of arguing the politics and merits of the current B–1 Bomber, ordered stillborn by the President, the U.S.' best engineers urgently should be designing a new, manned bomber for the Triad—something like a "B–2" or even a "B–3"—to match the highly motivated and dedicated young men and women of the U.S. Bomber Forces. The message is etched on armor plating: the U.S. and the Soviets are in strategic balance today, but tomorrow the U.S. may be behind.●

EXPLANATION OF ABSENCE ON VOTE FOR H.R. 7700, POSTAL SERVICE REFORM ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PEPPER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I was in attendance at a meeting of great importance which delayed my arrival on the floor until after the close of the vote on this important legislation. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."●

PROPOSED BED REDUCTION IN VA HOSPITALS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. GIAIMO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Speaker, a number of our colleagues have expressed concern about the reduction in the number of operating beds in VA hospitals in 1978 and 1979 proposed in the President's budget. Some are urging that additional funding be provided for the VA medical program to keep the beds in operation. Because of this widespread concern, I would like to share a different perspective with my colleagues.

It seems to me that the ability to reduce beds in VA hospitals represents a success story for which the Congress and the Veterans' Administration can justly take credit.

From fiscal year 1968 to fiscal year 1978, VA hospital beds have been reduced from 112,000 to 91,000, almost a 20 percent decrease. Over the same period, the number of patients treated increased from 762,426 to 1,273,694, an increase of over 67 percent.

In fiscal year 1979, with 2,000 fewer hospital beds than it operated in fiscal year 1978, the VA anticipates it will care for over 10,000 additional patients.

From fiscal year 1968 to fiscal year 1977, the average length of stay of a patient in a VA hospital declined from 55 days to 24 days. By fiscal year 1979, the VA estimates that the length of stay will further decline to less than 22 days.

The funding for VA medical care will increase $355 million in fiscal year 1979 over the fiscal year 1978 appropriation, including proposed pay supplementals for fiscal year 1978. When the 6 percent pay raise anticipated by the President for Federal employees in fiscal year 1979 is included, the total increase will be about $560 million, or 11 percent over fiscal year 1978, a rate which permits real growth.

The almost amazing pattern of treating many more patients in fewer beds is primarily a consequence of the substantial increase in medical staff in VA hospitals and the expanded use of outpatient treatment facilities. The budget request for fiscal year 1979 continues this trend toward improved staffing by requesting funds for the equivalent of 1,200 additional health workers.

Most of the bed reductions are in hospitals with below average occupancy rates and thus will not have any deleterious effects on the quality of patient care in hospitals. In most hospitals, reducing the bed level will make additional space available for other activities—laboratory, X-ray, research—which have grown at a rapid pace in recent years. The bed reduction will make the operation of hospitals more efficient without reducing the number of veterans receiving treatment.

I would remind my colleagues that the age and geographic distribution of the veterans population and the concepts of medical treatment do not remain static. As veterans increase in age and move about the country, the bed requirements in particular areas change. As the methods of treatment become more sophisticated, many ailments which earlier required lengthy periods of hospitalization can now be treated in much less time or even treated on an out-patient basis, without hospitalization. Again, bed needs change. Because of such demographic factors and treatment concepts, the VA must adjust its bed levels in various areas. While total hospital beds are being reduced, nursing home beds and outpatient facilities are being increased. These changes are necessary and inevitable in an efficient medical care system.

Overall, the VA is today operating a significantly more efficient hospital system than it did a decade ago. The fiscal year 1979 budget, in my view, continues the movement toward excellence.●

THE POSTAL ACT OF 1978

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the House of Representatives has just passed a most worthwhile bill—one that is designed to improve both the operations and service of the U.S. Postal Service.

Seven years ago, Congress embarked on an experiment designed to make the Postal Service a self-sustaining operation. The general feeling at the time was that an independent Postal Service would mean increased efficiency, and improved service to millions of American homes and businesses.

Unfortunately, this innovative program has failed to live up to its expectations.

In the 7 years that this experiment has been carried out, we have experienced a steady decline in the level of quality of mail service. Promises of better service have given way to outrageous proposals to close hundreds of small post offices, and to eliminate Saturday mail deliveries. Promises of stabilized postage rates have been replaced by postage rate increases which threaten to price many Americans right out of the mail system.

America needs mail services that is reliable, not infrequent and expensive. A totally independent Postal Service, in my opinion, is not capable of providing the level of service which the American public wants and deserves.

Equally troublesome to me is the way the Postal Service has drifted away from its basic goals in recent years. Mail continues to be a vital link in our communication system. However, I honestly believe that the Postal Service has lost sight of the fact that it is primarily a service, not a moneymaking operation. The Postal Service has charged forward with one plan after another to cut costs, often in total disregard of the real needs of the public. The balance between fiscal constraints and legitimate service needs has become enormously onesided, with the American people constantly coming out on the short end.

Let me just give you one brief example which occurred in my congressional district.

Three years ago, the Postal Service announced its plans to close the mail processing facility in Toms River and consolidate it with a new facility being built near Trenton.

In making that shortsighted decision, the Postal Service totally ignored a number of basic facts. First, Ocean County, which includes Toms River, is one of the fastest growing counties in the entire Nation. There is no question but that the county will need its own mail processing facility in the future.

Second, a county referendum was conducted in 1976, and the residents voted overwhelmingly in favor of keeping the processing center open.

Third, the Special Commission on Postal Service, which Congress established last year to review the Postal Service, visited the Toms River facility, and three of the four Commission members subsequently recommended that it be kept open.

Do you think that the Postal Service gave any consideration to these facts? Of course not. It is difficult to influence Postal Service policy when there is no public accountability. Since public funds will be necessary to maintain mail service, the public must be assured of a role in setting policy. H.R. 7700, with its many reforms, will do just that. It will insure that the Postal Service is once again accountable to the public.

Accountability guarantees better service to all classes of mail users, whether they are large commercial operations or individuals using the mails for private communications. Accountability also means that workable procedures designed to promote more efficient handling and delivery of the mail will result. Perhaps this will permit us to get back to the real reason why we have a postal system in the first place—to serve the business and personal communication needs of us all in a reasonable and economical fashion.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY CONGRESSMAN BURKE THAT HE WILL NOT SEEK REELECTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. BURKE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to announce that I will not seek reelection to the U.S. Congress. I make this announcement after sincere and deep consideration of whether or not I can be an effective Congressman during the next 2 years.

As my colleagues know, I have maintained one of the highest attendance records in the U.S. Congress during the 20 years that I have served. With the exception of periods of hospitalization or deaths in my family, I have not absented myself from committee or the House floor. I believe that this is the caliber of service the constituency is fully entitled to.

Of recent date some problems have arisen. They place doubt in my mind that I can continue to render that type of service. Therefore I announce at this point in time that I shall not seek reelection. I do so at this date with the understanding that nomination papers will be available on April 12, and this announcement will give all potential candidates a period of 5 months to campaign for the office of U.S. Congressman from the 11th District of Massachusetts.

I am very grateful to the constituents of my congressional district for having elected and reelected me on 10 occasions. On four of those occasions they honored me by giving me the highest percentage of votes of any Member of the U.S. Congress.

I will cntinue to carry out the balance of my term with a full application of my responsibilities. I enjoyed serving here in Congress during the terms of six Presidents. It has been an experience I will always remember.

I have always believed in the philosophy, "Leave while the music is playing." I have made this decision after consultation with Mrs. Burke, my friends, my colleagues in government, and my staff.●

BANK CARD FRAUD COSTS CONSUMERS MILLIONS OF DOLLARS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, if a consumer's electronic bank card was stolen today and used to withdraw $1,000 from his account, tomorrow his bank could very well refuse to accept any liability for the theft. In short, he would be out $1,000 with no way of recouping the loss.

As the Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs moves toward markup of H.R. 8753, the Consumer Credit Protection Act amendments, I am compelled to speak out again on the dangers of electronic fraud and embezzlement that is costing consumers millions of dollars each year. The liability for loss of an EFT card and its unauthorized use is left entirely to the whim of the financial institution issuing the card. Under the provisions of H.R. 8753, a $50 liability, such as with credit cards, will give the consumer much-needed protection in this area.

An article in the March 26 New York Times points to the increase in EFT theft and pegs the loss figure to consumers at $2.5 million. More and more consumers are finding that, as they are enticed into electronic banking by bank advertising and the proliferation of automated teller machines (ATM), they are getting an electronic shock along with their electronic transfer.

Consider these cases highlighted by the article in the New York Times. A maid steals her employer's card from the mail and uses it to withdraw $3,000 over three months before the owner catches on. A man is waved away from an activated ATM by someone he takes to be a bank employee who subsequently withdraws $1,000 from the man's account. And in Philadelphia, a man is assaulted by robbers after completing an EFT transaction, his card is taken and used to steal $400 from his account.

Now I do not know how the banks in question resolved the liabilitv in these instances, but I do know that there are now no regulations governing a uniform liability of loss standard in electronic transactions. H.R. 8753 will provide that. This bill will also prohibit the mailing of unsolicited bank cards, thereby decreasing the chances of it being intercepted and used for three months before suspicions are aroused, as in the above case. It would also require that consumers receive a written receipt with each EFT or each electronic bill payment to protect them from any claim of nonpayment or computer error.

Mr. Speaker, consumers have a responsibility to care for their EFT cards and to use them properly and safely. But this is an emerging technology and unlike a simple check identified by signature, an electronic transfer is just that—electronic—and the machine does not know who is pushing the buttons. If your check is stolen, your signature forged and the check paid, the bank is liable. Indeed, in testimony we heard at a recent hearing in Columbus, Ohio, the senior vice president of BancOhio admitted that check cashing today is safer than an electronic transfer. I do not see how we can progress toward electronic finance systems until the consumer is assured of certain safeguards he is accustomed to. With H.R. 8753 the consumer will have this protection.

Consumers must be educated to the precautions in EFTS, but it should not be their responsibility alone. I am pleased that a number of bankers have supported the liability provisions in H.R. 8753, for it is not my intention to put an end to the development of electronic fund systems, but merely to see that consumers are protected from losing a week's pay or even a life's savings. Incidentally, the March 26 New York Times article was submitted for the record by Mr. Harold W. Greenwood, president of Midwest Savings and Loan Association of Minneapolis, in his testimony before the subcommittee last week in St. Paul, Minn. Mr. Greenwood is one of many financial leaders who recognize their responsibility to consumers and he endorsed the provisions prohibiting the mailing of unsolicited debit cards and establishing a $50 liability of loss limit.

Mr. Speaker, the Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs intends to begin markup sessions on this bill before the month is out. It is my hope that we can pass this legislation during this Congress so that consumers will have the protections they need and electronic transfer systems can operate with a minimum of danger to the consumer's personal finances.●

A STUDY OF THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE CONGRESSIONAL VETO

(Mr. HAMILTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Murray P. Dry, a professor of political science at Middlebury College in Middlebury, Vt., is currently serving in my office as an American Political Science Association congressional fellow. Because Dr. Dry is an expert in American constitutional law, I asked him to prepare a study of the constitutionality of the congressional veto. His discussion is a valuable contribution and is remarkable for its comprehensiveness and depth. I commend Dr. Dry's study to my colleagues with the request that its conclusions be fully and carefully considered:

THE CONGRESSIONAL VETO, THE CONSTITUTION, AND ADMINISTRATIVE OVERSIGHT

INTRODUCTION

Recently Congress has made increasing use of a relatively new device for overseeing the administration of government. The congressional veto, also known as the legislative veto, is a provision enacted into law which permits Congress to disapprove of a proposed action or regulation of the executive branch or of any administrative agency of the federal government. The review mechanism takes many forms. It may require active approval or it may simply permit disapproval. It may also permit the termination of a specially delegated power. In all cases, however, this congressional review and veto mechanism permits the active or passive disapproval or termination of an executive or administrative action or regulation without having to override an executive veto a second time. The President participates in the passing of the original act, but not in the subsequent congressional resolution.

The congressional veto was first attached to the Executive Reorganization Act of 1932, and it has been attached to many of the subsequent executive reorganization acts. It was also attached to the War Powers Act of 1973, the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, and the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974, to name three prominent examples. The Congressional Research Service has compiled a digest of 297 congressional review provisions in 198 statutes for the period from 1932 to 1975. These include statutes requiring the advance submission of proposals as well as veto provisions. Another CRS study found that 63 veto resolutions were passed and became effective during the years 1960 to 1975. Of that number, 44 were passed in 1975 alone. Furthermore, 40 of the 63 involved budget resolutions. The most recent edition of "Jefferson's Manual for the House of Representatives" lists 51 different current statutes which contain a congressional veto provision.

During the last two sessions of Congress the House Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Rules have had under consideration bills that would extend the reach of the congressional veto to cover all agency regulations. In 1976 such a bill failed by only two votes to pass the House under a suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds vote. In 1977, Representative Elliot Levitas and other Members of Congress offered HR 959, the Administrative Rulemaking Reform Act. The bill is currently before the same two committees.

This study examines the constitutional issues surrounding the congressional veto and the merits of H.R. 959. The major constitutional issues involve the general principle of the separation of powers, the specific constitutional requirement that all bills and resolutions that require the concurrence of both Houses of Congress (except for adjournment resolutions) be presented to the President, and the principle of bicameralism (as related to one-house vetoes). I argue that none of these objections justifies the conclusion that the Congressional veto is unconstitutional. On the merits, the strongest arguments against an across-the-board veto assert that Congress does not have the time, the staff, or the expertise to do the job that would be required of it. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that the increased time and staff required by the Administrative Rulemaking Reform Act would be minimal. As for the expertise involved, the critics overemphasize the differences between the skills needed for enacting laws and those needed for overseeing the resulting rules and regulations. The real dangers of overburdening members of Congress and transforming congressional offices into bureaucracies can be avoided by a selective use of the veto. The CBO study predicted that only 100 bills would be reviewed each year. The strongest argument for the veto, which I find persuasive, is that, considering the extent of congressional delegation to the executive branch and to other administrative agencies, without this additional form of oversight Congress may lose much of its capacity for effective control of government.

What is the basis for Congress' exercise of this form of review of the administration of Government?

The doctrine of the separation of powers contains, by design, a certain ambiguity regarding the respective powers of the legislative and executive branches of government. The most famous statements of the doctrine, which influenced the American founders and framers of our Constitution, are found in the writings of Locke and Montesquieu. At the outset, the preponderance of governmental power lies with the lawmaking branch. Only after the legislative powers are vested in a plural body (which is not always in being) and the executive powers are placed in a monarch (who also must approve of all legislation and who possesses the power of the sword) does the separation of powers favor executive government. Our constitutional framers revised the separation of powers enough to reconcile the executive's powers with a republican form of government. The executive veto was qualified, the power to declare war was vested in Congress, and there was no explicit statement regarding the prerogatives of the executive. The executive's independence was established by the mode of election, the qualified veto, and the power of appointment, but certainly this did not establish his constitutional supremacy.

The constitutional and political situation at the time of the founding in fact suggested congressional supremacy. This accounts for the expressions of concern, in the Federalist Papers and in other writings, about legislative tyranny. However, Madison, Hamilton and Jefferson anticipated that at some later time the growth of the national government would necessarily shift the balance of power from Congress to the President. While this increase in presidential power is not inconsistent with the Constitution, neither does it change the fact of Congress' "de jure" supremacy. Most of the increases in presidential power have resulted from congressional authorization or inaction. For example, Hamilton's defense of President Washington's Neutrality Declaration in 1793 argued that the executive's duty to see that the laws be faithfully executed included treaty interpretations. However, Hamilton acknowledged that Congress could, if it wanted to, contravene the Neutrality Declaration with a declaration of belligerancy or war.[1]

The constitutional separation of powers between Congress and the President may understandably lead to presidential government, but it rarely supports the contention that an act of Congress has infringed on executive power. Only two examples come to mind. The President, as commander in chief, must have control of the armed forces when a war is declared, and the executive's appointment power has been interpreted to include the power of removal, with certain exceptions to be discussed later. The only Supreme Court decisions that have invalidated legislation as infringing on executive power have involved the appointment power. In this respect our constitutional practice has supported our constitutional theory that in a republican form of government, the legislative branch has a "de jure" primacy, if not supremacy, in its relations with the executive branch.

The Supreme Court affirmed this view in McCulloch v. Maryland, when it interpreted the powers of Congress broadly. After distinguishing between a prolix legal code and a constitution, Justice Marshall proceeded to develop the doctrine of inherent, or implied, powers, which simply means that only the most general powers are actually enumerated, and many other derivative powers are implied. Then comes the concluding "necessary and proper" clause: "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into executive the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof." This obviously authorizes the establishment of executive departments, the lower federal courts, and territorial governments, but it likewise authorizes actions necessary to oversee executive branch operations.

While the oversight power of Congress is seldom challenged directly, the congressional veto power is another matter. H. Lee Watson's argument against the congressional veto starts by narrowly defining the powers of Congress:

"The basic function of Congress is to legislate. Normally, Congress has no further role after it considers and passes on a bill or votes whether to override in the event of a presidential veto. Insofar as Congress engages in activities pursuant to this rule, it is acting within what will be referred to in this Comment as the legislative process.

"Congress steps outside of the legislative process when it passes and acts according to a statute authorizing later action by resolution or committee vote, thereby retaining jurisdiction over the subject matter of legislation. Such a statute creates a new role for Congress, ambiguously situated between the legislative and executive functions."[2]

Watson cites Congress' participation in impeachment, appointments, and treaties as examples of extra-legislative functions. He even regarded the first congressional request for information and a report, from the Secretary of the Treasury in 1789, as extra-legislative. The separation of powers doctrine, by purporting to divide all government activities into three distinct and exclusive functions, permits Watson to argue that anything that is not clearly legislative is therefore executive. Since we have a republican form of government, one could more persuasively use the same kind of argument to reduce the powers of the President.

A better view of the powers of Congress was presented by Woodrow Wilson, in his "Congressional Government" written in 1885:

"It is the proper duty of a representative body to look diligently into every affair of government and to talk much about what it sees. It is meant to be the eye and the voice, and to embody the wisdom and will of its constituents. Unless Congress have and use every means of acquainting itself with the acts and the disposition of the administrative agents of the government, the country must be helpless to learn how it is being served; and unless Congress both scrutinize these things and sift them by every form of discussion, the country must remain in embarrassing, crippling ignorance of the very affairs which it is most important that it should understand and direct. The informing function of Congress should be preferred even to its legislative function. The argument is not only that discussed and interrogated administration is the only pure and efficient administration, but, more than that, that the only really self-governing people is that people which discusses and interrogates its administration.[3]

Writing again in 1908, with the example of Teddy Roosevelt before him, Wilson saw that "the president is at liberty, both in law and conscience, to be as big a man as he can." But he did not reassess the constitutional powers of Congress. He went on to write: "His (the President's) capacity will set the limit; and if Congress be overborne by him, it will be no fault of the makers of the Constitution—it will be from no lack of constitutional powers on its part, but only because the President has the nation behind him, and Congress has not. He has no means of compelling Congress except through public opinion."[4] The veto is different from the congressional power of investigation, but each power provides Congress with a capacity for effective administrative oversight.

We conclude this general discussion of Congress' powers by noting that the Congressional veto is a device which permits the legislative branch of our national government to inform itself concerning programs and policies that it establishes, but whose execution is entrusted to others. We turn now to the major constitutional objections that have been raised against it.

Does the congressional veto contravene the presentation clause of the Constitution?

The strongest constitutional argument against the congressional veto rests on the last paragraph of article I, section 7, clause 3:

"Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same bill shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill."

In the Federal Convention, James Madison argued for the inclusion of this language, "observing that if the negative of the President was confined to bills; it would be evaded by acts under the form and name of Resolutions, votes, etc.".[5] Robert W. Ginnane, in his article "The Control of Federal Administration by Congressional Resolutions and Committees," cited this statement in support of the conclusion that, except for adjournment, "policymaking decisions of Congress (must) be submitted to the President."[6] In light of the reason Madison gave, Ginnane's conclusion does not follow. It all depends on whether the subsequent disapproval power is regarded as wholly independent legislation.

The Senate Judiciary Committee concluded otherwise when, on February 12, 1896, the Senate directed it to report "whether concurrent resolutions generally are required to be submitted to the President of the United States." The Committee's conclusion, which is cited in "Hind's Precedents of the House of Representatives" as the authoritative statement, was:

"We conclude this branch of the subject by deciding the general question submitted to us, to wit, 'whether concurrent resolutions are required to be submitted to the President of the United States,' must depend not upon their mere form, but upon the fact whether they contain matter which is properly to be regarded as legislative in its character and effect. If they do, they must be presented for his approval; otherwise they need not be. In other words, we hold that the clause in the Constitution which declares that every order, resolution, or vote must be presented to the President to 'which the concurrence of the Senate and House of

Footnotes at end of article.

Representatives may be necessary,' refers to the necessity occasioned by the requirement of the other provisions of the Constitution, whereby every exercise of the 'legislative powers' involves the concurrence of the two Houses; and every resolution not so requiring such concurrent action, to wit, not involving the exercise of legislative powers, need not be presented to the President. In brief, the nature of the substance of the resolution, and not its form, controls the question of its disposition." [7]

Whether or not the resolution is an act of legislative power seems consistent with Madison's concern that all genuine legislation be presented to the President. Ginnane's interpretation of the Senate decision of 1897 is different: "This the committee assumed, as of 1897, that concurrent resolutions were appropriate only in matters which were the exclusive concern of the two Houses—such as printing, joint rules, and expressing the sense of Congress upon a given subject." But Ginnane's narrow formulation does not explain why use of the congressional veto, as an oversight device enacted into law, must be regarded as the equivalent of legislation itself.

The publication of Ginnane's article in 1953 caused the then Justice and former Attorney General Robert H. Jackson to make public for the first time an important presidential legal opinion on the congressional veto provision in the Lend Lease Act of 1941. The law conferred special authority on the President to sell, transfer, exchange, lease, or otherwise dispose of certain defense articles for countries deemed vital to the defense of the United States. Then it set the following limits:

". . . after June 30, 1943, or after the passage of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses before June 30, 1943, which declares that the powers conferred by or pursuant to subsection (a) are no longer necessary to promote the defense of the United States, neither the President nor the head of any department or agency shall exercise any of the powers conferred by or pursuant to subsection (a)." [8]

Jackson reported that the Secretary of State regarded the termination provision as "not damaging to the essential principles of the bill and designed to meet criticism from the opposition that the Bill gave too much power to the Executive." [9] Roosevelt regarded the provision as unconstitutional, but he could not say so openly because it would have undermined his congressional support. The bill's opponents agreed with Roosevelt on the constitutional question, and for that reason argued against the entire measure. Roosevelt's supporters argued that the measure was both constitutional and that it provided a sufficient check on the executive.

Roosevelt instructed Jackson to have a memorandum drafted for him to submit to the Attorney General expressing his opinion that the measure was unconstitutional. Jackson recounts how he had this done, and, also at the President's instruction, how he kept it among his personal papers, making it known only in 1953 after Ginnane's article was published. The memorandum argued that the concurrent resolution terminating the delegated power was a repeal of legislation by unconstitutional means, since it avoided the presidential veto. Jackson regarded this as a "debatable point," formulating the issue as follows:

"The question on which my doubts were not fully satisfied never bothered the President in the least. It seemed to me to depend on whether the provision was to be considered as a reservation or limitation by which granted power would expire or terminate on the contingency of a concurrent resolution or was to be regarded as authorizing a repeal by concurrent resolution." [10]

The issue cannot be stated more clearly and fairly than that. With such alternatives to choose from, we may reasonably conclude that the Supreme Court should, at the very least, avoid ruling against Congress. When we consider the purpose of the enumerated powers, including the necessary and proper clause, and the character and purpose of the power involved, we should come to the same conclusion that the distinguished constitutional scholar Edward S. Corwin came to in his book, "The President: Office and Powers":

"As we have seen, moreover, it is generally agreed that the maximum that the legislature may not delegate its power signified at the very least that the legislature may not abdicate its powers. Yet how, in view of the scope that legislative delegations take nowadays, is the line between delegation and abdication to be maintained? Only, I urge, by rendering the delegated powers recoverable without the consent of the delegate; and for this purpose the concurrent resolution seems to be an available mechanism, and the only one." [11]

Does the congressional veto infringe upon executive power?

If the Congressional veto does not contravene the presentation clause, it might nonetheless infringe upon the executive power reserved to the President. This is a difficult argument to make, since the Constitution's enumeration of executive powers is sparse. It includes the power of appointment and the power of commander in chief. We shall consider two arguments, one that urges severe limits on legislative delegation, and another that uses a Supreme Court decision to interpret legislative power narrowly and executive power broadly.

The delegation question has its origins in John Locke's principle that the "legislature may not delegate its power," since that power is itself delegated by the people. The Supreme Court's interpretation, which Corwin drew on, is that Congress must delegate power with clear standards and that it must be able to recover the power. The last time the Court struck down laws for delegating power without sufficient standards was in 1935.

A House report on a congressional veto resolution for the Executive Reorganization Act of 1939 found it "difficult to believe that the effectiveness of action legislative in character . . . may not be conditioned on a vote of the two legislative bodies of the Congress." [12] But Ginnane's answer was: "It is one thing for a statute to provide that, after Congress and the President have both performed their legislative roles, the application of a statute may be further conditioned upon an executive officer's finding of fact or upon a favorable vote of interested persons, and it is another thing for Congress to reserve to itself, excluding the President, the power of further determining the application of a statute. It is a non sequitur to say that, since a statute can delegate a power to someone, not bound by the procedure prescribed in the Constitution for Congress' exercise of the power, it can therefore 'delegate' the power to Congress free of constitutional restrictions on the manner of its exercise." [13] Without any consideration of the necessary and proper clause, and more generally, what it means to have a republican form of government, Ginnane denies that Congress has the power to qualify delegations of power so that it might take a critical look at what is proposed in its name. The congressional power is, after all, only a power to deny, actively or passively, what the executive branch proposes to do.

Another critic of the congressional veto, Professor Antonin Scalia, formerly with the Justice Department, made the following argument against the review provision of the Executive Reorganization Act of 1977:

"Congress must either delegate to the president the authority to reorganize the Executive Branch, subject to their updoing his work through the normal process of legislation, or else they must themselves adopt such reorganization through the constitutionally prescribed legislative process. . . . In creating a form of governmental action which lies somewhere between these two acknowledged constitutional forms, the present bill evades the deterrent and the restraint which they contain, and this substantially reduces the people's control over their government." [14]

This is a peculiar formulation. If anything, the people's control over their government is enhanced by the adoption of qualified delegation devices. As Corwin said, "Congress being free not to delegate power, is free to do so on certain stipulated conditions. . . . Why then, should not one condition be that the delegation shall continue only as long as the two houses are of opinion that it is working beneficially?" [15] Put another way, Scalia imposes rigid rules for a functional separation of powers which should be rejected for two reasons: first, there is no constitutional necessity for them; and second, they lead not just to presidential government, but to congressional incapacity.

The Supreme Court decision which has been cited to support the limited view of Congressional powers is Springer v. Philippine Islands. The court held that the separation of powers provisions of the Philippine Constitution, patterned after the American, were violated by a law which gave the legislative officers the power to vote the stock which elected the directors and managing agents of corporations created by the legislature. While the holding was based on the appointment power, here taking the form of voting shares of stock to appoint the officers, this dictum has been cited by opponents of the Congressional veto:

"It may be stated, then, as a general rule inherent in the American constitutional system, that, unless otherwise expressly provided or incidental to the powers conferred, the legislature cannot exercise either executive or judicial power; the executive cannot exercise either legislative or judicial power; the judiciary cannot exercise either executive or legislative power. The existence in the various constitutions of occasional provisions expressly giving to one of the departments powers which their nature otherwise would fall within the general scope of the authority of another department emphasizes, rather than casts doubt upon, the generally inviolate character of this basic rule." [16]

This rigid statement of the separation of powers, which is not in the Constitution, drew a dissent from Justices Holmes and Brandeis:

"It does not seem to need argument to show that however we may disguise it by veiling words we do not and cannot carry out the distinction between legislative and executive action with mathematical precision and divide the branches into watertight compartments, were it ever so desirable to do so, which I am far from believing that it is, or that the Constitution requires." [17]

While it is true, as Ginnane pointed out, that Springer "has never been qualified by the Supreme Court or by the lower federal courts," [18] it applies only to the narrow holding regarding appointments, not to the obiter dicta regarding the separation of powers. For example, in Humphrey's Executor v. United States, decided in 1935, the Supreme Court upheld the law establishing the Federal Trade Commission, including the part which insulated the commissioners from the President by giving them fixed terms and limiting their prior removal for cause only. In qualifying the earlier Myers v. United States decision, which upheld the President's right to remove a postmaster at his discretion, the court distinguished executive officers from "quasi-legislative, quasi-judicial" officers:

Footnotes at end of article.

"The commission is to be non-partisan; and it must, from the very nature of its duties, act with entire impartiality. It is charged with the enforcement of no policy except the policy of the law. Its duties are neither political nor executive, but predominantly quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative." [19]

Any separation of powers argument that would deny to Congress the power to supervise the administration of government after this decision is of doubtful validity. Certainly the incursion into the executive's claimed field of administration effected by the Humphrey's decision is far more significant than the Congressional veto. The President at least has a chance to veto the legislation that contains veto provisions. He has no control over regulations promulgated by independent regulatory agencies.

The Supreme Court's lengthy per curiam opinion in Buckley v. Valeo, which upheld parts of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974 and overturned other parts, including the original mode of appointing the commissioners, did not explicitly reach the congressional veto provision which is still in the law, but it did lend support to its validity. The original commission was to be appointed partly by the President, with the concurrence of both houses, partly by the President pro tem of the Senate, and partly by the Speaker of the House. The constitutional difficulty arose from article II, section 2, clause 2:

"(The President) shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public ministers and Consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such interior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments."

After citing Springer on the narrow point that "the legislature of the Philippine Islands could not provide for legislative appointments to executive agencies," the Court cited United States v. Germaine on the appointments clause: "That all persons who can be said to hold an office established under the Constitution were intended to be included within one of the other of these modes of appointment, there can be little doubt." [20]

The only offices that are excluded are those which provide information to Congress, such that Congress might just as well have delegated the powers to one of its committees. The Court's holding on this point was that "These provisions of the act, vesting in the Commission primary responsibility for conducting civil litigation in the Courts of the United States for vindicating public rights, violate Article II, clause 2, section 2 of the Constitution. Such functions may be discharged only by persons who are "Officers of the United States" within the language of that section."

The Court noted the law's provisions for review and disapproval of the FEC's proposed rules and regulations, but it refused to discuss the question in light of its holding. However, when it dismissed the contention that the field of elections made this law a special case, the court said: "But Congress has plenary authority in all areas in which it has substantive legislative jurisdiction . . . so long as the exercise of that authority does not offend some other constitutional restriction." This suggests that Congress' power to exercise oversight of administration is as strong in one substantive field as in another. We shall return to this point.

Justice White, who concurred in the per curiam opinion on the matter of the appointment of the commissioners, did discuss the congressional veto:

"Under section 438(c) the FEC's regulations are subject to disapproval; but for a regulation to become effective, neither House need approve it, pass it, or take any action at all with respect to it. The regulation becomes effective by non-action. This no more invades the President's powers than does a regulation not required to be laid before Congress. Congressional influence over the substantive content of agency regulations may be enhanced, but I would not view the power of either House to disapprove as equivalent to legislation or to an order, resolution or vote requiring the concurrence of both Houses." [21]

In a footnote following this passage, White wrote: "Surely the challengers to the provision for congressional disapproval do not mean to suggest that the FEC's regulations must become effective despite the disapproval of one House or the other. Disapproval nullifies the suggested regulation and prevents the occurrence of any change in the law. The regulation is void. Nothing remains on which the veto power could operate. It is as though a bill passed in one House and failed in another." White goes on to indicate under what circumstances he would find the congressional veto unconstitutional:

"I would be much more concerned if Congress purported to usurp the functions of law enforcement, to control the outcome of particular adjudications, or to pre-empt the President's appointment power; but in light of history and modern reality, the provision for congressional disapproval of agency regulations does not appear to transgress the constitutional design, at least where the President has agreed to legislation establishing the disapproval procedure or the legislation has passed over his veto. It would be considerably different if Congress itself purported to adopt and propound regulations by the action of both Houses. But here no action of either House is required for the agency rule to go into effect and the veto power of the President does not appear to be implicated." [22]

In addition to the Buckley case, the Supreme Court let stand, on January 9, 1978, a decision of the Court of Claims, on May 18, 1977, which upheld the one-house veto provisions of the Federal Salary Act of 1967. The Court of Claims was careful to limit itself to the context in which the one-House veto was attacked. This case and the companion cases involved the power of Congress to regulate the pay of Members of Congress, judges, and members of the executive branch:

"Article I, section 1 endows Congress with the broadest reach of power in this instance, so long as executive functions are not infringed and presidential veto rights not compromised, because the subject of the one House veto, the salaries of judges and congressmen and other government officers, is at the center of the congressional sphere. On this foundation, the necessary and proper clause authorizes Congress to choose, first, to delegate the initial power to make proposals to the President, and, then, to select for itself the appropriate method for checking and monitoring the President's action." [23]

After citing McCulloch v. Maryland on the necessary and proper clause, and the district court's decision upholding the one-house veto against the objections of an individual Congressman in Pressler v. Simon, the court stated this general principle: "Where there has been no violation of separation of powers principles or of any specific provision of the Constitution, the necessary and proper clause can authorize a given method of obtaining a desired result, as well as ground a substantive provision (as in McCulloch)." [24]

Certainly no specific provision is violated by the congressional veto, whether it affects salaries or any other subject within Congress' jurisdiction. Furthermore, since the Buckley Court said that Congress' power is plenary in all areas in which it has substantive legislative jurisdiction, this undermines any suggestion that the veto, having been upheld in one area, might still be invalidated in another.

Does the one-House veto violate the Constitution's bicameralism?

The Congressional veto provisions, with very few exceptions, involve one or both houses. The bicameralism principle, if it is used as a guide, would seem to require the approval of both houses for a proposed regulation or action to take effect. Bicameralism would not necessarily favor concurrent over simple resolutions, however. It would depend on whether the veto resolution required approval, or simply permitted disapproval. For example, if a regulation is proposed by the President, or one of his political appointees, bicameralism would suggest either a required concurrent resolution or a possible simple resolution of disapproval. In those two cases, both houses would have to be in agreement, either actively or passively, for the proposal to take effect. To require a concurrent resolution of disapproval, or to permit a simple resolution of approval, would mean that such an action could go ahead without the agreement of both houses. Congressional practice confirms this reasoning only partly. For example, CRS figures on procedures involving the Senate and House as entities show 127 approval or disapproval resolutions, classified a follows: [25]

Concurrent resolutions of disapproval	34
Concurrent resolutions of approval	16
Simple resolutions of disapproval	53
Simple resolutions of approval	0
Concurrent resolutions terminating activity prior to scheduled time	8
Concurrent resolutions approving, contravening or rescinding executive proposals	6
Miscellaneous resolutions	10

From these figures we may conclude that the principle of bicameralism is followed in most cases, and in the most significant category where it is not followed—in the 34 cases in which a concurrent resolution of disapproval is provided for—the presumption is with the President and the burden of responsibility is with Congress to disallow the specific exercise of a previously delegated power.

A few examples of legislation fitting the different veto devices illustrate the reason for the diversity. Consider the War Powers Act of 1973 and the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974. The War Powers Act directed the President, once he committed American forces to combat in the absence of a declaration of war or any other specific statute, to report to Congress within forty-eight hours, and to terminate the hostilities within sixty days, at most ninety, in the absence of explicit congressional support. In addition, Congress could, by a concurrent resolution, terminate hostilities immediately. The Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act includes two forms of congressional veto for the two different forms of presidential impoundment. For the more drastic rescission, the President reports to Congress and a concurrent resolution of approval must be passed within forty-five days, or the budget authority must be made available for obligation. For deferral, the President makes the same report, and the budget authority must be made available for obligation if either house passes an "impoundment resolution" disapproving the proposed deferral at any time after receipt of the special message. In these cases, the subject matter dictated that the burden of proof lay with the President. The Arms Export Control Act of 1976 puts the burden on Congress to disallow a proposed sale. For example, under section 211 of this act, the President transmits to Congress notice of his intention to sell arms to foreign countries and Congress has the power to disapprove the sale by a concurrent resolution, which must be passed within thirty days of formal notification. This provision might be said to violate the bicameralism principle, since one house might disapprove of the sale and be unable to persuade the other house to disapprove. But both houses had to agree to the law initially, and the subject matter suggests that Congress rightly intended to place the major responsibility with the President.

Footnotes at end of article.

In conclusion, Congress' assignment of veto desires to legislation has reflected a sober consideration of the kind of power involved as well as the principle of bicameralism. Where bicameralism is departed from, the departure is due either to the importance of the subject matter for presidential or—in a small number of cases—congressional consideration.

Congressional disapproval of regulations of commissions and agencies not appointed by the President

While many congressional veto provisions can be likened to "reverse legislation" where the President is asked to propose and Congress may dispose, we did not regard bicameralism as dictating any specific veto form, although there was no instance of a one-house approval provision. One critic, Watson, has questioned whether a congressional veto would be appropriate in those circumstances where the President does not control submission of the proposed regulations. Following a strict view of reverse legislation would lead to the days, or the budget authority must be made available for obligation. For deferral, the President makes the same report, and the budget authority must be made available for obligation if either house passes an "impoundment resolution" disapproving the proposed deferral at any time after receipt of the special message.

In these cases, the subject matter dictated that the burden of proof lay with the President. The Arms Export Control Act of 1976 puts the burden on Congress to disallow a proposed sale. For example, under section 211 of this act, the President transmits to Congress notice of his intention to sell arms to foreign countries and Congress has the power to disapprove the sale by a concurrent resolution, which must be passed within thirty days of formal notification. This provision might be said to violate the bicameralism principle, since one house might disapprove the sale and be unable to persuade the other house to disapprove. But both houses had to agree to the law initially, and the subject matter suggests that Congress rightly intended to place the major responsibility with the President.

In conclusion, Congress' assignment of veto desires to legislation has reflected a sober consideration of the kind of power involved as well as the principle of bicameralism. Where bicameralism is departed from the departure is due either to the importance of the subject matter for presidential or—in a small number of cases—congressional consideration.

Footnotes at end of article.

Congressional disapproval of regulations of commissions and agencies not appointed by the President

While many congressional veto provisions can be likened to "reverse legislation," where the President is asked to propose and Congress may dispose, we did not regard bicameralism as dictating any specific veto form, although there was no instance of a one-house approval provision. One critic, Watson, has questioned whether a congressional veto would be appropriate in those circumstances where the President does not control submission of the proposed regulations. Following a strict view of reverse legislation would lead to the peculiar conclusion that Congress could exercise a veto over presidential and other executive branch proposals, but not over proposals from independent regulatory commissions. That argument overlooks the significance of Humphrey's which restricted the President's power over those administrators to the appointment power alone. That the President can no longer remove officials from independent agencies at his discretion is no reason for denying to Congress the power to review and veto rules and regulations of those agencies. Congress' attempt to establish a veto provision for these agencies proposed regulations does not present a legislative-executive confrontation so much as it places the political branches of government against the bureaucracy.

Congressional disapproval of suspension of deportation orders by the Attorney General in immigration cases

Congress has never limited itself to legislation in the strict sense. Private bills, which outnumber public laws, are defined by as "bills for the relief of private parties, bills granting pensions, bills removing political disabilities and bills for the survey of rivers and harbors." [26] A Harvard Law Review Note in 1966 stated that in fact only two kinds of private bills—bills dealing with relationships between individuals and the government—are passed those dealings with claims against the United States and claims by the government against individuals, and those excepting individuals from certain immigration and naturalization requirements.[27] Congress has the power, under article I, section 8, clause 4, to pass naturalization laws. With that power and under the necessary and proper clause, it has taken a special interest in the administration of immigration statutes.

The only congressional veto provision that is currently before the courts involves immigration law. It requires separate consideration because the veto provision permits Congress to act in particular cases involving individuals. In this way it is similar to a private bill. The resolutions come up on the legislative calendar in the same manner. Recalling Justice White's statement of concern about Congress' use of the veto to control the outcome of particular adjudications we must give this veto our special attention.

The Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952 authorizes the Attorney General to suspend deportation of an alien and adjust his status to "lawfully admitted for permanent residence" where the person has been in the country for seven years and proves he is of good moral character and that his deportation would result in extreme hardship to himself or his immediate family, if a member of that family is a citizen or a lawfully admitted alien. Section 244 (c)(1) requires the Attorney General to submit a statement of every proposed case for suspension of deportation to Congress. Section 244 (c)(2) permits either the House or the Senate to pass a resolution of disapproval of the proposed suspension, in which case the deportation takes place.

In the case before the Ninth Circuit, petitioner Chadha was a student in this country under non-immigrant status. After finishing his studies and after being here for seven years, he petitioned for a suspension of deportation and for permanent residency, alleging that as an Asian he was not welcome in Kenya, where he was born, and that the United Kingdom could not give him an employment voucher for at least a year. On these facts, an Immigration Judge found that Chadha met the requirements for a suspension, and, on his recommendation, the Attorney General recommended it. The House Subcommittee on Immigration and Naturalization reviewed 340 such cases and reported to the House, recommending disapproval of the proposed suspension in Chadha's case and five others. The subcommittee reported to the House that these six cases did not meet the requirements of "extreme hardship" established in the law, and Congress voted the disapproval resolution. Chadha is suing on the grounds that the one-house veto is unconstitutional. The opposing party, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, agrees wiht Chadha on the constitutional issue, raising some doubt as to the existence of a true case or controversy. Due to the importance of the issue, Congress has been permitted to file amici curiae briefs.

Since the congressional veto only nullifies the proposed suspension, it is not punishment in the constitutional sense. Congress is simply withdrawing a proposed benefit, or exemption from the law, on the grounds that it was improperly applied by the Attorney General. We have already noted Congress' authority in naturalization and immigration cases. As further confirmation of the extensiveness of that authority, we should take note of a remark of Madison's in the Federal Convention. Objecting to a motion to attach a fourteen year citizenship requirement for election to the Senate, Madison said it was improper not only for its illiberality, but also "because it will put it out of the power of the National legislature even by special acts of naturalization to confer the full rank of citizens on meritorious strangers and because it will discourage the most desirable class of people from emigrating to the United States." [28]

We conclude that the congressional veto in the immigration law, notwithstanding its affecting individual cases, does violate the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine or bill of attainder clause.

The case for the congressional veto: The Administrative Rulemaking Reform Act

It is not sufficient to dispose of the constitutional objections to the congressional veto. Equally important is our obligation to explain what we propose to do and why we regard it as desirable. Specifically, while approximately fifty current statutes contain congressional veto provisions, Congress does not have adequate means of overseeing the numerous administrative regulations that are promulgated each year. Congressman Levitas indicated that he intends to offer congressional veto amendments to many of the regulatory statutes coming up for reauthorization this year if his bill or some similar measure is not passed. Since I agree with him that the piecemeal approach is inferior to the single, comprehensive bill, I wish to describe the leading features of HR 959 and the reasons given for passing such a bill, as stated in the report on the bill's predecessor in 1976. In addition, I wish to comment on the Senate's view of the congressional veto and the recent study sponsored by the Administrative Conference which opposes an across-the-board veto.

H.R. 959: What does it do?

The term "rule" in the title of the bill refers to "an agency statement of general applicability designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy or to describe the organization, procedure, or practice requirements of an agency." The provisions for disapproval or reconsideration of rules do not affect any internal rules, regarding organization, practice, procedure, etc.

After a rule is promulgated and the agency transmits a copy of it to both houses, Congress has 90 days to vote a concurrent resolution of disapproval; otherwise, the rule goes into effect. However, if within 60 days one house has voted a concurrent resolution of disapproval, and if that resolution is not disapproved by the other house within 30 days, then the rule is disapproved. Thus if one house acts promptly, the other house's inaction implies tacit consent to the disapproval resolution. If after 60 days no committee has reported a resolution to the parent house, the rule goes into effect immediately.

Either house may pass a simple resolution directing reconsideration of a rule. If a reconsideration resolution is passed within 90 days after the rule was promulgated, the rule does not go into effect. The agency must reconsider the rule within 60 days and either repromulgate it or withdraw it. If repromulgated, the rule is subject to congressional review, but if the agency takes no action, the rule lapses. The 90-day period is reduced to 60 days if, after that time, no committee has reported a reconsideration resolution. Rules that have been in effect more than 90 days are subject to reconsideration resolutions but the agency has 180 days to repromulgate them.

Both disapproval and reconsideration resolutions are referred to the appropriate standing committees having oversight and legislative responsibility. If the committee has not reported out a resolution within 45 days, or 90 days in the case of reconsideration of rules in existence more than 90 days, then a resolution discharging the committee from further consideration is in order. If one house reports out a disapproval resolution which is referred to the other house, and the appropriate committee of that House does not report out the resolution within 15 days, a motion to discharge is in order. The motion to discharge must be supported by ⅓ the house involved, and it is highly privileged in the House and privileged in the Senate. Time for debate is limited to one hour and no amendments are in order. When the committee has reported or been discharged from further consideration of the resolution, it is in order to move to consider the resolution. The debate is limited to two hours, divided equally among those favoring and those opposing the resolution.

The report on the predecessor to H.R. 959: House committee assessment of H.R. 12048 in the 94th Congress

The Judiciary Committee supported the predecessor to H.R. 959 in 1976, with but one dissent. The report cited Professors Nathaniel E. Gonzansky and Frank P. Samford, of Emory University Law School, to the following effect:

"This seems to be a simple proposal for preventing abuses of the administrative process. It does not seek to strip the agencies of power but, rather, implicitly recognizes that a modern government would find it very difficult to operate without administrative agencies exercising discretionary authority. Instead, it provides for a modest congressional input into the process. A House of Congress could not on its own amend, modify, or mandate administrative rules; it could only veto a rule and, that, only by means of a resolution passed by the full House or Senate. One would not anticipate that this power would be exercised frequently, although the possibility of its exercise would operate to constrain the agencies in certain instances. If one believes that administrators should be subject to some control by elected officials, this influence can only be regarded as salutary." [29]

The report also quotes from Professor Kenneth Culp Davis' Administrative Law treatise:

"Perhaps the most significant twentieth century change in the fundamentals of the legal system has been the tremendous growth of discretionary power. And the prospect is, for better or for worse, that discretionary power will continue to grow. The three main reasons for the continued increase of discretion are that (1) our governments—federal, state and local—are likely to go on undertaking tasks for the execution of which no one is able to prepare advance rules, (2) even when we have capacity to formulate rules discretion is often desirable for individual justice, and (3) in this country we have developed a habit of allowing discretionary power to grow which far exceeds what is necessary and which is much less controlled than it should be.

"What we need to do is to work on the third reason. We should reject the extravagant version of the rule of law in favor of a milder version that can be much more effective in protecting the interests of justice.

"We should try to eliminate unnecessary discretion. We should adopt a sound meaning of the rules of law—that discretionary power should be eliminated or controlled without undue sacrifice of other values that we may deem important." [30]

Congressman John Seiberling dissented, expressing the view that the existing powers of congressional oversight were sufficient. He suggested that the enactment of this reform would give committee chairmen too much power, would lead to advance submission of proposed rules, thus permitting intimidation of the agencies and departments, and finally, that too much of Congress' time would be taken up on oversight of administrative rules:

"If this bill is enacted into law, Congress is going to have to spend an inordinate amount of time just reviewing regulations, especially in light of the bill's provision enabling 20 percent of either body (87 members of the House and 20 members of the Senate) to require a floor vote. The majority reported that between January and September 1975 there were 10,245 proposed rules. This bill could end up forcing several hundred votes every year, even if only 5 percent of the proposed regulations were opposed by 20 percent of the members. Our time can in most cases be better spent in other endeavors." [31]

Representative Seiberling's objections merit careful consideration because he points to a serious potential problem: overloading Congress with more work than it can handle properly. I believe, however, that the benefits of the added oversight mechanism far outweigh the cost of additional work. First, the very number of proposed regulations every year is precisely why the Judiciary Committee, and nearly two-thirds of the full House, concluded that the traditional modes of congressional oversight of administration are no longer sufficient. As for the added influence of committee chairmen, that seems to be a necessary consequence of strengthening Congress' review powers. Furthermore, this proposal would broaden oversight power within both houses since it would give the authorizing committees jurisdiction over the proposed regulations within their fields of legislation, thereby supplementing the power of Congress to cut agency budgets. As for the time required for the congressional review, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that only 100 agency regulations would be reviewed each year. The CBO study also estimated that only three additional committee staff members would be necessary in each house.

Senate report on congressional oversight of regulatory agencies

In 1977 the Senate Government Operations Committee conducted a study of congressional oversight of regulatory agencies as part of its comprehensive study of federal regulation. The seven pages devoted to the congressional veto concluded with the following recommendation:

"Although the legislative veto may be appropriate in limited situations, the Congress should reject an across-the-board use of the legislative veto for regulatory agency rules. Congress should also refrain from routinely adding a legislative veto provision to regulatory agency statutes." [32]

The following reasons for that conclusion were given: the veto may increase delay in the regulatory process, increase uncertainty in the regulated industries and increase pressure on Congress, diminish the usefulness of agency records, encourage the agencies to decrease rulemaking and increase adjudication, and have an adverse impact on entire regulatory programs.

The delay in promulgation of regulations of 60 days under the expedited procedure, which is likely to occur in the large majority of cases, is a necessary price for congressional oversight. In any case, since some agencies already take many months to promulgate regulations the added time may be less important. The prospect of delay may also force the agencies to speed up their internal processing of regulations. It is also unlikely that the agencies will turn to adjudication where regulations are concerned. Rulemaking is more efficient, and Congress can legislatively require rulemaking in the appropriate cases if necessary. Senator Sam Nunn, who dissented from the Committee Report, expressed his position as follows:

"The basic issue, I think we all agree, is accountability. Federal agencies and independent regulatory commissions participate in the making of public policy decisions through their rulemaking powers. They, in turn, must be held responsible for those decisions. It is entirely proper for Congress to insure that rules and regulations correspond with its intentions. A way of providing for that kind of accountability is through a legislative veto that would enable the Congress—or either House of the Congress—to reject rules and regulations which go beyond what Congress intended.

A legislative veto may not be the perfect answer to the problems which have been spawned by the proliferation of agencies and regulatory commissions, but while Congress searches for the perfect solution the legislative veto can be a useful and helpful corrective." [33]

The report of the Administrative Conference of the United States

Professors Harold Bruff and Ernest Gellhorn examined five agency programs that were subject to the congressional veto from 1972 to 1977 for the Administrative Conference of the United States. Their report was published in the "Harvard Law Review" last May. Comparing congressional oversight with the veto to oversight without it, the authors said: "The principal difference is the negotiating process between congressional committee staffs and agencies, which seldom occurs in the absence of a veto provision." [34] Later, they contrasted the sporadic review that takes place under authorization renewal and appropriation hearings with review under a congressional veto scheme, which is "specifically and narrowly focused on the substance of proposed rules." "Thus the veto, unlike any of the traditional oversight techniques, permits regular and systematic examination of the substantive details of an agency's program." Finally, the negotiations between congressional oversight committees and agencies are described as "a highly efficient review technique in the sense that they resolve policy differences between the agency and the committees relatively quickly and without destroying the coherence of the resulting rule as an item veto might." The authors contend that, notwithstanding this efficiency, the one "critical feature" is the involvement of the congressional committees and staff "deeply in the rulemaking process." [35]

Footnotes at end of article.

These passages could be cited by supporters of the congressional veto without comment. As Professor Davis and Senator Nunn have pointed out, the increase in delegation of governmental responsibility to the departments and agencies requires a device to permit the elected legislative branch to exercise systematic oversight of administration.

The authors seem to regard the administration of government as a science with a method and procedure altogether different from that part of government, often called politics, that is responsible for establishing objectives, providing for means of accomplishing those objectives, and whose agents are accountable to the people through elections. They regard rulemaking as distinctly a matter of "administration," as opposed to "politics". They begin by asking: "To what extent is rulemaking a normative or political process which is brought closer to the people's representatives by the legislative veto, and to what extent is it an expert or rational process that should not be subject to political influences?" [36] Later in the article, they answer their own question: "Members of Congress are unaccustomed, and the institution is ill-equipped, to make a restrained and judicious examination of a rule's subservience to statutory purposes." [37]

The most significant objection raised by these authors questions the capacity of Congress, especially as contrasted to the administrative agencies own notice and comment provisions for examining proposed new rules. The response to this objection is that the assumption of such a clear qualitative distinction between "politics" and "administration is false and that the increase in delegation necessitates added devices of congressional review. Congress is both a national legislature and a representative assembly. As a lawmaking body it must be able to review the many important rules and regulations that are promulgated in the name of legislation it enacts. The sheer complexity of government requires that it "farm out" many important questions to the departments and agencies. Certainly a well trained, highly qualified, and permanent civil service can administer programs in a way that an elective legislature cannot begin to, but it is not the intent of the congressional veto to replace the current administrators with congressional committees and staffs. As long as important judgments are made on matters affecting national policy—and administrative rules certainly do this—administrators cannot claim immunity from effective oversight in the name of the expertise of science.

The second objection raised by the authors is that the notice and comment proceedings of administrative hearings are more democratic and open than the congressional review provisions would be. After acknowledging that public participation in agency hearings did not abate after congressional review was enacted, they nevertheless suggest that "public participation before the agencies in programs subject to the veto might eventually shift its emphasis from reasoned debate over policy to a showing of political strength meant to impress both the agency and Congress." Not only will the participation be less rational but it will not be open and fewer will have access. "Not all interested parties have the resources both to participate in the public comment proceedings and to lobby the committees effectively in the review process. Those groups having greater resources or prior influence with congressional committees have an additional chance to affect agency action not available to those without such resources or influence." [38]

Certainly most individuals do not have the time, money, or inclination to lobby intensely over a long period of time for or against proposed government regulations. The interested parties find it worthwhile to organize themselves in a manner that permits them to make their case to officials having governmental responsibility. Why should this be any different whether or not we have the congressional veto provisions of H.R. 959? If anything, individual citizens will probably correspond more with their Congressman than with an agency. And granting that most sustained representation of informed opinion takes place by organized interest groups, the authors' objection to the veto comes down to this: they prefer the quasi-judicial character of the administrative hearing and fear anything that might compete with it or give Congress an additional source of oversight. They seem to prefer the adjudication of disputes regarding the best regulations by administrative judges to any form of political participation and influence by popularly elected, and hence politically responsible, legislators. But the consequence of their view would be congressional abdication in favor of the quasi-judicial procedures and determinations of administrative proceedings. The congressional veto is not intended to eliminate what we have, but to supplement it with a device that permits Congress to oversee what is promulgated in its name. It forces Congress to keep itself informed about administration in a systematic fashion.

The last objection is that congressional review, as it considers the relation between the intention of the law and the regulation, infringes on judicial review. Bruff and Gellhorn note: "It is fundamental that the courts, not Congress, have the ultimate responsibility to interpret the law. To the extent that congressional review of rules duplicates the function of the courts, it does not seem a wise use of congressional time. Moreover, Congress is ill-equipped, both by inclination and competence, to determine its own former intent with the care and restraint customary in judicial review." [39]

This is the second time the authors referred to Congress as ill-equipped. Judicial review is in no way threatened by the congressional review of rulemaking powers that has been delegated to administrative agencies. Courts deal in particular cases and controversies with particular interested parties. They do not go about expounding on statutes, regulations, and the Constitution merely because there is an interesting question. A recent illustration of the limited character of judicial review comes from the debate on whether the Panama Canal treaties need the concurrent resolution of both Houses before they can become effective. This question concerns the relationship between the treaty making power and the power to dispose of the territory or other property belonging to the United States. The court wisely decided to leave that question to Congress. James Madison, the father of our Constitution, let it be known in the very first Congress that he thought each branch had an obligation to attempt to interpret its powers in accordance with the Constitution. He was not arguing against the ultimate authority of the Supreme Court, in a proper case or controversy, to interpret the Constitution, as such a question arose. Congress would do well to give more thought to both the constitutionality and the wisdom of contemplated actions. That could only assist both the courts and the administrative agencies.

Conclusion

In conclusion, I think it is fair to say that passing a congressional review provision such as HR 959 will give Congress more responsibility. That necessarily means giving congressional committees and their staffs more responsibility. Critics have suggested that our committees are not large enough to represent a national constituency, that the chairmen, who often control the staffs, are thereby given too much power, that the chairmen are all of one party, and that the congressional staffs already are too large and powerful. In response, I say that the primary question is whether or not we want Congress to be able to inform itself about the operations of American government so that it may be in a position to take informed action to secure governmental adherence to congressional intent. Furthermore, the added oversight device will necessarily broaden oversight power within each House by giving the authorizing committees additional responsibility. And the additions to committee staff, as estimated by the CBO, are but three members per house. The critics of this proposal appear to be critics of Congress, or at least skeptics of Congress' ability. The supporters of this proposal think that Congress is capable of assuming the governmental responsibilities that our founders gave to the national lawmakers.

FOOTNOTES

[1] The letters of "Pacificus" are in J. C. Hamilton, ed., The Works of Alexander Hamilton, 7 vols. (New York: Joint Library Committee of Congress, 1850–51) vol. 7.

[2] "Congress Steps Out: A Look at Congressional Control of the Executive," in 63 "California Law Review" 983, July 1975, pp. 991–2.

[3] (Riverside Press: Cambridge, Mass., 1885) p. 303.

[4] "Constitutional Government in the United States" (Columbia University Press: New York; 1921), pp. 70–1.

[5] Max Farrand, ed., "Records of the Federal Convention" (Yale University Press; New Haven: 1966) vol. II, p. 103 (August 15).

[6] 66 "Harvard Law Review" 569 (February 1953), p. 573.

[7] From Report No. 1335, 54th Congress, 2nd session, (1897), p. 8; quoted in Hinds' "Precedents," section 3483.

[8] 55 Stat. 32, (1941); quoted in Robert H. Jackson, "A Presidential Legal Opinion," in 66 "Harvard Law Review" 1353 (1953).

[9] Ibid., p. 1354.

[10] Ibid., p. 1355.

[11] 4th revised edition, (New York University Press: New York; 1957), p. 130.

[12] Quoted in Ginnane, op. cit. (see note 6), p. 595.

[13] Ibid.

[14] Testimony before House Committee on Government Operations, subcommittee on Legislation and National Security, March 1, 1977.

[15] Corwin, op. cit. (note 11) p. 130.

[16] 277 US 189, 201–2. (1928)

[17] Ibid., p. 211.

[18] Ginnane, op. cit. (see note 6) p. 605.

[19] 295 US 602, 624 (1935)

[20] Buckley v Valeo, 46 L Ed 2d 659, 748 (1976), citing United States v. Germaine, 99 US 508, 509–10 (1879).

[21] Ibid., p. 839.

[22] Ibid.

[23] Atkins et al. v. The United States, No. 41–76, decided May 18, 1977, p. 54.

[24] Ibid., p. 54.

[25] Clark F. Norton, Congressional Review, Deferral and Disapproval of Executive Actions: A Summary and Inventory of Statutory Authority, CRS study 76–88 G, April 30, 1976, see table II, p. 11.

[26] 33 Stat. 611 (1905) 44 USC section 189 (1934).
[27] "Private Bills in Congress," in 79 "Harvard Law Review," 1684 (1966).
[28] Farrand, op. cit., vol. II, p. 236 (August 9).
[29] Rept. No. 94–1014 Part 1, 94th Congress, 2d session, p. 9.
[30] Ibid., p. 11.
[31] Ibid., p. 30.
[32] "Study on Federal Regulation," vol. II, "Congressional Oversight of Regulatory Agencies," Doc. No. 95–26, 95th Congress, 1st session, February 1977, p. 122.
[33] Ibid., p. 141.
[34] "Congressional Control of Administrative Regulations: A Study of Legislative Vetoes," in 90 Harvard Law Review 1369 (1977), p. 1420.
[35] Ibid., pp. 1423, 1433.
[36] Ibid., p. 1377.
[37] Ibid., p. 1419.
[38] Ibid., p. 1414.
[39] Ibid., p. 1429.●

OMB AGREES TO COLLECT AND PROVIDE INFORMATION ON HOW FEDERAL FUNDS ARE DISTRIBUTED

(Mr. FASCELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to advise my colleagues that the Office of Management and Budget has agreed to collect and disclose additional information on how the Federal Government spends its money.

Under the new Federal policy, Congress and the public will be advised of all details on the computer formulas and statistical assumptions used in distributing funds under major formula grant programs.

Involved are 90 programs totaling more than $52 billion this fiscal year. The new procedures will be applied initially to 13 of the largest such programs, which account for almost 90 percent of the total. Depending on the success of the initial effort, the procedures may be expanded later to other programs.

In addition, the initial effort will include four programs that are not among the 90—general revenue sharing; local public works; antirecession financial assistance; and EPA construction grants for wastewater treatment works.

The information to be released will include a summary of the formula for persons interested in a general description of the allocation process, and a complex description, using the mathematical formulas and symbols, for committee staffs, researchers, and others interested in full details.

By using this information, congressional committees, scholars, and other interested parties will be able to duplicate the formula for any of the programs and thereby assess the results. It will be possible to determine whether the results of the formula implementation correspond with congressional intent, and to experiment with alternative data elements to try to improve such results.

The overall goal is to assure that the billions of dollars distributed every year under Federal formula grant programs are spent as wisely as possible.

Typically, these programs include a formula under which administrators are directed to obligate available funds. The trouble is that in implementing such a program, the administrator must decide exactly which statistics will be used. In some cases, subjective decisions are made. Too often, funds may be distributed in ways not intended or foreseen by Congress.

Needy applicants—States, cities, or other recipients—may be penalized and relatively undeserving ones rewarded, because of the way the statistics that are selected and the computerized formulas work out. Last year, an arbitrary decision by the Commerce Department resulted in the exclusion of thousands of smaller communities from the $4 billion public works jobs program. We did not know that these towns had been left out until it was too late.

Under the new procedure, OMB will collect from each agency the information on formulas and make it available to Congress. In addition, we will be advised of the name of a person in the agency who may be contacted for access to the computer program for any formula.

We will also be kept informed of any changes or revisions which are made in the formula data. I am hopeful that this information will enable Congress to keep closer watch over what happens to these billions of dollars in Federal expenditures.

In seeking this new procedure, I have worked closely with the Honorable JACK BROOKS, chairman of the House Committee on Government Operations. We will be monitoring its success to determine areas where improvement is needed, and where it should be expanded.

The 13-formula grant programs selected for initial inclusion under the new system are: Agricultural food distribution; national school lunch program; title I (ESEA) aid for educationally deprived children; Federal impact educational aid; vocational education-basic grants to the States; basic support for rehabilitation services and facilities; social services for low income and public assistance; medicaid; State public assistance maintenance; community development block grants/entitlement grants; law enforcement assistance for improving and strengthening law enforcement; comprehensive employment and training programs; and highway research, planning, and construction.

I would like to include at this point correspondence with OMB and a sample statement (title I aid) giving further details of this agreement:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
December 14, 1977.

Hon. DANTE B. FASCELL,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. FASCELL: This letter and the enclosed material are in response to our earlier discussion regarding H.R. 8458, a bill to require the Office of Management and Budget to provide information on the formulas and assumptions used in the distribution of domestic assistance.

In our discussion we agreed that OMB would make selected formula information available without the need for legislation. I have enclosed as a sample a discussion of the formula for the distribution of Title I funds under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 as amended. The discussion includes both a summary of the formula for readers interested in a general description of the allocation process, and a relatively complex description, using the mathematical formulas and symbols, for readers who are interested in the detail.

The reason for preparing the sample is to suggest it as the way to show this kind of information for other programs. If you think it is a useful approach, we will attempt to gather this kind of information for other major formula grant programs after our staff has completed preparation of the 1979 Budget. If you have suggested improvements to our proposed format, I suggest that our staffs meet to discuss them.

The enclosed sample statement would be distributed to the agencies, and they would be asked to prepare similar statements for other major formula grant programs. According to the 1977 Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance, 13 of 90 formula programs accounted for almost 90% of formula grant obligations in 1976. Our initial efforts to develop detailed information would cover only these major programs. After reviewing the usefulness of the information derived from this initial exercise, a decision could be made on whether or not to generate the information for the smaller formula grant programs.

Regarding congressional access to agency formula data, we would identify in each paper the name of a person to contact for additional information. This would assist the Congress in getting access to additional information.

We share your concerns regarding the formula and data elements for Federal programs. As the enclosed illustration indicates, the formulas can be very complex and frequently must apply to thousands of communities throughout the nation. They are complex largely because legislation makes them so. We would hope that providing better information on the formulas and the data needed to administer them would make it possible to minimize any inequities associated with the administration of these programs.

Sincerely,

W. BOWMAN CUTTER,
Executive Associate Director for Budget.

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
February 28, 1978.

Mr. OSCAR JOHNSON,
Office of Congressman Dante Fascell,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR OSCAR: In our meeting last Thursday you requested a listing of the 90 formula grant programs we had identified, and the 13 large ones that we planned to describe.

Enclosed is a copy of the computer listing of formula grant programs from the 1977 Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance, as updated November 1977. We included all formula grants with obligations of $500 million or more for 1976, the most recent completed year for which catalog information is available. I have circled the 13 programs we would describe. In addition to these 13, we would include four other programs not included in the Catalog that are quite large: general revenue sharing, local public works, anti-recession financial assistance, and Environmental Protection Agency construction grants for wastewater treatment works. This would make a total of 17 grant formulas.

Before proceeding to collect the information from the agencies, please call and let me know if we are in agreement on these seventeen programs.

Sincerely,

LAWRENCE W. HUSH,
Fiscal Economist.

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
March 9, 1978.

MR. W. BOWMAN CUTTER,
Executive Associate Director for Budget, Office of Management and Budget, Executive Office of the President, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CUTTER: Thank you for the listing of Federal formula grant programs, and the programs selected for inclusion in an initial attempt to compile information on data and assumptions used in implementing such programs.

I believe the programs selected offer a good starting point, and urge that you proceed to gather the information which will be made available to members of Congress.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.

Sincerely,

DANTE E. FASCELL,
Member of Congress.

MEMORANDUM

MARCH 29, 1978.

To Deputy Associate Directors.
From Bowman W. Cutter.
Subject: Description of Grant Formulas for Congressman Fascell.

In recent years the grant funds distributed by formula to State and local governments has increased substantially and at the same time the formulas and their data elements have become increasingly difficult to understand. General descriptions of the formulas are usually available, but they are not helpful for the individual interested in the details of determining the allocation to a particular community, or in determining the quality of the data elements.

In response to this problem, Congressman Fascell last summer proposed a bill, H.R. 8458, requiring OMB to maintain and provide centrally the details of the formulas, data elements and computer programs, and keep this material current and available for the Congress.

I discussed this with Mr. Fascell, and we agreed that it would be easier for OMB to collect some of this information for the Congress informally, without the need for legislation. After this was done, we could determine whether any additional information was needed, and if so, whether OMB should collect it centrally or assist the Congress in getting the information directly from the agencies.

We have identified 17 major formula grant programs to be included in our initial review, and one or more of them is in your division. The programs are shown in Attachment A.

I am requesting that you ask the agency to prepare a statement describing the formula, the variables, computer information, and an example of the distribution of funds to an individual State or community. In addition, the agency should include the name of a person we or the Congress can contact in order to get more information.

We have included a prototype of the kind of statement we need, using the formula for Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act as amended. Please have the agency follow the prototype as closely as possible, including the six major headings. A crucial part of the paper is the inclusion of an example, using the formulas and data to show how a particular State's or community's allocation was determined, as was done for Polk County (Des Moines SMSA), Iowa in the prototype. Try to pick a State or community that does not have special criteria, such as maxima or minima.

Please have them prepare the statement so that it can be immediately submitted to the Congress, without any changes by OMB.

The document should be submitted to your budget examiner, by April 30, 1978. If you have any questions, please call Larry Hush (395-5153), the person coordinating the effort at OMB.

ATTACHMENT A

MAJOR FORMULA GRANTS [1]

[Dollars in thousands]

Program title	Program No.	1976	1977 estimate	1978 estimate
Food distribution	10.550	$666,233	$648,977	$627,227
National school lunch program	10.555	1,687,590	1,660,000	1,815,000
Educationally deprived children—local educational agencies	13.428	1,625,357	1,721,120	1,926,727
School assistance in federally affected areas maintenence and operations	13,478	754,000	768,000	37,0000
Vocational education—basic grants to States	13.493	565,048	784,763	437,427
Rehabilitation services and facilities—basic support	13.624	900,309	740,309	760,472
Social services for low-income and public assistance	13.642	2,484,800	2,469,984	2,401,300
Medical assistance program	13.714	10,677,638	10,229,318	11,816,000
Public assistance—maintenance assistance—State aid	13.808	7,328,225	6,213,300	6,657,000
Community development block grants/entitlement grants	14.218	2,470,511	2,831,433	2,812,300
Law enforcement assistance—improving and strengthening law enforcement	16.502	548,311	349,961	283,566
Comprehensive employment and training programs	17.232	5,902,852	6,256,581	8,346,000
Highway research, planning, and construction	20,205	6,156,659	7,634,495	7,545,000
Construction grants for wastewater treatment works	66.418	4,947,446	6,600,000	5,590,000
General revenue sharing	(2)	6,354,780	6,654,780	6,854,924
Antirecession financial assistance	(2)		1,699,187	1,572,330
Local public works	(2)		5,985,333	12,127

[1] From the Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance, 1977 Update.
[2] Not applicable.

Note: The financial data for programs with catalog numbers are obligations from the 1977 Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance, 1977 Update. Financial data for other programs are obligations from the Budget appendix, 1978 and 1979.

DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS UNDER TITLE I OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT OF 1965 [1] NOVEMBER 1977

I. INTRODUCTION

Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) of 1965 provides funds to local school authorities for the establishment of special programs to help educationally deprived children. The law requires that local school authorities assess the special needs of their educationally deprived children and that they design programs to meet those needs with Title I funds.

The local authorities submit applications that are reviewed by State educational agencies. Programs that are approved are then monitored and evaluated by the State agencies. Because of the emphasis on local response to individual needs, a great variety of programs are funded with Title I aid. Most of the assistance is concentrated on improving basic skills such as reading, writing, and arithmetic. School districts, however, also fund science and social science programs, cultural activities and other programs designed to meet the health, psychological, and nutritional needs of educationally deprived children.

Annual appropriations under Title I increased from about $1.0 billion in 1966 to about $2.3 billion in 1978. About 6 million children were served by Title I programs in 1974 when annual appropriations were about $1.8 billion or about $300 per child.

The four sections that follow are: Summary of the Formulas, Data Elements, The Variables and Formulas, and Person to Contact for Additional Information.

II. SUMMARY OF THE FORMULAS

There are two basic variables in the formulas: one is the number of eligible children in each county, and the other is the payment per child. These variables are derived from several other variables, as described in Section IV, and are multiplied together to get the maximum authorization for each county.

The number of eligible children is determined primarily by the number of children aged 5–17 under the poverty line, data that are available only every ten years from the census. In addition, the formula includes the number of children aged 5–17 in families that receive AFDC payments in excess of the poverty level for a nonfarm family of four. This is included as another indicator of educationally disadvantaged children. Also included are data for some other categories of children, such as those in foster homes.

The payment per child under Title I is determined primarily by using 40% of current expenditures per pupil (CEPP) in the State. This item is 40% of the total Federal, State, and local government expenditures for elementary and secondary education, excluding funds under Titles I, II and III of the ESEA, divided by pupil attendance. Upper and lower limits are set on the payment per child to prevent some States from receiving excessively high or low payments. The upper limit cannot be larger than 48% of the national current expenditures per pupil, and the lower limit cannot be less than 32% of the national current expenditures per pupil.

As a final step in the allocation of funds, each county is guaranteed that it will not receive less than 85% of its prior year allocation.

The formulas yield authorizations for counties. Since enactment of ESEA, the sum of all these authorizations has exceeded the total appropriations. In 1978 for example, the total authorization for counties and State administration was about $4.4 billion, while only about $1.9 billion was available. There is therefore a ratable reduction process, described in Section IV, to reduce the total authorizations to the level of appropriations. The authorization for each county is reduced by the same ratio, except that the allocation cannot be less than 85% of the prior year allocation.

All items in the formula are prescribed specifically by law, with the exception of the variable for number of children aged 5–17 in families that receive AFDC payments in excess of the poverty level for a nonfarm family of four Under the legislation, these AFDC payments would have to be adjusted for size of family, farm or nonfarm, sex of head of family, and other criteria. The burden of adjusting AFDC payments for all these criteria would be overwhelming, and it has been simplified to use only the weighted average of the nonfarm family of four. This simplification was done after agreement with the Congress.

[1] This paper, which was prepared by staff of the Office of Management and Budget, is based primarily on a draft paper prepared by the Federal Committee on Statistical Methodology, entitled "Report of the Subcomittee on Statistics for Allocation of Funds."

III. THE DATA ELEMENTS

This section discusses the major data elements in the allocation formula. All elements are listed below in Section IV with the formulas. Some, such as "previous year's allocation", are self-explanatory and therefore need no discussion.

1. Number of children in families receiving AFDC payments in excess of the poverty line for a family of four persons (A_{ij}).

The poverty measure used in the allocation formula was originally developed by Mollie Orshansky of the Social Security Administration in 1964 and was, with revisions, officially adopted in 1969 by the Office of Management and Budget as the Federal Government's official statistical measure of poverty. The measure is built around the Department of Agriculture's economy food plan of 1961 and the national average ratio of family food expenditures to total family after-tax income as measured in the 1955 Household Food Consumption Survey. It consists of 124 separate poverty cutoffs, differentiating families by size, number of children, age and sex of head, and farm or nonfarm residence. The cutoffs are updated annually by changes in the Consumer Price Index. The weighted average poverty cutoff for a nonfarm family of four in 1975 was $5,500. According to the Census Bureau's report based on the June 1977 Current Population Survey, in 1975 there were approximately 25.9 million persons, or 12 percent of the population, poor by this definition.[2] This variable in the formula is the number of children aged 5–17 in families receiving monthly AFDC payments of $458.33 ($5,500 per year) or more in October 1976. There is no attempt to adjust this monthly amount by size of family, nonfarm families, or other category. If this were done, the burden of collecting the information by these separate characteristics, for more than 3,000 counties, would be overwhelming.

The data are collected by the Social Security Administration for State agencies administering child welfare and public assistance programs, and the instructions to the State agencies specify, "no sampling or estimating is to be used. . . ."

2. Poverty population (P_{ij}).

This item is the number of children aged 5–17 in poor families as defined in the 1970 Census of Population. It remains unchanged until there is another census. A brief discussion of the poverty meaure is found in item 1, above.

3. Other eligible population (O_{ij}).

This item includes youth in the county who are delinquent, in correctional institutions, neglected, or in foster homes supported by public funds. It includes both in-State and out-of-state children by the county in which the child attends schools. The data for youth who are delinquent, in correctional institutions or neglected are collected by the Division of Education of the Disadvantaged, Office of Education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The data for youth in foster homes supported by public funds are collected by the Social Security Administration with the AFDC data in item 1, above.

4. Eligible population in State operated institutions (S_i).

This variable was added to the original formula for the Elementary and Secondary Education Act in order to provide educational funds to the State for children aged 5–17 in the state operated institutions for the handicapped. In 1967, delinquent and neglected children in institutions were added as well as special programs for children of migratory agricultural workers. In 1971 children in adult correctional institutions were added to those eligible to be counted in State agency programs.

5. Per pupil expenditure for nation (N).

This variable is total Federal, State, and local government current expenditures for elementary and secondary education, excluding funds from Titles I, II, and III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, divided by the number of pupils attending classes. In the calculations for the 1978 allocations, 1974–1975 school year expenditures were used and equaled $1,299 per pupil. This variable is used to set the minimum and maximum payment per child. For the 1978 allocations, fifteen (15) States used the minimum (32 percent of the national figure), and five (5) States used the maximum (48 percent of the national figure).

6. Per pupil expenditure for each State (Q_i).

This variable is the Federal, State and local government current funds spent in the State for elementary and secondary education, excluding Titles I, II, and III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, divided by the number of pupils attending school. For 1978 allocations, data for school years 1974–75 are used. Forty percent (40 percent) of this expenditure is the payment per pupil in the formula, except where this payment is less than the national minimum or exceeds the national maximum.

7. Authorization for children in State operated institutions (Cf).

This variable is the product of the State current expenditures per pupil (CEPP) times the number of eligible children in each agency in state operated institutions, with the legislated constraint that no agency's allocation can ever decrease. The allocation to each State, therefore, is not simply the product of the number of eligible children in each State times the CEPP. For example, if the number of children in Agency A decreases by the same amount that the number of children in Agency B increases, the allocation for the State does not remain the same. The allocation for Agency A remains the same—the legislation specifies that it cannot be reduced—and the allocation for Agency B increases, because it has more children. The allocation for the State therefore increases, even though the number of eligible children is unchanged.

In the actual example that follows, for Polk County, Iowa, we do not have readily available the data for each State agency. The final allocation ($_mEC_{lm}$) therefore is shown but not derived.

8. Total funding available (T).

This is the enacted appropriation for that part of Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act for local education agencies, children in State operated institutions, and State Administration. It has never been as high as the sum of the formula generated authorizations for all counties and States, requiring that the allotment for each county be reduced according to the ratable reduction formulas described in Section IV below.

9. County "floor" percent (F_c).

This is set at 85 percent, and means the county will not receive less than 85 percent of their previous year's allocation. A drop in funding below this level might seriously disrupt local financial planning, even though the decrease in the number of eligible children or the State expenditures per pupil may warrant a lower allocation. For the 1978 allocations, all States were above the floor, although nine counties in five States received only 85 percent of their 1977 allocation.

10. Ratio for eligible AFDC population, currently set at 0.67 for all counties.

This ratio is less than one in order to decrease the weight of the AFDC variable. The variable depends largely on the payment level set by States, and tends to favor those States with high AFDC levels and penalize States with low AFDC levels. From 1965 to 1972 this variable was not weighted and 1974 education grants came to depend largely on the AFDC population, penalizing southern States with low AFDC payments and rewarding States with high payments such as California, New Jersey, and New York. Congress decided that this was an effect they did not intend and, therefore, decreased the weight of this variable in the 1974 Amendments to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

11. Ratio for administrative costs, currently set at .01 for all counties (R_B).

Legislation allows State administrative costs for this program to be 1% of the sums of the allocation to counties and to the State for children in State operated institutions. The only exceptions to this are for States that would receive less than the minimum of $150,000 under the formula. (See below)

12. Minimum Administration allowance for State (B).

This minimum is set at $150,000 by law, and is the minimum allowance for administering the program even for States with relatively few eligible children. This covers the cost of such items as distributing the funds below the county level, maintaining adequate financial accounting systems, and ensuring compliance with other Federal or State regulations related to Title I programs. For the 1978 allocations, sixteen (16) States received the minimum of $150,000.

IV. THE VARIABLES AND FORMULAS

The following formulas and variables describe the current authorizations and allocation procedures, with an example for clarification. The example is Polk County (Des Moines SMSA), Iowa which had a population of 314,000 in 1970, including the entire city of Des Moines with a population of 201,000. Polk County was chosen because it was neither very large nor very small, did not use maxima or minima, and did not have any variables whose values were zero (many counties have zero for the AFDC variable). These criteria, however, probably apply to hundreds of other communities that could also have been picked as examples.

Defined as follows:

Subscripts:

i—Denotes State within U.S.

j—Denotes county within State.

l—Denotes number of iterations in the ratable reduction (see equation (7) below).

m—Denotes State agencies with institutions caring for eligible children.

Independent variables: See table on next page.

Data for parameters for Polk County (Des Moines SMSA), Iowa for 1978 Allocations.

Parameters:

F_c: County "floor" percent, 85 percent.

R_A: Ratio for eligible AFDC, population, currently set at 0.67 for all counties, .67 percent.

R_B: Ratio for administrative costs, currently set at 0.01 for all counties, .01 percent.

R_O: Ratio for eligible other population, currently set at 1.0 for all counties, 1.0 percent.

R_P: Ratio for poverty population, currently set at 1.0 for all counties, 1.0 percent.

[2] For additional information on the poverty measure, see U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, The Measure of Poverty. A Report to Congress as Mandated by the Education Amendments of 1974 (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1976).

ALLOCATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1978 UNDER TITLE I OF THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT

Independent variable		Data for example: Polk County (Des Moines, SMSB) Iowa	Time period for data	How frequently are data revised?	Source of data
Symbol	Description
A_{ij}	Children in families receiving AFDC payments in excess of the poverty line for a nonfarm family of 4.	459 children	Oct. 1, 1976	Annually	Social Security Administration, Division of Research and Statistics, Family Assistance Studies Staff.
B	Minimum administration allowance per State	$150,000	Not available	Not available	Legislation.
H_{im}	Previous year's authorization for children in State-operated institutions by agency.	$1,181,020 for entire State.	Fiscal year 1977	Annually	HEW: National Center for Education Statistics.
L_{ij}	Previous year's allotment for grants to local education agencies.	$1, 241, 370	do	do	Do.
N	Per pupil expenditure for Nation	$1, 299	1974–75 school year	do	Do.
O_{ij}	Other eligible population, such as children residing in institutions for neglected and delinquent children and children in foster homes.	347 children	October 1976	do	HEW, OE, Division of Education of the Disadvantaged and HEW: Social Security Administration, Division of Research and Statistics, Family, Assistance Studies Staff.
P_{ij}	Poverty children	5, 455 children	1970	Decennially	Decennial Census of Population.
Q_{ij}	Per pupil expenditure for State	$1, 204	1974–75 school year	Annually	HEW: National Center for Education Statistics.
S_{im}	Eligible population in State-operated institutions	2, 019 children	October 1976	do	HEW, OE: Division of Education for the Disadvantaged.
T	Total funding available for counties and State administrative costs for the Nation.	$1, 927, 774, 751 (obligations).	Fiscal year 1978	do	Annual appropriations.

Dependent variables:

E_{ij}: Total number of eligible children.

D_i: Per pupil expenditure for State authorization formula.

G_{ij}: Authorization for grants to local education agencies.

C_i: Authorization for children in State operated institutions, such as mentally retarded, delinquent, etc. This item is fully funded and is not part of the ratable reduction in formulas (6) and (7) below.

U_{i1}: Allocation for administration.

V_i: Authorization for State administration.

W_i: Reduction ratio for the nation.

X_{ij1}: Intermediate allocation amount used to compute Y_{ij1}.

Y_{ij1}: Allocation for grants to local education agency.

The formulas describing the allocation procedure follow, along with the data used in the examples for Polk County, Iowa. In these formulas, MEDIAN merely means that the median value in brackets is used, and MAXIMUM means the largest value in brackets is used.

(1) Eligible children:

$E_{ij} = R_P P_{ij} + R_A A_{ij} + R_O O_{ij}$
$= (1.0)(5,455) + (.67)(459) + (1.0)(347)$
$= 5,455 + 306 + 347$
$= 6,108$ children

(2) Expenditures per pupil:

D_i = Median [.32N, .4Q_i, .48N]
= Median [(.32) ($1.299), (.4) ($1.204), (.48) ($1.299)]
= Median [$415.68, $481.47, $623.52]
= $481.47

(3) Maximum authorization per county:

G_{ij} = Maximum [($F_C L_{ij}$), ($E_{ij} D_{ij}$)]
= Maximum [(.85) ($1,241,370), (6,108) ($481.47)]
= Maximum [($1,055,164), ($2,940,818.76)]
= $2,940,818.76

(4) Maximum authorization for children in State operated institutions:

$$C_{im} = \text{Maximum } [(S_{im} D_i), (H_{im})]$$
$$\sum_m C_i = $1,190,167$$

(For explanation, see item 8, page 9, above).

(5) Maximum authorization for State administration:

$$V_i = \text{Maximum } [B_i, R_B (C_i + \sum_j G_{ij})]$$
$$= \text{Maximum } [($150,000), (0.01)($1,190,167 + $37,677,824)]$$
$$= \text{Maximum } [($150,000), (0.01)($38,867,991)]$$
$$= $338,679.91$$

Title I has never been fully funded, and the sum of these authorizations for all counties and State administration has exceeded the funds allocated for them. The following ratable reduction procedure is then followed:

(6) First ratable reduction:

$$W_i = T / \left(\sum_i \sum_j G_{ij} + \sum_i V_i \right)$$

$$X_{ij1} = W_i G_{ij}$$

$$Y_{ij1} = \text{Maximum } [F_C L_{ij}, X_{ij1}]$$

$$U_{i1} = \text{Maximum } [B_i, R_B (C_i + {}_j Y_{ij1})]$$

If:

$$\sum_i \sum_j Y_{ij1} + \sum_i V_{i1} > T$$

The ratable reduction continues as follows:

(7) Second and subsequent ratable reductions:

For 1=2,3, ..., k

$$W_1 = T / \left(\sum_i \sum_j Y_{ij1-1} + U_{i1-1} \right)$$

$$X_{ij1} = W_1 Y_{ij1-1}$$

$$Y_{ij1} = \text{Maximum } [F_C L_{ij}, X_{ij1}]$$

$$U_{i1} = \text{Maximum } \left[B_i, R_B \left(C_i + \sum_j Y_{ij1} \right) \right]$$

This is repeated until on the kth iteration:

$$\sum_i \sum_j Y_{ijk} + \sum_i V_{ik} = T$$

For 1978, the actual allocations are 44.59% of the maximum authorizations, except for those counties that would receive less than the minimum allocation by applying this percentage. Those counties receive 85% of the prior year allocation, which is the minimum allocation shown in equation (3).

After the ratable reductions, final 1978 allocations are: $1,311,240.46 to Polk County for grants to local education agencies; $1,190,167 to Iowa for children in State operated institutions; and $178,270 to Iowa for State administration.

For school districts that are not coterminous with counties, funds must be distributed among the school districts. Children living in school attendance areas that have an incidence of poverty as high or higher than the district wide average are eligible for Title I services. The exact distribution is delegated to the State Education Departments, very loosely monitored by the Office of Education (OE). When Title I was first enacted, the OE attempted to oversee the distributions within the counties more carefully, but found that States had many different systems for this subcounty distribution and that detailed monitoring was very burdensome and unnecessary. For this reason it is now left primarily to the States.

V. COMPUTER RELATED INFORMATION

1. In what language are the programs written? COBOL.

2. What type of computer is used? IBM 370.

3. Characteristics of data tape or tapes:

(a) Are they 7 or 9 track tapes? 9.

(b) Is the parity even or odd? Odd.

(c) What is the logical record length? 133.

(d) What is the blocking factor? 3990.

(e) What is the density of the tape? 1600 BPI.

(f) Is the code BCD or EBCDIC? BCD.

(g) Does the tape contain standard labels or no labels? Standard labels.

4. Can the programs and data tapes be made available to the Congress? Yes.

These are already provided to the Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress.

5. Are record layouts available? Yes.

Are descriptions of the codes used available? No codes are used.

6. Is documentation of the program available? Yes. If not, are program listings available?

7. Please provide other information needed to read the tapes and understand the computer programs used with the tapes. No additional information is needed.

VI. PERSON TO CONTACT FOR ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

For additional information on the allocations formula, contact:

Mr. Forrest Harrison, National Center for Education Statistics, Room 3059 D, 400 Maryland Avenue SW., Washington, D.C. 20202; 245–8715.●

THE U.S. HEALTH SERVICE—H.R. 11879

(Mr. DELLUMS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, it is time we took the profit out of health care and made the provision of health services our first priority. Today, more Americans are consumers of health services than ever before while at the same time the cost of visiting a physician has dramatically increased, more so than any other consumer service.

The administration continues to delay its proposed legislation on comprehensive health care by creating offices in every department to advise him, by setting up advisory committees that have no power, by holding hearings around the country that will not be listened to, and finally by apparently giving the project to his White House staff. Unfortunately all the proposals of the past have been merely financing schemes that merely pump more Federal dollars into an already bankrupt and ineffective system of health care delivery. I am afraid President Carter's will be no better.

The solution to the crisis in health care in this country must go much further than financing, it must speak to the maldistribution of health manpower, the unequal access to services, the unreliable quality of care and the lack of public control over health care. No matter how much we guarantee the payment of services to the people, it is of little comfort to them if there is no one around to provide the service.

It is interesting to note that a recent Harris poll showed that 39 percent of the American people would support a national health service where everyone would get free medical care paid for out of taxes where the doctor and other health workers would be on salary to the Government and where hospitals would be managed by the Government. This is what I propose with the additional that the service would be run by locally elected health boards composed of users and providers of health care.

I introduced this bill, H.R. 11879, not because I think the country is prepared to enact it today or tomorrow or even next year. But because it opens up a critically important debate in this country. Hopefully it will force everyone to discuss all the various alternatives. For I believe that when the people realize that this is an option, they will demand its enactment.

At this time I would like to insert into the RECORD a summary of the legislation and other related materials:

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON THE HEALTH SERVICE ACT

While high quality health care is a right of all people, this is not the current reality in the United States. Unequal access to care, excessive costs, geographical imbalances, and the deterioration of social, environmental, and occupational conditions beset Americans today. This Act creates a United States Health Service to overcome these deficiencies and implements the right to quality health care.

The United States Health Service will provide to all individuals, without charge and without discrimination of any kind, comprehensive health care and supplementary services delivered by salaried health workers and emphasizing the maintenance of health as well as the treatment of illness. Representative and democratic governance will be established through community boards mandated to provide primary health care services and chosen in community wide elections. District boards will oversee general hospitals and be selected by the community boards. Regional boards will oversee specialized care facilities and health team schools and be selected by district boards. Lastly, the National Health Board will provide overall planning and guidance and be selected by the regional boards, with approval by the President.

Health workers will have fair compensation, secure employment, and opportunities for career advancement and for full and equal participation in governance. There will be local, regional and national planning and funding to establish health care facilities so as to overcome shortages, especially for inner-city and rural populations. The Service will be financed through progressive taxation of individuals and payroll taxes on the employers, with these funds distributed on a capitation basis, supplemented by allocations for special health care needs.

WHY A HEALTH SERVICE?

Growing numbers of Americans realize that the present health care system, based on the private delivery of health care and financed on a fee-for-service basis, is unable to meet the health care needs of this country. One response has been to propose some form of national health insurance. However, no insurance plan will guarantee that health care services are available to everyone, improve the quality of current services, or hold down costs.

Instead of propping up an inadequate system with complex payment mechanisms and ineffective quality reviews, the Health Service Act will establish a health care delivery system that provides comprehensive health services to all Americans and is accountable to those it serves. This will be a publicly-controlled and operated health service employing health workers who will directly serve the public. Any scheme short of this can, at best, only ameliorate the ailments of the present health care system.

WHAT IS THE UNITED STATES HEALTH SERVICE?

The United States Health Service is an independent federal agency that is democratically-controlled to deliver health care in communities throughout the United States.

WHO CAN USE THE HEALTH SERVICE?

Any individual, while within the territory of the United States, will be able to receive services.

WHAT SERVICES WILL BE PROVIDED?

The United States Health Service will provide, without charge, a full range of medical, dental, and mental health services, as well as occupational, home health, and health education services. Drugs and medical equipment will be furnished without charge. Environmental inspections and monitoring services will also be conducted.

These services will be provided through facilities established and maintained oy the Service. Except in emergencies, it will not pay for services provided elsewhere. Three years after it begins full operation, it will not be possible for private practitioners (who charge their patients a fee) to use the facilities of the United States Health Service.

HOW WILL PHYSICIANS AND OTHER HEALTH WORKERS BE COMPENSATED?

All health workers will receive salaries commensurate with their job requirements and experience. Workers can receive increases in salary and be certified for job advancement through recognition of successful performance and through enhancement of their skills.

WHAT WILL BE THE STRUCTURE OF THE UNITED STATES HEALTH SERVICE?

The Health Service will be set up as a four-tier system—the community, district, region, and national level. The base of the system is the "community," a geographic area with a population of between 25,000 and 50,000 (less in rural areas or in other special circumstances). In each community, primary health care services-general outpatient medical care, emergency services, mental health services—will be provided through community health centers, physicians' offices, laboratories, pharmacies, and other facilities. Nursing homes, multiservice centers for the handicapped, and mental health facilities also will be established and operated so as to promote the integration of persons using these facilities into the community.

Several communities will be joined together to form a "district" with a population of between 100,000 and 500,000. Each district will have a general hospital.

Several districts will be joined to form a "region" with a population of between 500,000 and 3,000,000 (more if necessary to enclose an entire metropolitan area). Each region will have a medical center providing highly specialized medical services and a health team school where all health workers will receive their education.

HOW WILL THOSE WHO USE THE SERVICES OF THE UNITED STATES HEALTH SERVICE, AND THOSE WHO WORK FOR IT, RUN IT?

Community health boards chosen in community wide elections by residents and health workers will plan the delivery of primary and preventive health services, hire community health workers, and assume overall responsibility for all community health services. District health boards, appointed by the community health boards in the district (with each community appointing three members) will oversee the district general hospital. Regional health boards, appointed by the district health boards in the region, will oversee the regional medical center and health team schools, and assist community and district boards in performing their duties. Lastly, the National Health Board, appointed by the regional health boards with the approval of the President, will carry out overall planning and budgeting and establish guidelines for the provision of health services by all health boards.

Two-thirds of the members of each board will be representatives of the users of the Service; one-third will be representatives of those who work in the health facilities operated by the Service.

All health facilities will be managed by the workers in them on a democratic basis. Each health board, in consultation with the workers, will develop a plan for democratic decisionmaking within each facility, including the equal participation of health workers at all skill levels. Health workers can also bargain collectively with the health boards on wages, benefits, and working conditions.

WHAT SPECIAL RIGHTS AND GUARANTEES WILL HEALTH SERVICE USERS HAVE?

A Bill of Health Rights incorporated into the legislation guarantees users of the United States Health Service access to all its services, to their choice of health workers and facility, to information and explanations in their primary language about their health status and any treatment or procedure, and to advocacy and legal assistance. Specific protections are included for women and residents of health care institutions to ensure rights associated with their special situations and health needs.

HOW WILL THE QUALITY OF HEALTH CARE BE ASSURED?

In contrast to the present medical licensing system, this Act calls for continuing review and assessment of the competency of health care providers, with oversight by representatives who use those services as well as those who provide them. The National Health Board will establish national guidelines for area health boards in training, hiring, and certifying health workers.

The ultimate safeguard of quality is the control of service delivery by health boards accountable to those who use the Service and those who work in it, able to draw for advice and technical support upon all the professional expertise employed by the United States Health Service.

WILL THIS BILL PROVIDE OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH SERVICES?

Unlike any of the current health insurance proposals, this bill will provide extensive occupational health services. Screening, diagnosis, treatment, and education for the detection and prevention of occupational hazards and diseases will be provided in community health facilities. Workers will participate in the occupational health programs in their community and work-places through elected community occupational safety and health action councils, which will perform monitoring and other functions to protect the safety and health of workers. Workers in each workplace will have the right to establish workplace occupational safety and health committees which will perform monitoring and other functions to protect the safety and health of workers.

HOW WILL THIS BILL ADDRESS THE PRESENT MALDISTRIBUTION OF HEALTH WORKERS AND FUNDS?

Operating funds will be allocated to regions, districts, and communities on a per capita basis, so that all areas will have funds proportionate to their populations. This will allow presently underserved areas, especially those where low income and minority persons live, and many rural areas, to overcome their present serious shortages of physicians, other health workers, and health facilities. Special funds, amounting to 2% of all operating funds, will be allocated to communities where low income persons live, to help them alleviate their special burden of health problems.

The present maldistribution of health workers will be dealt with by requiring that graduates of health team schools serve in underserved areas for at least a period equal to the duration of their education but not to exceed two years, and by requiring that health boards not hire particular types of health workers if they have substantially greater numbers of them while other areas have substantially less.

HOW WILL USERS OF THE SERVICE BE PROTECTED FROM FAILURE OF HEALTH BOARDS TO PERFORM THEIR DUTIES?

Members of health boards will be accountable to the people who chose them. If they fail to meet the health needs of their areas, or neglect their duties, members of community health boards can be removed from office through a recall election. Members of other boards can be removed from office by two-thirds vote of the body that appointed them.

Regional boards will be empowered to investigate complaints regarding the actions of the community or district boards. In the event they determine that there has been mismanagement of funds or other failure or misconduct, they can suspend or restrict the board, appoint a trustee to take over its affairs, and hold a new election for a community board or see that a new district board is appointed. The National Health Board will perform similar oversight of regional boards.

HOW WILL THE EDUCATION OF HEALTH WORKERS BE CONDUCTED UNDER THIS BILL?

Health workers will receive their education from the Service in health team schools organized by regional health boards. They will begin their education by sharing classroom and clinical experiences in a restructured educational process. Curriculum design will maximize the studies undertaken in common by students preparing for the various types of health work and will emphasize the social basis of health. As students progress, their studies will branch out and extend into the various categories of health-related skills and knowledge.

Admission policies will emphasize previous health-related work experience and encourage the entrance of students who reflect the composition of the region's population. No tuition will be charged, and there will be stipends for living and educational expenses. (Outstanding health education loans will be paid by the Service for those accepting employment under the Service.) Each health team school will be governed by representatives of the region's residents and the staff and students of the school.

HOW WILL HEALTH RESEARCH BE CONDUCTED UNDER THIS BILL?

The Service will be mandated to conduct an extensive program of health and health care research. The first priority will be on the prevention and correction of the leading causes of illness and death, including environmental, occupational, and social factors. Research will be performed, to the maximum extent possible, under the auspices of community and district health boards, to ensure it is responsive to the health needs of people in their communities and workplaces.

HOW WILL THE SERVICE BE FINANCED?

In spite of the expansion of services, the cost of operating the Service will be less than the cost of the present health care system. The elimination of administrative costs associated with the insurance industry and its complex billing procedures, the expected decrease in unnecessary hospitalization and treatment from the elimination of fee-for-service medical practice, and the elimination of excessive fees and profits are estimated to reduce the total cost by at least 20 percent.

Funds to run the Service will come from a Health Service Trust Fund containing receipts from a special health service tax on individuals and employers and from general Federal revenues. The individual health service tax will rise with increasing income. Low and middle income individuals having less than about $6,000 taxable income will pay only 1 percent (equivalent to the Medicare payroll tax now in force, but repealed when the Service begins providing health services). Higher income individuals will pay substantially higher taxes, employers will pay a payroll tax equivalent to the current cost of health fringe benefits, and general revenues will contribute the amount now spent by Federal, State, and local governments on health services (Federal payment of these will be a form of additional revenue sharing to States and localities.)

Funds will be distributed to regions, districts, and communities on a uniform per capita basis, with special funds allocated to communities and districts for the care of persons over 65 years of age, persons confined to full-time residential institutions, low income persons, rural areas, and to meet special environmental, occupational, and other health needs of particular regions.

The division of funds between the district and community levels will be determined by the district boards, but with the consent of a majority of the community boards in each district. Similar procedures will be followed in dividing funds between the regional and district levels and the National and regional levels. Thus all health boards will have an equal role in determining the allocation of funds.

HOW WILL THE TRANSITION FROM THE PRESENT SYSTEM TO THE NEW HEALTH SERVICE BE MADE?

Immediately after this law is enacted, the President will appoint an Interim National Health Board broadly representative of the American people, to oversee the start of the transition process. It will draw the regional boundary lines and appoint an interim regional health board for each region. These boards in turn will draw boundaries for districts and communities and will then conduct elections for the members of community health boards. The boundaries drawn by these interim boards can be modified by the permanent boards once they are established, using a procedure in which residents of the affected areas will participate.

Once community health boards are elected, they will begin identifying sites for health facilities, acquiring buildings, and hiring health workers, and they will appoint the members of district health boards. Each board in turn, as it is appointed, will begin preparing to carry out its assigned responsibilities.

Two years after the bill is enacted, the National Health Board will begin functioning, and the delivery of health services will start two years later. All the health-care-related functions now carried out under the direction of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will then be transferred to the Service. Every two years thereafter, there will be elections for members of community health boards and subsequent appointments of new members of the district, regional and national boards.

In cases where particular boards are not ready, at the end of the four-year start-up period, to assume responsibility for the full delivery of services, these will be provided in neighboring areas or through private practitioners reimbursed under current Medicare arrangements. These temporary measures will remain in effect for up to three additional years.

The educational programs will be fully operating four years after the start-up of services.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT AND OPERATION OF THE UNITED STATES HEALTH SERVICE

Initial operation

Sec. 101—Establishment of the Service. There is established an independent establishment of the executive branch to be known as the United States Health Service. The authority of the Service shall be exercised by the health boards set up under this Act.

Sec. 102—Appointment of Interim National Health Board. No later than 30 days after the enactment of this Act, the President shall appoint 21 individuals over 18 years of age, broadly representative of the Nation's population, and no more than 7 of whom have been health workers within the preceding 2 years, to serve as members of the Interim National Health Board.

Sec. 103—Powers and duties of the Interim National Health Board. Members of the Interim National Health Board shall take whatever steps are necessary to establish the Service. They shall serve as the National Health Board of the Service until the National Health Board holds its first meeting, establish boundaries of health care delivery regions, select and provide assistance to interim regional health boards, and coordinate the initial election of community health boards.

Sec. 104—Authorization. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Service $4 billion to establish the Service.

Organization of area health boards

Sec. 111—Establishment of health care delivery regions. No later than six months after the appointment of members of the Interim National Health Board, the Board shall establish health care delivery regions throughout the United States. Each health care delivery region shall be a contiguous geographic area having a population of not less than 500,000 and not more than 3 million, except that the population may be less than 500,000 if this would facilitate the delivery of health care services or the effective governance of the program, and it may be greater than 3 million if the region includes a standard metropolitan statistical area. The boundaries of such regions shall consider economic and geographic barriers to the receipt of health care in nonmetropolitan areas. At least 60 days prior to the establishment of a boundary, the Interim National Health Board shall provide for a public hearing regarding such boundary.

Sec. 112—Appointment of interim regional health boards. No later than 60 days after the establishment of health care delivery regions, the Interim National Health Board shall appoint an interim regional health board for each region. Each interim regional health board shall be composed of 9 members over 18 years of age, broadly representative of the region's population, and no more than 3 of whom have been health workers within the preceding 2 years. Each interim regional health board shall establish the boundaries of health care delivery districts and communities in its region and conduct elections for voting members of community health boards in its region.

Sec. 113—Establishment of health care delivery districts and health care delivery communities. No later than six months after its appointment, each interim regional health board shall establish health care delivery districts and communities throughout its region. Each region shall be divided into three or more districts, each of which shall be a contiguous geographic area having a population of not less than 100,000 or more than 500,000, except that a district may have a population of less than 100,000 if this would facilitate the delivery of health care of the effective governance of the program.

Each district shall be divided into three or more communities, each of which shall be a contiguous geographic area whose residents have a commonality of interest, language, and ethnic and racial composition and whose population is not less than 25,000 or more than 50,000, except that a community may have a population of less than 25,000 if this would facilitate the delivery of health care or the effective governance of the program.

At least 60 days prior to the establishment of a boundary, the interim regional health board shall provide for a public hearing regarding such boundary.

Sec. 114—Election of community health boards. The Interim National Health Board shall arrange with State and local governments for the initial election of user members to be held on a date not later than 9 months after the appointment of the interim regional health boards. For each board there shall be 6 user members, plus one user member for each 5,000 residents in the community in excess of 30,000. For each board there shall be 3 worker members, plus one for each 10,000 residents in the community in excess of 30,000. The Interim National Health Board shall establish procedures for nomination and election of these health board members following the criteria outlined in this Act. The interim regional health boards shall conduct and supervise the nominations and elections of community health board members.

The initial meeting of each community health board shall be held not later than 30 days after the election.

Sec. 115—Appointment of district health boards. Not later than 60 days after its initial meeting, each community health board shall appoint two users residing in the community to serve as user members of its respective district board. The worker members of each board shall appoint a community health worker to serve as a worker member of its respective district board. The district health workers shall appoint a district health worker to serve on the district health board, following procedures outlined in the legislation. The initial meeting of the district health board shall be not later than 30 days after such appointment.

Sec. 116—Appointment of regional health boards. Not later than 60 days after its initial meeting, the user members of the district health board shall appoint two users to serve as user members of its respective regional health board. The worker members of the district health board shall appoint a district health worker as a worker member of its respective regional health board. The regional health workers shall elect a regional health worker to serve on the regional health board. The initial meeting of the regional health board shall be not later than 30 days after such appointment.

Sec. 117—Appointment of the National Health Board. Each region shall be assigned to one of three groupings of regions, each having (to the extent possible) an equal number and balanced geographic distribution. Each board for a region in the first two groups shall appoint a user to service as a user member and the National Health Board; the others shall appoint a worker member. These names shall be submitted to the President who shall have 10 days in which to approve or disapprove the nominations.

Sec. 118—Subsequent election and appointment of members of health boards. The next election for members of the community health boards shall be held in conjunction with each election of Members of the U.S. House of Representatives that occurs after the effective date of health services. The term of service (of all members of health boards) will be four years with staggered terms, half of the members being elected every two years. Such elections and subsequent appointments of members of district and regional boards and the National Health Board shall conform to the requirements of sections 114, 115, 116, and 117, respectively.

Sec. 119—Modification of the boundaries of health care delivery areas. No later than 2 years after each decennial national census, and at any other time it deems necessary, the National Health Board shall review the appropriateness of the boundaries of each region and may modify the boundaries if there has been a substantial population shift and if the modification is approved by a referendum of the residents whose regional identification would be changed. At least 60 days before the modification, a public hearing shall be held.

No later than 2 years after each decennial national census, upon receipt of a petition signed by not less than 15% of the registered voters in an area, and at other appropriate times, each regional board shall review the boundaries of the districts and communities in its region. A regional board may, after review and public hearings, modify a boundary if there has been a substantial population shift or the change would better carry out the purposes of this Act, and if the change is approved by a referendum of those affected by it.

General provisions regarding health boards

Sec. 122—Membership of health boards. Each health board shall be composed of (1) members elected or appointed in accordance with the preceding sections, (2) one member appointed, in the case of a community board, by the community occupational safety and health action council established in section 412 and, in the case of a regional board, by the regional occupational safety and health action council established in section 413, (3) such voting user members as are necessary to ensure that the user members of the board approximate the population of the area by race, sex, income level and language and (4) such nonvoting associate members as the members determine to be necessary to provide representation of State, territorial, and local government, of segments having special health needs of the population and, in the case of the Interim National Health Board and the National Health Board, to help carry out this Act.

A recall election shall be held for any member of a community health board no later than 60 days after presentation to the regional health board of a petition signed by at least 15% of the registered voters (or health workers as appropriate) in the community requesting recall of the member. Members of district, regional, and the interim regional boards, and the National Board, may be recalled from office by the vote of ⅔ of the health board which appointed such members.

No individual may serve as a member of any board for more than 4 consecutive years, exclusive of any time that may be served to fill a vacancy. A vacancy caused by the death, resignation, or removal of a member shall be filled within 60 days by the same process which placed the original member on the board.

Sec. 123—Meeting and records of health boards. The members of each health board shall elect a chairperson and vice chairperson from among their members. The chairperson shall be responsible for convening meetings, including upon written request of any two members, and for carrying out other duties as the board may assign. Minutes of meetings of the board and its committees shall be available to the public, and all such meetings shall be open to the public.

Each health board may establish committees and advisory groups, and appoint to them such individuals as they find necessary to carry out their duties. Members of health boards shall receive per diem or salary payments plus reimbursement for necessary expenses.

Sec. 124—Procedures for establishment of national guidelines and standards. The National Health Board shall establish such guidelines and standards as will facilitate implementation of this Act. It encourages innovation and experimentation in achieving its objectives. At least 90 days before establishing a guideline or standard, it shall submit such guidelines or standards to all regional health boards for their review and comment. The National Health Board shall assist members of area health boards in using and implementing such guidelines and standards.

Sec. 125—Assistance to area health board members. Each regional board shall provide orientation, education, and technical assistance to district and community boards to insure that they are prepared to perform their duties.

TITLE II—DELIVERY OF HEALTH CARE AND SUPPLEMENTAL SERVICES

This title specifies the health care and supplemental services, and the administrative arrangements for delivering such services

Patients' rights in health care delivery

Sec. 201—Basic health rights. The Service, in delivering health care services, shall ensure that every individual is given basic health rights. These include the right to receive high quality health care and supplemental services without charge and without discrimination; to be treated with dignity and respect; to choose health workers and to be responsible for facilities in which to receive service, to have access to one's health records; to have information translated into the individual's primary language; to receive a full explanation of all questions related to health care; to refuse any health care service, when the refusal does not directly endanger the health of others; to have counselling and assistance on health matters; to be accompanied and visited at any time by a friend or relative of the individual choice, to the extent feasible; in the event of terminal illness, to die with dignity and to be allowed to die at home; and to have access to a complaint system and to legal assistance to enforce these rights.

Sec. 202—Right to paid leave to receive health care services. Each employee is entitled to one hour per 35-hour work week of paid leave to receive health care services.

Eligibility for, nature of, and scope of services provided by the service

Sec. 211—Eligibility for services. All individuals while within the United States are eligible to receive health care and supplemental service under this Act.

Sec. 212—Entitlement to services. On or after the effective date of health services, the Service shall provide users with all health care and supplemental services described in section 213 which are necessary for the promotion and enhancement of health, the prevention of disease, the treatment of illness, and rehabilitation following injury, disability or disease. These services do not include personal comfort or cosmetic services, unless the health board providing the services determines they are needed for health-related reasons.

Sec. 213—Provision of health care and supplemental services. The Service shall provide the following health care services in or through facilities established by the Service: promotion of health and well-being through health education programs; prevention of illness, injury, and death through education and advocacy addressed to the social, occupational and environmental causes of ill health through preventive services; diagnosis and treatment of illness and injury, including inpatient and outpatient service, mental health, occupational health, dental care, long-term care, and home health services; rehabilitation of the sick and disabled; and provision of drugs and therapeutic devices, appliances and equipment. The Service shall provide supplemental services of transportation and ambulance service to health facilities, child care services, homemaking and home health services, and counseling and social service assistance. The Service shall conduct environmental and preventive functions now performed by State and local health departments. The Service shall provide reimbursement for the cost of emergency health care services provided in facilities or by persons outside the Service, when immediate medical attention is required and it is impractical for the individual to receive care from the Service.

Health care facilities and delivery of health care services

Sec. 221—Establishment of health care facilities and distribution of delivery of health care and other services. Each community board shall establish facilities in its community to deliver (1) comprehensive primary medical and dental care, immunization, nutrition and screening services; children's health services; obstetrical and gynecological services; family planning and contraceptive services; pregnancy and abortion counseling and services; vision and hearing testing; provision of eyeglasses and other visual aids and hearing aids; 24-hour emergency medical services, provision of pharmaceuticals and medical equipment, mental health services, home health services, and occupational safety and health services; (2) specialized inpatient and outpatient health care services when these can be most effectively provided in a community setting; (3) supportive services and facilities for the physically or mentally handicapped, mentally ill, infirm and chronically ill to promote their integration and functioning within the community, and (4) community oriented health measures to focus community activities on the promotion of health and prevention of illness and injury and to make all residents aware of their ability to use the health services.

Each district board shall establish in its district a general hospital to provide inpatient health care services, as well as such other facilities as will promote the effective delivery of health care in its district.

Each regional board shall (1) establish a regional medical facility providing highly specialized health care services, and (2) provide health care services for individuals whose health care needs cannot be met by community or district boards because of occupational or other factors including migratory agricultural workers and those confined to correctional institutions.

Each area health board shall also provide health education, the maintenance of personal health records, referral services to facilities outside the area, assistance to individuals with language or cultural, differences or educational handicaps in utilizing the services, information on health rights, guidelines, and standards, information on grievance mechanisms and legal services, and environmental health inspection and monitoring services.

Each area health board shall hire appropriate health workers (including administrative personnel) to ensure that its facilities provide the services mandated for the board. Each area health board shall utilize, wherever possible, existing health facilities including health centers, clinics, hospitals, nursing homes, and medical laboratories.

If a community or district board fails to provide the necessary health care and supplemental services on the effective date of health services, its respective regional board shall take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that such services are available to individuals in the area. This may include appointment of a trustee or trustee committee under section 402, requiring the community or district board in an adjacent area to provide such services on a temporary basis, or (until three years after the effective date of health services) providing reimbursement provision of specified services using procedures in effect just before the effective date of health services under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (Medicare).

Sec. 222—Operation and inspection of health care facilities. Each health board shall establish policies and organizational plans for each facility it has established. In establishing, implementing, and modifying such policies and plans, it shall seek the fullest possible participation of health workers in the facility and individuals using the facility by the workers in the facility. These policies and plans shall provide for (1) the management of the facility through decisionmaking mechanisms which provide full and equal participation of all health workers employed in the facility, (2) the elimination of domination by health professionals, and (3) regular accountability of the health workers to the board which established the facility.

On and after three years after the effective date of health services, a health board may not permit a health facility it has established to be used for the private delivery of inpatient or outpatient services. No individual employed by a health board may engage in the private delivery of health care. ("Private delivery" means the delivery of services for which there is remuneration from any source other than the Health Service Trust Fund established in section 511.)

Each health board shall ensure that any facility which provides substantial inpatient service for individuals who are within it for continuous periods of 30 days or longer is cleaned and well-heated, cooled, and ventilated, adequately staffed, provides comfortable quarters for inpatients, provides opportunities for creative activity and recreation, establishes a review committee, informs an inpatient of all decisions involving the inpatient's health, and permits participation in such decisions. It shall not censor or harass communication of an inpatient, confiscate personal property, deny social and sexual life, require that the inpatient work, pay an inpatient less than the minimum wage, physically restrain an inpatient, other than one convicted of a crime, involuntarily for more than 72 hours without determination by the facility's review committee that such restraint is necessary, or take punitive or discriminatory action without approval of the facility's review committee. Annually, the inpatients of each such facility shall elect, from among themselves and any representatives of an interested user association, a review committee of at least 3 members.

Quality care shall be assured by regular inspections of the health care facilities. The results will be reported to the public.

Sec. 223—Provision of health services relating to reproduction and childbearing. To the maximum extent possible area health boards shall provide the following services: complete information on contraception and provision of a contraceptive device or medication of the individual's choosing; complete and effective evaluation and treatment of venereal diseases and diseases of the reproductive organs; complete information and counseling with respect to the individual's conception of children with genetically induced anomalies; complete and effective pregnancy testing; prenatal services; safe, comfortable and convenient abortion services; counseling by women in conjunction with the provision of all gynecologic, female contraceptive and abortion services.

The services will be delivered only upon request, without personal harassment, with complete confidentiality and without prior approval by anyone other than the individual receiving the services. An individual may be accompanied by a person of the individual's choice during the provision of the services described above to the extent this would not significantly increase the medical risk to the individual.

No area health board may perform a treatment or procedure (other than to preserve the patient's life) which could reasonably be expected to affect the individual's capacity to reproduce children unless the individual has again given voluntary consent to the treatment or procedure after being given full information on the effect of the treatment or procedure and on possible alternative treatments at least 30 days before beginning the treatment; and the individual, after the 30 day waiting period, has given written consent. Exceptions to this are the voluntary sterilization following the delivery of a child if written consent has been given 30 days prior to the anticipated delivery date, or during emergency surgery within the 30 day waiting period.

Before a mastectomy is performed, an area health board shall provide the woman with complete information on the range of medical options available and the side effects of each option and she shall give voluntary written consent to such procedures.

An area health board shall permit a woman to deliver her infant in her home, be accompanied during labor and delivery by whomever she chooses, use the position she chooses, care for her infant at her bedside, and feed her infant according to the method she desires, so long as these do not increase the medical risk to herself or her infant.

TITLE III—HEALTH LABOR FORCE

Job categories and certification

Sec. 301—Effect of State Law. Notwithstanding any law of a State or political subdivision to the contrary, the service shall be the sole judge of the qualifications of its employees.

Sec. 302—Qualifications of Health Workers.—Each area health board shall establish procedures which ensure that work classified under a job category is performed by a health worker who is certified as competent to perform the work and authorized to perform the work by the area health board which employs the worker. Each area health board shall provide for the periodic review and assessment of the competency of its employees, and shall provide opportunities for health workers to be certified for more advanced job categories, each regional board shall provide periodic review and assessment of the performance of health workers in their region. The National Health Board shall provide the same for regional health workers.

Sec. 303—Establishment of Job Categories and Certification Standards.—The National Health Board shall establish guidelines for the classification, certification, and employment of health workers by job category that will ensure that health workers have demonstrated the necessary competency, expand the roles of health workers by enabling them to participate in health care delivery to the maximum extent consistent with their skills and permit alternative approaches to healing. In establishing these guidelines, the National Health Board shall provide for sufficient flexibility to permit regional boards most effectively to meet the health needs of their regions, and for sufficient uniformity to permit mobility of health workers among the regions as well as require exchange of health workers between districts. The National Health Board shall periodically evaluate the job categories and certification practices and make whatever modifications it deems necessary.

For job categories not requiring advanced specialty training, each regional board shall establish certification standards for its region which specify the fuctions performed by a health worker employed in a job category, the skills required to perform this work, the initial and continuing training, experience, and performance required, and the curriculum which a health worker must follow in a health team school. Each area health board within the region shall apply such standards to all health workers it employs.

The National Health Board shall establish standards for job categories involving highly specialized skills and requiring advanced specialty training. Area health boards shall apply such standards to all health workers employed by them in such job categories.

All such standards shall periodically be reviewed and modified as appropriate.

Education of health workers

Sec. 311—Health team schools. Each regional board shall establish a health team school to provide initial and continuing education in health care delivery for all health workers. Each school shall be functioning not later than four years after the effective date of health services, unless the National Health Board approves an alternate plan. A regional board, in consultation with its district and community boards, may decide that conducting particular educational programs in its school would be inefficient or inappropriate, and it may collaborate with one or more adjacent regional boards in conducting joint programs.

Schools shall be funded exclusively by the Service, shall not charge tuition, and shall provide students with allowances for living expenses. The National Health Board shall establish guidelines for operating health team schools such that the activities of each school shall be designed to meet the health needs of the region it serves, the number of students enrolled in each educational program shall be based on the needs of the region, and education for different job categories shall be integrated so as to permit health workers to receive successively higher levels of education. Each school's admissions, curriculum, faculty hiring, and governance policies shall be established with the fullest possible participation of community boards, health workers, staff, and students. Schools may not use low-income or minority individuals, women, or those in mental or penal institutions for experiments and demonstrations in numbers that are disproportionate to their population in the region.

Each regional board shall establish admissions policies for its school which emphasize previous health-related work experience, minimize the use of academic criteria other than those that are significantly related to future work performance, give preference to segments of the population now under represented among health workers, seek a student body that approximates the regions population by race, sex, family income, and language, and require the applicant to agree to perform health care service in accordance with Sec. 312.

Each regional board shall establish curriculum policies for its schools that give priority in study and field work to the leading causes of illness and death in the region (including especially environmental and social factors), provide all students with a common initial sequence of courses and then offer progressively more specialized studies, emphasize work-study experience in all types of health care facilities in the region, and facilitate the development of skills in decisionmaking and problem assessment by all health workers.

Each regional board shall establish faculty hiring procedures that seek a faculty that approximates the population of the region, and shall establish a governance plan for the school which gives signi cant decisionmaking powers to staff and students.

Sec. 312—Service requirement. No individual may be enrolled in a health team school unless the individual agrees to perform service as an employee of the Service after graduation, for a period of time equal to the period of enrollment but not to exceed two years and for an area health board with the highest priority. For graduates of a health team school in a particular job category, the priority ranking for hiring is as follows: (1) the region, or a district or a community in the region, in which the school is located, if there is a health worker shortage in that job category; (2) any other region, district or community having such a shortage; and (3) any other area. A health worker shortage is defined to exist if an area has a ratio of the number of health workers in that job category to the number of residents which is less than two-thirds of the average of that ratio in the Nation, and the area health board has plans and a budget which call for hiring such an individual. The National Health board shall assist in matching the locational preferences of graduates with the needs of the area health boards in the area. Any individual who refuses to fulfill his service obligation shall be required to repay to the Service an amount determined in accordance with a formula stated in this Act.

Sec. 313—Payment for certain educational loans. For individuals who have incurred educational loans prior to the enactment of this legislation and who agree to work for the U.S. Health Service, the Service agrees to assume payment of their educational loans in accordance with this section.

Employment and labor-management relations within the service

Sec. 321—Employment, transfer, promotion, and receipt of fees. Health boards shall hire, classify, and fix the compensation and benefits of their employees, in accordance with this Act and guidelines established by the National Health Board. There shall be employment and promotion in the Service in the same manner as is provided under the Federal civil service system. opportunities for career advancement, encouragement of health workers to use up to ten percent of their work time for continuing education without loss of pay, and full protection of employees' rights to a fair hearing on adverse actions.

Health boards shall give preference in hiring to those employed, or self-employed, as health workers before enactment of this Act. The National Health Board shall ensure that all such individuals may find employment within the Service. Employees of the Service shall be eligible for promotion or transfer to any position in the Service for which they are qualified. Each regional health board shall have a job placement service to assist health workers in its region in attaining the maximum degree of career promotion opportunities and to insure continued improvement of health care services.

A district or community board may not hire an individual to fill a position in a job category if the ratio of health workers in that category to residents in the district or community is greater than four-thirds of such ratio for the region, and if there is a district or community within the region which is a health worker shortage area.

An employee of the Service may not receive a fee or prerequisite from anyone other than the Service for duties performed by virtue of such employment.

Sec. 322—Solicitation and use of recommendations. An area health board may solicit, accept, and consider, and any other individual or organization may furnish, a statement about an individual under consideration for employment. The statement must be furnished upon request of the board and can only be an evaluation of the individual's qualifications for employment. No other statement or recommendation with respect to an individual under consideration for employment may be made or considered.

Sec. 323—Applicability of laws relating to Federal employees. The provisions of chapter 75 of title 5, United States Code (relating to adverse actions against employees), subchapter I of chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code (relating to compensation for work injuries), and chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code (relating to civil service retirement) shall apply to employees of the Service (except in some cases for the personal staff of health board members), unless these are inconsistent with provisions of negotiated collective bargaining agreements or with procedures established by the Service and approved by the Civil Service Commission.

Compensation, benefits, and other terms and conditions of employment in effect before the effective date of health services for health workers employed by the Federal Government shall apply to employees of the Service until changed by the Service in accordance with this Act. No variation of fringe benefits shall result in benefits which are less favorable to employees of the Service than benefits in effect for employees of the Federal Government on the effective date of health services.

Sec. 324—Applicability of Federal labor-management relations law. The provisions of the National Labor Relations Act shall apply to the Service and its employees, except that (1) supervisory employees shall be included, (2) professional and unprofessional employees shall not be treated separately and (3) emergency provisions shall apply to regions.

Sec. 324—Defense of certain malpractice and negligence suits. No malpractice suit may be brought against an employee of the Service while acting within the scope of the employee's employment. The remedy in such cases shall be in civil action brought against the United States.

TITLE IV—OTHER FUNCTIONS OF HEALTH BOARDS

Advocacy, grievance procedures, and trusteeships

Sec. 401—Advocacy and legal services program. Each area health board shall establish a program of health advocacy to ensure the full realization of patients' rights. Such program shall include the employment of health advocates in health care facilities and measures to correct any infraction of such rights.

The National Health Board shall establish a health rights legal service program to ensure that patients and health workers receive, free of charge, high quality legal services for problems related to health care. The health rights program shall include the establishment of a legal services office in each region, and the establishment of such offices in communities and districts that have inadequate legal services. This program may be carried out directly or, in each instance, by contract with the National Legal Services Corporation or members of the private bar.

Sec. 402—Grievance procedures and trusteeships. Any user, health worker, or user association having an interest in health care may commence a grievance proceeding before a regional board, and a regional board may commence such a proceeding before itself, because of an alleged violation of this Act by a district or community board. Any user, health worker, or user association may commence a grievance proceeding before the National Health Board because of an alleged violation of this Act by a regional board, and the National Health Board may commence such a proceeding before itself.

The National Health Board shall review by appeal, by any party or on its own initiative, an adverse decision by a regional board.

Whenever a grievance proceeding is commenced there shall be a public hearing if the grievance is supported by a suitable petition or before setting aside an election or transferring any function of a board. If a grievance concerns the conduct of a election of a community board, ad it is determined that the election was not conducted in compliance with this Act, or that there had been systematic failure of the user members of such community board to approximate the population of the community, by race, sex, language, or income level, the election shall be set aside and a new one held within 60 days after the date of the determination. If a new election is held because of a determination that portions of the population have not been represented, the election shall be conducted in a way that will facilitate such representation.

For grievances having to do with other matters, if it is determined that a health board has failed to comply with this Act, a new election or appointment within 60 days may be required. If it is determined that a community or district board has failed to comply with this Act, functions of such board may be transferred to the respective regional board until a new election or appointment is carried out. If a regional board has failed to comply with this Act, functions of this board may be transferred to the National Health Board until a new regional board is appointed.

Any party to a grievance proceeding may bring suit in the United States district court for the judicial district in which such proceeding was brought.

Occupational safety and health programs

Sec. 411—Functions of the National Health Board. On and after the effective date of health services, the National Health Board shall oversee an occupational safety and health program conducted at the regional level and shall participate in establishing and administering occupational safety and health standards under the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, which is amended to transfer this area of authority from the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to the National Health Board.

Sec. 412—Community occupational safety and health activities. A community occupational safety and health action council shall be established in each community, as follows: With the assistance of the community board, employees of each workplace in the community having 500 or more employees shall elect one member for each 500 employees; employees of workplaces having less than 500 employees shall vote in community-wide elections for a number of members equal to the number of such employees divided by 500 (rounded to the next highest whole number). Each such council shall appoint one individual to serve as a member of its community board: appoint one individual to serve as a member of the regional occupational safety and health action council for its region; advise the community board on, and oversee occupational safety and health programs in the community; facilitate the establishment and operation of workplace safety and health committees; and assist employees with respect to inspections of their workplaces.

Sec. 413—Regional occupational safety and health programs. Each regional board shall establish an occupational safety and health program for its region using, to the maximum extent feasible, facilities and resources of the community boards in its region. This program should include increasing the ability of employees to monitor safety and health conditions in, and assist in inspections of, their workplaces; facilitating communication among workers employed in similar industries in the region and unions regarding occupational hazards; conducting biologic screening of employees; monitoring the environment to identify hazards; and analyzing employment-related injuries and illnesses in the region.

Each regional occupational safety and health action council shall appoint one individual to serve as a member of its regional board, and shall advise its regional board and the National Health Board on occupational safety and health matters.

Sec. 414—Workplace health facilities. The employer in each workplace having 25 or more employees shall maintain a health facility in or near the workplace for occupational and emergency health care for employees. These facilities shall be organized according to National Health Board guidelines to provide services that meet the needs of the employees. They will be operated by the community board or the employer, with the cost in either case borne by the employer.

Sec. 415—Employee rights relating to occupational safety and health. Employees in each workplace having 25 or more employees shall have the right to establish workplace occupational safety and health committees. Members of these committees (not to exceed one for every 100 employees or fraction thereof) may, without loss of pay, spend 8 hours of each month on occupational safety and health matters and may accompany inspectors during inspections of their workplaces. Employees have the right, without loss of pay, to monitor safety and health conditions in their workplaces and to remove themselves from the site of any hazard until it has been eliminated. Employers shall furnish their employees with safety equipment and clothing. Employees or their representatives shall have the right to inspect all medical records kept by their employer on the condition of their health. Employers shall provide their employees with copies of reports and data on conditions affecting their health and safety and with timely notification of the presence of any dangerous materials or conditions.

Health and health care delivery research

Sec. 421—Principles and guidelines for research. On and after the effective date of health services, the Service shall conduct a program of research on health and health care delivery. Within two years thereafter, the research program shall conform to these principles: (1) to the maximum extent possible, research shall be performed under the direction of, and in association with community, district and regional boards; (2) area health boards must review and approve any research conducted in their facilities; (3) priority in health research shall be given to the prevention and correction of the leading causes of illness and death; (4) priority in health care delivery research shall be given to the improvement of ambulatory and primary health care; (5) no research shall be conducted using human subjects until all useful animal research has been undertaken; and (6) no research shall be conducted on humans without written consent of the individual or while involuntarily confined.

Sec. 422—Establishment of institutes. The National Health Board shall establish a National Institute of Epidemiology, a National Institute of Evaluative Clinical Research, a National Institute of Health Care Services, a National Institute of Pharmacy and Medical Supply, and a National Institute of Sociology of Health and Health Care, each with specified functions.

Health planning, distribution of drugs and other medical supplies, and miscellaneous functions

Sec. 431—Health planning and budgeting. Each area health board shall collect data on the delivery of health care in its area and shall transmit this data and their evaluation of it to the respective regional board, in the case of a district or community board, or to the National Health Board, in the case of a regional board, and to residents of the area. Each regional board shall coordinate the planning and administration of health care services, health worker education, and research in its region. The National Health Board shall formulate a national health plan and budget, in consutation with the regional boards, to provide guidance to area health boards.

Sec. 432—Distribution of drugs and other medical supplies. The National Health Board shall prepare and disseminate to area health boards a National Pharmacy and Medical Supply Formulary which will list drugs and medical supplies and give, for each item, standards of quality, medical conditions for which it is certified effective, and other appropriate information. At regular intervals the Board shall update the Formulary and publish a price list for items in the Formulary.

Each regional board shall establish a program for the purchase and distribution of drugs and other medical supplies for use by the health facilities in its region. This program will provide for the purchase of each item by competitive bidding or based on the price listed by the National Health Board, and it will provide for the distribution of drugs under their generic names.

Sec. 433—Miscellaneous functions of the National Health Board. The National Board shall, at the end of each calendar year, publish a report describing the operations of the Service during the preceding fiscal year and surveying the future health needs of the Nation and plans the Board has to meet these needs.

The National Health Board shall publish and disseminate to area health boards, for use by users, a comprehensive dictionary of terms used in health care records and services.

TITLE V—FINANCING OF THE SERVICE

Health service taxes

Sec. 510—Individual income and employer taxes. The Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding a new part on health service taxes. These taxes are imposed on the taxable income of every individual, estate, and trust, increasing their tax liability in accordance with a table included in the Act, and on employers an excise tax of 4.5% of the wages paid by him. These taxes apply to taxable years including and after the effective date of health services.

Sec. 502—Other changes in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to delete any income exclusion for contributions to health plans providing health care and supplemental services that are provided under this Act; to deny deductions of payments for health care services provided under this Act; to deny deductions for contributions to medical and hospital facilities; and to repeal Medicare taxes. These amendments apply to taxable years including and after the effective date of health services.

Sec. 503—Existing employer-employee health benefit plans. No contractual or other nonstatutory obligation of an employer to pay or provide health services to his employees or others shall apply after the effective date of health services, to the extent such services are provided under this Act.

Sec. 504—Workers compensation program. No worker's compensation program shall pay for or provide health services after the effective date of health services, to the extent such services are available under this act.

Health Service Trust Fund

Sec. 511—Establishment of Health Service Trust Fund. There is created on the books of the United States Treasury a trust fund to be known as the Health Service Trust Fund. Funds received from health services taxes shall be appropriated to the Trust Fund.

Sec. 512—Transfer of funds to the Health Service Trust Fund. On the effective date of health services, all of the assets and liabilities of the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplementary Insurance Trust Fund are transferred to the Health Service Trust Fund. In addition to the funds received from health service taxes, there is also appropriated to the Trust Fund a contribution from general revenues equal to 40 percent of the funds received from health service taxes.

Sec. 513—Administration of Health Service Trust Fund. The Trust Fund shall be administered by a Board of Trustees, composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Chairperson of the National Health Board, according to the accepted standards for such federal trust funds. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay from time to time from the Trust Fund such amounts as the National Health Board certifies are necessary to provide health care and supplemental services under this Act.

Preparation of plans and budgets

Sec. 521—Determination of fund availability. The National Health Board shall, not later than January 1 of each year, initially fix the maximum amount of funds which may be obligated during the fiscal year beginning on October 1 of such year. Such amount may not exceed the lesser of 140 percent of the expected net receipts from health service taxes, or the amount spent during the previous year adjusted to reflect changes in the cost of living and scope and cost of services. The National Health Board may obligate less funds, if it determines that the cost of providing services has lessened, or additional funds if necessary because of an epidemic or other unexpected occurrence.

Sec. 522—Preparation of area plans and budgets. Each community board shall, by January 1 of each year, submit to its respective district board a plan and budget for the fiscal year beginning October 1. Each district board, in consultation with its community boards, shall, by February 1, submit to its respective regional board a plan and budget for the fiscal year beginning October 1. Each regional board, in consultation with its district boards, shall, by March 1, submit to the National Board a plan and budget for the fiscal year beginning October 1. In preparing these budgets, each area health board shall specify its operating, prevention, capital, and research expenses for the coming fiscal year and for the five-year period beginning with that fiscal year.

Allocation and distribution of funds

Sec. 531—National budget. The National Health Board shall, as soon after April 1 as practicable, transmit to the regional boards a national health budget for the fiscal year beginning October 1. It shall divide the total funds available into funds for ordinary operating, preventive health, capital, and research expenses, all divided into funds for use by the National Health Board and funds for the regions, and funds for special operating expenses as described in section 534. Funds for ordinary operating preventive health measures and research expenses are allocated to regions in proportion to their populations. During the first ten fiscal years, priority in capital funds shall be given to areas lacking adequate health care facilities. The budget shall be adopted upon approval by a majority of the regional boards.

Sec. 532—Regional budgets. Each regional board shall, as soon as practicable after adoption of the national health budget, transmit a regional budget to each district board in its region. This budget shall be adopted upon approval by a majority of the district boards. Funds for ordinary operating, prevention and research expenses shall be allocated to each district in proportion to population.

Sec. 533—District budgets. Each district board shall, as soon as practicable after adoption of the respective regional health budget, transmit a district budget to each community board in its district. This budget shall be adopted upon approval by a majority of the community boards. Funds for ordinary operating, prevention and research expenses shall be allocated to each community in proportion to population.

Sec. 534—Special operating expense fund. A fund for special operating expenses shall be incorporated into each budget prepared by the National Health Board. Special operating expenses include the costs of care and treatment of users 65 years of age and over, care and treatment of persons confined to full-time residential care institutions, special health needs of low-income individuals, special health needs of residents of rural areas, special health needs arising from environmental or occupational health problems, special needs from unexpected occurrences, and the conduct of environmental inspection and monitoring services.

The special operating expense fund is allocated as follows: Funds for the additional expenses associated with senior citizens, and with persons confined to residential care institutions, are allocated to districts and communities and consist of basic capitation amounts multiplied, respectively, by the number of senior citizens and number of residents in such institutions, in the respective areas. The National Health Board shall determine the basic capitation amounts.

Funds for the needs of low-income residents are allocated to communities in proportion to the number of residents having incomes below the poverty level. (The total of these funds shall be no less than 2 percent of the ordinary operating expenses.) Funds for special environmental and occupational health needs are allocated by the National Board to regional boards in accordance with its determination of such needs. (The total of these funds shall be no greater than one-half percent of the ordinary operating expenses.) Funds for unexpected occurrences shall be retained by the National Board and allocated by them. (These funds shall be no greater than one-half percent of the ordinary operating expenses.) Funds for environmental inspection and monitoring services shall be allocated to the area health boards performing such services.

Sec. 535—Distribution of funds. Funds shall be distributed by the National Health Board from the Trust Fund. No health board may request or receive funds from any other source. Area health boards may retain funds received from the National Health Board for two years after receipt of funds; after this period, unexpended funds must be returned to the National Health Board for deposit in the Trust Fund.

Sec. 536—Annual statement, records, and audits. Each area health board shall prepare annually and transmit to the National Health Board a statement that accurately shows the financial operations of the board and its facilities. The National Health Board and the Comptroller General of the United States shall, for auditing purposes, have access to all records and documents of the Service.

General provisions

Sec. 541—Issuance of obligations. The National Health Board is authorized to borrow money and to issue and sell such obligations as it determines are necessary to carry out this Act, but only in such amounts as are specified in appropriation Acts. The aggregate amounts of obligations at one time shall not exceed $10 billion. The National Health Board may pledge the assets of the Trust Fund and pledge and use its revenues to pay principal and interest on obligations. The service shall abide by the general rules and procedures for the issuance of obligations followed by agencies of the Federal Government. Obligations issued by the Service shall be obligations of the United States Government and payment is fully guaranteed by the Government.

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Sec. 601—Effective date of health services. The effective date of health services under this Act is January 1 of the fourth calendar year after the year in which this Act is enacted.

Sec. 602—Repeal of provisions. Effective on the date of health services, portions of the Public Health Service Act, the Social Security Act, and other acts relating to the provision of health care services and the conduct of health and health care research are repealed. Portions of the Public Health Service Act relating to health worker education remain in effect until four years after the effective date of health services.

Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall prepare, in consultation with the National Health Board, and transmit to Congress legislation to repeal or amend additional provisions of law that are inconsistent with the purposes of this Act. Such legislation shall include transfers of such authority of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, relating to standard-setting, regulation, and licensing, as the President determines, after consultation with the National Health Board to be appropriate.

Not later than one year after the effective date of health services, the National Health Board shall report to the President and to the Congress on how the Service is carrying out the purposes of the programs which have been repealed.●

UNITED STATES RELATIONS WITH THE GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC

(Mr. HAMILTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, February 23, I had the pleasure of talking with David B. Bolen, U.S. Ambassador to the German Democratic Republic (GDR), often known as East Germany.

Ambassador Bolen gave me a succinct and perceptive analysis of the political, economic, and social situation in the German Democratic Republic while also clearly outlining our current policy toward the GDR and continued close Soviet-East German relations. I was most interested in Ambassador Bolen's observations about the various policy options available to us with potential to improve significantly our political, economic, and cultural relations with the GDR.

While Ambassador Bolen was here in the United States he participated in the second annual series of John Sherman Cooper distinguished lectures at the University of Kentucky. Senator Cooper preceeded Ambassador Bolen as the first U.S. Ambassador to the German Democratic Republic. I recently received a copy of Ambassador Bolen's lectures and I want to share it with my colleagues. I think my colleagues and others will be interested in the Ambassador's comments on the prospects and potential of full normalization of relations with the GDR. I applaud the Ambassador's educational efforts to help increase our general understanding of the GDR and to suggest some of the policy options we should consider and debate in order to understand the potential of improving relations.

Ambassador Bolen's lecture follows:

US–GDR Relations in a Rapidly Changing World

(Remarks by David B. Bolen)

President Singletary, Ambassador Cooper, Director Davis, distinguished guests—and fellow students in the art of diplomacy.

It is a great privilege and honor for me to participate in the second annual series of John Sherman Cooper distinguished lectures. This occasion represents a great honor for me, particularly since this lecture series is named after my distinguished predecessor. Senator Cooper served our country with distinction as the first United States Ambassador to the German Democratic Republic.

Senator Cooper's service as Ambassador to the German Democratic Republic reflects his reputation for moral concern and practical action in the realm of human affairs. His has been a voice of reason over the years in support of liberty, human dignity, social justice and peaceful settlement of international conflicts. I congratulate the Patterson School of Diplomacy and International Commerce for instituting this lecture series in the name of this outstanding son of Kentucky.

In carrying out my mission as the second American Ambassador to the German Democratic Republic, it will be my purpose to build on his distinguished record.

I am also pleased to have this opportunity to participate in this lecture series because the focus of the Patterson School's activities is on our youth. Many of your graduates will be responsible for United States security and welfare in years to come. They will be responsible for forging a durable structure of international relationships to promote world peace and prosperity. They will face the challenge of bringing out the creative possibilities of an increasingly pluralistic, interdependent and rapidly changing world. I therefore welcome this opportunity to review our perceptions on the developing relations with the German Democratic Republic in the context of this world of rapid change.

My diplomatic career has seen profound transformation in the world's political structure and a revolution of rising expectation. President Carter recently noted that we live in a "rapidly changing world, a world in which the universal desire for freedom and a better life is being expressed more strongly, and in more ways than ever before—a world in which political awakening, economic independence and technological progress have created new demands on the foreign policy of our people."

Today the world community involves more than 160 independent countries. This world community includes 130-odd developing countries which have changed the character of international affairs. It is a world characterized by population explosion which places tremendous stress and strain on economic development resources. It is a world in which eighty percent of the population will be living in Africa, Asia and Latin American by the end of this century. It is a world of increasing interaction between existing social systems and national values and traditions. It is a world in which a single ideological or revolutionary model is fading.

The world today cannot be fully understood by focusing primarily on East-West competition in Europe. This competition is continuing. But it is conceivable that in years to come the chief security concerns of the United States may not evolve around this East-West confrontation at all. Rather, the chief area of potential conflict will be where East-West interests clash in the developing countries.

One of the priorities of the Carter Administration is to help shape a wider and more cooperative world community. Such a world system should include that one-third of mankind which lives under communism. The German Democratic Republic is one of the most important communist states. Full normalization of relations with the German Democratic Republic would facilitate the assimilation of this country into the fabric of global cooperation.

The German Democratic Republic is a country of central importance to peace and security in Europe. It is the western-most extension of Soviet power and influence. It is a member of the Warsaw Pact. There are some twenty Soviet divisions in the GDR. The GDR shares a common border with our NATO ally, the Federal Republic of Germany.

The German Democratic Republic has a GNP of $70 billion. Its per capita GNP of $4,000 exceeds that of the Soviet Union or any other Eastern European country. It ranks ninth in the world in industrial production. It has a rich reservoir of scientific and technological manpower. The GDR economy is oriented toward the Soviet Union and other East European members of the Council for Economic Mutual Assistance. Like all industrialized countries, it is increasingly dependent on the third world for raw materials and markets.

The German Democratic Republic experienced a long period of isolation from the main Western channels of diplomatic intercourse following its proclamation as a separate state in 1949. This isolation reflected opposing alliances, differing ideologies and a general atmosphere of mistrust which characterized east-west relations during the cold war era. Western perceptions of the GDR were shaped by the rigid controls exercised by the GDR in its internal affairs, particularly following the uprising of GDR workers on June 17, 1953, and the erection of the Berlin Wall on August 13, 1961.

Although the GDR continued to place severe limitations on free speech and travel, improvements in the external political and psychological climate following the Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin and the agreements between the FRG and the GDR and its eastern neighbors facilitated the recognition of the GDR by the leading western nations. Finally, on September 4, 1974, the United States and the German Democratic Republic agreed to establish diplomatic relations, a move which we considered to be in our best interest for a number of reasons.

Our principal interests in the German Democratic Republic revolve around security concerns. These security concerns relate to the GDR's close and "irrevocable" relations with the Soviet Union, the nature of relations between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic, and the behavior of the GDR in and around Berlin. We have an interest in human rights improvement and detente which we see as mutually-reinforcing concepts. We want a good atmosphere for the protection of the rights and property of American citizens. We also want the GDR to play a constructive role internationally and to look upon the United States as a reliable supplier of agricultural and industrial products.

Therefore, in conducting our relations with the GDR and its allies, we hope:

To go beyond arms limitation to actual reductions of military forces and armaments.

To go beyond uninhibited competition in the third world by developing more stable and equitable North-South relations and by encouraging a general pattern of restraint and cooperation.

To look beyond the postwar division of Europe to encourage more normal relations between governments and peoples of western Europe.

To gain acceptance that discussion of particular human rights matters, defined and agreed in the Helsinki Final Act sections on principles and human contacts, are a legitimate part of bilateral and multilateral diplomacy. This would presuppose both a GDR willingness to engage in discussions with the United States on these matters and a conscious effort to move in the direction of greater, more positive compliance to specific Helsinki provisions.

Now the central purpose of GDR foreign policy is to create and secure the most favorable international condition for the development of a communist society at home. This means the GDR will:

Maintain a firm and invariable alliance with the Soviet Union and other communist countries.

Strengthen the Warsaw Pact.

Define and use detente in ways that will advance GDR objectives.

Seek to develop and maintain multifarious and stable cooperation with all nations, while promoting, where possible, the politcal, social and economic goals of communism.

And, finally, to increase its influence in the third world by posing as an ally of national liberation movements.

The GDR society and its foreign policy goals make it quite clear that both cooperative and competitive elements will be present in our relations for some time to come. The competitive elements stem from historical forces, philosophical pressures, geopolitcal considerations, divergent political systems and different values. At the same time, we have overlapping interests which constitute a basis for enlarging cooperation and regulating the competitive aspects of our relations.

The GDR at all levels has expressed a profound interest in developing closer cooperation with the United States. This is probably important to the GDR for two reasons: First, stronger US–GDR ties would enhance the GDR's status in Europe and elsewhere. Secondly, the GDR leaders may believe that the development of cooperation with the United States will bring it benefits in trade and technology and, through selected exchanges, lead to a better understanding of the United States.

In the conduct of our relations through bilateral, multilateral, and other channels we seek to engage the GDR on a wide range of issues, including: Disarmament, inter-German Affairs, Africa, Middle East, North-South dialogue, human rights, humanitarian cases, trade development, cultural and scientific exchanges, consular convention and claims.

The GDR shares the view of most East Europeans that good US-Soviet relations are a key factor in sustaining the process of detente which they see as important in maintaining a good atmosphere for the conduct of bilateral relations with the United States. The most important single aspect of Soviet-American relations is the strategic arms limitation negotiations. In these negotiations with the Soviet Union, an effort is being made the stabilize the military competition, to begin a downward turn to more sensible levels, and to slow down the introduction of new less-stable military technologies. We hope these negotiations will succeed this year; if so, they will contribute to US security and improve the climate in which our relations with the GDR can better develop.

A successful SALT negotiation could also enhance prospects for other arms control problems. We have made it clear that we favor effective measures which bring about arms limitation and disarmament based on the principle of undiminished security, a principle that is essential to success in the Vienna talks on mutual and balanced force reductions in Central Europe. The GDR views with satisfaction the progress which has been made in negotiations on a comprehensive ban on nuclear explosions. As you know, the Administration is working with vigor to halt the proliferation of nuclear weapons. The GDR's participation in the international nuclear fuel cycle evaluation organizing conference is evidence of its concern and willingness to cooperate on non-proliferation.

We must continue efforts to enhance U.S. security through negotiations on disarmament and arms control; at the same time we must maintain NATO's relative military strength and promote western European unity as the keystone of our foreign policy. Success in arms control and disarmament negotiations would obviously free resources to meet the growing human needs in both developed and developing countries and thus facilitate the construction of a more durable structure of global cooperation.

Our efforts to promote a system of global cooperation and regulate competition also includes diplomatic action and political negotiations.

Let me stress here that Central Europe remains the most crucial area of potential conflict. The German question has been the focus of much East-West conflict during the post-World War II period. Soviet and GDR activities in and around Berlin have an important bearing on worldwide peace, security and cooperation. Relations between the two German states also affect the broader East-West agenda and our efforts to go beyond the postwar division of Europe to promote greater mutual trust and cooperation.

I am pleased to note that Central Europe has been relatively stable since the Four-Power Agreement on Berlin in 1971. The 1972 basic treaty between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic made a significant contribution toward political detente in Europe. Under this treaty both states recognized each other's borders; they acknowledged each other's internal and external sovereignty. A number of negotiations are under way calling for practical cooperation in a number of specific fields. We continue to encourage peaceful cooperation between them and believe the normalization process will continue. We have also made it absolutely clear to the Soviets and the GDR that the United States and its allies will continue to reject activities that bring into question four-power rights and responsibilities for Berlin.

In addition to West Germany, the GDR has been making a concerted effort to improve its bilateral relations with other Western European countries and Japan. Generally these relations are less than five years old. In a relatively short period, there has been a step-by-step development of relations between the GDR and Western Europe and Japan. This includes some state visits, political consultations at the Foreign Minister level, parliamentary delegations, visits of religious and trade union groups, trade expansion, cultural exchanges and cooperation in science and technology.

Detente in Europe is a necessary but not a sufficient condition for the construction of a durable structure of world peace and cooperation. Detente must be reciprocal and comprehensive. I believe the GDR recognizes that North-South issues are important and potentially explosive. Current conflicts in Africa and the Middle East could threaten East-West detente and international peace.

In Africa, the GDR has not been helpful or sympathetic to allied efforts to bring about a peaceful transfer to majority rule in Rhodesia and Namibia through negotiated settlement. It has consistently backed Soviet and Cuban activities that have served to increase the level of tension in other parts of the Continent.

In the Middle East, the GDR generally hews to the Soviet line. It supports the radical Arab states, demands complete Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab territory and is wary of the peacemaking efforts of President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin, although it has so far refrained from attacking President Sadat.

For our part, we have endeavored to convince the GDR that peaceful settlements of the current problems in the Middle East, the Horn of Africa and Southern Africa would free energy and resources for more humane purposes.

As a global power, the United States is also interested in a more just international economic system in order to meet human needs. Clearly the GDR cannot isolate itself from global economic trends in view of its heavy dependence on foreign trade. As an industrial country short of raw materials, it will show increasing interest in markets and sources of supply in the third and fourth worlds. I believe it would be desirable to encourage the GDR to play a more constructive role in meeting the economic and social aspirations of the developing countries. Cooperation on North-South economic issues in pursuit of common interests could also be beneficial to East-West relations in addition to fulfilling social and economic rights.

In the conduct of our relations with the GDR we have explained that human rights in general are a central component of American foreign policy. The GDR, like other communist states, tends to see our espousal of human rights as interference in internal affairs. It is concerned about the impact of the policy on internal developments. We have explained that our human rights policy is not directed at any particular country but applies to all countries, including the United States. Also, no state which has signed the United Nations Charter or the Helsinki Final Act can argue that its behavior toward its own citizens is a matter within its exclusive jurisdiction. We have stressed that the Administration's human rights policy is consistent with fundamental American values and reflects the transformation that has occurred in American society.

As a member of a minority group in the United States, it is my hope that the GDR will understand that the commitment of Americans to human rights is a strong moral and political force that must be taken into account in carrying out our foreign as well as domestic policies. I have no reason to doubt that we can carry on a dialogue with the GDR on human rights in the spirit of cooperation and understanding rather than as a matter of ideological confrontation.

Despite earlier promises of cooperation by the GDR, many of the humanitarian cases involving American citizens and their relatives in the GDR remain unresolved. GDR action on these divided family, marriage and emergency visitation cases would have a positive impact in creating a better climate for the conduct of bilateral relations and I hope, therefore, that the GDR will respond favorably in present and future cases of this type.

Let me turn now to the cultural exchanges between the United States and the GDR which are expanding. Here it is important to note that the population of the GDR is probably the best informed among the peoples of East Europe about events in the outside world because (a) as much as 80 percent of the territory of the GDR clearly receives not only radio broadcasts from across the border but three channels of television as well, and (b) about ten million West Germans visit relatives annually in the GDR or travel as tourists. In our conversations in all parts of the GDR, with workers, artists, scientists and even officials, we experience a great interest, hunger and appreciation for American society and culture.

In 1975, a US-GDR exchange agreement was negotiated under which some five academicians annually from both countries conduct research for periods of three to four months in the social and natural sciences. It is a mark of progress that in the new agreement the number of exchanges was doubled.

In March I will open the first official cultural program we have arranged with the GDR—an exhibit of some 300 photographs by the famous American artist Paul Strand. It will be on display at a Berlin museum for six weeks. In May we are planning two projects taking place concurrently: A week of American films covering some four decades of motion picture art, and an exhibit of industrial design, which will also include a seminar conducted by five American professors of design technique.

Later this year, in October, the United States will have its first official musical presentation in the German Democratic Republic when the distinguished Composers String Quartet will perform a series of concerts throughout the country. This Quartet, known throughout Europe for its performance of contemporary American chamber music, will give concerts not only in Berlin but in five other cities as well.

These programs represent the first cultural attractions arranged officially between our two governments and suggest some willingness by the GDR to have its citizens experience at first hand some of the cultural accomplishments of our country. I might add also that the GDR has arranged other events through commercial channels, such as two concerts by the Duke Ellington Orchestra, led by his son Mercer. At the Ellington concert last November in Dresden, I was pleased to witness the enthusiasm of the young people for the Ellington music, which exceeded anything in my experience.

An outstanding cultural event will take place this year in the United States, which has great cultural and symbolic importance to our bilateral relations with the GDR. It is a magnificent collection of paintings, porcelain, jewelry and armor from the Dresden museums that will open the new wing of the National Gallery of Art in our Nation's Capital.

After three months, the exhibition will move on to the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York; early in 1979 the exhibition will move to the fine arts museums in San Francisco, thereby allowing Americans on both coasts to view what GDR officials point out is the largest collection of art they have ever sent abroad to any country. I have seen these wonderful objects of art in Dresden and can assure you of their beauty and artistic value.

The expansion and balancing of its bilateral trade is probably an important GDR objective in developing its bilateral relations with the United States. There are indications that its officials believe that enormous possibilities exist that would be beneficial to the GDR. Given the GDR's current economic situation, it has a keen interest, for example, in importing western technology, expanding credits from our banks and increasing exports to the United States.

The United States has a very substantial trade surplus with the GDR, in excess of $300 million. This is helpful to our balance of payments and creates jobs for American citizens. Agricultural exports alone exceed $360 million annually and play a major role in our trade.

It is of some significance to note that the GDR is probably the world's most advanced country in coal gasification technology, which offers a potential for easing our energy problem.

The GDR desires more balanced growth in trade with the United States. This will be difficult to achieve given the lack of most-favored nation tariff treatment—a status that the GDR has not been able to achieve under the Jackson-Vanik Amendment because of its restrictive emigration policies.

The GDR is taking steps to develop the American market in the hope of eventually receiving MFN treatment to enhance its competitive position. The GDR took the initiative in establishing the US–GDR trade and economic councils, which involve twenty major U.S. corporations. It has also sought to expand U.S. business contacts by mounting technical seminars in the United States and by opening an office in New York representing the WMW machine tool works.

The United States has taken a number of steps to expand trade with the German Democratic Republic. We participate in the world-famous Leipzig Fair with government-sponsored exhibits and business development offices. We encourage private trade promotion efforts at Leipzig. We sponsor technical sales seminars, maintain a commercial library, provide counseling services and other assistance.

Our efforts to increase economic cooperation with the GDR also include a Fisheries Agreement signed in 1976. Negotiations are underway for a parcel post agreement. We have held talks on patents. Our National Academy of Science and the GDR Academy of Sciences have exchanged drafts for an agreement which appears imminent.

All these activities have helped promote mutual understanding and cooperation that serve our mutual interests.

Discussions are underway on a number of other steps that would create a better framework for bilateral cooperation and the normalization of our relations with the GDR. We are still in the process of negotiating a consular convention, an agreement that will be important to the protection of Americans traveling in the GDR. While showing some responsiveness to our suggestions for moving forward on property claims arising from nationalization and other seizures, the GDR has been far less forthcoming in meeting its obligations to the victims of Nazism.

These are the principal elements of our relations with the GDR from the perspective of a changing world.

In conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, I hope you will carry the following thoughts with you:

Ours is a world of rapid change, competing ideals, conflicting ideologies and abiding issues.

It is a world in which mutual trust does not yet exist. As a people and as a nation we must remain strong at home, united in purpose, and strengthen cooperation with our allies in support of mutual security and our fundamental values.

It is an interdependent world in which peace and progress are indivisible.

Our world of growing interdependence calls for creative and innovative approaches in using overlapping interests to enlarge areas of cooperation and to regulate competition in Europe, the Middle East, Africa, and other areas where East-West interests may clash.

It is a world in which East and West should demonstrate more compassion for the poor and dispossessed—those who, through no fault of their own, are exposed to daily suffering and struggling to survive in the less-developed world.

A healthy world requires that we cooperate with our allies and potential adversaries in limiting arms and making progress on disarmament, for there is no realistic alternative to peaceful coexistence.

The GDR is part of this rapidly-changing world, with a heightened interest in developing better bilateral relations with the United States. It remains our purpose to improve the framework for the conduct of our relations with the GDR, recognizing differences in ideologies and social systems and taking into account that detente must be both reciprocal and comprehensive.

Again, it has been a pleasure for me to make this special trip from East Germany to participate in this lecture series in the name of Kentucky's most renowned native son—Senator John Sherman Cooper. As a diplomat of today, I am confident that the distinguished John Sherman Cooper Lectures will make a contribution toward building a wider and more cooperative world community for our diplomats of tomorrow.

Thank you.●

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 6782

Mr. FOLEY submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 6782) to permit marketing orders to include provisions concerning marketing promotion, including paid advertisement, of raisins and distribution among handlers of the pro rata costs of such promotion:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 95–1044)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6782) to permit marketing orders to include provisions concerning marketing promotion, including paid advertisement, of raisins and distribution among handlers of the pro rata costs of such promotion, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Emergency Agricultural Act of 1978".

TITLE I—PRICE SUPPORT FOR PRODUCERS SETTING ASIDE ACREAGE FOR THE 1978 CROPS OF WHEAT, FEED GRAINS, AND UPLAND COTTON

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Flexible Parity Act of 1978".

SEC. 102. Effective only with respect to the 1978 crops, title I of the Agricultural Act of 1949 is amended by adding at the end thereof new sections 112 through 115 as follows:

"1978 WHEAT LOAN RATE AND TARGET PRICES

"SEC. 112. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act—

"(a) The Secretary shall make loans and purchases on the 1978 crop of wheat available only to producers participating in the 1978 wheat program at a level not less than $2.55 per bushel.

"(b) The established price for the 1978 crop of wheat shall be at a level related to the amount of cropland that the producers on a farm voluntarily elect to set aside from production. If the acreage the producers voluntarily set aside is—

"(1) 20 percent, the established price shall be $3.50 per bushel;

"(2) 35 percent, the established price shall be $4.25 per bushel;

"(3) 50 percent, the established price shall be $5.04 per bushel.

"1978 FEED GRAIN LOAN RATES AND TARGET PRICES

"SEC. 113. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act—

"(a) The Secretary shall make loans and purchases on the 1978 crop of feed grains available only to producers participating in the 1978 feed grain program. Loans and purchases on the 1978 crop of corn shall be at a level not less than $2.25 per bushel, and loans and purchases on the 1978 crop of other feed grains shall be at such levels as provided in section 105A(a)(2) of this Act.

"(b) The established price for the 1978 crop of corn shall be at a level related to the amount of cropland that the producers on a farm voluntarily elect to set aside from production. If the acreage the producers voluntarily set aside is—

"(1) 10 percent, the established price shall be $2.40 per bushel;

"(2) 35 percent, the established price shall be $3.05 per bushel;

"(3) 50 percent, the established price shall be $3.45 per bushel.

"(c) The established prices for grain sorghums and, if designated by the Secretary, barley shall be at such levels as the Secretary determines fair and reasonable in relation to the established prices for corn under subsection (b) of this section.

"1978 UPLAND COTTON LOAN RATE AND TARGET PRICES

"SEC. 114. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act—

"(a) The Secretary shall make available to producers loans on the 1978 crop of upland cotton at a level not less than 48 cents per pound.

"(b) The established price for the 1978 crop of upland cotton shall be 60 cents per pound, or at a level related to the amount of cropland that the producers on a farm voluntarily elect to set aside from production. If the acreage the producers voluntarily set aside is—

"(1) 35 percent, the established price shall be 72 cents per pound;

"(2) 50 percent, the established price shall be 84 cents per pound.

"1978 UPLAND COTTON AND FEED GRAIN DIVERSION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 115. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for any diversion program formulated and administered by the Secretary for the 1978 crop of upland cotton under section 103(f)(11)(B) of this Act and the 1978 crop of corn, grain sorghums, and barley under section 105A(f)(2) of this Act, payments shall be made to producers on a farm only if the sum of the acreage of the commodity planted for harvest in 1978 and the diverted acreage for the commodity does not exceed the acreage of the commodity planted for harvest in 1977. An acreage of cropland will be considered as planted for harvest in 1977 if a producer on a farm was prevented from planting because of drought, flood, or other natural disaster or other condition beyond the control of the producer. In no event shall any producer be compensated under a diversion program as provided in this Act for any cropland included in a set-aside.".

SEC. 103. The provisions of sections 112, 113, and 114 of the Agricultural Act of 1949, as added by section 102 of this Act shall become effective October 1, 1978, and any producers who, prior to such date, receive loans and payments on the 1978 crop of the commodity as computed under the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended by the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977, may elect after September 30, 1978, to receive payments as computed under the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended by this Act.

TITLE II—AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES UTILIZATION PROGRAM

SEC. 201. Title I of the Agricultural Act of 1949 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section 116 as follows:

"AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES UTILIZATION PROGRAM

"SEC. 116. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act—

"(a) The Secretary may permit, subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, all or any part of the acreage set aside or diverted from the production of a commodity for any crop year under this title to be devoted to the production of any commodity (other than the commodities for which acreage is being set aside or diverted) for conversion into industrial hydrocarbons and blending with gasoline or other fossil fuels for use as motor or industrial fuel, if the Secretary determines that such production is desirable in order to provide an adequate supply of commodities for such purpose, is not likely to increase the cost of the price support programs, and will not adversely affect farm income.

"(b)(1) During any year in which there is no set-aside or diversion of acreage under this title, the Secretary may formulate and administer a program for the production, subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, of commodities for conversion into industrial hydrocarbons and blending with gasoline or other fossil fuels for use as motor or industrial fuel, if the Secretary determines that such production is desirable in order to provide an adequate supply of commodities for such purpose, is not likely to increase the cost of the price support programs, and will not adversely affect farm income. Under the program, producers of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice shall be paid incentive payments to devote a portion of their acreage to the production of commodities for conversion into industrial hydrocarbons and blending with gasoline or other fossil fuels for use as motor or industrial fuel.

"(2) The payments under this subsection shall be at such rate or rates as the Secretary determines to be fair and reasonable, taking into consideration the participation necessary to ensure an adequate supply of the agricultural commodities for conversion into industrial hydrocarbons and blending with gasoline or other fossil fuels for use as motor or industrial fuels.

"(3) The Secretary may issue such regulations as the Secretary deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection.

"(5) The provisions of this subsection shall become effective October 1, 1978.".

TITLE III—INCREASE IN THE BORROWING AUTHORITY OF THE COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

SEC. 301. (a) Section 4(i) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (15 U.S.C. 714b(i)) is amended by striking out "$14,500,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000,000,000".

(b) Section 4 of the Act of March 8, 1938 (15 U.S.C. 713a-4), is amended by striking out "$14,500,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000,000,000".

(c) The increase in the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation made by this section shall be effective only to the extent provided in appropriation Acts.

(d) The provisions of this section shall become effective October 1, 1978.

TITLE IV—RAISIN MARKETING ORDERS

SEC. 401. (a) Effective October 1, 1978, section 8c(6)(I) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, is amended by—

(1) inserting ", raisins," after "apples,"; and

(2) inserting ", raisins," after "with respect to almonds".

(b) Within a period of sixty days following the second anniversary of the implementation of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report that shall describe in detail how this section has been implemented including, but not limited to, information as to the issuance or amendment of any affected order, the annual amount of assessments collected, in the aggregate and by size and class of handler, the manner in which such assessments were collected, the amount of direct expenditures credited against the pro rata expense assessment obligations of each handler, and the purpose to which such assessments and such direct expenditures of each such handler were devoted.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amendment of the Senate, amend the title to read as follows: "An Act to provide emergency assistance to producers of wheat, feed grains, and upland cotton, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS S. FOLEY,
W. R. POAGE,
E DE LA GARZA,
WALTER B. JONES,
ED JONES,
DAWSON MATHIS,
DAVID R. BOWEN,
CHARLES ROSE,
WM. C. WAMPLER,
KEITH G. SEBELIUS,
JAMES P. JOHNSON,
W. HENSON MOORE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

HERMAN E. TALMADGE,
JAMES O. EASTLAND,
GEORGE S. MCGOVERN,
JAMES B. ALLEN,
WALTER HUDDLESTON,
ROBERT DOLE,
MILTON R. YOUNG,
CARL T. CURTIS,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6782) to permit marketing orders to include provisions concerning marketing promotion, including paid advertisement, of raisins and distribution among handlers of the pro rata costs of such promotion, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text. The committee of conference recommends a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Except for clarifying, clerical, and necessary conforming changes, the differences between the two Houses and the adjustments made in the committee of conference are noted below.

(1) RAISIN MARKETING ORDERS

Except for technical and conforming changes, title VI of the Senate amendment is identical to the text of the House bill.

The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with the technical and conforming changes made by the Senate amendment.

(2) SHORT TITLE

The first section of the Senate amendment provides that the bill may be cited as the "Emergency Agricultural Act of 1978".

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(3) ADDIIIONAL SET-ASIDE PROGRAMS FOR THE 1978 CROPS OF WHEAT, FEED GRAINS, UPLAND COTTON, AND SOYBEANS

Title I of the Senate amendment requires the Secretary of Agriculture to formulate additional set-aside programs for the 1978 crop year under which producers electing to participate would be paid for diverting cropland from the production of wheat, feed grains (corn, grain sorghums, and barley), upland cotton, and soybeans. The additional set-aside programs authorized by title I include provisions under which—

(a) The program must be designed with payment rates to achieve a level of participation that will result in an average market price of not less than (i) $3.50 per bushel in the case of wheat; (ii) $2.50 per bushel in the case of corn (and an equivalent price for grain sorghums and barley); (iii) 60 cents per pound in the case of upland cotton; and (iv) $6.00 per bushel in the case of soybeans;

(b) Payments would be made to producers on a farm who—in addition to making any required set-aside of acreage for the commodity under existing law, and to the extent prescribed by the Secretary—elect to set aside and devote to approved conservation uses an acreage of cropland on the farm in accordance with contracts entered into by the Secretary with the producers;

(c) The payments for a farm would be at such rate or rates as the Secretary determines to be fair and reasonable, taking into consideration the productivity of the acreage to be set aside under the program, the extent of the cropland to be set aside under the program, and (in the case of wheat, feed grains, and upland cotton) the total acreage of cropland set aside from the production of the commodity;

(d) The total acreage of additional cropland set aside from the production of the commodity would be the amount necessary to adjust the total national acreage of the commodity to desirable goals, as determined by the Secretary. However, the rates of diversion payment must be estabilshed by the Secretary at such level as will together with the Secretary's exercise of his authority under any other program authorized by law, achieve the purposes of the additional set-aside programs and assure the total additional set-aside of not less than 31 million acres of cropland (15 million acres for wheat, 10 million acres for feed grains, 3 million acres for upland cotton, and 3 million acres for soybeans);

(e) The Secretary must limit the total acreage to be set aside under the program in any county or local community so as not to affect adversely the economy of the county or local community;

(f) Producers may devote the additional set-aside acreage to wildlife food plots or wildlife habitat in conformity with standards established by the Secretary after consultation with wildlife agencies. The Secretary may pay an appropriate share of the cost of the wildlife food plots and habitats and an additional payment if the producer agrees to permit, without other compensation, access to the general public to all or a portion of the farm (as the Secretary may prescribe) for hunting, trapping, fishing, and hiking, subject to applicable State and Federal regulations;

(g) As a condition of eligibility for participating in the program for wheat, feed grains, or upland cotton, producers must set aside any acreage of cropland required to be set aside for the respective commodity under other provisions of law;

(h) The Secretary must provide adequate safeguards to protect the interests of tenants and sharecroppers;

(i) The payment limitation provisions of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977 would not be applicable to the program;

(j) Producers desiring to participate in the program must file a contract to do so by a date established by the Secretary. The contract may be modified or terminated by the mutual agreement of the Secretary and the producer, if the Secretary determines it necessary due to an emergency created by drought or other disaster, or in order to prevent or alleviate a shortage in the supply of agricultural commodities;

(k) Fifty percent of any payment to producers for setting aside cropland under the additional set-aside program would be made in advance of determination of performance;

(l) The Secretary may make partial payments to producers who do not comply fully with the terms and conditions of the program;

(m) The Secretary may issue such regulations as he determines necessary to carry out the provisions of the programs. With regard to acreage planted to the commodity for which payment is made, the Secretary is to administer the program in such a manner as to permit the use of the additional set-aside acreage for haying, grazing, clipping, or wildlife food plots and habitat. However, no producer may devote any acreage set aside under the program to the production of Irish potatoes; and

(n) The Secretary shall carry out the program through the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The House bill contains no comparable provisions.

The Conference substitute deletes the Senate provisions. The Conferees note that the concept of voluntary paid set-aside programs contained in the Senate amendment has been adopted as part of recently-announced administration initiatives under the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977 (which are described in a Department of Agriculture Issue Briefing Paper dated April 3, 1978, and set forth below). Under those initiatives, there will be paid diversion programs for feed grains and cotton.

Producers who participate in the feed grain set-aside program may divert additional acreage equal to 10 percent of the acres planted to the crops in 1978 and receive a payment of 20 cents per bushel for corn (or 12 cents per bushel for grain sorghums or barley) on the normal production from the planted acres. In order to receive diversion payments on corn, barley, or grain sorghums, the producers' 1978 plantings cannot exceed their 1977 plantings or the normal crop acreage for the farm, and the diverted acreage must be devoted to an approved conservation use.

Producers may divert acreage equal to 10 percent of the acres planted to upland cotton in 1978 and receive a payment of 2 cents per pound on the normal production from the planted acres. In order to receive a diversion payment, the producers' 1978 upland cotton plantings (plus the diverted cotton acreage) cannot exceed their 1977 plantings, and the diverted acreage must be devoted to an approved conservation use.

Producers in the paid diversion programs would receive one-half of their payments at the time of signup.

Producers electing to participate in the flexible parity program for feed grains or upland cotton, as adopted by the committee of conference, may elect to divert an additional 10 percent of their feed grain or upland cotton cropland in order to receive payments under the paid diversion programs included in the administration initiatives. In this regard, the Conference substitute provides that feed grain and cotton producers who participate in any paid diversion program may not receive payments for cropland included in a set-aside program. (See the discussion of the Conference substitute in items (7) and (9) of this statement.)

The text of the Department of Agriculture's April 3, 1978, briefing paper on the administration initiatives reads as follows:

[Issue Briefing Paper, U.S. Department of Agriculture]

APRIL 3, 1978.

NEW FEATURES OF FEDERAL FARM PROGRAMS

BACKGROUND

The world has harvested two consecutive large crops. U.S. farmers have harvested three.

Declining commodity prices and farm incomes in 1977 were the result of large worldwide supplies of grains, oilseeds, and fibers and an increasingly large proportion of stocks accumulated in the United States. Liquidation of the domestic cattle herd because of unprofitable feeding and poor pasture conditions caused by drought also took their toll.

Realized net farm income in 1977 declined to $20 billion—in real terms, equivalent to 1971. The result of this overall situation was severe cash-flow and debt-repayment problems for many farmers. The severity of these problems varied greatly by commodity and by region of the country.

Realized net farm income for the first half of 1978 is at an annual rate of $23 billion, or about $3 billion higher than last year. Foreign demand for the major crops points to a record volume of agricultural exports in the current marketing year.

RECENT MARKET DEVELOPMENTS

Most commodity prices have shown appreciable increases in recent months from earlier lows:

Wheat at Kansas City from $2.30 last June to $3.20 now;

Corn at Chicago from the fall low of $1.80 to $2.43;

Cotton at Memphis from 48 cents at the turn of the year to 56 cents;

Soybeans at Chicago from $5.50 in October to near $7.00;

Rice from $6.87 at mid-year to $11.40 in February;

Choice steers at Omaha from $37 last spring to over $50;

Hogs from $36 last April to $48 now.

Even though commodity prices have shown these increases because of the farmer-held reserve, improved export markets (particularly for oilseeds), increased livestock returns, and some improvement in general economic conditions, some farmers still are experiencing severe problems.

ADMINISTRATION INITIATIVES

On March 29, 1978, the Vice President and the Secretary of Agriculture announced nine major actions with the objectives of dealing with these problems, further strengthening farm income, and continuing the steady growth in agriculture:

1. To ensure better crop prices and thwart runaway food price inflation caused by the weather, the farmer-owned reserve is being expanded and the terms liberalized. Grain placed in reserve will not be subject to interest charges after the first year. The reserve programs will be used to remove excess 1978-crop production.

2. To take excess 1977-crop corn and grain sorghum off the market, both crops can be put into the reserve program starting May 1.

3. To ensure that the United States can meet its food aid commitments in times of short supply and to support market prices, the government will purchase wheat in the market to build an emergency reserve of 220 million bushels, including wheat accumulated from CCC loan forfeitures.

4. To adjust wheat production downward, producers who participate in the 20 percent set-aside may graze out their wheat or harvest hay on up to 40 percent or 50 acres (whichever is larger) of the total acreage of barley, corn, grain sorghum, upland cotton, and wheat intended for harvest in 1978, and receive a payment of 50 cents a bushel or the wheat deficiency payment rate, whichever is higher.

5. To bring feed grain production in line with potential demand, producers who participate in the feed grain set-aside may divert additional acreage equal to 10 percent of acres planted to the crop and receive a payment of 20 cents per bushel for corn or 12 cents per bushel for sorghum or barley on the normal production from planted acres.

6. To adjust cotton production down, producers may divert acreage equal to 10 percent of the acres planted in return for a payment of 2 cents per pound on the normal production from the planted acres.

7. To balance soybean loans with competing crops, the loan for 1978-crop soybeans is being established at $4.50 a bushel, up $1.00 per bushel over the 1977 loan.

8. To compensate for increases in costs, loan and target prices for 1978-crop rice will be increased, according to law. Preliminary data indicates a loan of $6.40 per cwt. and a target price of $8.53 per cwt. There will not be a set-aside program for the 1978 crop.

9. To improve credit access for farmers and ranchers with serious debt-repayment problems, we are urging the Congress to pass our proposals for an Economic Emergency Loan Program.

IMPACT OF INITIATIVES

The reserve gives producers the opportunity to hold their crops off the market at low cost to await higher market prices, protect consumers and livestock producers against severe price increases in the event of a poor harvest, and ensure our credibility as a reliable supplier of farm products.

The diversion and grazing payments will:

Provide additional economic incentives for participation in the farm programs;

Give immediate cash assistance and potentially provide crop producers a $3–4 billion increase in net returns;

Strengthen market prices by bringing supplies into better balance with demand; and Conserve energy and natural resources, while providing an accessible land reserve for use when needed.

GRAZING AND HAY PROGRAM

Section 1004 of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977 authorizes the Secretary to administer a special wheat acreage grazing and hay program.

A producer who decides to participate must designate the specific acreage on the farm that is to be used for grazing or hay (cut immature for green chop, hay or silage). Acreage included in this program must be in addition to set-aside acres and be within the normal crop acres of the farm.

The payment rate will be at least 50 cents a bushel or the deficiency payment rate, whichever is greater. The total payment will be determined by multiplying the established farm wheat yield, times the number of acres in the program, times the payment rate.

Producers will receive a 25 cent per bushel payment at signup.

This initiative is expected to result in an additional 1 to 1.5 million acres being grazed or hayed, with a 30–50 million bushel reduction in 1978 production from current estimates.

Wheat prices will likely be slightly higher (3–5 cents) and net budget outlays will be slightly lower because of a reduction in deficiency payments and loan and inventory outlays.

FEED GRAIN DIVERSION PROGRAM

Section 502 of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977 authorizes the Secretary to make land diversion payments to producers to adjust the national acreage of feed grains to desirable goals.

The 10 percent voluntary land diversion program for feed grains is in addition to the 10 percent set-aside for feed grains.

To receive diversion payments, producers' 1978 plantings cannot exceed 1977 plantings for each of the crops, or exceed the normal crop acres for the farm. The diverted land must also be put into an approved conservation use.

The payment rates for the voluntary diversion of feed grains are: 20 cents per bushel for corn and 12 cents per bushel for barley and grain sorghum. The payment will be determined by multiplying the payment rate, times the established crop yields for the farm, times the 1978 acres planted for harvest.

At signup, producers will receive an advance payment of 10 cents per bushel for corn or 6 cents per bushel for sorghum or barley.

Estimates are that 10 million acres will be placed in set-aside or land diversion. Approximately 7 million acres will be corn, 1.5 to 2 million acres will be grain sorghum, and 1 to 1.5 million acres will be barley. Six of the 10 million acres will be in set-aside; four will be in land diversion.

The impact of this diversion program will be to reduce feed grains by 5 to 7 million acres from current estimates with a 4–6 million acre reduction in corn and a 1 to 2 million acre reduction in soybeans.

Feed grain stocks are expected to be reduced about 335 to 450 million bushels (corn equivalent) over current estimates. Diversion payments for this program will likely total about $625 million: $540 million for corn, $50 million for grain sorghum, and $35 million for barley.

Corn prices for 1978 are expected to strengthen 15–25 cents a bushel from current estimates, with increases to other feed grains in relation to corn.

Net government outlays are expected to be minimal because of a reduction in deficiency payments and loans and inventory outlays.

COTTON DIVERSION PROGRAM

Section 602 of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977 authorizes the Secretary to implement a paid diversion program for 1978-crop upland cotton.

Participants would divert cropland equal to 10 percent of the 1978 planted cotton acreage and also limit 1978 cotton plantings to not more than 1977 cotton plantings.[1] The payment will be determined by multiplying the 2 cents per pound rate times the farm yield times the cotton acreage planted for harvest.

Producers will receive a 1 cent per pound advance at signup.

The impact of this program will be for planted acreage to be reduced 500,000 to 1 million acres from current estimates with no diversion.

Farm prices will likely increase about 3 cents per pound, and net returns would be increased $50–60 million. Consumer prices of goods made from cotton will be slightly higher as a result of the slightly higher cotton prices. For example, the price of a $15 cotton shirt would go up about 9 cents.

Diversion payments will likely total $100 million, and be offset by a reduction in deficiency payments and loan and inventory costs.

EXAMPLES OF PAYMENTS

For Wheat:

Assumptions: A farmer has 1,000 acres of wheat planted and decides to graze out 400 acres. The farmer's normal crop acreage (NCA) is 1,500 acres. The farm yield on wheat is 30 bushels per acre.

Example:

	In acres
Harvest for grain	600
Grazed out	400
Required set-aside (20 percent × acres planted for 1978 harvest)	120
Balance to other NCA crops	380
Total	1,500

The payment for the 400 acres grazed out is: 30 × 50 cents/bu.=$15.00 × 400=$6,000.

For Feed Grains:

Assumptions: A farmer has a normal crop acreage (NCA) of 400 acres. He decides to plant 100 acres of corn this year. His 1977 planted corn acreage was 105 acres. His farm yield for corn is 100 bushels per acre.

Remember that 1978 planted acreage cannot exceed 1977 planted acreage in order to obtain the diversion payment

Example:

[In acres]

Corn planting intentions for 1978	100
Required set-aside (10 percent)	10
Voluntary diversion (10 percent)	10
Acreage that can be planted to other crops	280
Total	400

The payment in this example is 20 cents/bu. × 100 (acre yield) × 100 acres=$2,000.

For Cotton:

Assumption: A farmer has a normal crop acreage (NCA) of 500 acres. He is planting 100 acres of cotton this year. His 1977 planted cotton acreage was 100 acres. His farm yield for cotton is 500 pounds per acre.

Remember that 1978 planted acreage cannot exceed 1977 planted acreage in order to obtain the diversion payment [1]

Example:

[In acres]

Cotton planting intentions for 1978	100
Required set-aside	0
Voluntary diversion (10 percent)	10
Acreage that can be planted to other crops	390
Total	500

[1] See the change made in this provision described in Department of Agriculture Press Release dated April 6, 1978, which is set forth below.

The payment in this example is 2 cents/pound × 500 (acre yield) × 100 acres=$1,000.

[News, U.S. Department of Agriculture]

1978 UPLAND COTTON PROGRAM VOLUNTARY ACREAGE DIVERSION PROVISION REVISED

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland today announced a change in the 1978 upland cotton voluntary diversion program which provides that participants' 1978 cotton planted acreage plus diverted cotton acreage may not exceed their 1977 acreage planted to cotton. The program had allowed a producer's 1978 cotton plantings to be equal to 1977 cotton plantings.

To be eligible for program benefits, the producer must divert an acreage of cropland equal to 10 percent of the 1978 planted acreage. The 10 percent diversion plus the acreage for harvest cannot exceed the 1977 planted acreage.

Secretary Bergland said the action was taken in order to better assure a reduction in 1978 cotton plantings. With the diversion, U.S. Department of Agriculture officials expect about 12 million acres to be planted to upland cotton.

Eligible persons will be paid 2 cents per pound times the farm payment yield times the cotton acreage planted for harvest. Producers will receive 1 cent per pound advance at signup.

---

(4) 1978 WHEAT LOAN RATE

(a) Title I of the Senate amendment increases the minimum loan rate for the 1978 crop of wheat to $2.85 per bushel (previously announced at $2.25; it will be $2.35 if the average market price during the 1977 marketing year is more than 105 percent of the loan level of $2.25).

(b) Title II of the Senate amendment (which may be cited as the "Flexible Parity Act of 1978") also increases the minimum loan rate for the 1978 crop of wheat to $2.85 per bushel.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute provides that loans on the 1978 crop of wheat may be made available only to producers participating in the 1978 wheat program, and increases the minimum loan rate for the 1978 crop of wheat to $2.55 per bushel.

The Conference substitute provides that title I thereof, which establishes loan rates and target prices for the 1978 crops of wheat, feed grains, and upland" cotton and contains new provisions governing diversion programs, may be cited as the "Flexible Parity Act of 1978".

The Conference substitute provides that the increases in the loan levels and target prices for wheat, feed grains, and upland cotton contained in title I (described in this item and items (5) through (9) of this statement) will become effective October 1, 1978. However, any producers who receive loans and payments the 1978 crop of any of the commodities prior to October 1, 1978 (computed in accordance with existing law), may elect after September 30, 1978, to receive loans and payments as computed under the Conference substitute. Producers making such election will retain the loans and payments they have received and be eligible for any additional amount they are entitled to under the Conference substitute.

(5) 1978 WHEAT TARGET PRICE

(a) Title I of the Senate amendment increases the target price for the 1978 crop of wheat to $3 55 per bushel (now $3.00; it will be $3.05 if the 1978 crop of wheat is 1.8 billion bushels or less).

(b) Title II of the Senate amendment provides different graduated target prices for the 1978 crop of wheat based on the amount of acreage a producer voluntarily sets aside as follows:

Percent of set-aside:	Target price
20	$3.00
25	3.25
30	3.50
35	4.00
40	4.25
45	4.50
50	5.04

The House bill contains no comparable provisions.

The Conference substitute provides graduated target prices in three steps based on the amount of cropland a producer voluntarily sets aside as follows:

Percent of set-aside:	Target price
20	$3.50
35	4.25
50	5.04

The Conference substitute provides that all producers of wheat, feed grains, and upland cotton will be eligible to participate in the flexible parity program contained in title I thereof. Those producers who have already planted the commodity and do not have sufficient acreage of other cropland to set aside may set aside and devote to conserving uses a portion of their acreage already planted to the commodity. The target price that is applicable to the amount of land being set-aside shall be used in computing any disaster payments payable to the producer under the 1978 wheat, feed grain, and upland cotton programs.

The Conferees sought to clarify the requirement in existing law that acreage set aside from the production of wheat, feed grains, and upland cotton be devoted to conserving uses. It was noted by the Conferees that overflow river bottom land cannot be easily established in cover crops and that Johnson grass control in some situations calls for summer fallow practices. In these situations, the enforcement of the conserving practices requirement of law would be inappropriate.

The Department of Agriculture notes that the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977 provides that "the set-aside acreage shall be devoted to conservation uses, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, which will assure protection of such acreage from weeds and wind and water erosion", and that Departmental regulations provide that set-aside acreage must be devoted to approved cover crops.

However, the regulations further provide that State ASC committees may recommend, subject to approval by the Deputy Administrator of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, other cover or practices that will effectively protect the set-aside acreage from wind and water erosion. (The Deputy Administrator's office does not approve alternative practices unless the State ASC committee recommends it.)

The State ASC committees have in the past recommended, with the concurrence of the State conservationists, numerous alternative practices that may be performed on set-aside acreage. Approval has been given to varied practices recommended by State ASC committees that accomplish the conservation objective and resolve problems peculiar to certain areas of a State.

(6) 1978 FEED GRAIN LOAN RATES

(a) Title I of the Senate amendment increases the minimum loan rate for the 1978 crop of corn to $2.25 per bushel (now $2.00).

(b) Title II of the Senate amendment increases the minimum loan rate for the 1978 crop of corn to $2.40 per bushel.

The House bill contains no comparable provisions.

The Conference substitute (1) provides that loans on the 1978 crop of feed grains may be made available only to producers participating in the 1978 feed grain program, (2) increases the minimum loan rate for the 1978 crop of corn to $2.25 per bushel, and (3) increases the minimum loan rates for the 1978 crop of other feed grains in accordance with section 105A(a)(2) of the Agricultural Act of 1949. (Section 105A(a)(2) provides that (1) the loan levels for the 1977 through 1981 crops of barley, oats, and rye shall be such levels as the Secretary of Agriculture determines are fair and reasonable in relation to the levels that loans are made available for corn, taking into consideration the feeding value of the commodity in relation to corn and other factors specified in section 401(b) of the Agricultural Act of 1949, and (2) the loan levels for the 1977 through 1981 crops of grain sorghums shall be such levels as the Secretary determines are fair and reasonable in relation to the levels that loans are made available for corn, taking into consideration the feeding value and average transportation costs to market of grain sorghums in relation to corn.)

(7) 1978 FEED GRAIN TARGET PRICES

(a) Title I of the Senate amendment increases the target price for the 1978 crop of corn to $2.50 per bushel (now $2.10).

(b) Title II of the Senate amendment provides different graduated target prices for the 1978 crop of corn based on the amount of acreage a producer voluntarily sets aside as follows:

Percent of set-aside:	Target price
10	$2.10
25	2.45
20	2.25
30	2.65
35	2.85
40	3.05
45	3.25
50	3.45

The House bill contains no comparable provisions.

The Conference substitute provides graduated target prices in three steps based on the amount of cropland a producer voluntarily sets aside as follows:

Percent of set-aside:	Target price
10	$2.40
35	3.05
50	3.45

The Conference substitute provides for a graduated system of target prices for the 1978 crop of grain sorghums and barley at such levels as the Secretary determines fair and reasonable in relation to the target prices established for the 1978 crop of corn.

The Conference substitute provides that for any paid diversion program established under existing law for corn, grain sorghums, and barley in 1978, diversion payments will be made to producers only if the total of their acreage planted to the commodity for harvest and their diverted acres in 1978 does not exceed their acreage planted to the commodity for harvest in 1977. In this regard, acreage will be considered as having been planted for harvest in 1977 if a producer was prevented from planting the acreage because of drought, flood, or other natural disaster or other condition beyond his control.

The Conference substitute provides that no producer will be compensated under a paid diversion program for cropland included in a set-aside program.

(8) 1978 UPLAND COTTON LOAN RATE

(a) Title I of the Senate amendment increases the minimum loan rate for the 1978 crop of upland cotton to 50 cents per pound (now 44 cents).

(b) Title II of the Senate amendment also increases the minimum loan rate for the 1978 crop of upland cotton to 50 cents per pound.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute increases the minimum loan rate for the 1978 crop of upland cotton to 48 cents per pound.

(9) 1978 UPLAND COTTON TARGET PRICE

(a) Title I of the Senate amendment increases the target price for the 1978 crop of upland cotton to 70 cents per pound (now 52 cents).

(b) Title II of the Senate amendment provides for different graduated target prices for the 1978 crop of upland cotton based on the amount of acreage a producer voluntarily sets aside from production as follows:

Percent of set-aside:	Target price
20	$.54
25	.59
30	.64
35	.69
40	.74
45	.79
50	.84

The House bill contains no comparable provisions.

The Conference substitute increases the target price for the 1978 crop of upland cotton to 60 cents per pound, and provides two additional levels of target prices based on the amount of acreage a producer voluntarily sets aside as follows:

Percent of set-aside:	Target price
35	$0.72
50	.84

The Conference substitute provides that for any paid diversion program established under existing law for upland cotton in 1978, diversion payments will be made to producers only if the total of their acreage planted to upland cotton for harvest and their diverted acres in 1978 does not exceed their acreage planted to upland cotton for harvest in 1977. In this regard, acreage will be considered as having been planted for harvest in 1977 if a producer was prevented from planting the acreage because of drought, flood or other natural disaster or other condition beyond his control.

The Conference substitute provides that no producer will be compensated under a paid diversion program for cropland included in a set-aside program.

(10) GRAZING AND HAYING UNDER THE 1978 SET-ASIDE PROGRAMS

(a) Title I of the Senate amendment provides that—with respect to the required set-aside of wheat acreage under existing law—the Secretary must permit the production of hay thereon in any area where a natural disaster or other condition beyond the control of the producer has depleted stocks of feed in order that the stocks may be replenished.

(b) Title II of the Senate amendment requires that the Secretary permit grazing and hay production on acreage set aside under the 1978 set-aside programs for wheat, feed grains, and upland cotton. (NOTE: Title I of the Senate amendment requires that the Secretary administer the additional set-aside programs in such manner as to permit the use of the additional set-aside acreage for haying, grazing, clipping, or wildlife food plots and habitat.)

The House bill contains no comparable provisions.

The Conference substitute deletes the Senate provisions.

(11) NORMAL TILLAGE OPERATIONS ON 1978 WHEAT SET-ASIDE ACREAGE

Title II of the Senate amendment requires that the Secretary permit normal tillage practices on land set aside under the 1978 wheat set-aside program as if such acreage had not been set aside.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute deletes the Senate provision.

(12) AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES UTILIZATION PROGRAM

(a) Title I of the Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to permit the production of set-aside or diverted acreage of commodities to be converted into gasohol.

(b) Title I also authorizes the Secretary to provide incentive payments to producers to set a portion of their acreage for the production of commodities to be converted into gasohol when no set-aside or land diversion program is in effect. The incentive payments would be at the level necessary to obtain sufficient participation in the program to ensure an adequate supply of agricultural commodities for gasohol manufacture. Appropriations would be required to carry out the program. (No producer may participate in the incentive program unless he agrees to produce for gasohol purposes a quantity of the commodity equal to not less than 15 percent of the farm acreage allotment or farm base acreage for such commodity).

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may permit, subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, all or any part of the acreage set aside or diverted from the production of a commodity for any crop year to be devoted to the production of any commodity (other than the commodities for which acreage is being set aside or diverted) for conversion into gasohol if the Secretary determines that such production is desirable in order to provide an adequate supply of commodities for such purpose, is not likely to increase the cost of the price support programs, and will not adversely affect farm income.

The Conference substitute provides, effective October 1, 1978, that the Secretary—during any year in which there is no set-aside or diversion of acreage—may make incentive payments to producers who, subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, devote a portion of their acreage to the production of commodities to be converted into gasohol if the Secretary determines that such production is desirable in order to provide an adequate supply of commodities for such purpose, is not likely to increase the cost of the price support programs, and will not adversely affect farm income.

The Conference substitute provides that the payments are to be at such rate or rates as the Secretary determines to be fair and reasonable, taking into consideration the participation necessary to ensure an adequate supply of the agricultural commodities for gasohol manufacture. Appropriations would be required to implement the program.

(13) EXTENDED LOAN PROGRAM TRIGGER PRICES

Title III of the Senate amendment changes—for a one-year period beginning on the date of enactment of the bill—the release prices under the producer storage program for wheat and feed grains.

(a) The price at which producers may redeem commodities under the producer storage program is changed from a price not less than 140 percent nor more than 160 percent of the then current price support level for wheat or such appropriate level for feed grains, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, to a price determined by the Secretary not less than the current parity price for the commodity.

(b) The price at which the Secretary may require producers to repay loans is changed from not less than 175 percent of the then current level of price support for wheat, or such appropriate level as the Secretary determines for feed grains, to not less than 105 percent of the current parity price for the commodity involved.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute deletes the Senate provision.

(14) PRICES AT WHICH COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION STOCKS MAY BE RELEASED

Title III of the Senate amendment also changes—for a one-year period beginning on the date of enactment of the bill—the minimum price level at which the Commodity Credit Corporation may sell any of its grain stocks.

(a) The minimum price level at which the Commodity Credit Corporation may sell any of its stocks of wheat or feed grains when the producer storage program is in effect is changed from 150 percent of the then current level of price support to the party price for such commodity.

(b) The minimum price level at which the Commodity Credit Corporation may sell any of its stocks of wheat, corn, grain sorghum, barley, oats, and rye is increased from 115 percent of the current national average loan rate for the commodity to the current parity price for the commodity involved. (This minimum price level applies to wheat and feed grains when the producer storage program for the respective commodity is not in effect.)

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute deletes the Senate provision.

(15) INCREASE IN THE BORROWING AUTHORITY OF THE COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Title IV of the Senate amendment increases the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation from $14.5 billion to $25 billion, effective October 1, 1978. The increase would be effective only to the extent provided in appropriation Acts.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision.

(16) FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION REAL ESTATE AND OPERATING LOANS—ELIGIBILITY AND LOAN LIMITS

Title V of the Senate amendment—

(a) expands eligibility for farm real estate and operating loans under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act to include family farm corporations and partnerships;

(b) increases the lending limits for such loans (i) from $50,000 in the case of farm operating loans to $100,000 for loans insured by the Secretary of Agriculture, and to $200,000 for loans guaranteed by the Secretary, and (ii) from $100,000 in the case of farm real estate loans to $200,000 for loans insured by the Secretary, and to $300,000 for loans guaranteed by the Secretary;

(c) with respect to farm real estate loans, deletes the current total real estate indebtedness limitation of $225,000 and authorizes the Secretary to establish limitations for such loans on an annual basis; and

(d) for both farm real estate and operating loans, deletes the provision requiring that the county committee certify the maximum amount of loan that may be made.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute deletes the Senate provision.

The Conferees note that both the House Committee on Agriculture and the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry have reported bills containing provisions almost identical to the Senate provision and that the bills are to be acted on in the near future.

(17) MEAT IMPORT LABELING

Title VII of the Senate amendment requires that imported meat and meat food products be labeled as being "imported" or "imported in part", as the case may be, except when the country of origin is specified on the container or package. Any person, other than the ultimate consumer, who divides imported meat or meat food products into pieces or breaks a package or container containing imported meat or meat food products must label each piece, or its package or container, as "imported" or "imported in part", except when the country of origin is specified on the package or container. A product that results from a blend of imported and domestic meat may be labeled "contains imported meat".

The Secretary of Agriculture would assess fees on imported meat and meat food products to cover the costs of the labeling requirement. States that carry out mandatory meat inspection programs would be reimbursed for expenses incurred in enforcing the labeling requirement.

Any exporter that fails to pay an assessment will have his export privilege revoked.

Title VII would become effective 180 days after its enactment.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute deletes the Senate provision.

(18) COMMODITY LOANS

Title VIII of the Senate amendment requires the Secretary of Agriculture to guarantee loans made by commercial lending institutions to producers of nonperishable "specified" commodities for which a loan program is authorized. The amount of any guaranteed loan cannot exceed an amount determined by multiplying the quantity of the commodity by the loan level established for the commodity for the year involved. The term of the loan would be that agreed upon by the lender and the producer-borrower, but not in excess of 36 months. The interest rate could not exceed the commercial rate in the area.

Title VIII also authorizes the Secretary to make direct loans, through the facilities of the Commodity Credit Corporation, in amounts not less than the amounts prescribed for guaranteed loans and at the same rates of interest. There would be no maximum term specified for direct loans.

The Secretary would be required, whenever practicable, to use the loan guarantee program in providing an initial loan to any commodity producer.

No loan could be made by the Secretary to a producer of a commodity unless the producer had satisfied any prior loan on that commodity that had been guaranteed by the Secretary or unless the proceeds of the loan were to be used to satisfy the prior loan.

Both direct and guaranteed loans would be nonrecourse and would require no security other than the commodity involved. The Secretary could adjust the loan level for any "specified" commodity on the basis of the grade, type, staple, or quality of the commodity.

The Secretary would be required to establish mandatory release prices at which specified percentages of the quantity of the commodity under loan must be released for sale. Release prices would be established prior to the start of the marketing year for each commodity and would be established as percentages of the loan level for the commodity, plus carrying charges.

The Secretary could call the loans on any commodity if the Secretary determined that the domestic and foreign markets for that commodity were unstable because insufficient quantities of that commodity were being offered for sale, but only when the market price equaled or exceeded the release price for the commodity. Loans would be called chronologically, oldest to newest. Loans could not be called if that action would cause the price of the commodity to fall below the then current loan level. No new loan, nor renewal or extension of an existing loan, could be made on a quantity of a commodity if that quantity of a commodity had been ordered released or the loan had been called.

The House bill contains no comparable provision.

The Conference substitute deletes the Senate provision.

(19) TITLE OF THE BILL

The title of the House bill is "An Act to permit marketing orders to include provisions concerning marketing promotion, including paid advertisement, of raisins and distribution among handlers of the pro rata costs of such promotion."

The Senate amendment changes the title to "An Act to provide emergency assistance to producers of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and soybeans, and for other purposes."

The Conference substitute provides that the bill may be cited as "An Act to provide emergency assistance to producers of wheat, feed grains, and upland cotton, and for other purposes."

THOMAS S. FOLEY,
W. R. POAGE,
E DE LA GARZA,
WALTER B. JONES,
ED JONES,
DAWSON MATHIS,
DAVID R. BOWEN,
CHARLES ROSE,
WM. C. WAMPLER,
KEITH G. SEBELIUS,
JAMES P. JOHNSON,
W. HENSON MOORE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

HERMAN E. TALMADGE,
JAMES O. EASTLAND,
GEORGE S. MCGOVERN,
JAMES B. ALLEN,
WALTER HUDDLESTON,
ROBERT DOLE,
MILTON R. YOUNG,
CARL T. CURTIS,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. YOUNG of Florida (at the request of Mr. RHODES), for today and the balance of the week, on account of illness in the family.

Mr. RODINO (at the request of Mr. WRIGHT), for today, on account of illness in the family.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. KASTEN) and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter:)

Mr. KEMP, for 10 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. BARNARD) and to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous matter:)

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. GONZALEZ, for 15 minutes, today.

Mr. ANDERSON of California, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. WIRTH, for 15 minutes, today.

Mr. VANIK, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. LLOYD of California, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. PEPPER, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. GIAIMO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. HUGHES, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. CORNELL, for 30 minutes, on April 10.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

Mr. HAMILTON, and to include extraneous matter notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $1,889.

Mr. FASCELL, and to include extraneous matter notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $1,396.

Mr. HAMILTON, to extend his remarks in the body of the RECORD, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $821.25.

Mr. DELLUMS, to extend his remarks in the body of the RECORD, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $1,971.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. KASTEN), and to include extraneous matter:)

Mrs. HOLT.
Mr. COHEN.
Mr. MITCHELL of New York.
Mr. HAGEDORN in two instances.
Mr. WHITEHURST.
Mr. DORNAN in four instances.
Mr. GOODLING in two instances.
Mr. LAGOMARSINO in two instances.
Mr. GILMAN.
Mr. SARASIN in four instances.
Mr. DERWINSKI in two instances.
Mr. TAYLOR.
Mr. LENT in two instances.
Mr. SMITH of Nebraska.
Mr. WHALEN.
Mr. HANSEN in four instances.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. BARNARD) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. BRODHEAD.
Mr. PICKLE in 10 instances.
Mr. GONZALEZ in three instances.
Mr. ANDERSON of California in three instances.
Mr. HAMILTON in two instances.
Mr. SIMON.
Mr. FISHER.
Mr. GAYDOS.
Mr. EDWARDS of California.
Mr. FARY.
Mr. VANIK.
Mr. WEISS.
Mr. LEDERER.
Mr. MAGUIRE.
Mr. NOLAN.
Mr. STARK.
Mr. EILBERG.
Mr. TEAGUE.
Mr. HUBBARD.
Mr. MURPHY of New York.
Mr. HAWKINS.
Mr. JACOBS.
Mr. ERTEL.
Mr. ROE.
Mr. OTTINGER.
Mr. NEAL.
Mr. LAFALCE.
Mr. CONYERS.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1568. An act to name the lake located behind Lower Monumental Lock and Dam, Washington, "Lake Herbert G. West"; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 2540. An act pertaining to the inheritance of trust or restricted lands on the Umatilla Indian Reservation.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 2960. To authorize the Secretary of the Interior to memorialize the 56 signers of the Declaration of Independence in Constitution Gardens in the District of Columbia;

H.R. 5981. To amend the American Folklife Preservation Act to extend the authorizations of appropriations contained in such act; and

H.R. 8358. To amend title 44, United States Code, to provide for the designation of libraries of accredited law schools as depository libraries of Government publications.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 31 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, April 10, 1978, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

3784. A letter from the Chairman, National Advisory Council on the Education of Disadvantaged Children, transmitting the Council's 1978 annual report, pursuant to section 148(c) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as amended; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

3785. A letter from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a proposed plan for the use and distribution of Creek judgment funds awarded in docket 275 before the Indian Claims Commission, pursuant to sections 2(a) and 4 of Public Law 93-134; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3786. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a report of apparent violations of use restrictions involving defense articles furnished to Israel by the United States under the foreign military sales program, pursuant to section 3(c) of the Arms Export Control Act; to the Committee on International Relations.

3787. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, transmitting a report of unauthorized transfers of U.S.-origin military equipment, pursuant to section 3(e) of the Arms Export Control Act; to the Committee on International Relations.

3788. A letter from the Executive Director, Federal Communications Commission, transmitting a report on the backlog of pending applications and hearing cases in the Commission as of July 31, 1977, pursuant to section 5(e) of the Communications Act, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3789. A letter from the Counsel to the Pacific Tropical Botanical Garden, transmitting the audit report of the Garden for calendar year 1977, pursuant to section 10(b) of Public Law 88-449; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3790. A letter from the Executive Director, Military Chaplains Association of the U.S.A., transmitting the audit report of the organization for calendar year 1977, pursuant to section 3 of Public Law 88-504; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3791. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a Corps of Engineers report on the Colorado River and tributaries, Texas, in partial response to a resolution of the House Committee on Public Works adopted July 29, 1971; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

3792. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a Corps of Engineers interim report on water supply for the Duluth-Cloquet-Superior area, Minnesota, in partial response to section 102 of the River and Harbor Act of 1966; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

3793. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting the third annual report on the activities of Amtrak, pursuant to 45 U.S.C. 644 (supp. V 1975) (CED-78-67, April 5, 1978); jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations, and Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3794. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the problems in operating the Emergency Assistance Program (HRD-78-65, April 5, 1978); jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations, and Ways and Means.

3795. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a joint report of the Mid-Atlantic Intergovernmental Audit Forum on the Get Set day care program in Philadelphia, Pa.; jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations, and Ways and Means.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. FOLEY. Committee of conference. Conference report on H.R. 6782 (Rept. No. 95-1044). Ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina:

H.R. 11922. A bill to amend the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. ARCHER:

H.R. 11923. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide for automatic inflation adjustments in the income tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BEDELL (for himself, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, Mr. PATTERSON of California, Mr. MILLER of California, and Mr. SIMON):

H.R. 11924. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide graduated corporate income tax rates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BEILENSON (for himself, Mr. GAMMAGE, Mr. WALGREN, Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. BEARD of Rhode Island, Mr. MCCLOSKEY, Mr. JENRETTE, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. GORE, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. OTTINGER, Ms. KEYS, Mr. SIMON, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. PATTERSON of California, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. PATTISON of New York, Mr. ROSENTHAL, Mr. KASTENMEIER, Mr. BONIOR, Mr. FRASER, Mr. WEISS, and Mr. LAFALCE):

H.R. 11925. A bill to promote public health and welfare by preventing unwanted conceptions and reducing the need for abortions among all women, especially teenagers, through improved and expanded family planning services and population research activities by the Federal Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BEILENSON (for himself, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. MOFFETT, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. DELLUMS, Mr. PURSELL, Mr. BONKER, Mrs. BURKE of California, Mr. PRICE, Mr. BLANCHARD, Mr. JOHN L. BURTON, Mr. GARCIA, Mr. SEIBERLING, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. MAGUIRE, Mr. MINETA, Mr. MIKVA, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. UDALL, Mr. LEACH, Mr. EDGAR, and Mr. THOMPSON):

H.R. 11926. A bill to promote public health and welfare by preventing unwanted conceptions and reducing the need for abortions among all women, especially teenagers, through improved and expanded family planning services and population research activities by the Federal Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CONTE (for himself, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. CARTER, Mr. EILBERG, Mr. EMERY, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. FARY, Mr. GUYER, Mr. HOLLENBECK, Mr. KETCHUM, Mrs. LLOYD of Tennessee, Mr. LOTT, Mr. MOAKLEY, Mr. ROE, Mr. VENTO, Mr. WALKER, Mr. ZEFERETTI, and Mr. MCDADE):

H.R. 11927. A bill to amend the Buy American Act to increase the incentives for the purchase of domestic articles, materials, and supplies with regard to Federal and federally funded procurements; to the Committee on Government Operations.

By Mr. CRANE (for himself, Mr. BADHAM, Mr. DORNAN, Mr. KEMP, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. LENT, Mr. MARRIOTT, Mr. MCDONALD, Mr. ROUSSELOT, Mr. SPENCE, and Mr. BOB WILSON):

H.R. 11928. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to the tax treatment of earned income of U.S. citizens and resident aliens from sources without the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAGEDORN (for himself and Mr. GOODLING):

H.R. 11929. A bill to amend the Davis-Bacon Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. HILLIS:

H.R. 11930. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to release restrictions on the use of certain property conveyed to the town of Galveston, Ind., for airport purposes; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

By Mr. HILLIS (for himself, Mr. KEMP and Mr. CRANE):

H.R. 11931. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to allow taxpayers to treat certain federally required nonproductive expenditures as not chargeable to capital account and as currently deductible; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HILLIS (for himself and Mr. RAILSBACK):

H.R. 11932. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to include dental care, eye care, dentures, eyeglasses, and hearing aids among the benefits provided by the insurance program established by part B of such title, and for other purposes; jointly to the Committee on Ways and Means, and Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LLOYD of California (for himself, Mr. AMMERMAN, Mr. BROYHILL, Mr. GUYER, Mr. JENRETTE, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. RAILSBACK, Mr. STOKES, Mr. WATKINS, and Mr. WEISS):

H.R. 11933. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to allow a deduction of not more than $1,500 for amounts paid or incurred for maintaining a household a member of which is a dependent of the taxpayer who has attained the age of 65; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LLOYD of California (for himself, Mr. CAPUTO, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. CONTE, Mr. DAN DANIEL, Mr. DORNAN, Mr. GUYER, Mr. HANNAFORD, Mr. KETCHUM, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mrs. LLOYD of Tennessee, Mr. MARRIOTT, Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland, Mr. PATTERSON of California, Mr. PEASE, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. RICHMOND, Mr. RYAN, Mr. STOKES, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. WINN, Mr. YATRON, and Mr. YOUNG of Florida):

H.R. 11934. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to exclude from the gross income of individuals who have attained the age of 62 $3,000 of interest received during any taxable year; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LONG of Maryland:

H.R. 11935. A bill to amend the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 to provide an officer responsible for matters concerning or affecting manufacturers of solar technology equipment or other renewable energy technology equipment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. MAGUIRE (for himself, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. THOMPSON, Mrs. FENWICK, Mr. ROE, Mr. HOLLENBECK, Mr. RODINO, Mr. MINISH, Mr. RINALDO, Mrs. MEYNER, Mr. LE FANTE, and Mr. PATTEN):

H.R. 11936. A bill to amend section 307 of the Communications Act of 1934 to provide that each State shall have at least one very high frequency commercial television station located within the State; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MINISH (for himself, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. ANNUNZIO, Mr. EILBERG, Mr. FARY, Mrs. FENWICK, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. GONZALEZ, Mr. HANLEY, Mr. HARRINGTON, Mr. HOLLENBECK, Ms. HOLTZMAN, Mr. HUBBARD, Mr. HYDE, Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland, Mr. NEAL, Mr. PATTEN, Mr. RICHMOND, Mr. RODINO, Mr. ROE, Mr. ST GERMAIN, Mr. SIMON, Mrs. SPELLMAN, and Mr. VENTO):

H.R. 11937. A bill to revise the Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. MITCHELL of New York (for himself, Mr. KETCHUM, Mr. NEAL, Mr. MCDONALD, Mr. LEGGETT, Mr. LOTT, Mr. WALSH, Mr. TRIBLE, Mr. MANN, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. JENRETTE, Mr. HALL, Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma, Mr. BOB WILSON, Mr. ROSE, Mr. SPENCE, and Mr. CORCORAN of Illinois):

H.R. 11938. A bill to amend the Federal Civil Defense Act of 1950 to authorize appropriations for the purposes of such act for fiscal years 1979 through 1985; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. O'BRIEN (for himself and Mr. GREEN):

H.R. 11939. A bill to amend the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 to improve the formula for State allotments under part B of that act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. PICKLE:

H.R. 11940. A bill to provide that the antitrust laws shall apply to any joint agreement by or among professional baseball club owners for the telecasting of professional baseball clubs' contests if such telecasting interferes with certain intercollegiate or interscholastic football contests; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PREYER:

H.R. 11941. A bill to provide for complete financial disclosure by Members of the House of Representatives, Senators, officers of either House of Congress, candidates for Congress, and certain individuals employed by Members, Senators, officers or committees of either House of Congress; to the Select Committee on Ethics.

By Mr. RODINO (for himself, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. SEIBERLING, Miss JORDAN, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. MCCLORY, and Mr. COHEN):

H.R. 11942. A bill to restore effective enforcement of the antitrust laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SOLARZ:

H.R. 11943. A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army to dredge Sheepshead Bay, Brooklyn, N.Y.; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

By Mr. STUMP:

H.R. 11944. A bill to remove residency requirements and acreage limitations applicable to land subject to reclamation law; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. WHITEHURST:

H.R. 11945. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Army to return 10 paintings to the Navy of the Federal Republic of Germany; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. ANDERSON of California:

H.R. 11946. A bill to amend chapter 40 of title 18, United States Code, to require the addition of taggants to explosive materials for the purpose of identification and detection of such materials; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRON:

H.R. 11947. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code to provide renters with a credit against income tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KELLY (for himself, Ms. KEYS, and Mr. BURGENER):

H.R. 11948. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that greenhouses are eligible for the investment tax credit; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LAFALCE (for himself, Mr. CONTE, Mr. EMERY, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. RINALDO, Mr. ROE, and Mr. RYAN):

H.R. 11949. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to encourage the targeting of manufacturing related investments in labor surplus areas by providing, with respect to property placed in service in such area, and additional depreciation deduction and an additional investment tax credit, and by providing, with respect to real property located in such areas, an additional deduction for State and local real property taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LUJAN (for himself and Mr. RUNNELS):

H.R. 11950. A bill to expand the licensing and related regulatory authority of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for certain specified activities, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and Science and Technology.

By Mr. OTTINGER:

H.R. 11951. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to provide criteria and procedures for the renewal of broadcast station licenses, increase the ability of the public to participate in the regulatory proceedings of the Federal Communication Commission, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BAUCUS:

H.J. Res. 826. Joint resolution to authorize and request the President to issue a proclamation designating Sunday, September 24, 1978, as "National Good Neighbor Day"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. MITCHELL of New York (for himself, Mr. PATTERSON of California, Mr. CLAY, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. FLOOD, Mr. HYDE, Mr. LLOYD of California, Mr. GUYER, and Mr. ROE):

H.J. Res. 827. Joint resolution memorializing Dr. Mahlon Loomis; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. BOWEN (for himself and Mr. FREY):

H. Con. Res. 553. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that an Energy Conservation Impact Statement shall be prepared before any law is passed, any agency regulation or rulemaking is promulgated, or any executive order is issued; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CONTE (for himself, Mr. AMBRO, Mr. BEARD of Rhode Island, Mr. BOLAND, Mrs. CHISHOLM, Mr. COHEN, Mr. DRINAN, Mr. EARLY, Mr. FARY, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. HARRINGTON, Mr. MOAKLEY, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. RICHMOND, Mr. WALGREN, and Mr. WEISS):

H. Res. 1117. Resolution directing the Committee on International Relations to conduct hearings to determine the nature and extent of any U.S. involvement in the hostilities in northern Ireland; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MCEWEN:

H.R. 11952. A bill to provide for the striking of National Medals by the Lake Placid 1980 Olympic Winter Games, Inc., in commemoration of the XIII Olympic Winter Games; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. OTTINGER:

H.R. 11953. A bill for the relief of Lunette Joyce Clarke; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEERS:

H.R. 11954. A bill for the relief of Rodolphe H. Ellert-Beck; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

GOVERNOR LONGLEY RETIRES

HON. WILLIAM S. COHEN

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. Speaker, last Friday Gov. James B. Longley of Maine announced that he would not seek reelection to a second term in office. In doing so, Governor Longley, who is the Nation's only independent Governor, lived up to the pledge he made in 1974 that he would serve only one term.

lar in Maine, and he had been urged by many to continue in public service. In resisting this pressure and choosing to return to private life, the Governor showed exceptional courage and conviction.

Governor Longley is extremely popu-

It has been my pleasure to work closely with Governor Longley on issues of importance to the people of Maine, most especially on the critical Maine Indian land claim situation. I want to join the people of my State in saluting Governor Longley and in offering him my best wishes for happiness and success in private life.

Mr. Speaker, I insert in the RECORD a number of Maine newspaper articles and editorials on the Governor's decision:

[From the Bangor Daily News, Apr. 1, 1978]

LONGLEY WON'T RUN—GOVERNOR CITES ONE-TERM PLEDGE

(By Peter Slocum)

AUGUSTA.—Gov. James B. Longley, who was elected four years ago promising to return to his million-dollar insurance business after one term, declared Friday, "I will keep my word to the people of Maine."

The long-time Democrat, who was elected as an independent, thus ended speculation that he would try for another term or for the U.S. Senate. He is the only independent governor in the nation.

Longley, 53, did not finally make up his mind until midday Friday, according to sources close to the governor. And even then, the question nagged at him just before he went in to tell his staff and Cabinet.

"In the final analysis, in pondering my own decision relative to seeking re-election, I kept reaching the same inescapable conclusion . . . that nothing we have accomplished in this term would be as important and long-lasting as a clear demonstration to the people of Maine that this governor continued to keep his word," Longley said in concluding his three-page statement of withdrawal.

The governor, an emotional and hard-driving man who grew up in poor surroundings in Lewiston and made himself into a millionaire insurance man, left the State House with his bodyguard early Friday afternoon just before the statement was distributed to reporters.

Aides said he would refuse all comment on his decision until next Wednesday's cabinet meeting.

Longley won election in a three way race in 1974 with just under 40 percent of the vote. His popularity grew during his term, however, and most politicians believe he would have won a second term easily.

His popularity seemed to increase as he engaged in a series of running battles with the Legislature, the teachers union and other traditional heavyweights on the political scene.

The Longley administration, under a banner of fiscal conservatism, has held down state hiring, cut back on capital construction projects and preached, unavailingly, cutbacks in school spending at the local level.

Longley saw a $36 million tax hike pass over his veto in 1975, and then persuaded the Legislature to enact about $20 million in tax cuts this year.

Six candidates—three Democrats and three Republicans—are in the race to replace Longley, and a number of independents have announced plans to enter the race. The parties will select their candidates in a June 13 primary. The independents must file petition signatures by that date to qualify for the November ballot.

Longley openly considered breaking his word about running again for governor or for higher office, and kept speculation boiling himself by asking his supporters for advice. He sent a questionnaire to members of "Longley's Legion," his 1974 citizen's, campaign organization.

And the governor said his decision not to run came "despite overwhelming and mighty heartwarming expressions of support by thousands of Maine citizens who have again volunteered their time and their money for a campaign for this independent governor for reelection or other political office."

Longley got inspired to run for governor in the first place when the Maine Management and Cost Survey report he turned in to Gov. Kenneth Curtis, a Democrat, was largely ignored. The survey team was made up of leading businessmen dedicated to streamlining government. Longley headed the group and fashioned a political springboard out of the illfated report.

"This mission has not been completed. I will not quit," he said, announcing his candidacy June 7, 1974.

Three years and ten months later, the announcement apparently signaling an end to Longley's brief political career came just three days before the Monday filing deadline. It leaves a number of major unfinished matters on his gubernatorial agenda.

He has not made a decision on the hotly debated Dickey Lincoln hydroelectric project in the St. John River valley, and his withdrawal may reduce his influence over the project. While the Army Corps of Engineers, the project sponsor, has never violated the wishes of a sitting governor, the Corps may not feel bound by the decision of an outgoing governor.

And the Indian land claims dispute, with two-thirds of Maine's territory hanging in the balance, is far from resolved. Longley has campaigned vigorously against proposals to settle the suit out of court, but the final decision on whether to seek a court battle has not yet been made.

Longley pledged to be a fulltime governor through his final day in office, and asked his cabinet to stay to the end as well, said press secretary Ralph Lowe.

The cabinet members all rose as one to applaud Longley after he read the full statement to them. Some members of the inner circle staff were in tears after being told of the decision, aides said.

Longley was under intense pressure to go back on his promise and run again, particularly from friends and supporters in the business community.

The Bangor Daily News, the only paper to endorse him four years ago, urged him to run again in an editorial several weeks ago.

"As a citizen I say, 'Run again'," one close Longley friend told a reporter this week just after a private chat with the governor, "As a friend I say, " 'Go home'."

In his statement, Longley said that making the decision "has to be one of the most difficult decisions, if not the most difficult decision of my life to date."

AIDE SAYS GOVERNOR GUIDED BY HIS WORD

Jimmy A. McGregor: "The thing he wanted to be, more than anything else, is what he told the people of Maine he would be. He said he would be the hardest working governor he possibly could; he said that he would try to control the cost of state government; and he said that he would only seek one term."

(By John S. Day)

WASHINGTON.—Governor Longley is said to have only one advisor, James B. Longley.

There is one man in his administration, though, who is closer to the governor than others.

He is not a Cabinet member. He attracts virtually no publicity.

Jimmy A. McGregor has been with Longley from the beginning. The Alabama-born former UPI reporter managed Longley's improbable 1974 election victory. He has worn a number of hats in the administration.

The press usually describes him as Longley's "chief aide."

McGregor talked about the governor's decision not to run for reelection in a telephone interview.

"He weighed all of the considerations up until the last minute, but the big thing turned out to be his word. He gave his word not to seek more than one term in 1974 and he wanted to keep it," said McGregor.

"He has always tried to do this. I think a look at the record has shown that he has done it."

McGregor indicated that Longley had discussed the re-election question with him and other key aides during the last few days.

There had been strong hints to a number of persons during recent months that Longley would not run. The governor had suggested that in off-the-record conversations with NEWS Maine Editor Kent Ward and in a background briefing with the NEWS editorial board earlier this week.

Each time, though, the governor stopped just short of declaring that he had made a final decision.

According to McGregor, Longley broke the news to his immediate staff at 1:15 p.m. The Cabinet was informed at 1:30 p.m., shortly before the release of a three-page statement announcing the governor's intention not to file for re-election.

"I think that the staff was supportive of whatever decision he felt comfortable with. The staff realized it was a very personal decision with the governor. I don't think anybody tried to encourage him to do anything except what he thought he ought to do," the aide continued.

There were two major considerations which hung over the decision not to seek re-election, the Maine Indian land-claim case and the Dickey-Lincoln hydroelectric project.

Longley has taken a strong position in opposition to settlement proposals from the White House which would compel 14 major landowners to transfer 300,000 acres to the Indians. He is expected to announce his decision on Dickey-Lincoln in the near future.

Longley's position on that project is crucial, since the Carter administration has indicated it would not build the dams over the opposition of governors.

Longley is said to be leaning against Dickey-Lincoln. McGregor insisted "he does not have a closed mind on the project."

"Those considerations were weighed," said McGregor.

"He was concerned about whether he could be effective on those two issues if he did not run again.

"In the end, he decided that he could be just as effective, or more effective on those issues as a non-candidate."

McGregor offered his personal assessment of Longley as governor.

"He genuinely tried to do what he said he would do. He took his lumps and criticism. He made decisions which were not always politically astute, perhaps, but the overriding thing, more than anything else, was that he wanted to be what he told the people of Maine he would be."

"He said that he would be the hardest working governor that he could be; he said he would try to control the cost of government; and he said that he would only seek one term.

"I personally feel he has kept all those commitments. I sort of stand in awe of him from that standpoint," McGregor stated.

He said that Longley took office during a difficult period for the state.

"We came in just after the Great Society period in which government tried to do everything for everybody. The money had come from Washington almost like a never ending well to start up all sorts of exciting and innovative programs.

McGregor said that for a lot of governors, not only Longley, "this was the period in which the well dried up."

"There were some very tough decisions to be made. There was no way to make popular decisions on them. Everyone wants fiscal responsibility, which is fine, until you happen to cut one of their programs," he said.

"I think Maine sort of came of age. The state is in fairly good shape now. That in itself is an accomplishment."

McGregor summed up his assessment this way:

"These things would try anybody. I personally think that Longley handled this period with extreme maturity.

"I think he handled it well."

[From the Bangor Daily News, April 1, 1978]

THE GOVERNOR'S WAY

Gov. James Bernard Longley announced Friday that he will not seek a second term—a decision that elicits mixed feelings of disappointment and overwhelming respect.

For those of us who have consistently felt that this man is unique in Maine politics, Gov. Longley did not let us down.

He was, and remains, a man of his word.

It is ironic that the quality in Jim Longley that drew us and thousands of other Maine people to him, his integrity, was the prime reason that he will now step out of the political arena.

He told us he would not run for a second term, and he will not—this despite the important state issues that still demand his personal attention.

He could have rationalized his position, but he didn't. He had ample justification to stay on, but he won't.

Gov. James Longley knew that he had given something unusual to the people of Maine. He restored our faith in government and in the men who govern, and only he could have taken that away.

[From the Maine Telegram, Apr. 2, 1978]

GOV. JAMES B. LONGLEY

Gov. James B. Longley's decision not to seek re-election—or any other elective office this year—will remove from public life one of the most extraordinary political figures in Maine history.

As a comparative unknown, James Longley came almost from nowhere to win the governorship in 1974. As an independent candidate with no formal organizational support he succeeded in capturing the attention of an electorate which had become increasingly disenchanted with what it perceived to be "politicians" in both major parties.

James Longley's candidacy obviously met a public need at a time in the post Watergate period. He turned the pledge to bring hardheaded business practices to government in an effort to hold down the growth of state spending into a potent political force known as "Longley's Legion."

Once in office, the Longley administration lived up to its promises. The growth of state government spending was curbed and this year—reversing an historical trend—the state approved its first major tax cuts in memory.

Often irascible, occasionally petty, James Longley nonetheless brought the first new perspective to state government in more than 30 years by questioning policies and procedures that had become accepted facts of governmental life.

While the crowning achievement of the Longley four years may be the tax cuts approved in the last legislative session, the legacy of his splendid judicial appointments—based neither on political affiliation nor personal friendship—may be even more enduring. He set a standard of excellence which should become a benchmark for all future governors.

It will take time, perhaps years, to gauge the full impact of James Longley's four years in office. But it seems immediately apparent that he will be remembered as one of the most remarkable public figures in Maine's history.●

AMBASSADOR GOLDBERG PRESENTS LEV SHAPIRO HUMAN RIGHTS CASE TO THE BELGRADE CONFERENCE

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform my colleagues of a further development in the never-ending struggle against the cruel oppression the Soviet Union is inflicting upon its citizens of Jewish faith.

During the Belgrade Conference on the Helsinki Accords, I wrote Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg asking him as chief of the U.S. delegation to the conference to add the case of Lev Shapiro to the long list of those Soviet citizens whose human rights are being denied—in direct violation of the Helsinki Accords. Like so many of his countrymen, Lev Shapiro is being denied permission to emigrate to Israel with his wife and child.

I am gratified at the prompt response of the Ambassador, who informed me that he brought Lev Shapiro's case to the attention of the Soviet representatives at Belgrade as soon as he received my letter. The Ambassador's report on the Soviet reaction is most informative. Ambassador Goldberg writes:

As is customary with them, they refused to comment on the case, and presumably have forwarded my representation to Moscow.

Such has been the practice of the Soviet leaders. In fact, the Russians refused even so much as to consider the question of violation of human rights in the final report of the Belgrade Conference.

Mr. Speaker, the Soviets have attempted, consistently, to keep a curtain of silence around their brutal suppression of human rights. But we must continue our efforts to insure that such a policy will never succeed. We must do whatever we can to bring to public attention the Soviets' flagrant denial of the basic human freedoms. We must continue to insist that the Soviets live up to the terms of the Helsinki Accords, to which they agreed nearly 3 years ago. Through such efforts we can provide some measure of encouragement to those courageous Soviet citizens who continue to risk everything, including their lives, for the freedom to practice the religion of their choice in the country of their choice. I am confident that eventually we will prevail in this struggle.

It is with that spirit, Mr. Speaker, that I submit this report to the attention of my colleagues.●

TRIBUTE TO REGINALD DAVIES

HON. DONALD J. MITCHELL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. MITCHELL of New York. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, April 14, 1978, it will be my privilege to participate in an area's tribute to one of its most dedicated, sincere, and conscientious citizens and public officials, Reginald Davies.

Mr. Davies—Reg to one and all—will be saluted by the community at large for a distinguished record of service in a range of positions from the local to national level.

I have had an unusually good vantage point from which to observe this truly fine man in action because he has been a valued member of my district staff since I was first elected to Congress in 1972. More about this in a moment.

My purpose in bringing the Reg Davies story to the attention of my colleagues is to provide further documentation to a basic theory on the greatness of America. That theory is that our people—diverse in background, patriotic in purpose, generous of heart, and humble in spirit—are the Nation's greatest asset. Reg Davies is a case in point.

He is a man of the soil, a farmer. A man of faith active in his church. A civic leader actively involved in a number of community betterment organizations. A family man who knows and shares love. An individual who earned the respect of his neighbors and won their support to represent them in the council of government.

A quick glance at his record tells it all. Town councilman. Town supervisor. County legislator. Congressional assistant. To each of these positions he gave his all. And recognition followed outstanding performance. Chairman of the county legislature's important Ways and Means Committee. Chairman of Public Works. Chairman of finance and insurance. Majority leader.

For me and for our 31st Congressional District, he is a valued source of counsel. A man on the spot who is able to sense the moods, feelings, and needs of the people and translate them effectively so that I might be in a position to be both responsive and responsible in addressing them.

But good friend and coworker Reg is so much more than a Government employee and public servant.

He is a volunteer fireman. A Rotarian. A Mason. Member of the Sauquoit Valley Chamber of Commerce, Oneida County Cooperative Extension, National Holstein Association, and many, many other organizations.

The Willowvale Methodist Church and the Ziyara Temple of the Utica Shrine are enriched by Reg's membership and active participation.

What impressive credentials! What a distinguished record.

Reg Davies is a modest man, but an individual who has every right to stand tall and hold his head high as he looks to the future. In his way he has contributed so much to making today better than we might have hoped for and tomorrow even more promising as we face the challenges ahead.

I welcome the opportunity to be in the chorus singing the praises of this hard-working, decent, honest, and loyal American.●

BROADCAST LICENSE RENEWAL REFORM

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing the "Broadcast License Renewal Act," which is a revised version of legislation I introduced in the 94th Congress as H.R. 15168. The purpose of this bill is to require the Federal Communications Commission to adopt specific standards of performance for those seeking renewal of their broadcast licenses.

It is high time that the FCC adopted some specific standards by which the public interest can be protected, and by which there can be assurance of adequate service of public need. This is needed for protection of both the broadcasters and the public.

The bill provides for license expiration if a licensee substantially alters his format on a permanent basis, although allowing for up to 9 months of experimental format change. It requires the FCC to adopt rules for license renewal determinations, including quantitative standards requiring not less than 15 percent of programing be devoted to informational program service, such as news, public affairs and the like; for ascertainment procedures; for cross-ownership limitation; and for equal employment opportunity procedures.

These are a few of the highlights of the bill, which would provide for implementation of some of the changes raised in the 1971 case of Citizens Communication Center v. F.C.C. (447 F. 2d 1201). In a circuit court decision in that United Church of Christ case, Justice Warren Burger wrote:

A broadcaster seeks and is granted the free and exclusive use of a limited and valuable part of the public domain; when he accepts that franchise, it is burdened by enforceable public obligations. A newspaper can be operated at the whim or caprice of its owners; a broadcast station cannot. After nearly five decades of operation the broadcast industry does not seem to have grasped the simple fact that a broadcast license is a public trust subject to termination for breach of duty.

I commend this legislation to the attention of my colleagues, and hope that many of them will join me in cosponsoring it. It is particularly relevant at the present time as the Subcommittee on Communications prepares its revised Communications Act.●

DISMAY ON NEGATIVE AND RETROGRESSIVE SENATE VOTE

HON. JOHN M. MURPHY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. MURPHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the action of the Senate yesterday in rejecting an amendment to the Panama Canal Treaty that would have recognized the constitutional role of the Congress in disposing of the property of the United States provided in the treaty, should be a matter of profound concern to every Member of the House and of the Senate as well. The action flies in the face of the plain provision of article IV, section 3, clause 2 of the Constitution and the uniform practice of this Government from the earliest days of the Republic. It represents a radical departure from the theory of the Constitution establishing a balance of power between the three branches of the Government. It is especially in derogation of the role of the House of Representatives in the structure of Government in that Senate concurrence in the action of the Executive is substituted for enactment of legislation by the House and the Senate as the Constitution requires.

The denial to the House of the opportunity to exercise its constitutional authority will bring into question the legal effect of the treaty, inasmuch as the Supreme Court has repeatedly found that a treaty, like any other law, is invalid to the extent that it violates any provision of the Constitution.

The language of the Constitution is plain and unambiguous in committing to the Congress the authority to dispose of property of the United States. The action of the Senate in arrogating this power to the President and the Senate should not and cannot be accepted by this body.

The wisdom of the Senate vote in refusing to recognize the legitimate role of the Congress must be questioned when it is recognized that the vote adopts a constitutional interpretation which has been advocated by the Executive and which has historically been opposed by the Congress from the First Congress.

Whether or not a vote of the House of Representatives can be taken with respect to the congressional property disposal power before the Senate disposes of the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977, it remains of paramount importance that House Members sign discharge petition No. 6, relative to House Concurrent Resolution 347. The discharge petition is the most expeditious means of bringing the resolution to this floor and allowing all Members to express a position on a matter that vitally affects the powers of which we are trustees.●

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO THE PEOPLE OF BYELORUSSIA IN COMMEMORATION OF THE 60TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE OF THE BYELORUSSIAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker. This year the people of Byelorussia solemnly observe the 60th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence of the Byelorussian Democratic Republic which was signed in Miensk, the capitol of Byelorussia, on March 25, 1918. In commemoration of this most historic event, it is indeed significant and appropriate that we join with all Americans of Byelorussian heritage in saluting the people of Byelorussia in recognition of their valiant struggle for the preservation of their own national character and the restoration of the right to exercise self-determination to national independence and sovereignty.

As a Nation comprised of all nationalities from all corners of the globe, we are ever mindful and vigilant to the critical need to hold on to the traditions and cultures of all peoples throughout the world and their outstanding contributions to mankind. America is indeed fortunate to have had the benefit of the cultural inheritance and historical achievements of the Byelorussian people.

Mr. Speaker, on this anniversary observance of this historic agreement of the Byelorussian people, we here in the House can reaffirm our support of humanitarian ideals in our quest for a communion among all peoples of the world to achieve quality of life that will permit the widest possible expression of cultural and national heritage so important to mandkind's purpose and objectives in attaining a rich and lasting peace throughout the world.

There is a continuing need for concerted action in mustering world opinion as a viable force in achieving universal understanding and agreement on basic human rights principles to eliminate government controls that dominate the personal freedoms of the individual to live and worship in the land of his or her choice and stifle the independence and sovereignty of a nation of people.

On March 25, 1918 the Byelorussian people achieved national independence and regained the freedoms which had been lost to the czarist Russia at the end of the 18th century. This national sovereignty, however, was short-lived and the Byelorussian people continue their valiant struggle to again achieve their national identity as a sovereign state free from the forces of communistic domination and control.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of my congressional district and the State of New Jersey, I join in this annual observance of our Byelorussian heritage and trust that it will help to reassure those people whose human rights are held captive not only behind the Iron Curtain of the Soviet Union but throughout the world that through world opinion we can attain international understanding and agreement that will eliminate the oppression of people and restore "human rights" and the people's rights of self-determination to national and political independence in the so-called captive nations of the world.●

CLEANLINESS, AT A PRICE—ENVIRONMENT AND THE DOLLAR

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the following editorial which appeared in the Washington Post, April 5, 1978.

CLEANLINESS, AT A PRICE

To reduce environmental pollution, this country spent $35 billion in 1976. That, you will agree, is an impressive sum of money. It means that, out of every $100 that Americans spent for all kinds of goods and services that year, $2.03 went into pollution abatement and control. It bought things like improved sewage-treatment plants, antipollution equipment for automobiles, and scrubbers to purify the stack gases of coal-fired power plants. These expenditures are now large enough to affect the development of the national economy.

Congress generally treats the environmental legislation as, essentially, a moral issue. That, in our judgment, is the correct view of it. Pollution affects people's health and comfort. It affects aesthetic values and the pleasure that people are able to take in their surroundings. But to say that is not a license to ignore the costs, which have been rising steadily. The Commerce Department has been tracking these figures, and publishing them periodically in its Survey of Current Business. They nearly doubled from 1972 to 1976.

Within the past decade, American economic productivity has suddenly begun to grow much less rapidly than before. Productivity means, in effect, the amount that a worker produces in an hour. If it doesn't go up, neither does the standard of living. Why is it no longer rising as fast as it used to? There is now a good deal of evidence that part of the explanation is the large and rising investment in pollution abatement. Edward F. Denison of the Brookings Institution has developed a statistical method of breaking a nation's economic growth rate down into its basic sources. Mr. Denison, writing in the Survey of Current Business, offers an illuminating explanation of what's happening.

He identifies three changes that have contributed to the slowdown in the productivity trend recently. The most important of the three is the amount of money being invested in environmental protection. Another is the growing array of programs to protect the health and safety of people in their jobs. The third—far less welcome—is the increase in crime. Here Mr. Denison is speaking particularly of the types of crime that afflict business operations—holdups, shoplifting and other thefts of merchandise, embezzlement. Those three disparate factors have one crucial characteristic in common: They all tend to reduce economic output.

All three grew slowly in the late 1960s but, Mr. Denison found, they accelerated in the 1970s. They do not constitute a complete answer to the mystery of American productivity and why it no longer increases as fast as it used to. But by 1975 they had reached a scale at which, taken together, they would have offset about one-fifth of the traditional rate of rise in the productivity of an hour's labor.

Is that a reason for abandoning the environmental protections that have been written into the law over the past decade? Clearly not. But there is a certain danger. This country, in its high-flying way, might try to avoid the choice. It would not be uncharacteristic of Americans to keep pressing Congress for more environmental protections in the style of the 1970s, while pressing President Carter for faster economic growth at the rate of the early 1960s. In fact, something very much like that is going on right now. The warning that the statisticians are offering, in their intricate arithmetical way, is that those two purposes don't fit together.●

CUBA'S MILITARY COMMUNISM

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I fear that what has recently happened in the Horn of Africa is merely the prelude to a longer and bloodier conflict. The Cuban troops that were so essential to the Ethiopian victory in the Ogaden region are becoming a finely tuned fighting force and now, heady with victory, they are moving north to the province of Eritrea to continue their "war of liberation."

I am sure my colleagues are as concerned as I am about a protracted battle in the Horn, which will threaten our influence in one of the most strategically important areas in the world. And we cannot, I will argue, rely on Cuban or Soviet restraint in this matter and it is to this question of moderation that I wish to address myself.

In a recent article for Encounter magazine (reprinted and abridged in the Christian Science Monitor, March 17, 1978) Prof. Hugh Thomas discusses the essentially military character of the Cuban regime. What Thomas calls Cuba's "military communism" is manifest in their huge investment in Africa, which is dependent upon the Soviet Union for its policy formulation and logistical support. For confirmation of Thomas' thesis I direct my colleagues' attention to a speech delivered by our neighbor, Dr. Castro:

It is admirable how the sons of our people were able to march to such a far off place and fight there as if they had been fighting in their own country.

Admirable, indeed. This Cuban army should be viewed for what it is: The functional arm of a new imperialism, whose "combatants are making efforts to intensify their combat" and who, according to Castro, gain "inspiration" from each victory. What Mussolini said of his fascism can now be said of Castro's "military communism": (It) sees in the imperialistic spirit a manifestation of its vitality." What is not manifest in Dr. Castro's address is any concept of restraint and since "(p)hysical space is no longer anything for our revolution" we may ask what area in Africa can be safe from his "internationalist fighters?"

No, moderation and restraint are not characteristics of Castro's intentions, indeed, I believe his speech makes clear that what Professor Thomas says is true, "(Cuba) is unique in the Communist world for her capacity for war, not for her humanism * * *" and that she is well suited to the role of "spearhead of insurrection in Africa." ●

PROTECTING HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETIC PROGRAMS

HON. J. J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to amend the antitrust laws concerning the televising on certain dates of professional baseball games. Because of the extended major league baseball season, last fall we had a situation where a major league playoff game and a World Series game were televised on Friday nights.

This is exactly the situation we sought to avoid when Congress passed the law preventing television broadcasts of professional football games on Friday night. We did this to protect high school athletic programs throughout the country where interscholastic football games are scheduled for Friday nights.

When we passed this law, we did not foresee this possible conflict with major league baseball but I think we must now amend the law to prevent these baseball conflicts on Friday night. My bill would simply amend the present law by including "any professional baseball game on any Friday after 6 o'clock post meridiem" during the period of the second Friday in September to the second Saturday in December. And television agreements of these games would lose their antitrust exemption.

Mr. Speaker, I think we must take this action to insure that high school football games will not have to compete with major league playoffs or the World Series. If enacted, these playoffs games would simply be scheduled around Friday night. I do not think this is too much to ask to protect the major revenue source for high school athletic programs.

I have already discussed this problem with Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn and I feel he is sincerely sympathetic to the problems of high school sports. However, he has not yet been able to suggest a permanent solution. I believe this bill would provide that solution and I think that this issue is important enough to ask my colleagues to give it their consideration and their support.●

FOCUS: HOPE

HON. WILLIAM M. BRODHEAD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. Speaker, it is estimated that between 400 to 500 million people around the world suffer from malnutrition, making hunger one of the most serious problems facing mankind. This fact is largely obscured from us, because we are fortunate enough to live in a country where food is abundant.

A group of about 50 adults and high school students in my district are finding out for themselves about hunger and at the same time helping to solve the problem.

These concerned people—part of an interdenominational effort in the Detroit area directed against hunger—will be fasting from 7 p.m. this Friday, April 7 until 7 p.m. Saturday, April 8 at the North Congregational Church in Southfield, Mich. The purposes of the fast are: First, to raise funds to assist in alleviating hunger; second, to increase public awareness about hunger and malnutrition.

Sponsors of the event have made pledges of financial contributions based upon the number of hours for which participants fast. These contributions will be forwarded to Focus: Hope, Detroit's food prescription program for women and children, and to organizations that provide food assistance overseas. I will be speaking to the fasting group on Saturday afternoon. Other speakers and some films have also been scheduled as part of an effort to educate people on various aspects of the world hunger problem.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the fine people who have given of their time to make this fast successful. I hope it will result in a rededication of our efforts to eliminate hunger from the Earth.●

NEUTRON WEAPONS AND ARMS CONTROL

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, a leak to the New York Times over last weekend concerning an imminent decision by the President to forgo further development and production of neutron weapons has set off a classic rearguard action by defenders of neutron weapons in and out of the Department of Defense. The arms lobby has pulled out all stops in an all-out effort to turn the President around to approving further neutron weapons' development.

I am hopeful that when the dust falls the President will show his determination to put a stop to this new weapons system. The production of nuclear weapons is, in the final analysis, incompatible with the President's strivings to curb nuclear arms proliferation worldwide and this Nation's and the world's profound responsibility to begin the process of arms control.

It is, however, disheartening to follow this week's semipublic debate on neutron weapons appearing on the front pages of every major newspaper and realize that the news media have permitted the proponents of these weapons to define the issues to suit their position while blacking out almost entirely the contrary arguments. To paraphrase a famous statement, neutron weapons are too important for the fate of mankind to leave to the decision of journalists and editors.

There has been a great deal of license in the media in reporting what neutron weapons do and why they are needed. Far more emphasis has been given to the drama of the bureaucratic infighting over the neutron weapons that has taken place between the White House and the Defense Department than has been paid to the meaning of these weapons for present and future generations.

There really are three major issues involving the neutron weapons system.

First. Are these weapons necessary for national security and the defense of Western Europe? Emphatically, no. We do not need them to maintain the strategic balance of terror vis-a-vis the Russians. There already exists tens of thousands of credible nuclear warheads and missiles poised and pointed at one another. Nor do we need them to mount a credible deterrent on the battlefields of Europe to ward off Russian and Warsaw Pact tanks. We already have an estimated 200,000 highly sophisticated precision antitank weapons that, in the 1973 Arab-Israeli conflict, proved very effective against the most modern tanks of both sides. Additional improvements have already been made to withstand an adversary's tank assault.

Second. Should not neutron weapons be used as bargaining chips in any future arms control negotiations with the Russians? Unfortunately, history has shown repeatedly that virtually all weapons once regarded as bargaining chips eventually found their way into the arsenals of war. The Soviets obviously have the capability of producing their own neutron-type weapons at a future date should they feel the need to. If anything, as Dr. Egon Bahr, the West German leader, pointed out, "détente requires steps of reduction of armaments or its limitation and not steps for strengthening armaments or introduction of new systems, which will create new instabilities."

Third. Are not neutron weapons less harmful to civilians than the larger nuclear weapons? Dr. George Kistiakowsky, professor emiritus of Harvard University, former science adviser to President Eisenhower, and one of the original group of scientists who worked on this country's earliest nuclear technology at Los Alamos, has studied this issue, and shows beyond a reasonable doubt that neutron weapons will have a terrible and destructive impact on human beings. A forthcoming article of his presents these findings: In addition to the deaths of combatants within a mile radius of the theater of weapons' use, neutron weapons will cause all types of cancers in human beings close by the battlefields and incalculable genetic effects.

I am hopeful that the President will continue on his course and ultimately disapprove continuation of neutron weapons development and production. Next month the United Nations holds a special session on disarmament. Can we not show the world that this country has made a serious effort to put a stop to the arms race and that we are inviting all other nations to join us in reaching a comprehensive agreement to limit, if not eliminate, new nuclear weapons production? Should this fail, we, of course, have on the drawing boards such ominous weapons. But what if we succeed in taking the first step in the direction of genuine arms control and disarmament? We might then be able to regain control over our destinies.●

WCBS–TV OPPOSES CARTER CUTBACKS IN THE F–14 PURCHASE PROGRAM

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, one of the most important defense issues facing this Congress is the decision on future production of the F–14 fighter plane, built by the Grumman Corp. of Bethpage, N.Y. President Carter has proposed a drastic cutback in purchases of the F–14, which, if carried out, could seriously affect the capability of the U.S. Navy to defend its carrier force. Recently, WCBS–TV, Channel 2 in New York City, carried an editorial which cogently summed up the reasons why Congress should deny the President's request and continue funding for the full F–14 purchase program.

Mr. Speaker, I commend to the attention of my colleagues the WCBS–TV editorial as presented by the station's director of editorials, Peter Kohler:

Out in Bethpage, Long Island, Grumman builds the F–14, perhaps the world's most advanced fighter plane. But if the Carter Administration has its way, Grumman will be building fewer F–14s, and thousands of aerospace workers on Long Island may be looking for work.

At issue is the defense of the Navy's carrier force. The F–14 was designed to provide sophisticated defenses for carriers, through its ability to fire potent missiles at the most advanced aircraft in the Soviet arsenal. But the big drawback with the F–14 is cost, now over $20 million a copy.

The Carter Administration wants to sharply cut the Navy's orders for F–14s, and instead buy the F–18, a cheaper and more maneuverable aircraft. But, some Navy brass contend, the F–18 is really no bargain, because it couldn't mount the strong defense provided for carriers by the F–14.

With strong arguments being made for either plane, the decision is a tough one. But because the F–14 has proven its capabilities and effectiveness, and because of its importance to this region's economy, we hope that the New York congressional delegation is effective in restoring funds for the full F–14 program.

The F–14 program is not just makework for the local economy. And, of course, the decision to forge ahead with it should not be made merely on local political considerations. But the military case for the F–14 is a strong one. It is a good, proven plane. Congressmen from this region have every reason to fight for the F–14, and hope they succeed.●

ALIEN WELFARE

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

○ Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, Chicago's WBBM Radio 78 has a highly respected editorial policy. Their editorial of March 23, discusses an issue that has been boiling here in Congress, the alien question. I insert this spirited editorial for the Members' attention:

ALIEN WELFARE

Most of us are familiar with the problems of illegal aliens in this country. But what may not be familiar are some of the difficulties with newly arrived legal aliens—difficulty they endure and cause.

Four government agencies recently released information about the problems. The trouble starts when the new aliens arrive in the United States only to find their American sponsors who have promised to provide for their needs have bailed out on them, leaving them stranded with no means of support and many barriers to overcome.

Senator Charles Percy of Illinois introduced legislation to nip that problem in the bud. It would make the American's affidavit of support legally binding so that if the sponsor reneged on his responsibility and the alien became a public charge the government could recover the money.

That gives a clue to the second problem. Through loopholes in the present law, thousands of legal aliens receive Supplemental Security Income, SSI. According to the Government Accounting Office, aliens with less than five years' residency in five states, including Illinois, collected over $72 million in SSI payments. And most of the aliens go on the dole within a year of their arrival in this country. To combat this, Percy has proposed a 5-year residency requirement before most aliens could apply for welfare.

These are legal aliens, remember. And we're talking about loopholes in the law, not illegalities. But it's abuse nonetheless—to and by the aliens. And it should be stopped before it spreads further.

That's our opinion. We'd welcome a reply.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. SAMUEL O. GRIMM AND RUTH ENGLE BENDER

HON. ALLEN E. ERTEL

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. ERTEL. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, April 8, 1978, the friends of Dr. Samuel O. Grimm and Ruth Engle Bender will host an appreciation dinner for these two distinguished educators in recognition of their outstanding contributions to Lebanon Valley College in Annville, Pa.

I would like to share with the Members of this House a description of their very impressive accomplishments:

DR. SAMUEL O. GRIMM

Dr. Samuel O. Grimm, professor emeritus of physics at Lebanon Valley College, first joined the faculty in 1912, assumed emeritus status in 1970, but can still be found in the physics laboratory every day. Having first attended Millersville State Normal School, Dr. Grimm enrolled as a sophomore in Lebanon Valley College, graduating in 1912 with a major in biology.

His first job was that of principal of the Lebanon Valley Academy in which were enrolled students pursuing a curriculum of high school studies. In 1913 he was asked to teach college physics in addition to his academy duties. At that time physics was not a well-defined field, and only one course was then offered at LVC. Dr. Grimm spent the next three summers at Columbia University, studying with the eminent physicists, Robert A. Milliken and E. H. Armstrong. In 1915 he became professor of both physics and education. He served where he was needed. In 1920 he was appointed registrar of the college. By then physics had grown from one course to a department.

Over the years, he taught 26 different courses in physics, ten in mathematics, nine in education, four in history, two in psychology, in addition to instructing in geography, astronomy, surveying, and mechanical drawing. He was also, at different times, treasurer of the college, business manager, superintendent of buildings and grounds, and secretary and treasurer of the Board of Trustees. In recognition of his myriad accomplishments and services the college awarded him the honorary doctor of science degree in 1942.

Dr. Grimm and his wife Maude produced four sons who majored in physics at Lebanon Valley College. Three of them today are electrical engineers and one holds a position with the U.S. Weather Service, Washington, D.C. Dr. and Mrs. Grimm are active in church and community life. He has served in the local school board, taught Sunday School, and is a Rotarian and a Mason. The Grimms have ten grandchildren and ten great grandchildren.

RUTH ENGLE BENDER

Mrs. Ruth Engle Bender, professor emeritus of music education at Lebanon Valley College, first joined the faculty in 1918, served until 1922, at which time she went to New York for a period of two years. There she further studied piano, worked as an accompanist for the Noyes Ballet Company and was invited to give a recital on WOR radio when radio was in its infancy. In 1924, responding to the request of LVC President Gossard, who visited her in New York, she returned to the college to assume the position of Director of the Conservatory. She has been with the college since that time, assuming emeritus status in 1970 but continuing to teach part-time and to instruct private pupils.

A 1915 graduate of Lebanon Valley College, Mrs. Bender studied at the famed Oberlin Conservatory for a year and went on to graduate from the New England Conservatory, having studied violin and organ as well as receiving a thorough education in music theory and piano performance.

It was through her efforts that the Lebanon Valley College department of music became accredited and assumed a curriculum which would lead to a B.S. in music education. In the spring of 1932, four students graduated from LVC with a B.S. degree in public school music. Its course was approved by the state. This marked a turning point for the college which now offers the B.A. in music, the B.A. in sacred music and the B.S. in music education, and which now enjoys the reputation for having one of the largest, best equipped and best staffed departments of music in the east.

It is impossible to assess the full impact of Ruth Engle Bender on Lebanon Valley College. She made the pivotal decisions which brought stability to the music department. She has been a brilliant performer, accomplished accompanist, a superlative teacher with uncompromisingly high standards. She has been an ambassador from the college to the community. At the same time, the wife of the late Professor Andrew Bender was a devoted wife and mother of two children who now enjoys seven grandchildren and five great grandchildren.●

THE FUTURE OF FEDERAL RETIREMENT

HON. JOSEPH L. FISHER

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of my fellow Members, a timely document that we and our colleagues in the other Chamber have just received from the National Association of Retired Federal Employees. The document is a summary report of a 1-day symposium on "The Future of Federal Retirement" sponsored by the Association in January.

The symposium brought together leading social security and public and private pension experts in an effort to explore the feasibility of integration of public retirement systems with social security. The summary report highlights a number of the salient issues and problems with which executive agencies must deal in the course of their 2-year study mandated by the social security financing law, Public Law 95–216. I think it important that all of my colleagues review this brief but important report, in order to achieve a better understanding of the complex and controversial discussion surrounding the principle of universal social security coverage.

I believe that NARFE is to be commended for having sponsored this important symposium, and for making the report available to the Congress, Executive branch officials, the press, and concerned organizations.●

STEELWORKERS BACK "BUY AMERICAN" CHANGES

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, on two recent occasions I have inserted into the RECORD statements supporting the amending of the Buy American Act as we know it. These amendments have been proposed to safeguard the interests of our country, its economy, its domestic industries, and its workers.

I have cited examples which graphically demonstrate how the U. S. Government uses its taxpayers' dollars for the benefit of foreign steel producers at the expense of the American steel industry and its steelworkers. These examples were incorporated as part of the written testimony submitted to the Senate Subcommittee on Federal Spending Practices and Open Government during its hearing last week in Pittsburgh.

Today, I call my colleagues' attention to some observations made by Mr. Lloyd McBride, president of the United Steelworkers of America, during his appearance before that same subcommittee.

In his testimony, Mr. McBride astutely pointed out that "buy national" policies are not unique today. Indeed, they may sometimes be essential to a country's national and economic security. He mentioned some governments use a multitude of means to protect their industries, workers, and tax base and warned if the United States does not act to protect itself and its citizens, no one else will.

Individual nations, Mr. McBride declared, must seek to develop an industrial base which, so far as possible, will meet its defense needs while allowing it to maintain economic freedom. In circumstances where national security is at stake, he said a government should not use price as the sole determinant in selecting a contractor for a project.

Congress, the labor leader reminded, enacted the "Buy American Act" in 1933 to stimulate the economy and reduce unemployment during a great depression. Federal agencies were directed to buy domestic products when possible, provided they were available at reasonable cost and of reasonable quality.

However, Mr. McBride pointed out, the act does not define "reasonable cost," "reasonable quality" or what constitutes "materials of national origin." Consequently, the vague guidelines of the 1933 law became even more obscured through the varying interpretations of one administration after another.

This lack of definition is to be corrected in S. 2318 and its companion House bills, H.R. 9247 and 9248.

Furthermore, Mr. McBride correctly suggests the awarding of a contract to a foreign low bidder does not necessarily guarantee a financial savings to our Federal Government. Public revenues, he emphasizes, not only pays for the item bought under the contract with a foreign producer but also for the domestic unemployment that might result from the award of that contract. He contends, and rightly so, that it is unrealistic to ignore domestic unemployment costs in determining Government procurement policies.

For example, Mr. McBride testified that over the past 3 years more than 90,000 steelworkers have been certified for trade adjustment assistance because of the adverse impact foreign steel imports have had on the domestic industry.

In 1977, he reported, steel imports hit a record high of more than 19 million tons and during the last 6 months of the year more than 20,000 steelworkers lost their jobs. The procurement of foreign steel, including that permitted under the policies of our Federal Government, is a factor in those alarming figures, Mr. McBride believes. He observes:

It is ironic and counterproductive, when at a time of economic stimulation government expenditures stimulate foreign economies and create jobs for foreign workers.

The president of the steelworkers said it is expected Federal expenditures for State projects in fiscal 1979 will top $18 billion. Many of the scheduled projects are high labor intensive and will require substantial quantities of steel. This means, he pointed out, a great many jobs will be at stake when the contracts for those projects are awarded.

Mr. McBride concluded:

In the interest of a full employment economy; of a system adequately reflecting the true cost of procurement and of a concern for our national security, we urge passage of S. 2318.●

APPOINTMENT OF QUALIFIED WOMEN AND MINORITY INDIVIDUALS AS FEDERAL JUDGES

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, House and Senate conferees will soon begin work on the omnibus judgeship bill (H.R. 7843), which will authorize the creation of approximately 119 new Federal district court judgeships and 35 new Federal court of appeals judgeships. These additions will enlarge the Federal judiciary by 30 percent.

Enactment of the omnibus judgeship bill will also give President Carter and the Senate the opportunity to end the apparent pattern of discrimination against women and minority individuals in the appointment of Federal judges.

In an effort to encourage the President to correct the serious underrepresentation of women and minorities on the Federal bench, I introduced in committee an amendment which became section 7 of the judgeship bill passed by the House. The provision reads as follows:

THE CONGRESS—

"(1) takes notice of the fact that only 1 per centum of Federal judges are women and only 4 per centum are blacks; and

"(2) recommends that the President, in selecting individuals for nomination to the Federal judgeships created by this Act, give due consideration to qualified women, blacks, Hispanics, and other minority individuals."

Our Nation and Government, which are committed to "equal justice under law," cannot tolerate discrimination or even the appearance of discrimination against women and minority individuals in the selection of Federal judges. Full public confidence and trust in the Federal judiciary cannot be expected as long as there appears to be sex discrimination and race discrimination in the selection of Federal judges.

By retaining the House language recommending that due consideration be given to qualified women and minority individuals, the conferees have the opportunity to express clearly their intent that the problem of discrimination in judicial appointments receive Presidential attention.

The issue of qualified women having been excluded from the Federal bench and from the judicial selection process is discussed in the following article by Susan Ness in the March 26 Washington Post:

A SEXIST SELECTION PROCESS KEEPS QUALIFIED WOMEN OFF THE BENCH

(By Susan Ness)

One of the last white male bastions, the federal judiciary, boasting only 1.1 percent women and 4 percent blacks, is on the brink of the largest expansion in its history. The omnibus judgeship bill now awaiting action by the House-Senate conferees would create 145 to 150 new judgeships, thus increasing the size of the federal judiciary by more than 25 percent. Women and minorities will fill a significant number of these new positions only if the president and members of the Senate change the present selection process to provide equal access for these traditionally ignored groups.

The Marston affair, which recently focused public attention on the selection process for federal judges and U.S. attorneys, did not, however, reveal the devastating impact that process has had on the appointment of women.

Even when compared with other traditionally male-dominated occupations, the federal judiciary—the upholder of equal rights in the United States—is at the bottom of the heap. The percentage of women construction workers (6.4 percent), welders and flame cutters (6.3 percent), and even female locomotive engineers (2.1 percent), exceeds the 1.1 percent of federal judges who are women.

The paucity of women federal judges is shocking:

No woman has ever served on the Supreme Court.

Only 12 women have ever served on the federal bench in its almost 200-year history.

Only two women have ever been appointed to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

Only one out of the 97 authorized Court of Appeals judgeships is now held by a woman.

Only six of the 525 authorized federal judgeships are now held by women.

Against this background, candidate Jimmy Carter assured women's groups at the 1976 Democratic national convention that he would appoint more women to the federal bench. How has he performed? During his first 14 months in office, President Carter made 38 nominations for federal judgeships; only two were women. Of his 10 appointments to the U.S. Court of Appeals, not one was a woman. Yet Labor Department statistics show that more than 41,000, or 9 percent, of the attorneys practicing in the United States today are women.

Why is it important to have more women on the bench? Basic fairness demands it. It is a disgrace for a nation which prides itself on equality to have only males deciding the critical legal issues of our day. An all-male Supreme Court decided in Geduldig v. Aiello that excluding pregnancy-related conditions from coverage under disability insurance, while including coverage of prostate-related conditions, is not discriminatory. An all-female Supreme Court would never have reached that decision.

Do we lack women attorneys qualified to be judges? Gov. Jerry Brown of California dispelled that myth by appointing 42 women to state judgeships. One of those women, Rose Elizabeth Bird, was selected to be chief justice of the California Supreme Court.

Not a lack of qualified women, but the method of judicial selection, has preserved the federal bench as a male domain. That process, complex and decentralized, is encumbered with many of the same barriers which blocked women during Carter's search for cabinet and sub-cabinet appointees:

Selection criteria tend to favor men.

A double standard prevails in applying the selection criteria.

Primarily men—the "old boy network"—make the selections.

Certain selection criteria have the effect of barring women from the judiciary. A Justice Department guideline disqualifies, except in unusual circumstances, qualified candidates who have practiced law for less than 15 years. Since women and minorities have only recently gained access to legal training in significant numbers, the "15-year rule" works to exclude women. Had the 15-year rule been applied in California, the present chief justice of that state's supreme court would not now occupy the bench.

A double standard in the application of selection criteria is another major obstacle in the path of would-be women jurists. For example, all seven of the women and minority members who have been nominated to federal judgeships by the Carter administration have had previous judicial experience. But only 35 percent of the white made district court nominees and 28 percent of the circuit court appointees had such experience.

The highest hurdle for women, however, is the overwhelming predominance of men in the judicial selection process. Although the Constitution gives the president the power to appoint federal judges with the advice and consent of the Senate, the political reality of the appointments process, as Attorney General Griffin Bell recently acknowledged, is that "the Senate nominates and the president confirms."

The senators, who until the appointment of Muriel Humphrey constituted an all-male club, make their selections based on a variety of factors. Many senators treat judicial appointments as political patronage—a way of rewarding campaign contributors, former elected officials and loyal staff.

Research by Susan Tolchin, director of the Washington Institute for Women in Politics, indicates that some senators have considered it politically necessary to recommend a black or a member of a particular ethnic or religious group for a judgeship, but until very recently no one has perceived a simiar political need to satisfy women's groups.

At the behest of the president, a growing number of senators have set up selection panels to screen candidates for U.S. district court judgeships and to forward the names of the top five applicants either to the senator or to the White House for final selection. Passage of the omnibus judgeship bill will undoubtedly prompt more senators to create such panels. Attorney General Bell's recent praise for these panels, however, may be premature.

Selection panels may not look like patronage, but almost all the 15 panels established to date have merely institutionalized the old-boy network which senators previously relied upon to make judicial nominations. Even though women are a majority of the population, and the panels purport to reflect a state's diversity, 78.3 percent of these panels' members are male. Of the attorneys on the panel, 92.4 percent are men. No panel is chaired by a woman. No bar association recommended a woman attorney to fill a slot on any of the panels.

With so few women, and even fewer female attorneys represented it is no wonder that hardly any panels have recommended women for judicial appointments.

For example, Sen. Jacob Javits' six-member judicial selection panel, set up 8 years ago, has no women. Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan's recently established 10-member panel includes only one woman—a nonlawyer. Not surprisingly, the first five out of six vacancies on the district court in New York were filled by men. This despite the fact that New York has one of the highest concentrations of women attorneys in the country as well as a very active women's bar.

By executive order last year, President Carter created nominating commissions to screen candidates for U.S. appeals court judgeships. These panels made up largely of early campaign supporters, include lawyers and non-lawyers alike. Although the Carter administration speaks of seeking for qualified women and minorities to appoint to the bench, it did not require its handpicked panels to search out members of these groups for consideration. None of Carter's initial 10 panels is chaired by a woman. And while 73 percent of the male panelists are lawyers, only 36 percent of the women panel members are attorneys.

One way of significantly increasing the chances for qualified women and minorities to be appointed would be for the Carter administration, which is currently revising its executive order seting up the nominating panels, to include a requirement for searching out candidates from groups traditionally overlooked in the selection process.

Even after an individual has been selected by either a senator, or the White House as a potential jurist, the male-dominated screening process continues. The name is sent to the 14-member American Bar Association Committee on the Federal Judiciary. Although not affiliated with the federal government, this group nonetheless has been given the power to evaluate the legal qualifications of all designees. The committee, which takes great pride in having reviewed more than 1,000 individuals over a 25-year period, lost its all-male status only recently when a woman was appointed by the president of the ABA.

In 1977, the Carter administration called upon the National Bar Association, a black group, to review the qualifications of judicial candidates. Apparently no one at the White House has thought to ask a women's bar group or a legal panel of representatives from women's rights organizations to conduct similar reviews.

Thus, we see a combination of restrictive criteria, apparent double standards and the male-dominated selection process perpetuating an essentially white male judiciary. The omnibus judgeship bill gives the administration and the Senate an unparalleled opportunity to redress this imbalance.

Women's groups, such as the National Women's Political Caucus, and other public interest groups are vigorously lobbying on these appointments. They are acutely aware that these lifetime appointees will be making law on civil rights and women's rights issues for years to come.

LEV ELBERT: A STUDY IN COURAGE

HON. JOSHUA EILBERG

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

Mr. EILBERG. Mr. Speaker, as part of our continuing participation in the vigil for freedom for Soviet Jewry, I call to the attention of my colleagues the plight of Lev Elbert and his wife, Inna, two courageous Soviet Jewish activists in Kiev.

Since 1976, the Elberts have been denied permission to emigrate to Israel. Their exit permits have been denied on the grounds that Lev Elbert had access to "secret information" while he was in the army.

But in fact, Elbert served as a private in the Soviet Army, in a construction battalion which built a swimming pool. At no point did he have access to classified material; nor did he receive a security clearance.

Just to demonstrate how brave the Elberts are in standing up to the Soviet Government, let us look at the type of harassment they have endured:

In February 1977, they were among six Jews in Kiev who took part in a demonstration at the Ukrainian Supreme Soviet to demand that written reasons be given for all denials of exit visas.

No untoward incidents occurred at that time. However, in April 1977, Inna, a physician, was beaten up twice in one day by attackers who threatened that if she persisted with her application for emigration she coud expect more trouble. When the police were summoned by a passerby, Inna reported: "They merely went through the motions of looking at their identity cards and took no further action."

Undaunted, her husband several days later, was one of seven in Kiev who embarked on a five-day hunger strike to protest their continued refusals.

In a recent appeal, Lev wrote:

"My constant and thoroughly motivated complaints and applications to the authorities stating how ludicrous my refusal was, has been of no avail. I ask you to intercede on behalf of my family with the Soviet Government, which as signatory to the Helsinki Agreement, should allow us the undeniable human right to choose the country to live in, and enable us to reunite with our relatives in Israel."

And from Israel, Inna's brother, Dr. Alexander Mizrukhim, wrote:

"I appeal to all who are not indifferent to human rights and the fate of separated families of Soviet Jews.

"* * * They are now in very dangerous position. They are constantly persecuted by the KGB * * * The only 'anti-Soviet activity' of my sister and her husband has been the strong desire to go to Israel, the desire to reunify our family. * * *

"We have applied to all Soviet authorities, but in vain. Now I ask the Soviet government: What worth are the words in the Helsinki Agreement?

"I appeal to the people and government of the United States—the country of great democracy. I request help to reunite our family in Israel, our homeland—the day to which is so long and painful for Soviet Jews."

Mr. Speaker, I submit this record of Lev and Inna Elbert's plight as a testimony to our commitment to continue working on behalf of Soviet Jews denied their rights to free emigration.

SOVIETS REFUSE EMIGRATION TO TWO AMERICAN CITIZENS SINCE 1945

HON. JOHN G. FARY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. FARY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my fellow colleagues one of the most tragic stories of family separation that has ever been brought to my attention. I am speaking of the plight of John Jodwalis and his sister, Lorraine Jodwalis Vaicekauskiene. They are American citizens who have been virtual prisoners of the Soviet Union since 1945.

John and Lorraine Jodwalis were born in Chicago in the 1920's, and on July 5, 1930, they and three older brothers and sisters accompanied their mother on a visit to her native Lithuania. At that time, Lithuania was an independent nation. The Jodwalis' only intended to stay for 3 years but the Depression here in the United States compelled their father, who had remained in Chicago, to urge them to stay in Lithuania a little longer and he would send them money.

As Europe moved closer to war with Nazi Germany, the three older children came back to the United States to contribute to the war effort, while John, Lorraine, and their mother stayed behind in Lithuania and were trapped there as fighting broke out between German and Russian troops.

In 1941, the Russians drove the Germans out of Lithuania, but the Red army remained and later annexed Lithuania to the Soviet Union.

At age 18, John was drafted into the Soviet Army but he refused induction on the grounds that he was an American citizen and would join the American Army in the war effort. For this, he was arrested, along with his sister, and sentenced to life imprisonment at hard labor in Siberia, with John being sent to the infamous Vorkuta gold mines mentioned in Alexander Solzhenitsyn's Gulag Archipelago.

They stayed in Siberia for 11 years, until their case was reviewed by the new government of Nikita Khrushchev. They were released and permitted to return to Lithuania, but were given Soviet internal passports, which made them Soviet citizens. Therefore, their status as Soviet citizens thwarted all attempts to have them repatriated to the United States.

Their predicament is that they are both American and Soviet citizens. Since they are classifed as a Soviet citizen, they must apply for an emigration visa from the Soviet authorities if they are to return to America.

They have submitted emigration requests every year for the past 20 years but the Soviets have rejected every request the Jodwalis' have made, without even having the decency to explain why. Efforts by the Jodwalis family and the State Department to have them returned to the United States go back as far as 1945, but their efforts have been frustrated by a capricious Soviet bureaucracy.

In March of 1977, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance visited Moscow and presented Soviet officials with a list of 366 persons for whom the United States is seeking emigration permits. John, Lorraine and the children they have raised in Lithuania are among them.

However, no appeals made on the Jodwalis' behalf have been successful as we have still not received a favorable response from Soviet authorities.

I should like to point out that under Soviet law and the human rights provisions of the Helsinki agreement, which the Soviet Union signed, John and Lorraine have the right to emigrate and be reunited with their family here in America.

Soviet officials are quick to point out that they will not allow emigration for citizens who have worked in the defense industry and who have had access to sensitive state secrets. John Jodwalis is a tool and diemaker in Kaunus, Lithuania and Lorraine is a medical records clerk at a health institution and as such, pose no danger to Soviet security.

Mr. Speaker, I feel the Jodwalis case is one of the saddest examples of family separation that I can ever recall and furthermore, feel that the Soviet response to our efforts have been less than in the spirit of the Helsinki accords, of which the Soviets are signatories. Therefore, I ask my distinguished colleagues to join me in requesting that the President and the Secretary of State use their influence to expedite the return of John Jodwalis and Lorraine Jodwalis Vaicekuaskiene, both American citizens, to the United States to be reunited with the family they haven't seen in 48 years.●

ALFRED SANTANGELO

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 5, 1978

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to join with my colleagues in expressing deepest sympathy to the family of our late colleague, Alfred Santangelo. Al served the people of New York's 10th Congressional District well during his tenure in the House and personally helped me a great deal in my 1970 bid for the Senate. He has left his mark on the Congress and will be sorely missed.●

INFLATION: THE PERSISTENT CHALLENGE

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for April 5, 1978 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

INFLATION: THE PERSISTENT CHALLENGE

Inflation has become the nation's chief economic problem. National surveys indicate that inflation, rather than unemployment, has the most people worried. According to the results of my annual questionnaire, Ninth District residents believe that inflation should be the first concern of policymakers.

Aside from inflation, the economic skies are bright. On the domestic scene, joblessness has dropped to 6.1%, corporate profits are improving, capital spending is perking up and interest rates this year have moved sideways or down. Our international economic prospects are better with the help of some slackening of oil imports, an evening up of growth rates among the United States and its trading partners, a firming up of the dollar against most major currencies and a solid outlook for farm exports. Worsening inflation is the only fly in the ointment.

Inflation may very well be the most difficult of our economic challenges. The administration's mild anti-inflation program is not succeeding. Most witnesses at congressional hearings suggest that inflation is likely to accelerate from its basic 6% rate. To make matters worse, inflationary pressures are squeezing us from many sides. The dollar's recent decline has increased the price of imported goods and caused the OPEC nations to threaten another rise in oil prices. Food prices have edged up due to bad weather and snarled transportation. The coal settlement will further boost the Consumer Price Index and the outcome of other labor negotiations may tend to do the same. Finally, the government itself has been promoting inflation—not intentionally, perhaps, but prices are moving steadily up as a result of various federal spending, trade and regulatory measures.

Until recently, government officials argued that unemployment and inflation were equally important problems. However, with the jobs picture improving many policymakers are shifting their posture on the issue. Pressure is building for the President and the Congress to curb rising prices. The President's top advisors have called upon him to accept the idea that inflation has replaced joblessness as the principal economic worry. One advisor warns that without additional action the nation will soon face a significant acceleration of price increases.

Many experts stress that we do not know how to control inflation effectively. I do not disagree with these experts, but I think we must recognize that inflation may often be more a result of political expediency than of ignorance. The government must confront the narrow demands of many small but powerful constituencies. In responding to those demands, the government sometimes gives long-term wage and price stability a lesser priority than it should have. The desire to hold down inflation may not count for much when a specific case is being considered. All of us hate inflation, but we want someone else to pay the price of stopping it. The major stumbling block on the road to lower rates of inflation may not be ignorance or ineffective tools, but rather a political inability to take the right action at the right time.

The two traditional approaches to the inflation problem simply have not worked. One emphasizes increased growth and investment while the other favors restrictive policies applied long enough to wring inflation out of the economy. Obviously, other approaches must be tried. I have great interest in granting tax relief for wage and price restraint. It may be imprudent to provide such relief before subjecting it to much wider discussion and examination, but the momentum of inflation is so great that the proposal should be taken seriously.

Other steps can be taken as well. The government must become much more serious about its own inflationary actions. It may be advisable to have an annual government report on programs which have raised or lowered prices. Perhaps we should set a target this year of no new federal impact on price levels. The government should aim to reduce the federal deficit and should use a wide variety of employment programs to help achieve full employment without inflation. It should also intensify efforts to win labor and business support for voluntary wage and price restraint. Finally, a number of specific steps must be considered, such as reducing the federal pay raise scheduled to take effect this fall, containing costs in those industries where price increases have been very rapid, expanding the timber harvest on federal lands to hold lumber prices down, increasing industry competition to lower charges for goods and services, and urging state and local governments to cut sales and property taxes.

These ideas will not be popular, but there is no easy way to fight inflation. If we do not work together to reduce the rates of inflation in all sectors of the economy, price increases could become so rapid that much harsher measures would be necessary in the future.●

ELITE EMPLOYEE GROUP

HON. TOM HAGEDORN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Speaker, for those curious about the growing resentment toward Federal employees among the general public, the following chart might provide a clue. Nearly one in every five Government workers earns $30,000 or more yearly, with nearly 32,000 Federal workers earning more than $40,000 per year. How many among us believe that we are getting our money's worth out of Government? How many of these employees could earn half their salary in the private sector?

FIFTEEN ELITE AGENCIES

These agencies outrank all other large federal organizations in share of highly paid employees—

Percentage of workers paid more than $30,000 a year

Nuclear Regulatory Commission	45.8
National Science Foundation	39.7
National Aeronautics and Space Administration	38.4
U.S. Information Agency	27.8
State Department	25.8
General Accounting Office	24.0
National Labor Relations Board	23.8
Federal Trade Commission	23.7
Securities and Exchange Commission	22.6
Transportation Department	20.9
Federal Reserve Board	20.7
Federal Communications Commission	19.6
Interstate Commerce Commission	19.3
Federal Home Loan Bank Board	18.4
Commerce Department	18.2

(NOTE.—Agencies with 1,000 or more full-time employees.)

Basic data U.S. Civil Service Commission.●

THE FUTURE HUSTLE

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, in these times of advanced, computerized economic forecasting, every congressional office is literally deluged by highly statistical analyses of the future course of the economy. This flood usually reaches its high point immediately after the submission of the administration's budget requests for the coming fiscal year. The present time is such a period of cascading economic forecasts.

The most bewildering aspects about these predictions, besides their virtual incomprehensibility, are their stubborn refusal to agree and their uncanny ability to mislead. Despite their complex and highly sophisticated computers, their ingenious models and their unparalleled statistical methodologies, one is left with the nagging suspicion that the ancient and medieval soothsayers, who foretold events on the basis of the stars, the entrails of birds, and the patterns of cards, could easily rival the modern forecaster. I would like to share with my colleagues a possible explanation of this embarrassing phenomenon entitled "The Future Hustle" by James Henry, which appeared in the New Republic on February 4, 1978:

THE FUTURE HUSTLE

(By James Henry)

Economic forecasting is one of the hottest fields in the US economy, along with law, medicine, evangelical religion, astrology and pornography. In some ways it resembles these other industries. It has the pretension to technical rigor of legal analysis, the therapeutic swank of medicine, the irrational claims to authority of evangelical religion and astrology and, alas, pornography's insatiable audience of subscribers. Like these other services, economic forecasting thrives on human weakness, and acquires a stake in the vices it proposes to cure. In a stable, growing economy with full employment and steady prices, there is not much need for the economic forecaster's art. Uncertainty is what puts bread on his table, and the increase in economic uncertainty over the past decade explains much of the rising demand for economic forecasting. But this uncertainty is itself partly the result of bad policies based on poor economic forecasts. In the past few years economic forecasting has joined law and medicine and similar mysterious arts to form a corner of the modern economy where Say's law actually works: supply creates its own demand, and the forecasters grow richer as their forecasts do worse.

The leader of the economic forecasting industry is a company called Data Resources, Inc. DRI was founded in 1968 by Otto Eckstein, a Harvard professor and former member of the Council of Economic Advisors under Lyndon Johnson. Eckstein is a fairly orthodox Keynesian and until age 40 he was a fairly typical academic economist. Now he is rich. DRI's revenues have grown more than 30 percent each year for the past 10 years, even during the severe 1974–75 bust. Sales reached two million dollars in 1977. Profits have grown even faster. The company went public in November 1976; Professor Eckstein owns about 10 percent of it now. DRI's clients include two-thirds of the nation's 100 largest manufacturing firms, 32 of the top 50 banks, nine of the top 25 insurance companies, two dozen federal agencies, several state agencies and a growing number of foreign buyers. DRI has two principal competitors in the economic forecasting field: Chase Econometrics, a spin-off of the Chase Manhattan Bank, and a "non-profit" organization affiliated with the Wharton School of Finance at the University of Pennsylvania. They have enjoyed similar, if not quite equivalent, success.

What are these businesses and government agencies getting for their money? Eckstein and his competitors are selling exactly what prophets, seers, diviners, oracles, soothsayers, haruspices and geomancers have sold throughout the ages: a vision of the future. To make this product claim convincing requires a gimmick, something to create the necessary air of mystery and to explain why the prophet can see what ordinary mortals cannot. The economic forecasters' gimmick is the computer. Inside the computer is a "model" of the world economy in the form of a series of mathematical equations. The claim is that these equations permit the computer to take information about the present and divine patterns in it that the ordinary eye cannot see. These patterns then are used to predict the future. Each forecaster has his own model, which he naturally claims is the best. Lawrence Klein of Wharton, who has been selling predictions for five years longer than Eckstein, believes that at least 50 equations are necessary for a respectable model. DRI's model has 900 equations, but there is one in Canada that has 1500.

Earlier forecasters had different gimmicks. The ancient Chinese used I Ching hexagrams to predict harvests and pestilence. The Hebrew prophets occasionally made economic predictions, but they usually worked gratuitously, supported by charitable contributions. Probably the oldest antecedents of our modern private forecasters were the Greek chresmologists of the 6th century BC, itinerant salesmen who consulted the oracles and then sold their insights to kings and mere citizens. Since then there has been a long line of palmisters, necromancers, numerologists and other varieties of diviners-for-profit. Merlin and Nostradamus were the most celebrated practitioners of these arts. The astronomers Tycho Brahe and John Kepler both cast individual horoscopes for rather high fees in the 16th century to supplement their meager incomes as serious scientists; Kepler felt ashamed of this sideline, which he described as "scarcely more respectable than begging."

Prophets enjoy the great advantage that correct predictions tend to be remembered long after incorrect ones have been forgotten. Guicciardini, the Italian historian, remarked in 1592, "How happy are the astrologers, who are believed if they tell one truth to a hundred lies, while other people lose all credit if they tell one lie to a hundred truths." It is remembered, for example, that in 1651 the English astrologer William Lilly correctly forecast both the great plague of 1655 and the great fire of London in 1666. But this was trivial; Nostradamus had predicted both events in a book published in 1577 in Amsterdam, while Tycho Brahe is said to have predicted them in 1563, when only 17 years old. But such accuracy was not always highly rewarded, any more than inaccuracy was always punished. William Lilly was hauled before a Parliamentary inquiry after his prophecies about the plague and the fire had come true. In 1634 the Lady Eleanor Davies was sent to prison for "the assumption of the gift of prophecy," because she had correctly predicted the death of her husband, the Lord Chief Justice of England, in 1626, and—thus encouraged—had set about predicting the deaths of other important people.

Many diviners, however, have been able to live quite comfortably from their practices, especially in times of social crisis. This ap pears to be a second vital ingredient in the persistence of these arts: private forecasting is parasitic on chaos and insecurity. It is most in demand when, objectively, the future is least predictable. Regular procedures for receiving oracles from Delphi and Dodona emerged in the fifth century BC, just as Greece came under increased military pressures. The most important Hebrew prophets turned up when Israel was most threatened by its enemies. The burgeoning demand for astrologers peeked during the Puritan Revolution of the 1640s, which also saw the worst economic disruption of that century in England. The coincidence of bad times and rampant prophecy supports Condorcet's observation that prophecy is important not so much because of what it tells us about the future, but because of what it tells us about the present. This coincidence also helps to account for the deep ambivalence that the public has always shown toward its prophets, tolerating and even worshipping them up to a point, beyond which it begins to throw stones and set stakes.

The pre-computer economic forecasters did not compile an impressive record. Thomas Malthus, the early 19th century British economist, predicted that population growth would outrun agricultural productivity on a worldwide basis within a century. Irving Fisher, an otherwise distinguished Yale economist, will never escape the ignominy attached to his declaration on October 15, 1929, that "Stock prices have reached a permanently high plateau." During World War II US government economists, strongly influenced by a simplistic version of Keynesian theory, issued a consensus forecast of a serious postwar depression. Today's forecasters have dissociated themselves from these bloopers by the adoption of sophisticated statistical methods and computer technology. The modern forecaster squats over his model like the Delphic Pythia, inhales its spirits, then speaks of the mysteries revealed, frequently in an obscure patois.

This new model-based forecasting procedure was made possible by several changes on the "supply side," including the government's accumulation and publication of vast amounts of macroeconomic data, the improvement of computers and statistics, and the proliferation of professional economists. Most of the pioneering work on modelling was completed in the 1940s and 1950s. By the Kennedy years there were already a half-dozen models with 50 or more equations. But until the middle 1960s all the models were developed and operated by the government, academic institutions, and non-profit foundations. The lucrative private forecasting industry had its origins not in any new technical achievements by its founders, but in their ability to find new markets for old achievements, usually not their own. They passed the word that elaborate models, under the guidance of suitable experts, were now prepared to unveil the future to ordinary businessmen and public officials. Or rather, they hinted and titillated and enticed, with a kind of utopian enthusiasm, never really promising—for that would be unscientific (as well as illegal).

Thus the success of private economic forecasting depends on the government in three vital ways. First, the government supplies for free all the raw data about the economy that get fed into the models. Second, since government actions can affect the modern economy in so many different ways, uncertainty about government intentions and their potential effect creates much of the demand for economic forecasts. Finally, the government itself is one of the forecasters' best clients, with the endearing habit of paying many times over (through different agencies) for access to the same model, which is spewing back predictions based on information the government itself supplied.

Can computer models really divine the future, or do they represent just another of the superstitions that litter history? The record is very mixed. In the 1960s until 1968, the models were very successful. In 1966, for example, Wharton's model predicted that the Gross National Product in 1967 would be $794 billion, which turned out to be precisely correct. But the growth of the U.S. economy in the 1960s was remarkably stable, so it was deceptively easy for models to perform well. From early 1961 to late 1969 the economy went through 106 months of prosperity, the longest such period ever recorded in U.S. history. So it is not very surprising the models built in the 1960s all performed rather well in the 1960s, even though theories about how the economy works were very different from one another. It is usually not difficult to forecast the continuation of a trend, even without any reference at all to economic theory. For instance, a fine way to predict next year's GNP—between turning points, that is—is simply to continue the pattern reflected in the GNP for previous years, even though this method is almost entirely devoid of any explanatory value.

Of course if a prediction works, who cares why it works? Starting in the sixth century BC the Babylonians became very adept at calculating the timing of astronomical events such as lunar eclipses and the appearance of the new moon. They achieved this merely by accumulating a long time series of observations and then deciphering the regularities, without—to our knowledge—ever thinking about why these regularities existed (other than the caprices of the Sky-God). The Greeks of the same period, in contrast could scarcely predict a sunrise, and yet were filled with fruitful speculations about the structure of the universe.

Our modern economic forecasters would have us believe that they have successfully merged the Babylonian and Greek methodologies. They credited their predictive successes of the 1960s to theoretical sophistication. They did not advertise that simple, theory-free models were just as accurate in those economically stable times. Professor Klein of Wharton wrote in 1971 that further improvements in prediction would come about only with the adoption of even "larger more realistic, and more complicated" models. But as the 1960s drew to a close, predictions by the large models began to err. It turns out they don't do much better in times of instability than "naive," theory-free, very simple projections.

And the 1970s have been very unstable. Already there have been two worldwide recessions in less than a decade, including the highest and most persistent unemployment and inflation since Pearl Harbor, a decline in real stock prices nearly as large as the one that occurred in 1929–31 and about three times as much fluctuation in real GNP growth as in the 1960s. This instability is widely attributed to an extraordinary combination of shocks delivered to the system by the Vietnam War, the oil cartel, grain shortages and the rich afterlife of Dr. Arthur Burns. Unquestionably so, but history is an inevitable series of accidents. A prophet who cannot deal with the accidents of history is not much use.

The econometric models of the 1970s, however sophisticated, are just not theoretically equipped to deal with the discontinuities in expectations and lags introduced by a weird combination of excess demand in some markets and excess supply in others. The relative stability of the 1960s was a poor practice field.

By now there have been several technical evaluations of model performance in the 1970s published in academic journals and circulated in university communities. These papers offer rich material for criticism, weakened by a somewhat narrow perspective and a reluctance to declare out loud that the Emperor is without clothes. Here is what they show.

To begin with, accuracy of forecasts depends more on when they are made than how. In the 1970s all the major models had serious troubles. Median forecasting errors for variables like GNP, unemployment, and inflation were nearly three times as high on average between 1970 and 1977 as they were in the mid-1960s. Even after the 1973 oil embargo became known to Chase, DRI, Wharton and the Commerce Department, their median year-ahead forecast of inflation for 1974 was off by nearly 50 percent. They all also completely missed the absolute decline in real GNP that occurred in the first quarter of 1975, which may have contributed to the Ford administration's slowness to recognize that a serious recession was in the offing. None of the major models did much better than any of the others. During periods of economic recovery, forecasting errors declined sharply. But as we said, there is no trick to prediction during such periods.

In fact, the computer models have done no better in the 1970s than have economists simply playing their own hunches. Since 1968 the American Statistical Association and the National Bureau of Economic Research have conducted quarterly surveys of 60 to 80 economists, who give their predictions for a dozen economic variables over the next six quarters. From 1970 to 1977, the error levels for the ASA-NBER panel forecasts were virtually indistinguishable from those of Chase, DRI, or Wharton, for each variable and for every forecast period. For the prediction of unemployment changes, inflation and real GNP, the uncomputerized economists did somewhat better than DRI's computer model. It is true that some of these economists were heavily influenced in their own predictions by published figures from econometric models. In May 1977, for example, 13 of 41 members of the panel said that an econometric model was the "most important" source of their forecasts. But the others—a majority—relied mainly on informal theories of their own. One New York forecaster is said to base his predictions on changes in the price of the chemical carborundum. And in fact a 1975 study reported that those panel members who had used informal models had consistently better forecasts of both inflation and unemployment than those panel members who had depended on the econometric models. Of course "judgmental" forecasters are often wrong, too. The point is merely that very different forecasting methods often yield very similar results.

The computer model builders have replied to criticism by saying that their magic cannot be expected to work in the hands of others (an old favorite among high priests, geomancers, etc.). Klein of Wharton has written, "The outsiders . . . have done violence to the models . . . Large scale models are such complicated and delicate mechanisms that they require very careful handling by people who fully understand them."

The model-builders also point out that only with a enormous model can you analyze "contingencies," complex changes in economic policy. For example, a forecast of aggregate GNP will not be of much help to a steel firm interested in inventory control; it wants to know how aggregate demand will be distributed across the economy and what effect it will have on steel requirements, competitors' prices, and so on. Or a policy change which includes new investment tax credits, personal income tax surcharges, a public employment program and new government loans for mortgages may be very difficult to trace through without the use of simulations on a large model. But the steel industry must have been forecasting its own inventory requirements before the big computer models came along. How much predictive accuracy has it gained by placing itself in a large model of the entire economy? Unfortunately there is almost no evidence on this question as yet. But we may well wonder how these large models can do so poorly on the national aggregates, and yet get the particulars right.

As for national policy analysis, no one can deny that it is difficult and uncertain in the absence of a large model. The trouble is that it is also difficult and uncertain in the presence of a large model. The different assumptions about the effects of policy options built into various "conditional forecasting" models produce very different results when the computers are asked about, say, the effect of changes in government spending or monetary policy. Of course this is just what anyone familiar with the long debate over monetarism would expect.

The history of divination is a history of technology, from the divining rod and the Delphic tripod to the astrolabe, the crystal ball and the computer. A large econometric model is not really much different in this respect. The claim frequently is made that it replaces the mortal forecaster with an immortal reservoir of scientific wisdom. But in truth there has been no such replacement. It is the models that suffer the high mortality rates, and even while they live they serve as vox angelici for their ventriloquial builders.

Nor is this situation likely to change. I should probably refuse out of principle to indulge in any forecasts of my own, but the temptation is obviously an overwhelming human frailty. Let me therefore boldly predict that improvements in forecasting technology already have reached the point of diminishing returns. This prediction assumes that the future is most drastically affected by rare events, political decisions and psychological changes that are supremely difficult to account for. It also assumes the continued weakness of economic theory. Forecasting accuracy will continue to depend almost entirely on what phase the economy is in when the forecast is made. At any particular time, each kind of economic system is probably subject to its own irreducible minimum of uncertainty. We are probably near the limits of our ability to forecast the future of advanced capitalism, and that ability is not very high.●

REALISM IN RHODESIA

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, in the last few days two former British Prime Ministers representing both parties have stated that the people of Rhodesia ought to be allowed to settle their own affairs without dictation from external forces.

In a speech reported in the Sunday Telegraph (of London) for April 2, 1978, the former Labor Prime Minister, Sir Harold Wilson, stated:

> It is not for Britain to decide, still less, with great respect, for the New York Office of the American Ambassador to the United Nations. It is for the Rhodesian people to give their verdict on acceptability.

In an important article published in the Daily Telegraph for April 3, 1978, Sir Alec Douglas-Home (now Lord Home of the Hirsel) who has served many years as foreign minister as well as Prime Minister of Britain also said that any settlement based on the "Six Principles" should be recognized by Britain.

I should like to insert this article in the RECORD at this time for the information of our colleagues.

The article follows:

REALISM IN RHODESIA

(By Lord Home of the Hirsel)

It is seldom that national bankruptcy facilitates a political settlement, or brings a war to an end, but it may bring off the double in Rhodesia.

It has without question brought Mr. Smith to settle with Bishop Muzorewa, Mr. Sithole and Chief Chirau much earlier than he would otherwise have done; while the fact that the economic state of Zambia is even more parlous must be making Mr. Nkomo wonder whether his paymaster, President Kaunda, will continue to foot the bill for the guerrilla fighters.

Particular to Rhodesia are sanctions, and to Zambia the collapse in the price of copper, while common to both are the cost of the fighting and the world-wide depression. Mozambique, too, is in a bad way. These economic pressures are unlikely to relent.

Mr. Smith has at long last conceded that his rearguard action against African majority rule has to come to an early end. He has played his cards over the years with considerable skill, always hoping that if he delayed and delayed "something would turn up to save him from the ultimate decision; but now facing as he does "the reality of the world we live in" he has thrown the weight of his authority into compromise.

He has had a real slice of luck in finding in Bishop Muzorewa a man of peace, who is convinced that the future of Rhodesia lies in co-ooperation between the Europeans and the Africans.

Muzorewa's transition from missionary to politician is an intriguing story. In a continent of violence he has made a public stand for order and evolutionary change. His witness of those principles has found a response among the African population of Rhodesia for they are naturally a peaceful and neighbourly people.

If there were to be a referendum as to who should be the first African Prime Minister of the Zimbabwe, the bishop would surely collect the great majority of the votes.

His colleague, Mr. Sithole, is more political than Muzorewa, and that his calculations are for the longer term is shown by the fact that he has formed a political party which has drawn support away from the bishop. But he is a realist, and is a powerful advocate of coalition, and of the new arrangements for the transition from white to black rule. He has brains, is a skilled administrator and is doing more than any other to sell the new constitution as an acceptable basis for independence.

Chief Chirau personifies the African establishment. He is persona grata with Africans and Europeans alike. In terms of votes he will not command the numbers, but his influence is real and it will tell in times of strain.

This quartet should be able to pull together and act through the transitional year and beyond. There is the negative inducement to do so, for if they do not succeed they would all be liquidated by whoever took over the power.

The other personality whose role in Rhodesia's future is still uncertain is Mr. Nkomo. He has a history. In 1961 he agreed with the British Government in London to a constitution for Southern Rhodesia, but when he returned to Salisbury he went back on his word.

It was a settlement which had great merit, and if it had been adopted the Africans would by now be in a majority or near-majority in the Rhodesian Parliament. As it was, all constitution-making went back into the melting-pot and was the subject of bitter wrangling between British and Rhodesian politicians.

Does Mr. Nkomo wish to redeem the error and join once again in a negotiated settlement?

In 1971 he came out of prison to see me and he insisted that the only course was to overthrow the European Government of Mr. Smith by force.

Two years ago in London he repeated his conclusion with even greater emphasis and conviction. I argued that such a policy was sterile and could bring nothing but misery to the Africans, but he was adamant.

Since then he has raised his army of guerrillas who are paid by President Kaunda and armed by the Soviet Union.

A clever, ambitious and forceful man (he stems from the Matabele) he will find it very difficult to change direction. Should he decide to do so he would greatly strengthen the coalition and would help (the Russians permitting) to end the war.

It is hard to see how Mr. Smith and his colleagues can do more than leave the door open for him. This they have done, but it is unlikely that they will feel able to make concessions to buy him into the partnership.

The other main actor on this stage is, of course, the British Government. When Mr. Harold Wilson took the question of Rhodesia to the United Nations (wrongly, in my view), the British Parliament was given the task of negotiating a settlement on which independence could be granted."

Successive Governments took as the test of acceptability Six Principles to which any Government would have to conform.

Do the present proposals of Mr. Smith and the bishop come within these terms? The answer so far is "Yes."

They include: majority rule by next year; a common voters' roll; safeguards for the minority against discriminatory changes in the Constitution; reserved seats to be held by the Europeans in Parliament; action against racial discrimination; a Declaration of Human Rights and changes in the Land Tenure Acts.

These are all objectives for which Britain has been working for years. Why, then, has the British Government given the coalition such a grudging reception?

The reason is partly political. Just as Mr. Smith could not bear dealing with Mr. Wilson, Socialist Ministers in Britain cannot bring themselves to look with approval on anything to which Mr. Smith is a party. As Mr. Smith was wrong then, so are they now.

There are still some outstanding questions: the organization of internal and external security is one, but there is no reason to believe that the coalition will not solve them. It should be encouraged.

One obstacle to support by the British Government is that it and the Americans have hatched a "plan," and although large chunks of it have been by-passed (including the presence of a British Commissioner, and United Nations troops) Dr. Owen and Mr. Andrew Young have not had the flexibility to adapt themselves to a new situation until late in the day.

They have given more weight to opinion outside Rhodesia than to that inside the country. The motive is creditable—to stop the war by persuading Mr. Nkomo to cooperate, and to gain international recognition for Zimbabwe. But neither of these desirable ends is necessarily in Britain's hands.

What, then, if Mr. Nkomo accepts Russian money to carry on the fight, or if the Security Council, in spite of the merits of the settlement, refuses United Nations recognition? Both these are possible. It is then that the British Parliament will have to assert its authority and its responsibility.

Provided that the new Constitution is consistent with the Six Principles, which it is virtually certain to be, Parliament should pass an Act to confer legality on Zimbabwe in its relations with the British Crown, and treat her thereafter as a State independent in her own right.●

WHITE HOUSE STAFF AUTHORIZATION

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the House successfully challenged H.R. 11003, the White House Authorization bill. The White House had attempted to stampede this bill through the House of Representatives by coaxing the House leadership into riskily undertaking to suspend the normal rules of operation for the House while considering this measure. This maneuvering by the leadership, if successful, would have deprived Members of the House the opportunity to fully debate this legislation and to test the merits of its several provisions through the offering of perfecting amendments. Fortunately, a bipartisan coalition joined with me to prevent this kind of steamrollering.

During the floor fight on H.R. 11003, (H 2423–2424) I excerpted several paragraphs from a recent national journal article of April 1, 1978, by Dom Bonafede entitled, "The 'Lean White House' Has a Fat Staff Authorization in the Works."

Since this matter may soon be before the House once again, I commend this informative article to my colleagues and request that it be set forth in full at this point in the RECORD:

THE "LEAN WHITE HOUSE" HAS A FAT STAFF AUTHORIZATION IN THE WORKS

(By Dom Bonafede)

Proposed legislation awaiting House action would allow President Carter the most expensive White House staff in history.

An authorization bill (H.R. 11003), unanimously approved March 16 by voice vote by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, would let the President almost double the number of executive level and supergrade aides on his personal White House Office staff from 55 to 100. Occupants of such senior positions receive annual salaries ranging from $42,500 to $57,500.

Similar top-level staff increases for four other units of the Executive Office of the President (EOP), along with those of the White House Office, would cost $8.6 million the first year alone, if fully implemented.

The following table represents a projection of the estimated costs for increased White House staffing under H.R. 11003, if all the slots are filled.

WHITE HOUSE STAFF COSTS

[In millions]

	Fiscal years
	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
Current projection	$29.5	$31.6	$34.0	$36.4	$39.1
Staff increase	8.6	8.8	9.1	9.3	9.6
Total	38.1	40.4	43.1	45.7	48.7

Source: Congressional Budget Office.

Other provisions in the measure, some of which are unprecedented, would grant:

Virtually open-ended authority to the White House to hire an unlimited number of consultants and borrow "detailees" from other federal agencies;

Assistance and services for the wives of the President and Vice President, the first time they have been included in legislation dealing with White House personnel authorization;

Increases in executive level and supergrade employees for the Office of the Vice President from eight to 11. Domestic Policy Staff from 13 to 24. Office of Administration from five to 10 and Executive Residence staff from none to three;

Authority for an unlimited number of appointments to the presidential staff below a GS 16 rating, which carries a yearly salary of $42,423;

"Subsistence expenses" for persons, both military and civilian, traveling on official business in connection with travel of the President or Vice President, including aides accompanying them on trips and advance people. This is in addition to per diem expenses regularly allowed.

The Administration-endorsed legislation, which is expected to be taken up by the full House in a few days, appears to represent a reversal of a movement towards a deimperialized presidential establishment and to run counter to Carter's pledge to constrict the White House bureaucracy.

Hugh Carter Jr., special assistant to the President for administration, reported the White House has been working in support of the bill since August but does not intend to add significantly to the number of senior aides in the White House and Executive Office of the President, notwithstanding the opportunities available under the bill, should it be adopted.

Administration officials are confident the bill will be approved. "We feel pretty good about it," Carter commented. "This provides permanent statutory authority for the President's staff," he said. "We wanted to have plenty of flexibility for the future, in the event of an emergency like World War III or something, and needed to suddenly increase the staff. But except for one or two people, we have no plans to raise the staff level."

Tread Davis Jr., general counsel to the President's reorganization project in the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), said the bill does not represent a staff increase since year-to-year personnel levels will continue to be determined through the appropriations and budgetary process.

LIMITED OVERSIGHT

Charles H. Knull, staff counsel for the House Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Employee Ethics and Utilization and the bill's principal author, acknowledged that there was "quite a bit of horse trading" in negotiations over the legislation.

"There was a tradeoff for a higher authorization of staff in exchange for some limitations and oversight provisions," he said. "But actually, they [the limitations] are not as stringent as for other agencies and are close to what Congress has for itself."

A report issued by the Post Office and Civil Service Committee candidly concedes the bill "allows the Congress limited oversight." It notes that the Comptroller General would be allowed to inspect records related to White House expenditures as a form of "limited verification procedure."

This, the report said, "will enable the Congress to perform its oversight role while at the same time protect the confidential nature of the funds and avoid an overly broad intrusion into this area of executive discretion. Under this procedure, the Congress will receive a report from the Comptroller General certifying the fact of his verification and listing only those specific sums which were not expended for the purposes certified."

It is apparent from the tone of the report that the committee considers this a delicate matter and does not intend to probe too deeply into White House business. Provisions covering the use of detailers, for example, require only that those who have been assigned to the presidential complex for 180 days or longer in any fiscal year must be included in a public report submitted to Congress. Detailees who serve for 179 days or less need not be reported. Committee officials say it is not inconceivable that the White House could take advantage of the provision.

As part of a supplement to the committee report, minority members of the panel, led by the ranking Republican. Edward J. Derwinski of Illinois, who cosponsored the bill, said. "Although this is good and basic legislation. . . . some of us are concerned by what we regard as loopholes in the reporting of detailees assigned to the White House from other agencies."

The unchecked use of consultants permitted the White House under the bill also is a contentious issue, particularly since the President not long ago issued a statement advocating a cutback in their employment by government agencies.

"We may have to have a specific appropriation for consultants," Knull said.

The inclusion of the authorization for the President's wife was made at the suggestion of the White House, committee officials said. Recently, questions have been raised about the fact that Rosalynn Carter, the President's wife, has at least 17 persons on her staff, none of whom is covered by specific authorization legislation. Similarly, the Vice President's wife, Joan Mondale, who is involved in arts programs, has at least four aides paid out of government funds.

"Authorization for the spouse is supposed to be in connection with their official duties," a committee staffer said. "But no one knows where their official duties end."

Additional provisions in the bill increase the President's travel expenses from $40,000 to $100,000 and maintain his allowance of $1 million for unanticipated needs. For the most part, however, the President's travel expenses are underwritten by the Defense Department, which has jurisdiction over the Air Force planes made available to him. The $100,000 is used mainly for aides who travel with the President and other incidental expenses.

The $1 million for unanticipated needs is allocated to the President "in furtherance of the national interest, security or defense, which may arise at home or abroad." That is a purposedly vague definition: presumably, the money is viewed more as pocket spending money for the President. The 94th Congress reduced the amount to $500,000, but it has since been raised to its former level.

"It's questionable whether it is needed," said Theodore J. Kazy, the committee's minority staff director. "Is it too much and what is it used for? I'm sure some Members would like to see it amended."

SWITCHED POSITIONS

An interesting sidelight on the bill concerns the political maneuvering that has accompanied it, particularly the inconsistency of some House Members on the issue of White House staffing.

In 1975, when a similar, yet more modest, bill affecting the Ford White House was introduced, Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., took the lead in denouncing the proposal. During an impassioned floor debate that July 9, Udall, then a prospective Democratic candidate, declared it was time to draw the line against expanding the presidential establishment and said that a bloated White House staff tended to centralize power within the White House and trespassed on the traditional role of the Cabinet. Udall then recited a list of aides to President Ford who made more money than several directors of federal agencies, such as the chief of the Forest Service and the Commissioner of Education.

According to committee staff aides, however, Udall has been extraordinarily quiet regarding the proposed staff authorization for Carter, a Democrat.

In a transparent jibe at Udall, the minority members said in their supplemental report:

". . . When modest staff increases were proposed for President Ford in the 1975 legislation, there was an attempt to cut the number of executive level employees from 25 to 13. The sponsor of that amendment, a noted Copper State statesman, said he was not cuting back but was holding the line on White House staff. He made it clear, however, he considered the correct course of action to be a rollback on the number of high-level positions at the White House. It almost seemed as if General 'Black Jack' Pershing were in hot pursuit of Pancho Villa.

"In a flood of eloquence, he expressed shock at the increase in jobs at the White House. We have no way of knowing what the White House staff situation would be today had voters in the 1976 Democratic presidential primaries exercised different judgment."

When asked about Udall's puzzling position. Jennifer Fain, a spokesperson for him, replied, "Since the bill sets a limit on the number of executive and supergrade jobs in the White House, he is for it."

Another committee member, Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., changed her tune on the issue. During the July 1975 debate, she said. "We have had an incredible crisis in this government in the past few years and there has been a tremendous concern about the power vested in the executive branch and a faceless goverment, that we cannot even figure out who is making the decisions. The issue is the centraliztion of relatively unaccountable power in the White House at the expense of our Cabinet form of government.

". . . I am delighted the President has said how many people are on the White House detail. But there is no limit to how many can be detailed in the future. I have the list of 20. There is also no limit on White House consultants. They are making a lovely salary. We would all do well to quit and become a White House consultant."

Explaining Schroeder's new position, an aide said. "It was important to get out a bill and this was the best they could get."

After the bill was drafted, the White House, apparently certain that it would be overwhelmingly accepted by the full House, requested that it be placed on the suspension calendar. That means that the normal rules are waived, that there can be only 40 minutes of debate on the bill, that no amendments can be added and that there must be an up-or-down vote requiring a two-thirds majority for passage.

"I personally recommended against it," said David Minton, the committee's executive director and general counsel, "not on the merits of the bill but because of politics. It [the quick action] might antagonize some Members."

The bill was taken off the suspension calendar but could be reinserted when Congress reconvenes.

"That's a little risky," remarked minority staff director Kazy. "Some Republicans might take some shots at it. They have been more generous with Carter than the Democrats with Ford."

One of the chief attractions of the bill from the White House's view is that it marks a departure from past practice when White House staff appropriations proposals were subject to points of order because the House had not first provided an authorization.

Following House action on the bill, it will then go to the Senate.●

AN AMERICAN LOOKS AT CUBA

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

• Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, it has become fashionable in many journalistic circles to write about Cuba as if it were paradise regained.

Paraphrasing some of this revisionist writing about a country in which political and economic freedoms are nonexistent, one might read, "Liberty aside, Cuba is a wonderful place in which to live." For me, it is the liberal equivalent of saying, "Temperature aside, the Arctic is a comfortable place in which to reside." It is in an attempt to be charitable to tell Cuban hosts that the trains run on time, but in fact they do not. There is less food for people to eat now, and it is of poorer quality than was the case before the Castro administration. Only the streets are cleaner than they were before, cleansed as they are of what used to be bumper-to-bumper traffic in Havana before the days when cars became as scarce as the consumers who can no longer afford to buy them.

One finds support for these unfortunate observations by the overwhelming majority of tourists who return from their Cuban tours which have been expanded over the past 10 months. One of the most articulate of these, an American citizen and businessman, Mr. Crosby M. Kelly, wrote about his impressions in a recent issue of the Readers Digest. I commend it to your attention, and I urge you to pass it along to any friends who have beer susceptible to the public relations campaign to picture Fidel Castro's Cuba as Communism's Disneyland. The following article ought to disabuse any reasonable person of this notion.

The article follows:

RETURN TO CUBA

(By Crosby M. Kelly)

(Now that travel restrictions to Cuba have been eased, growing numbers of Americans are visiting the island. Some bring back reports of great improvements in the lives of the Cuban people during 19 years of communist rule. But is that a true picture of what has been happening under Fidel Castro?)

(Crosby M. Kelly, a business executive, visited the island in October 1976, with a member of Congress and his party. Since Kelly lived in Cuba for three years prior to Castro's revolution and speaks Spanish fluently, he was in a good position to evaluate changes that have taken place. He also has traveled extensively throughout Latin America, Europe and the Soviet bloc as a business consultant. This is his report.)

From the moment we arrived in Cuba, we had high hopes of meeting Fidel Castro. "He knows you're in Havana, and he'll try to drop around to talk with you," a government official told us. Castro has flattered several Congressmen and other American visitors by suddenly showing up at their hotels for marathon political chats. It's part of the hard-sell of his regime.

Well, we finally did get to see Castro. "There he goes" someone hollered as we were driving on a highway near Havana. Sure enough, his six-foot frame was hunched in the front seat of a Jeep which was speeding in the other direction.

Finding out the truth about conditions in Cuba can be as difficult as catching up with the big boss. As soon as I stepped off the Cubana Airlines plane at Havana's José Marti airport, after a flight from Mexico City, I found that I wasn't going to be free to roam around as I pleased. Three officials of the Ministry of Foreign Relations were waiting for our party. They were as charming as could be—and they stuck to us like flypaper.

It's important to realize, in evaluating reports about Cuba, that the regime keeps visitors on a short leash, showing them only what it wants them to see. You can't ring up government officials and ask for appointments; everything has to be arranged. It's difficult for visitors to get around on their own. If you don't speak Spanish, you need an interpreter. There aren't many taxis, and it's easy to get lost using the bus services. Most visitors thus rely on official cars, with escorts.

You can't blame the Castro regime for putting its best foot forward. But if you don't want to be bamboozled, you've got to look beneath the surface of things. When you do, the reality can be jarring.

Pathetic Dolls. Take education, for example. Castro's Minister of Education, Jose Fernandez, escorted us on visits to four huge boarding schools that have been opened in the countryside, several miles outside the capital. Complete with lawns, flower gardens and swimming pools, the schools looked impressive from the outside. Fernandez proudly recited statistics to prove that illiteracy has been virtually wiped out in Cuba and that education has been made free and compulsory for all children. On the face of it, these are big accomplishments. There was a great deal of illiteracy among the poor when I lived in Cuba. But what kind of education is Castro giving the children?

In the dormitory of one of the schools, where 4500 girls are enrolled, we saw seemingly endless rows of double-decked metal cots. On almost every cot lay a doll, each identical to the next, each in a plastic bag. "Why the plastic?" I asked. "To keep the dolls clean," the principal replied. There was no sign of the dolls having been played with. It looked as if most of the bags had never been opened.

Nor were there any girls. It was a weekend, and the principal explained that the girls go home at noon on Saturday and return to the school late Sunday afternoon. That one night a week is all they see of their parents. Some of the children are only four or five years old.

"Our aim," said Fernandez, "is to teach children to be self-sacrificing and altruistic, to give willingly to their country and fellow man and to abandon selfish, material ideas of capitalism." What he was really saying was that the only way that communism can be made to work is to keep children in a controlled environment from the age of four or five, largely away from their parents, and subjected to constant Marxist indoctrination.

At a teacher-training school, the principal gave us a rundown on the pupils' daily schedule. Wakened at 6 a.m., they get an hour of Marxist studies, then have breakfast. Next they work in citrus groves until noon, when they have lunch and a siesta. Classes come in the afternoon, followed by an hour of athletics and supper. In the evening, the children get two more hours of Marxism before bed. These same children, the principal added, are graduated as elementary school teachers at the age of 14.

How could a child qualify as a teacher at 14, even if the child didn't spend so much time studying Marxism and working in citrus groves? And why should kids have to work in the groves? It's child labor, carried out not by wicked capitalists but by a communist state.

Health and Austerity. Castro has done a good job in one respect—organizing massive health programs, particularly in the countryside, which has been neglected by previous regimes. The government claims to have so many rural clinics that no one is more than two hours away from medical care. Infant mortality has been cut sharply and diseases such as polio and diphtheria have been virtually eradicated. Medical attention, moreover, is free for everyone.

But people lead austere lives in the new Cuba. Castro socialized agriculture, destroying private incentives. Today, after 19 years of communism, most food is strictly rationed. Remembering well the abundance of food on the average Cuban table before Castro took over, I asked one of our official escorts how the people feel about having had to endure rationing all those years.

"Why, the people don't object to rationing!" the official replied. "It guarantees everybody the basic requirements for a healthy existence. It doesn't mean that they can't have more than that. It just means that if a family is entitled to one dozen eggs, they can get that first dozen for, say, 50 cents. If they want another dozen, they can get it, but that dozen could cost $3."

The average factory worker, who earns around $200 a month, isn't likely to snap up many eggs at $3 a dozen. Nor does he get much of anything else. Cubans, for example, are rationed to one ounce of coffee per person per week—in a country where people used to drink coffee all day long. Gone, too, are the coffee bars once so familiar throughout the cities and in every small village.

"Buenos Días, Coronel!" The regime goes to great lengths to stage-manage things for visitors, but one one occasion the performance became unstuck. I had asked Fernández if we could go to a simple village restaurant for a typical Cuban meal. He took us to a fancy restaurant, obviously maintained for important functionaries and their foreign guests, in a village near Havana. We were the only customers in the place.

Four men, dressed as bartenders and waiters in white shirts, black bowties and black trousers, greeted Fernández by his military rank: "Buenos días, coronel!" Then they introduced themselves, also by military rank. Fernández noticed that I understood the exchange and shushed them with a gesture.

After lunch I took Polaroid pictures of the kitchen help. The waiters came over to watch. "Hey, look," said one. "I've never seen anything like that." "Yes, you have," another waiter replied. "Remember when we had our pictures taken to go to Angola?"

The ways of a totalitarian state are mysterious, but perhaps they use army personnel in that "typical village restaurant" for security reasons, or as a reward for such things as service in Cuba's expeditionary force to Angola.

A few days later, I found that the battery in my Polaroid camera was running down. After much discussion, our escorts agreed that the only place in the city likely to stock that commonplace item would be the curio shop of the leading tourist hotel. I remembered when camera equipment used to be on sale in every little store in Cuba. Now Cubans no longer have even such simple luxuries.

In the area where I used to live, many of the stately old homes have been abandoned, the yards choked with weeds. Only the odd building was in repair, and always it bore the emblem of a foreign embassy or a sign identifying it as a government office. Apart from the schools, I saw just one major building that wasn't there in the 1950s.

Bittersweet memories flooded up of a Havana that was a never-ending fiesta. Fun-loving Cubans had a remarkable vivacity and inviduality which they expressed in animated chatter and a merry disorder. Day and night, Havana's streets were thronged with people and traffic. Buses operated bumper to bumper; now they are rare even in the limited and uncrowded traffic of the city streets. The few cars are mostly American models of the 1950s—left over from the pre-Castro era.

Today, Cuba's population is 65 percent greater than when I lived there. But where were the people? Castro correctly boasts that the streetwalkers and beggars are gone. So, too, are most other people. Apparently they stay home when they aren't working. There isn't much to buy and there isn't much of interest to do, except stand in line, in hope of getting goods when they go on sale.

Faded Hopes. One morning, Fernández took us to three polling places in Havana where Cubans were voting in their first nationwide election since Castro took power in 1959. It wasn't the sort of election that we Americans take for granted. The Cubans were only selecting members for their municipal assemblies, and the candidates for each seat had all been proposed by neighbors, based on their contributions to the Cause of the Revolution. The municipal assemblies, not the people, would choose provincial assemblies which, in turn, would select a national assembly. The evident lack of voter enthusiasm was understandable. Probably the older Cubans recalled, as I did, that when Castro seized power he promised free elections to form a new national government within eighteen months.

Over and over Cuban officials associated the defects in their society with the fact that Cuba is an "underdeveloped" country. It certainly is these days, but before Castro it was one of the more prosperous countries in Latin America, with a flourishing economy and, in most years, a favorable balance of trade.

Some influential Americans are urging that we drop our ban on trade with Cuba; that we welcome Castro back into the family of American nations, as he hopes we will. The United States has everything to lose and nothing to gain by such a move, particularly in view of his atrocious record in the area of human rights. It would mean condoning the grisly executions, the imprisonment of tens of thousands of Cubans and the destruction of the country's economy and its way of life. It would mean tacit endorsement of Castro's efforts to promote violent revolution in Africa, and his attempts to export his Marxism to other Latin American and Caribbean countries.

Just before leaving, I ran into an American tourist. "I'm really impressed with what they're doing here," he said. He had never been to Cuba before, and he didn't speak Spanish. He wasn't the first American visitor to be bamboozled by Castro's officials, and he won't be the last.

Back home, friends kept asking me, "What were your impressions of Cuba?" At first I didn't know why I had difficulty answering. Finally, someone said, "You must have seen a lot of changes." Then I realized what my basic impression was—almost no change, except for the worse.●

SITUATION IN LEBANON

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I have received several inquiries regarding the emergency situation in Lebanon. Most of these inquiries have been specific questions regarding what United States actions are being taken to help meet the disaster needs of the Lebanese people.

I want to share with my colleagues a letter I wrote to Congresswoman Mary Rose Oakar responding to her concerns about the situation in Lebanon. I am also attaching to this letter Situation Report No. 4 on Lebanon from the Office of U.S. Foreign Disaster Assistance, Agency for International Development. One important point to remember in these types of emergency situations is that the problem tends to be distribution and use of emergency relief supplies and not their availability.

I feel sure that my colleagues share my hope that the U.N. Peacekeeping Force will be able to stabilize the military situation in Southern Lebanon and restore peace as soon as possible. Once peace is restored Congress may have to answer the question of United States participation in reconstruction and resettlement programs in Lebanon.

The correspondence follows:

MARCH 30, 1978.

Hon. MARY ROSE OAKAR,
U.S. House of Representatives, Room 427, Cannon House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MARY ROSE: As you know I share your concerns about the situation in Lebanon and I am anxious to see that we do all that is possible to provide emergency relief. In the Lebanese case, as in similar situations, the problem is as much distribution and use of emergency relief supplies as it is their availability. According to my subcommittee staff and people at the State Department I can report to you the following information.

On Thursday, March 23rd, a first shipment of U.S. disaster relief supplies arrived in Lebanon. This first shipment contained $1.2 million worth of tents, blankets, water jugs, medicines, stoves, and vitamins. These supplies were flown to Lebanon from a disaster relief supply depot in Italy. The funding for this shipment comes from the Special Disaster Relief Account which totals $20 million. This first shipment is a direct government to government transfer and the aid will be distributed by the Lebanese High Relief Committee. The major concern is to make relief supplies available as quickly as possible but, in a measured manner, to assure that the aid is effectively distributed. The International Red Cross has made an appeal for approximately $1 million in medicines for Lebanon and this appeal will probably also be funded by us from the same Disaster Relief Account.

The State Department has indicated that it will spend up to $5 million from the Disaster Relief Fund but that then it would inform Congress and seek approval to spend above that level for Lebanon. At a later date, after immediate disaster needs have been met, the State Department may request funds for resettlement programs in Lebanon. In order to do this, there must be a report to Congress and then Congress has an opportunity, 30 calendar days, to disapprove by concurrent resolution.

Apparently, there is also food available through the U.N. World Food Program. It is food suited to disaster needs and the United States already has some "floating assets" with this organization which we could tap for Lebanon. The Lebanese have not yet requested any food assistance although they have been informed that this food is available to them and that it is food better-suited to their immediate disaster needs than PL 480 food.

For your information, I am also enclosing with this letter a copy of my Subcommittee's recommendations regarding economic and military assistance programs for Lebanon in FY 1979.

We continue to follow developments in Lebanon closely and are in constant contact with the executive branch. Should further disaster and relief assistance be requested, you can be sure that the subcommittee will give it favorable consideration.

I appreciate the leadership you have provided on this important humanitarian issue and I share your concern over what has happened in Lebanon. If I can be of further assistance please let me know. Your staff can also contact my subcommittee staff directly to receive updated information as circumstances change as I am sure they will.

With best wishes.

Sincerely yours,

LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

LEBANON—DISPLACED PERSONS

Date: Beginning March 14, 1978.

Location: Southern Lebanon (especially 59 "frontline" villages, Tyre, Nabatiye, and Sidon) and Beirut.

People affected: Population of the disaster area—450,000 (majority Lebanese).

Dead—50–60 (updated figures not yet available).

Injured—120 (updated figures not yet available).

Displaced—245,000 (Lebanese and Palestinian); 160,000 of these need shelter.

Number in daily feeding—500 families (3,500 people).

GENERAL SITUATION

[New items of special interest are: an increase in the estimated number of displaced persons from 200,000 to 245,000; the introduction of UNIFIL; the beginning of public works rehabilitation; the addition of more relief distribution centers; an increase in the USG contribution to Lebanese relief; contributions by the American National Red Cross and Lutheran World Relief; an international appeal for funds by UNRWA; the fact that the financial part of ICRC's appeal has been met; and increased assistance provided by Algeria, the EEC, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Morocco, the Netherlands, Norway, Syria, and the Save the Children Alliance.]

A large part of the population of southern Lebanon fled their homes as a result of an Israeli military campaign aimed at punishing Palestinian terrorists. Some have begun to return after the introduction of a United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon. About 100 families (8,000 people) have returned to Tyre, which was deserted by 45,000 of its 50,000 inhabitants in the early days of the fighting. Stores in Tyre have reopened and repairs to utilities will begin soon.

Lebanese displaced from southern Lebanon have fled to the following areas: Beirut (50,000 displaced persons), Sidon (15,000), Chouf (60,0000), Aley (15,000), and Baalbeck-Hermel (40,000).

Palestinians displaced by the recent fighting number about 65,000. Some 34,000 of these fled to Sidon and 5,000–10,000 went to Beirut.

Unmet priority needs (as defined by the Government of Lebanon) for 200,000 displaced persons for six months are: tents (6,200); eating/cooking utensils (23,650 sets); blankets (209,760); mattresses (200,000); water jugs (48,984); baby food (10,800,000 pots. 5 tons cerelac, vitamins A & B); baby clothing (for 30,000); underclothing; bulgur (666 MT); kidney beans (1,000 MT); canned meat, chicken, cheese, and sardines (2,992 MT); jam (200 MT); and baby milk (360 MT). Many of the food items may be available locally.

ACTION TAKEN BY THE GOVERNMENT OF LEBANON (GOL) AND LEBANESE GROUPS

An Interministerial Committee on Relief (IMCR) was formed on March 15, 1978 consisting of Ministers Rizk, Salman, Cheaito, and Bizri. The Committee is to oversee all relief activities including those of the GOL Office of Social Development and the High Relief Committee. The GOL is concerned primarily with displaced Lebanese, leaving displaced Palestinians in the care of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).

All hospitals have been instructed to provide care for all patients and to bill the Ministry of Health if necessary. The American University Hospital in Beirut is supplying a medical team to each relief camp each afternoon. The League of Private Hospitals has called upon hospital operators to offer assistance.

Control registration points have been established to register persons displaced by the most recent fighting. The number of registered Lebanese families is expected to reach 7,000 or approximately 50,000 persons.

Temporary housing (tents and prefabricated buildings) has been provided in Beirut, Sidon and vicinity (including Gazieh and Kannarit), and Chouf. All of these camps are equipped with water and sanitation. Camps are organized by village of origin. In addition to the above, mosques, churches, schools, local universities, and finished and unfinished buildings are being used for temporary shelter.

Twenty-four centers to distribute supplies to displaced persons have been set up in Beirut and its suburbs. Additional centers are located in the South.

Approximately 116,200 persons are being assisted in camps/centers.

Price controls on necessities are to be strictly enforced and supplies of sugar, flour, and rice are to be assured (e.g., 100 MT flour to Sidon).

The Ministry of Public Works has begun repair of roads, bridges, and public buildings.

An Association of Industrialists has donated 500 cases of canned meat.

The Beirut Chamber of Commerce has donated $3.300 and issued an appeal to its members for further contributions.

Employees of North Lebanon have decided to contribute 15% of their salaries for the displaced persons.

The Lebanese Mothers' Committee has distributed food in Beirut.

The Lebanese Red Cross has carried out first-aid and evacuation services.

The Lions Club has organized to contact other Middle Eastern clubs for aid and has donated 3,000 undergarments to the Sidon authorities.

The Municipality of Beirut has established a fund (LL 300,000=US$ 98,361) for urgent measures related to refugee support in Beirut. Another fund of LL 500,000 (US$ 163,934) has been established for IMCR disposition. Various health and refuse vehicles will be purchased for use in emergency-related activities.

The Organization of Overseas Lebanese has issued an appeal for assistance.

The Palestinian Red Crescent is operating in rear battle areas.

Students from the American University in Beirut have worked as volunteers in food distribution centers.

The YWCA has donated 500 blankets and 1,000 cans of soup and the YMCA has provided volunteers to erect tents in Sidon and Beirut.

ASSISTANCE PROVIDED BY THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT (USG)

In response to a request for USG assistance from Lebanese Prime Minister Salim Al Hoss, the U.S. Ambassador to Lebanon, Richard Parker, declared a disaster on March 19, 1978.

From the Italy stockpile of the U.S. Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance (OFDA), the following have been provided: tents (1,850), tent flys (1,420), wool blankets (30,823), cotton blankets (13,756), muslin sheets (2,976), plastic sheeting (20 rolls), five-gallon water jugs (1,057), tetracycline capsules (200,000), penicillin tablets (120,000), multi-vitamin tablets (250,000), cooking stoves (50), and gas cans (45). The value of these commodities, excluding air transportation, is estimated to be $1,170,000. The cost of air transportation is estimated to be $79,040. These supplies are consigned to the GOL; however, the GOL has promised 500 of the tents to UNRWA.

OFDA is also planning to provide an additional 15,509 cotton blankets; 34,000 wool blankets; 20,000 water jugs; and 6 ICOSA prefabricated shelters.

ASSISTANCE PROVIDED BY U.S. VOLUNTARY AGENCIES

The American National Red Cross has airlifted 10 cases of sterile bandages donated by Johnson & Johnson.

Catholic Relief Services/NY has sent $25,000 to its representative in Lebanon to purchase relief goods for 800–1,000 displaced persons camped on the outskirts of Beirut.

Church World Service has advanced $25,000 to the Middle East Council of Churches (MECC) for its relief activities. An appeal for $70,000 to meet CWS's share of a World Council of Churches appeal ($200,000) has been made. Food shipments, including 5 tons of canned meat from the Church of the Brethren, are being organized.

The Community Development Foundation/Save the Children Federation has alerted the other members of the Save the Children Alliance (U.K., Canada, Norway, Denmark, and Austria) to potential needs. Their training center in Lebanon is being used as a staging area for relief supplies and 5,000 displaced persons are being cared for.

Lutheran World Relief has granted $10,000 to the Middle East Lutheran Ministry in Beirut.

The Mennonite Central Committee has contributed $32,000 for baby food, canned food, blankets, and mattresses to be distributed through the Sidon provincial government. In addition, 7,000 blankets, 5 tons of beans, and 5 tons of canned beef are being distributed through the MECC.

Seventh-day Adventist World Service has been distributing blankets and clothing from their 40 tons in stock in Beirut.

ASSISTANCE PROVIDED BY THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY ORGANIZATIONS

The Arab League has pledged $300,000 for medicaments and supplementary medical services.

The European Economic Community (EEC) will authorize 20,000 MT of cereals as a supplement to its regular program. In addition, 100,000 MUA have been contributed to the International Committee of the Red Cross appeal.

The International Committee of the Red Cross is using its staff currently in Lebanon (15 Swiss delegates and 25 local employees) to care for the displaced persons in its region and to carry out assessments of the situation. An appeal has been made for baby milk (180 tons), cash to purchase medical supplies (400,000 Swiss francs), blankets (20,000), and cash for operational expenses (900,000 Swiss francs). The financial part of the appeal has been met.

Up to $500,000 is available for this emergency from the United Nations Special Trust Fund for Lebanon. An appeal for supplementary funds to benefit all U.N. agencies in Lebanon, except UNRWA, is expected.

UNRWA made an urgent appeal on March 23, 1978 for cash ($30,000 per week), foodstuffs, tents (3,000), blankets (30,000), and clothing and shoes for 8,000 children. In Sidon, UNRWA has been feeding 34,000 displaced Palestinians. UNRWA classrooms are being used for temporary shelter.

The World Council of Churches has launched an appeal for $200,000 to purchase locally: blankets (18,000), kitchen utensils (4,000 sets), plastic sandals (15,000 pairs), high protein food, dry beans, and milk. Distribution costs ($65,000) will also be covered.

GOVERNMENTS

Algeria—two planeloads of medical supplies for the Palestinian Red Crescent.

Canada—$1 million (Canadian dollars) to the ICRC. Three churches in Toronto have sent $11,000 (Canadian dollars) to Lebanon.

Egypt—12-member medical team.

France—8,000 MT of wheat.

Germany (Federal Republic)—7,500 blankets plus an unknown quantity of baby food. Within the scope of EEC aid, Germany plans to allocate 2,275 MT of powdered milk; 1,240 MT of butter oil; and 25,000 MT of cereals.

Iran—3,500 blankets, clothes for 4,600 displaced persons, and two planeloads of relief supplies such as oil, sugar, tea, and flour.

Iraq—21 truckloads of relief supplies and a medical team.

Jordan—assessment team of 6 physicians, 4 trucks of medicines, and 1,200 bottles of blood.

Kuwait—medical team of 10 doctors and nurses, 10 ambulances, and 25 trucks.

Morocco—medicines, plasma, and medical equipment for the Red Crescent.

Netherlands—9,500 blankets; 1,000 cases of food; and 6,000 bottles of powdered milk.

Norway—$187,260 to ICRC.

Syria—shipment of wheat.

United Arab Emirates—medical mission, composed of 20 doctors, 40 nurses and pharmacists, and 10 administrative staff and drivers to Syria.

United Kingdom—5,000 blankets and 150 tents.

VOLUNTARY AGENCIES

Austrian Save the Children Fund—$3,000.

Danish Save the Children Fund—$10,000.

Norwegian Save the Children Fund—$100,000.

CHRISTIAN R. HOLMES,
Deputy Director, Office of U.S. Foreign Disaster Assistance.●

APPEAL TO THE CONGRESS BY SOVIET JEWISH WOMEN

HON. MARJORIE S. HOLT

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, while I was in Moscow, I met with the members of the Soviet Women's Jewish Committee, who asked me to present their cause to Congress. Their wish is to be allowed to emigrate to Israel for personal, professional, and religious reasons. However, their applications for exit visas have been consistently denied by Soviet authorities. I was impressed by their courage, sincerity, and perseverance, as demonstrated in these appeals:

APPEAL TO THE CONGRESS OF THE USA

On October 6th we, a group of women, whose applications for exit visas to Israel have been denied for years, were going to submit a petition to the Supreme Soviet asking it to accept us for the discussions of our situation. But we were put under house arrest which is illegal according to the Soviet law and kept under it for several days. No answer to our petition that was mailed later was given.

On January 27th, 1978 H. Elinson, N. Rosenstein, I. Gildengorn, L. Vilenskaya, N. Hassina, L. Lihterova, Y. Gudz, E. Dubianskaya, B. Elistratova, F. Cohen and M. Karnovskaya-As made another attempt to deliver the petition and were accepted by the Deputy Chief of the Administration Department of the Central Committee of the CPSU A. Ivanov with K. Zotov, Director of the All-Union OVIR, present.

We expressed our deep dissatisfaction with the present practice of the considerations of the applications for exit visas when people are often denied permissions to emigrate without giving justified reasons and have to wait for many years not knowing when and whether these permissions will be granted them.

A. Ivanov told us that there would not be any juridical changes in the procedure of the making decisions on giving visas. There will not be any laws on emigration and each case will be considered on individual bases.

We were, however, promised that our cases would be reconsidered shortly. Our criticisms were promised to be taken into account so that those of us who are not given visas will be explained reasons for denying them and told when they will be granted.

However, in a week when we phoned A. Ivanov and K. Zotov to enquire about the progress in the reconsiderations of our cases it become clear that the promises given earlier were a deception. Probably, they were given due to the presence of the delegation of the Supreme Soviet headed by B. Ponomarev in the USA at that time.

In the end of February we were accepted by K. Zotov but from the answers he gave it was absolutely clear that no case was really reconsidered.

Thus, the Soviet authorities had demonstrated again the worth of their promises and what women's rights in this country really mean. Once more we were denied our right to reunite our relatives in Israel and even the right to discuss our cases with the competent officials. We were doomed to continue the life of uncertainty without any possibilities to raise our children in Jewish traditions and get jobs according to our qualifications.

On the 8th of March, protesting against the violation of our right 44 women went on hunger strike whereas 22 of them were going to hold a peaceful demonstration under signs "Visas—yes, lies—no!", "Homeland for our children", "Let my people go!". However, the demonstration was cruelly suppressed: 10 women were placed under house-arrest, 7 were arrested on the way to the scene of the demonstration which was reached only by 5 women. No sooner had they displayed their signs than they were frogmarched by plainclothesmen and driven to the different police stations where they were kept for a day and talked to by the KGB men. Some of them threatened to punish us more severely if we continued our struggle for leaving this country.

But we have no choice. We will continue our just struggle. No persecution will stop us.

We appeal to the Congress of the USA to use its influence to help us to win our rights.

Soviet Women's Jewish Committee:

Gildengorn I., Moscow 117342, Profsoyuznaya 87, k.4, apt. 26, tel. 333-36-74.

Elinson H., Moscow 127018, Streletskaya 6, apt. 24, tel. 289-89-17.

Elistratova B., Moscow, B. Cherkizovskaya 1, k.2, apt. 50.

Joffe R., Moscow, Profsoyuznaya 97, k.1, apt. 203, tel. 333-63-61.

Riabkina M., Moscow 117485, Profsoyuznaya 102, k.2, apt. 1, tel. 335-66-47.

Rosenstein N., Moscow 117485, Butlerova 2, k.1. apt. 69.

Vilenskaya L., Moscow 105?03, Ismailovsky prosp. 115a, apt. 46, tel. 463-0135.

We, my husband Bronislav Lainer and I, are both scientists in metallurgy. Until 1973 when we were dismissed from our jobs because of our desire to emigrate to Israel we worked as researchers in the State Institute for rare metals and the State Institute of Metal Working. We applied for visas on 5.10.1973 but our request was denied on February 8th, 1974. We were told that our "leaving the USSR is inexpedient for state security reasons". For almost 5 years now we have been asking various officials to explain to us the meaning of this formula but so far no one of them discussed the substance of our case. In any case we do not know any state secrets. Any independent expert can confirm there is no and cannot be any "state secrets" in such traditional field as metallurgy. The Institutes we worked are not secret. They are opened to the visitors from the Western countries and, therefore, our former laboratories equipment and subjects of research are well known abroad. All results of our work were published in more than 50 articles. Moreover some employees of the Institutes we worked at got permission to leave for Israel. Thus, we are being kept here not for "security reasons" but as hostages. This was explicitly confirmed by the general Sorochkin who told me that our getting visas "depends on the relations of the USSR with the West". For many years we are forced to lead a life of uncertainty. We are not able to bring up our children in our national tradition. We cannot get qualified, in fact any, jobs in our field. We were kicked out of the offices for which we did technical translations for years. After that my husband was threatened with a charge in parasitism and possible imprisonment.

We appeal to you for help. We need it now very much.

Irene Gildengorn, Moscow 117342, Profsoyusnaya 87, kor 4, apt. 26, tel. 333-36-74.●

TOUGH TALK IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR A FAIR ARMS AGREEMENT

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, the President has finally stated his alarm at the massive Soviet arms buildup and continuing Soviet and Cuban mischief in Africa. Such Soviet actions were said to threaten the negotiation of a new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, and to force the United States to strengthen our defense. I firmly believe that Congress must focus on what the President does, not merely what he says. I would like to share with my House colleagues an extremely perceptive editorial which appeared in the April 2, 1978, edition of The Courier-Journal, setting forth the reasons why tough action is more appropriate than tough talk to restore a realistic balance between U.S. and Soviet military might. The editor and publisher of this respected Kentucky newspaper is Mr. Barry Bingham, Jr., and its opinion page editor is Mr. Robert T. Barnard.

The editorial is as follows:

TOUGH TALK IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR A FAIR ARMS AGREEMENT

President Carter has talked tough to the Russians, and the Russians have talked tough right back. But behind the talk are a lot of disturbing numbers—the growing number of modern Soviet missiles, the substantial Soviet numerical advantage in men, tanks and combat aircraft in Europe, and the number of dollars Mr. Carter proposes to spend on defense.

The President recently warned that the "excessive" Soviet military buildup and continuing Soviet and Cuban mischief in Africa endanger U.S.-Soviet relations, including negotiation of a new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty. The Russians responded that relations already were "sliding backwards" and that U.S. intransigence stands in the way of a successful SALT agreement.

Mr. Carter's tough talk, while directed at the Russians, doubtless also was intended to quiet his more hawkish critics at home and among our NATO allies. But what worries a lot of informed Americans and Western Europeans is that talk is not enough. The numbers seem to confirm that the Soviet Union is seeking and might soon achieve broad military superiority over the West, and that Washington is not responding quickly and effectively enough to counter this threat.

Take Mr. Carter's defense budget for fiscal 1979. It calls for a relatively modest $3.5 billion in additional spending over this years' budget, after accounting for inflation. The biggest increases would be to boost the combat readiness of U.S. conventional forces in Europe.

This improvement is badly needed, since NATO is substantially outnumbered and outgunned by Warsaw Pact forces. But the Carter defense budget would do little to offset steady Soviet gains in naval and strategic nuclear forces.

The proposed shipbuilding budget must be especially disappointing to Navy brass. They doubtless expected better treatment from a President who is a former submarine officer and once contemplated a naval career. Mr. Carter can't be faulted for deciding against another nuclear-powered supercarrier, since these giant ships would be tempting and vulnerable targets in a full-scale war and we already have enough—13—for lesser conflicts. But a good case can be made for building more surface ships of lesser size, as well as attack submarines. These would be needed, in time of war, to protect sea lanes used in resupplying U.S. forces in Europe and to assure an uninterrupted flow of Mideast oil to the U.S. and Europe.

The budget for strategic nuclear forces and the provisions of the pending SALT agreement so far made public are even more alarming. True, Mr. Carter's budget provides funds for continued development of the "MX" advanced, land-based intercontinental ballistic missile and of pilotless cruise missiles. There also is money for construction of the big Trident missile-carrying submarines that eventually will replace our Polaris-Poseidon fleet. But the funds are substantially less than what the Russians are believed to be spending for expansion and modernization of their strategic forces.

Moreover, the SALT agreement nearing completion would do little to slow Russia's rapid gains of recent years. The Soviet Union already enjoys a substantial advantage in the number and size of its intercontinental and submarine-launched ballistic missiles. For years, the U.S. has been able to offset these advantages with superior missile accuracy, multiple warheads and a large fleet of manned bombers. But the Russians are now installing multiple warheads on their already bigger missiles and have improved their accuracy, as well. They also are deploying a new supersonic bomber.

The result is that, within a few years, the Russians are expected to have the capability to destroy most of our Minuteman silo-based missiles in a first strike. At the same time, our Polaris-Poseidon missile-launching submarines—the least vulnerable element of our strategic forces—will be reaching the end of the 20-year operational life for which they were designed. Many will be due for decommissioning in the early and mid-1980s, before they can be replaced by an equivalent force of new Trident subs, which, by the way, are encountering construction delays and enormous cost overruns.

STRONG SENATE OPPOSITION LIKELY

Perhaps our best hedge against Soviet strategic superiority is the cruise missile, a weapon much further advanced here than in Russia. Yet U.S. SALT negotiators reportedly have agreed to tight restrictions on the range and number of cruise missiles we are to deploy.

Add it up and the picture is grim, indeed—enough to assure that the SALT agreement, in its present form, would encounter heavy opposition in the Senate.

And rightly so. The President's tough talk isn't enough. The numbers are running against us, and a SALT agreement that sanctioned such an imbalance would be worse than worthless. The place to talk tough is at the negotiating table. But even there it won't work unless we are willing, in the absence of an equitable arms agreement, to spend what we must. The amount will be what it takes to deter the Russians from gambling that a nuclear war can be won—and to convince our worried allies that we will stick to our commitments.●

BALANCED PERSPECTIVE ON THE MIDDLE EAST

HON. RAYMOND F. LEDERER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. LEDERER. Mr. Speaker, for some time the administration has waivered on its policy in the Middle East and encouraged actions against the State of Israel by this policy. I believe that only through a strong and definite position can the balance of power be maintained and the security of democracy in the Middle East be preserved.

For the edification of my colleagues, I wish to here include in the RECORD, two articles which appeared in the Brith Sholom Digest in my home city of Philadelphia. I believe these articles, while printed some time ago, are especially relevant in light of recent developments.

THE ROLE OF AMERICA IN THE MIDDLE EAST PEACE

(By Albert Liss)

Even the most cynical observers cannot deny that the peaceful communion begun by Prime Minister Begin and President Sadat has turned a new page in the violent history of the Middle East since the establishment of modern Israel. What remains to be seen is whether the momentum toward peace put in motion by the audacious Begin/Sadat gambit can overcome the obstructionism of the Arab rejectionist nations and the purported self-interest of our own government and the Soviet Union.

What also must be watched is the depth of Mr. Sadat's new found tolerance for an independent non-Arab sovereign nation in the Arab heartland. His prejudice against Jews, kept alive by his own propaganda, is an unmeasurable factor that can deform his rational perceptions.

Despite the initial hysterical reaction among Arab nations to his overtures to Israel, Sadat may hope that the power of the drama for peace he has produced will bring most of his opponents to the theatre, not as a thundering claque, but at least powerless to draw the curtain until the final act. After all, the nations which have fought Israel have very little to gain by their continuing hostility to the Jewish state. While they are responsible for creating, financing, and training the PLO and have exploited the Palestinian situation to gain advantage in their internecine struggles in the Arab world, they have found the PLO to be troublesome. Alone, it cannot accomplish its sworn goals. Its powers derive from the authority and support granted it by the Arab nations. This was demonstrated in Jordan and in Lebanon.

Regarding the concern displayed by Arab nations for the establishment of a new Palestinian state, their failure to establish such a state during the 19 year period Jordan occupied the West Bank and Egypt controlled the Gaza strip speaks for itself. As neither Jordan nor Eggypt can lay claim to the West Bank and Gaza, they had every opportunity during their illegal control of the disputed territory to make the Palestinian state a reality. Having opposed this development before, the creation now of a second Arab national entity in Palestine (Jordan is the first) can be seen only as a pretext for reducing the size of the single Jewish nation-state as a prelude to its eventual extinction.

Yet, whatever dangers emanate from the PLO or the rejectionist front, which to this day refuse to abandon their fantasy of destroying Israel on the battlefield, the biggest factor that will determine success or failure for Sadat and Begin are still the intentions of the United States and the Soviet governments.

Their parallel strategy of manipulating Israel and the Arab nations to serve their national objectives has seldom reflected the real interests of the Middle East nations. Both governments contributed to the continuing beligerency in the area by preventing Israel from gaining a victory that would have made peace possible, and by relieving the Arab nations of their responsibility to settle their differences with Israel at the Conference table, following their periodic military conflagrations.

When they embarked on their present course, Sadat and Begin were well aware that global considerations extraneous to the aims of Egypt and Israel complicated American and Soviet policies. At the same time, because of their nations' dependency upon the United States, they realized that without Carter's support their efforts would collapse. They could alter the script somewhat, but they would have to allow the American President to remain as the prompter. It was their theatre, but Carter held the mortgage.

In view of terms Carter spelled out previously for a settlement which includes Israel's withdrawal from the West Bank and the recognition of Palestinian rights, it was particularly important for Begin to secure from President Carter an acknowledgement that the position of the Israeli government was a fair start in negotiations. Their case having been explicitly articulated by Israel's friend, Arab nations could demand no less. Their extreme demands were further encouraged when Carter let word out that Begin's far reaching tangible concessions would not be acceptable to the Arabs. The effect of President Carter's views was to legitimize the negative response initially publicized by Saudi Arabia and Jordan and to compel Sadat, who already was under pressure from the extremist camp, to take a hard line. This accounts for Begin's unscheduled, abrupt trip to Washington which resulted in Carter's public statement of appreciation for the Begin approach. Carter was able to parry the attacks which his statement provoked, by drawing upon his previous outline for a Middle East settlement to reassure his hosts in Egypt and Saudi Arabia that his script confirmed to their version.

The President would still like to steer Begin and Sadat back to the blueprint for an overall settlement he has tenaciously held to since assuming office.

Admittedly, a comprehensive plan which would bring peace to Israel on all of its borders would be ideal. Nevertheless, the ultimate goal may be reached by steps and it serves no one's interest to hinder the establishment of peaceful relationships between Egypt and Israel, should the PLO and other Arab nations remain intransigent.

Begin has gone further in his initial response than could reasonably be expected of him, given the historic record of unrelieved warfare waged by the Arab nations against his small nation state since its birth. With his unusual capacity to assess his adverary' intention and limit, and a grand intellectual understanding of the broad sweep of history, Begin can be depended upon to provide a statesmanship approach leading to a just settlement, provided his opposite number is willing to reciprocate. It must be remembered, however, that he bears on his shoulders, as his nation's Prime Minister, the terrible burden of achieving a solution that will insure the survival of an independent, sovereign, Jewish nation living in peace with its neighbors—the goal of all Israelis, whatever party is in power. Begin should not be expected to barter away Israel's security.

Carter now seems to grasp this urgent requisite as Israel's immutable bottom line. The problem is that what is perceived as essential for Israel's security needs in Washington may be seen differently in Jerusalem by Israel's leaders, who are, after all, responsible for the welfare of a population which has been the victim of repeated assaults by hostile neighbors with genocidal designs.

Addressing the Knesset, Egypt's Prime Minister also acknowledged Israel's security as the foremost consideration for peace with Israel. Sadat's credibility will be tested when he makes his hard decision to sue for peace based on Egypt's interests or succumbs to the destructive role of a Pan Arab zealot and persists in uncompromising demands which will jeopardize Israel's security. Choosing the former, he will find no obstacle to peace. Opting for the latter, he will revert to the Arab hard-liner who said it will be for future generations to make peace with Israel.

Sadat may hope that the United States government will deliver Israel, but, in fair balance, may Begin also hope that Sadat and the United States government can deliver the Arab nations who have vowed to attain a settlement through war. Carter must come up with that answer before he can expect further substantial concessions from Israel.

The military and economic involvement of the two super powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, in the Middle East give them awesome power. We must hope that these two great nations can find the intellectual and moral resources to aid, not impede, the search for peace.

The public also must accept responsibility. Grown weary of the Middle East problem which has dominated the international agenda for 30 years, they must not allow their impatience to replace critical judgement and expect the 1,000 mile journey for peace begun by Begin and Sadat to be completed at the expense of Israel's existence. Czechoslovakia's fate at Munich must be the silent spectre which counsels them.

Examined realistically, the hazardous trek toward a just and peaceful settlement in the Middle East will more likely bear a resemblance to the flight to freedom by the ancient Israelites under Moses than it will to our vaunted trips to other starry planets.

LANDING TOPSIDE

(By Albert Liss)

Political observers need not squander much time to analyze the impulses which sent Sadat to Jerusalem to enter direct negotiations with his arch foe, a course earnestly sought by every Israeli Prime Minister. His actions have been shaped not only by the factors of real politics and economic imperatives, but also by the well-springs of deep emotions.

Egypt has paid a costly price for the romantic notion of Pan-Arabism which his predecessor endorsed—100,000 killed and $60 billion wasted on armaments in the four wars waged with Israel. Although the totalitarian control exercised by the Egyptian political system may put a lid on popular discontent, the terrible loss of life and economic deprivation must be a festering sore among the Egyptian people. Seen in this context, the outpouring of support for Sadat's vision of a settlement must be judged as a passionate cry of the heart. Nevertheless, Sadat's humanitarian concerns for his people should not lead us to the false belief that he would blindly expose himself to risks from which he could not recover. The popular view of Sadat lurking on the brink of disaster because of his dispute with the rejectionist front is a lop-sided view. Egypt's President has demonstrated a rare instinct for survival and in this instance too, whatever the outcome—excepting from a possible attempt on his life by a fanatic assassin—he has shrewdly calculated his moves to insure that he remains afloat.

To begin with, Sadat knows that he may have his desperately needed peace with Israel tomorrow. For the pursuit of this end, he has already received the backing of his military forces and the acclaim of his people. He has also reaffirmed the American connection, forged by Kissinger and Ford, to collect on United States commitments under the previous disengagement agreement to provide Egypt with economic and military aid. This economic aid had already reached a level higher than that given to Israel, an annual sum of $1 billion. He has also created the necessary climate to expect a stepped up delivery of masses of armaments, including some of the most sophisticated in America's arsenal. Until now, because of opposition by Congress and the Jewish community, the Carter administration has moved slowly on Egypt's request for armaments. Under the present circumstances, neither Congress nor friends of Israel are likely to put forth strenuous objections. Should Sadat renew the option of war, he will then have made certain he has regained a military preponderance over Israel and make it likely that the United States government will remain neutral in any clash between Egypt and Israel, barring Israel's total destruction. His insight is sharpened by his knowledge that America stood aside during the Pakistan/Indian war over Bangladesh, despite its defense treaty with Pakistan.

At this juncture, Sadat does not believe it will come to war. Despite his publicly expressed annoyance at President Carter's acknowledgement of Prime Minister Begin's initial negotiating stance, Sadat maintains confidence that the United States government will provide both the incentive and the leverage to persuade Israel to grant sweeping concessions as demonstrated before by the Ford/Kissinger strategy which resulted in Israel's surrender of parts of the Sinai, the return of oil wells and the opening of the Suez. This, Sadat remembers, was achieved without reciprocal response from Egypt. His former Soviet sponsors no longer of any use to him, Sadat is now counting on American support to achieve Egypt's goal for peaceful settlement as he once accepted Russian support when he chose the battlefield as a test for Egyptian supremacy.●

EQUITABLE TELEVISION NEWS COVERAGE

HON. ANDREW MAGUIRE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, today I and other members of the New Jersey House delegation, together with CLIFFORD CASE and HARRISON WILLIAMS in the Senate are introducing legislation to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to provide that each State shall have at least one commercial, VHF television station.

The New Jersey Coalition for Fair Broadcasting—the broadbased citizens organization chaired by Senators CASE and WILLIAMS—and I have been working together for 2 years trying to move some apparently immovable objects—the broadcasters and the Federal Communications Commission—trying to get what the Communications Act requires for New Jersey, equitable television news coverage on the public airwaves.

I have formally intervened three times in support of the coalition's petition asking the FCC to do something about the abysmal coverage of New Jersey events by New York television. In my usual reticent manner I have prodded, poked, even come close to screaming at the Commissioners about their handling of the New Jersey case on three occasions when they came before Congress. And I have gained some important congressional support for creating a New Jersey station.

Television is obviously important to our society. I did not say TV was always high quality—just important. McLuhan was right: Television is the medium that gets the message across to most people.

Edward R. Morrow's TV treatment of Joseph McCarthy helped remove him from the American political scene. The war in Vietnam may have ended sooner because television brought the carnage, the lies, the senseless policies right into America's homes where the war could not be ignored.

Because of historical circumstances of how frequencies were allocated, we in New Jersey are covered by out-of-State television. Although we have some UHF stations, New Jersey rather uniquely lacks VHF's in what has been characterized as a VHF market.

Consider this—Helena, Mont., with 11,000 TV homes has its own VHF station; Pembina, Mont., has 6,000 TV homes and its own VHF station; Glendive, Mont., has 4,000 TV homes and its own commercial VHF station. But the FCC says New Jersey, despite its size and population density does not need one.

We have got a uniquely high cancer rate, in part the product of heavy industrialization and auto pollution. We have got severe flooding problems. We have got a poor mass transit system. We have got a devastating unemployment rate, a problem with capital flowing out of the State, and continuing fiscal problems.

These and other matters of great seriousness deserve a lot of public discussion if they are to be solved. You rarely hear about them on the evening news and only occasionally early on Sunday when people are either in bed or in church. In the few minutes a week allotted to our State you will learn the lottery number, you will see a fire, or watch a sickening and tasteless interview with a family member of someone just murdered. That's the sad kind of coverage we get from out-of-state broadcasters, the kind that would not help New Jersey residents understand their State or its problems.

What about the newspapers? Why cannot they do the job? According to a recent report by the Roper Organization, newspapers are simply not competitive with television. Says Roper:

> The public continues to regard television as the number one source of news, and, by a wide margin. Television also continues to be the most believable medium.

Let's look at the figures:

When the Roper organization first began surveying the influence of media in 1959, 57 percent responded that newspapers were the source of most of their information about events. Television was second with 6 percent less. In last year's survey, television had leaped to first place with 64 percent, a 15-point lead over newspapers as the major news source and a 21-percent rise since 1959.

Another discovery by Roper: Unbelievably, television is more believable than newspapers. In 1959, newspapers were rated first with 32 percent, television second at 29 percent. But that has changed. In 1976, television was rated first at 51 percent, newspapers a distant second at 22 percent.

Finally, with the exception of local races for office—like city council and school board—which remain the province of the local paper, television emerges as the primary source of information about statewide and national elections by a 53- to 35-percent margin. Obviously, it is important that citizens be exposed to the performance of their political representatives on an opposing basis if they are to learn and participate as citizens.

My concern is not limited to coverage of elections, which TV has always found exciting as a horserace is. If you know they would not even give us a break during our most important elections, you can be absolutely certain we are getting severely shortchanged every night of the year. And of course, we are being systematically shortchanged, as all the available data clearly show.

I contend that people would watch a New Jersey-based commercial VHF station. New Jersey residents are hungry for news of their State.

The solution is to provide New Jersey with a commercial VHF station of its own, a station which would be legally required, under the terms of its license, to cover both the city where it is licensed and statewide events affecting that city. But, the FCC in its unwisdom has rejected that solution.

One of the few substantive reasons the Commission gave for rejecting the coalition's petition was that it considered the economic prospects of a reallocation to New Jersey to be a "risky gamble." But it did this despite evidence to the contrary which was the basis for a dissent by Commissioner Glen O. Robinson. He wrote:

There is adequate evidence in the record to support a finding that a New Jersey Channel 7 could succeed. That such a station would not suffer the embarrassment of riches that comes with a New York assignment is evident but irrelevant; by that test we would be required to cram assignments into New York until the marginal stations earned no more than in the most impoverished market.

That is one Commissioner speaking. But his is not the only indication of the folly of the Commission's ruling. Last year, I read a story in the New York Times which described television as a "failure proof" business. Variety reported the New York independent stations had a $9 million increase in profits over the year before—not bad for stations without network affiliations in the most competitive television market in the country.

In this context, it is interesting to add that Harry Levin, who analysed the economic situation for the Fair Broadcasting Coalition, said an unaffiliated independent in New Jersey could earn $4.9 million in profits a year. Says Levin:

The implication is quite clearly that the potentital for survival and success is there.

Moreover, New Jersey advertisers face extreme difficulty getting their message across. Unless you are a really big advertiser, you cannot afford to buy super expensive time in New York and Philadelphia to reach an audience that is primarily in Pennsylvania, New York, and Connecticut. An article in Broadcasting magazine estimated that New Jersey residents spend $40 billion a year for products and services. A New Jersey station would be good for New Jersey businessmen as well as representing vitally needed public service.

Unfortunately, while it seems obvious that a station in New Jersey is economically feasible, the FCC has been highly unresponsive to our State's needs. From my personal interventions in the case, I have seen a rather typical example of a regulatory agency that is diligently working to maintain the status quo, one that the existing broadcasters are comfortable with.

In March 1976, before the Commission rejected the coalition's petition so completely, I appeared before the Communications Subcommittee and asked what data the FCC had on the time the New York and Philadelphia stations devote to the State. Wallace Johnson, head of the Broadcast Bureau, claimed that 15 to 30 percent of the local news time is devoted to New Jersey, which conflicts with monitoring data that shows it to be half that or less. Apparently, the reason the Commission thinks it is that high is that its source of the data is the stations themselves. They do not do their own surveying—and this is typical of sloppy and biased American regulatory practice.

When I questioned the FCC in May last year, Wallace Johnson was very evasive about what data the FCC had on economic viability. When I looked for the data, I found they had really not taken a serious look at questions of fact. It was a case of conclusions without data and supporting argumentation. In my opinion, the Commission decision was pro forma. It was not interested in the facts or the public interest, but only in not rocking the boat.

When I questioned then Chairman Wiley, he defended his agency's decision, but left the door open, a crack. He said:

If you are suggesting that some of these stations are not living up to this commitment they made, I would be very open to looking at that.

Well, I think we should all keep after them, and continue to monitor their performance. With license renewals coming up this summer, the coalition will have the opportunity to challenge their performance.

But the performance of those stations is just a part of the problem. I do not think we need a New Jersey station simply because we do not get the coverage we need to be informed from those out-of-State stations. I think we need our own station because it is our right to have one under section 307B of the Communications Act. That section specifies that frequencies should be assigned so as to assure their fair and equitable distribution.

In a letter to the Commission I have asked it to do the following:

First, study the cost factors involved in relocating the channel 7 frequency to Trenton with a transmitter in Freehold.

Second, explain the Commission's assertions that loss of service news time to Connecticut and Long Island would necessarily be associated with the increased service to our State.

Third, and most important, tell us why—based upon hard, economic data and serious analysis—the FCC believes a New Jersey station would not succeed.

If the Commission cannot satisfactorily answer these questions, I believe it should reverse its decision.

Finally, today I am introducing legislation which would bypass a court decision and order the Commission to reassign a VHF commercial station to New Jersey. My bill clarifies section 307B of the Communications Act to require at least one commercial VHF television station to be assigned to every State. Under the bill, the Commission would determine the "fair market" value of the station to be reassigned and the New Jersey broadcasters would have to pay the New York licensee for the loss of equipment and its plant. I realize that the airwaves belong to the public and there is no requirement that this be done. But I think the compensation provision is fair, in that no one can claim their property has been appropriated, and makes the bill more equitable and politically acceptable.

I shall be working to see that this bill gains support on the Hill. And I will be working as closely as ever with the coalition. I think all residents of New Jersey know how important it is that they be better informed from their major source of news, television.●

PANHANDLE EASTERN REPORT HAS INSIGHTS

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, along with other Members of Congress, I received a copy of the annual report of Panhandle Eastern, which describes itself in its report:

The business of Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Company encompasses the transmission and sale of natural gas in interstate commerce, the exploration and production of oil and natural gas, the production and sale of natural gas liquids, the development of supplemental sources of gas, the mining of coal and offshore contract drilling.

It interested me because the pipelines go through my district.

It interested me also—and it should interest my colleagues, particularly those who have responsibilities in the energy field—because it shows a period of unprecedented earnings under present regulations at the same time the annual report advocates deregulation of price controls.

The report notes that the company had its "most successful year in the history of Panhandle Eastern" that gross revenues amounted to $1.2 billion in 1977, as compared $825 million in 1976. That is roughly a 50-percent increase in gross income. Net income went up from $88 million to $106 million. It is also interesting to note that this tremendous increase happened on consolidated gas sales volume increases of 828 billion cubic feet to only 856 billion cubic feet. It also notes that deliveries to pipeline markets were up only 5 percent.

In other words, the report shows an increase in gross income of roughly 50 percent, an increase of net income of roughly 20 percent and an increase in actual deliveries of gas of roughly 5 percent and an increase in consolidated gas sales volumes of only 3 percent.

It would appear to me that they have a pretty good thing right now.

And yet despite those amazing figures, the report calls for deregulation.

The report also points out the fact that the company,

Early in 1978 . . . executed an agreement to acquire the Field Drilling Company, thereby doubling our investment in the drilling business.

I hope that the energy conference is moving along so well that these remarks for the RECORD will have no impact, but I believe this report should be kept in mind as we look to policies for the future.

I am attaching the message from the officers of Panhandle Eastern for the interest of my colleagues:

PANHANDLE EASTERN PIPELINE'S ANNUAL REPORT

DELIVERIES UP 5 PERCENT AND INCOME UP 50 PERCENT

Two financial milestones were recorded in 1977; revenues passed one billion dollars and net income exceeded $100 Million, making the year the most successful in this history of Panhandle Eastern.

REVENUE, EARNINGS AND DIVIDENDS

Gross revenues amounted to $1.2 Billion as compared with $825 Million in 1976, the gain reflecting the operations of newly acquired businesses and higher natural gas rates which were offset by increased purchased gas costs. Consolidated net income in 1977 amounted to $106 Million which was equal to $6.06 per share of common stock after payment of preferred dividends as compared with $88 Million and $5.58 per share in 1976. The 1977 earnings per share are computed on nearly two million additional shares outstanding relating to acquisitions in the last two years.

At their meeting in February 1978, the Directors increased the quarterly dividend from 62½ cents to 65 cents per share effective in the first quarter of 1978. This increase, coupled with the five cent per share increase effective in the second quarter of 1977, brings the indicated annual payment to $2.60 per share.

NATURAL GAS SALES AND SUPPLY

Consolidated gas sales volumes amounted to 856 bcf as compared with 828 bcf in the prior year, the gain resulting from the cumulative impact of new production attached to our transmission systems over the last four years, primarily in the Gulf of Mexico. Actual deliveries to pipeline markets—utility and municipal distribution systems and direct industrial customers—were up five percent in 1977, the first such increase since 1972. Moreover, these more favorable supply conditions are expected to continue over the next several years with the level of sales in the 1978-80 period anticipated to be above that reached in 1977.

This supply improvement results from the success achieved in our extensive gas acquisition program initiated early in this decade. Commencing with the first offshore lease acquisition in December, 1970, the Company and its subsidiaries have invested approximately $645 Million in gas supply endeavors—leases, drilling, and facilities—and have provided an additional $320 Million in advance payments to producers for gas supply.

Clearly, these large investments demonstrate our strong commitment to the long-term future of both exploration and production activities and gas transmission and the Company's strong financial performance in 1977 confirms the soundness of that business strategy. Furthermore, we anticipate that 1978 will be another good year for the Company with earnings improvement expected from both transmission operations and from our subsidiaries engaged in oil and gas production. We believe that, despite a poor performance in 1977, improved results can be achieved from coal operations once settlement of the nationwide strike restores stability to production. It is now apparent, however, that the prolonged strike will adversely affect Y&O's results in the first quarter of 1978.

In addition to improved domestic gas supply, the Company's long-term reserve position was strengthened in 1977 when final authorization was received to import LNG from Algeria. This project will add approximately 3.3 trillion cubic feet to reserves over a 20-year period. Initial deliveries are expected during the last half of 1980 to a terminal and related facilities which will be constructed at Lake Charles, Louisiana.

NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY

Although a welcome development for the Company and its customers, the supply improvement now being experienced by the Panhandle-Trunkline transmission systems does not signal an end to the nation's serious long-term shortage of natural gas nor lessen the urgency for remedial legislation dealing with wellhead pricing as the critical component of national energy policy.

We believe that the restoration of long-term strength to the nation's gas supply can only be achieved through adoption by the Congress of incentive pricing for newly discovered domestic gas reserves. From the perspective of the national interest, it is truly unfortunate that the Congress and the Administration have, at the time this report was completed, failed to eliminate or modify the present rigid Federal price controls governing new gas reserves. Such legislation, in our judgment, commands support on its intrinsic merit along with its significant potential to stimulate the development of new domestic energy supplies, thereby reducing the adverse impact of the nation's growing dependence on imported oil. It is our hope that the Congress will reach a realistic understanding of the national energy issues and adopts effective gas pricing legislation without further delay.

OTHER BUSINESS MATTERS

Early in 1978 the Company executed an agreement to acquire the Field Drilling Company, thereby doubling our investment in the drilling business. Field is primarily engaged in onshore drilling in the United States and presently owns and operates 16 rigs in Texas and has a 50 percent interest in three other rigs located in the Rocky Mountain area. Field also has an interest in four offshore rigs.

Once this acquisition is completed this spring, we will combine Field's operations with those of our subsidiary, Dixilyn, to form one full service drilling organization operating onshore and offshore in the United States and overseas. The long-term prospects for domestic exploration are strong and we anticipate a fine performance from the drilling business.

We acknowledge the important contribution made to the Company's affairs by Gerard C. Smith who resigned as a Director in July 1977 to accept an ambassadorship representing the United States in international nuclear nonproliferation matters. We shall miss Mr. Smith's wise counsel.

The achievements of the Company result from the efforts of all employees and we are pleased to acknowledge the contributions of the dedicated men and women of our organization in making 1977 a successful year.

Very truly yours,

R. L. O'SHIELDS,
President, Chief Executive Officer.
WILLIAM C. KEEFE,
Chairman.

March 3, 1978.●

ISRAELI ACTIONS IN SOUTHERN LEBANON ARE LEGITIMATE SELF-DEFENSE

HON. BENJAMIN S. ROSENTHAL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. ROSENTHAL. Mr. Speaker, I was very disturbed to read the Secretary of State's letter stating that Israel's use of U.S.-made arms in Lebanon may be in violation of its agreement with this country.

One cannot help but wonder what this State Department's reaction would be if the Israeli rescue of hostages held by the PLO at Entebbe were to take place today.

Israel's move into Lebanon was clearly in self-defense. It followed the intolerable provocation of what his come to be known as the Sabbath Massacre. That PLO terrorist attack on a bus near Tel Aviv took 37 Israeli lives March 11. Fatah, the principal military arm of the PLO, promptly took public credit for the tragedy and vowed to repeat it with increasing ferocity.

Yassir Arafat, head of both Fatah and PLO, boasted of his "success" in the attack and called his terrorists "heroes." The State Department calls Arafat a "moderate" and has busily been courting him as a negotiating partner for Mideast peace talks despite his refusal to disavow his organization's goal of destroying Israel, and despite Israel's refusal to deal with the terrorists and private expressions of opposition from responsible Arab leaders to PLO inclusion.

The Israeli incursion into Lebanon was not a massive response to a minor, isolated incident, as some would have us believe. Let us look at the record of the past 10 years.

"There have been incidents on six continents in which the PLO and its affiliates killed 1,131 people, injured 2,471 and held 2,755 hostage. These terrorist actions included 308 bombings in 20 countries; 216 attempted bombings in 26 countries; 180 shootings in 11 countries; 11 assassinations in 9 countries; 17 attempted murders in 11 countries, and 19 hijackings in 14 countries," according to Arnold Forster, general counsel of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Mr. Forster stated in a letter recently published in the New York Times—

A decade's reality: Seven terrorist actions a month; one incident every 4 days, day in and day out for over 10 years; nine murders each month; one victim every three days; 20 people maimed each month; 22 human beings held monthly as hostages.

Israel was the site of four of every five bombings, nine of every ten shootings, three of every four arsons and a majority of the assassinations; over half—1,776—of the terrorist victims were Israelis.

He observed—

The world has done little or nothing to outlaw the terrorism plague; they have only urged Israel not to retaliate.

The Sabbath massacre was the latest incident on this list, and like so many it was mounted from PLO bases in southern Lebanon. Israel's publicly stated goal was to eliminate as many of these bases as possible and protect its population, which has been the repeated targets of Soviet-supplied, long-range PLO artillery deep in the Lebanon hills.

Any reasonable person could come to no other conclusion than that Israel clearly acted in self-defense of its population.

For the United States Government even to imply otherwise represents a very disturbing and significant shift in American policy. It contradicts prior policy followed consistently by previous administrations, both Republican and Democrat, that when Israel responded to PLO raids originating in Lebanon these were legitimate acts of self-defense.

To deny Israel the right and ability to defend itself is tantamount to a policy of assuring the PLO sanctuary from which it may freely attack Israel with its artillery, its rockets and mortars, and its terrorists.

That would be intolerable, and I hope that is not what the U.S. State Department has in mind when it issues such thinly veiled condemnations of Israel's Lebanon operation.

The Secretary's letter also contains a threat to cut off U.S. arms supplies for Israel if its forces are not withdrawn promptly enough. Although no specific deadline is set, sources indicate the Department's target is 2 to 3 months.

What the State Department has overlooked is that Israel did not attack Lebanon, because there is no sovereign State of Lebanon south of the Litani River. Instead there is a political and military no-man's land ruled by bands of terrorists who assail the Christian inhabitants of the area (a fact which the United States and most of the Western World choose to ignore) and use it as bases and sanctuary from which to attack Israeli settlements south of the border.

Since the Lebanese authorities in Beiruit have been unable to suppress brigandage south of the Litani and police their own territory, Israeli police action was fully justified. International law recognizes this elemental right of self-defense when a neighboring state falls into anarchy.

Had there been effective Lebanese authority in the area—known for years as Fatahland—there would have been no need for the Israeli incursion.

The answer to this problem lies not in condemnation of Israel for defending itself or in accusing Israel of having invited the terrorist attack by refusing to negotiate with the PLO as a sovereign state. The solution lies in a firm stand by all against terrorism and those who use it as a political tool. No amount of courtship by the United States has been able to persuade the PLO to change its covenant calling for the elimination of the State of Israel. Unless the civilized nations of the world show they find political terrorism totally intolerable, the PLO and its ilk will continue to believe that it can murder its way into the councils of nations.●

BUDGET SHORTAGE FOR VETERANS MEDICAL PROGRAM

HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I am receiving a large volume of complaints from veterans and their families from all over the country protesting the lack of adequate funds in the President's budget request for fiscal year 1979. I believe many other Members are experiencing the same.

I want Members to know that, in my opinion, these complaints are justified; and if the Congress does not act to adequately fund this program in fiscal year 1979, it would set back this essential activity to a medical "slum" such as we found in existence at the end of World War II. It could be the final blow to do away with it in accordance with the plans by the Office of Management and Budget and HEW.

The Chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, the Honorable RAY ROBERTS of Texas, has notified the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, the Honorable ROBERT GIAIMO, and the chairman of the Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies of the Appropriations Committee, the Honorable EDWARD BOLAND, of the additional funds required over the President's budget request for this program. In my opinion, this is the critical year for the veterans medical program. Unless the Congress acts to adequately fund this program in fiscal year 1979, the next and future years' budgets will be calculated to end this program. There will be even greater hospital bed cutback and the funds for their operation until the program is forced to close down if for no other reason the lack of money to pay staff and purchase drugs and equipment.

Mr. Speaker, to illustrate this I am attaching a document that has come into my possession from the VA hospital, Boise, Idaho. This is the position all VA hospitals have had to take and yet the OMB and VA Administrator assures the Congress that the medical program takes care of more and more patients in less and less beds while the budget will not even permit it to stay apace with inflation.

In all likelihood, this matter will have to be settled here on the floor of the House of Representatives. In preparation for this I feel each Member should be informed as well as possible.

NOTICE TO ALL VETERANS

Due to an acute budget shortage which cannot be corrected and which is secondary to increasing demands on our services with the lack of increased budgeting by Congress, it will be the policy of the Boise VA Hospital not to accept new non-service-connected patients for continuing outpatient care until July 1, 1978, at which time the policy will be re-evaluated. This outpatient policy does not apply to service-connected veterans for their compensable disability or who are judged greater than 50%. The policy does not affect non-service-connected veterans, either, who are in need of hospitalization.

Non-service-connected veterans will be seen one time only on an emergency basis and will not be given a return appointment. They will be expected to continue with their own private physician or find one for continued care if that is judged necessary.

Quoting from the recent National Academy of Science Study, "the easing of eligibility constraints in 1973 to permit the lowest priority veterans, i.e., those without service-connected disabilities to receive outpatient care stimulated a further increase in the already substantial growth of outpatient care visits. The Congress has now indicated that it has no interest in expanding the capacity of the Veterans Administration to provide even more outpatient care for low priority veterans." Because of this philosophy, the Boise VA Hospital cannot continue to expand its existing programs and hence this statement.

PAUL K. KENNEDY,
Hospital Director.
FRANK R. MOHS, M.D.,
Chief of Staff.●

CORPORATE SOCIALISM ROUND II—THE SOLAR POWER SATELLITE

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, this morning I attended a most amazing press conference. The likes of Boeing, Lockheed, Martin-Marietta, GE, Westinghouse, Southern California Edison, Grumman, and Arthur D. Little announced the formation of a new "nonprofit" corporation to lobby for solar power satellites—the Sunsat Energy Council. The collusion of the high technology-space/industrial complex in assuring full corporate socialism for the next 20 years, much like that which American taxpayers have provided for the last 20 years, should be ripe for the chutzpa-of-the-year award. Mother Jones, in their recently released May issue takes aim at what writer Adam Hochschild terms "The Next Big Corporate Steal." His article presents a new view of the several hundred billion dollar present which we are being asked to hand to the aerospace industry. I wish to bring this article to the attention of my colleagues.

SHUTTLING MANHATTANS TO THE SKY

(By Adam Hochschild)

It is 1996 and you are traveling by spacecraft some 22,300 miles above the earth. Suddenly you come upon a sight nothing in science fiction has prepared you for: a vast metallic field, glistening brilliantly with reflected sunlight. At 72 square miles, it is larger than Manhattan, though, as an elongated rectangle, not too different in shape.

Going closer, you see that the field consists of more than a billion solar-energy-collecting panels, alternating with rows of mirrors that concentrate the sun on the panels. For this is a Satellite Solar Power Station, constructed by a team of 400 astronaut-builders. In stationary orbit above one spot on earth, it is collecting the abundant sunlight that flows through space 24 hours a day—many more times the sunlight that strikes any point on the earth, for up here it is undimmed by smog, clouds, rain or night. Part of this vast contraption is an apparatus that converts solar electricity to microwaves and beams them back to earth. There, a 5-by-7½-mile receiving antenna catches the microwaves; a plant that converts them back to electricity; and, at that point, according to a peculiar array of businessmen and dreamers, this and a hundred similar units will constitute a major solution to America's energy problems.

While all this may sound like something out of Arthur C. Clarke or Isaac Asimov, the details come from Boeing, Grumman and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. If the backers have their way, a prototype Satellite Solar Power Station, or SSPS, will be aloft within a decade. Several hundreds scientists and engineers have worked on the idea, the Department of Energy is now in the act, and some $12 million—most of it your tax money—has been spent on it so far. And you're about to be asked to ante up the biggest sum yet.

The story of the SSPS idea is a complex one with some unexpected turns. It has given some new terms to the language, like Space Tugs, Solar Dams and Antenna Farms. It shows a good deal about how science and invention these days are influenced by things other than human needs. And at the heart of the story is a three-way docking maneuver between three overloaded spaceships: a huge bureaucracy fighting for its life, an industry with its eye on the best pork barrel since the arms race and an assortment of visionaries who should know better. In addition, orbiting weightlessly around the edges are some minor characters such as California Governor Jerry Brown, Whole Earth Catalog creator Stewart Brand and some people who want to bomb the moon. We'll meet them all in a moment. For the time being, the best lead to follow is a clue dropped between the lines by a top Boeing official. He was talking to a Congressional subcommittee that flew out to Seattle to visit the factory where SSPS work is going on: "The response from people when you talk about solar power is excellent. They like it. They have that inherent feeling of the warmth of the sun."

With SSPSs, the aerospace industry has finally found a way to cash in big on the current popularity of solar energy.

THE GIANT MICROWAVE OVEN

Satellite Solar Power Stations are such a dreadful idea in so many obvious ways that it should scarcely be necessary to itemize the reasons:

SSPSs are colossally expensive. The figure varies depending on whom you're talking to, but Boeing—whose self-interest would put its estimate on the low side—guesses the bill to develop the technology alone would be $40 to $80 billion. Mass producing SSPSs after that, estimates the idea's inventor, Peter Glaser, will cost $7.6 to $15 billion for each station. In one scenario, NASA would build 112 stations by the year 2025, so start multiplying and you get the idea.

SSPSs may be an environmental catastrophe. The reason is microwaves. In a recent path-breaking magazine series (now a book), New Yorker science writer Paul Brodeur detailed some of the connections between microwaves and cancer, cataracts, Down's syndrome (mongolism) and other afflictions. It is a particularly insidious form of pollution because you can't see it or hear it. Each SSPS means a vast amount of microwave radiation beaming down on that five-mile-wide antenna. The area of the antenna itself, obviously, will have to be closed to people. But birds flying through the heated column of air the microwave beam creates will be heavily radiated. And so, for that matter, may be people in airplanes. SSPS backers say the aluminum fuselages of airplanes are good shielding, but ccokpits have laminated glass windows; not all planes are aluminum; and Brodeur cites some fragmentary evidence suggesting that airline pilots, who are constantly bombarded with microwaves in the form of radar beams, may father an unusually high proportion of children with Down's syndrome.

Even if you could effectively keep people and birds out of the microwave beam, some radiation will spill beyond it. Rain, clouds and hail all tend to disperse microwaves, which is one reason microwaves have never replaced power lines for transmitting electricity on earth. Even if the SSPS beam is 99.9 percent on target, five million stray watts of electricity will still be bombarding people nearby.

An SSPS is potentially a lethal weapon. One critic, Dr. Aden Meinel, Professor of Optical Sciences at the University of Arizona, compares it to a "giant microwave oven cooking all people, plants and animals caught by the wandering beam." You don't have to convert an SSPS into a weapon; it is a weapon already. All you have to do is re-aim it by a few degrees so that the microwaves hit New York or Moscow instead of the receiving antenna.

SSPS's devour energy. Enormous quantities of energy and money are needed to build them—largely because of the huge amount of fuel needed to lift anything out of the earth's gravity. During the years the SSPS system is being built, Boeing officials estimate that there would have to be up to five daily space shots, launching into orbit a payload equivalent to that of all the planes that take off from O'Hare Airport in a day. (All of which, incidentally, will spew pollution into the earth's fragile upper atmosphere.) According to Dr. Piet Bos, an engineer who worked on the Space Shuttle and who now is a top official at the industry-funded Electric Power Research Institute, it would take each SSPS seven to ten years to pay the earth back for the energy necessary to build it and get it into orbit.

SSPS's would mean centralization. Their development would make utility monopolies even stronger than they are now. At a time when solar power holds out the promise of decentralized energy emanating from people's rooftops and local windmills, SSPS would generate energy that must be centrally distributed. "The problem utilities have had in the past with solar energy projects is that they've been highly decentralized," says James Moyer, a Southern California Edison Company official who has been active in pushing the SSPS idea. Each SSPS would send down to earth the energy of five to ten present-day nuclear power plants. You can't collect that on your roof and heat dishwater with it. You can't even put it under the control of one of the various American cities that have been sensible enough to municipalize their electric power systems. It requires Con Ed.

THE INVENTOR

It would be fitting to report that the SSPS's inventor is a thoroughgoing villain. But, alas for drama, he is not. In fact, talking to Dr. Peter Glaser at the red brick Arthur D. Little think-tank complex in Cambridge, with the skyline of downtown Boston visible out the window, you can get excited all over again about one person's ability to invent on a grand scale.

A friendly man with a humorous glint in his eye and a patient, thorough way of talking, Glaser wears a ruby V-neck sweater under his tweed suit. He speaks with a light accent of his native Czechoslovakia. His modest office includes a blackboard filled with equations and a graph, one of whose sides is years going up to 2000. On a shelf behind him sits a four-inch-high model of the rows of concave mirrors that would be used in an SSPS. Since first conceiving the SSPS idea in 1968, and later getting patents on it, Glaser has pursued his goal with missionary zeal. Against the wall next to him as he talks is a yellow papier-mâché representation of the sun.

Far from being a damn-the-environmentalists, full-speed-ahead type, Glaser is well aware of the various criticisms made of SSPS. He says he has answers for them all.

On the issue of microwave danger, for instance, Glaser says the SSPS microwave beam can be focused so closely that any radiation spilling outside the receiving antenna would be not merely below the U.S. danger standard but below the Soviet danger standard, which is a thousandfold lower. "That should satisfy Mr. Brodeur." (A 1976 Energy Research and Development Administration study indicates this level of safety might be possible—but only by excluding people from microwave receiving areas each half the size of Rhode Island.) Glaser concedes that the problem of birds flying through the beam has not been solved, and says that for a solution—as with other aspects of the SSPS—extensive tests are needed before the system gets a go-ahead.

And he volunteers that the greatest environmental risk of the SSPS is that each microwave beam will greatly heat up a patch of the earth's ionosphere, with unknown effects on radio reception—and on no one knows what else.

Glaser is no partisan of the big utilities, but he says, correctly, that some degree of centralized electrical distribution will be needed indefinitely, even if all our houses sprout solar panels. And, after fossil fuels run out or become prohibitively expensive, what else is there?

And what about SSPS's military dangers? Here, Glaser is emphatic: "This is one project we can't just paint the U.S. flag on. We have to involve people from other nations in building the satellites up there with us—so they would know it was peaceful. We might have to start the program, but basically I see it as a project of international cooperation."

In the end, you prepare to leave Glaser's office feeling that, if this man had control over the whole system, something rational and human might result. Or that he would not build it if it proved dangerous. But unfortunately, one man—no matter how well-meaning—cannot control a project whose final magnitude, in the NASA scenario for building 112 SSPSs, will cost more than one-half of this year's U.S. Gross National Product. In the meantime, one last question for Dr. Glaser: what made him think of the idea in the first place?

"As an engineer, I had a special interest in the behavior of materials at high temperatures," he says. "I soon found that a solar furnace was the best way of generating high heat." Then came a growing awareness of the coming world energy shortage. He goes on, "But I soon realized that solar energy is going to be esoteric unless we can interest industry."

FOR $90 MILLION, 10 FULL MOONS

Industry is now interested, in a big way. And no industry more so than that group of companies housed on the shores of Puget Sound and in the suburbs stretching south of Los Angeles: aerospace. The aerospace industry is the first participant in our three-way docking maneuver.

Many companies are already involved with the SSPS, ranging from McDonnell Douglas and Martin Marietta to General Electric and IBM. But at this point four firms have the biggest stakes: Raytheon, which makes microwave equipment: Grumman, which has worked on techniques for fastening together the huge array of "Solar Dam" cells to catch the sun's rays; and Boeing and Rockwell, which are both involved with assembly techniques and eyeing the contract for the Super Shuttle, which will have to shoot all the stuff up there. (Boeing wants a Super Shuttle that can carry 500,000 pounds in one load—roughly seven times the size of the Space Shuttle now being built.) Many other companies, of course, are eager to get into the act. Recently, for instance, something called the Brown Foundation gave Houston's Rice University a $100,000 grant to study SSPS's. The Brown Foundation is funded by Brown and Root, the huge Texas industrial construction firm that made millions in Vietnam.

As industry's spaceship soars eagerly skyward, NASA's closes in on it from another direction. The wave of government spending that put a man on the moon has receded, leaving 30 per cent of NASA's employees out of work. The remainder are searching desperately for a project of Apollo dimensions. At Congressional hearings, NASA administrators come in with charts and graphs outlining various things they could do in space. Some of the stuff is exciting: without gravity, you can make perfect ball bearings, perform unique experiments and build huge telescopes that will allow us to see the universe in far greater detail than we can from earth. But then the schemes head toward the deep end: flipping charts and diagrams, the bureaucrats talk about communication satellites that would allow millions of people to communicate by wrist radio, satellites for three-dimensional TV and, finally, a proposal for something called the City Night Illuminator, a group of giant mirrors to reflect the sun's rays back on a patch of earth 180 miles wide, thus providing "night lighting without earth-based energy, pollution, street lights, cables, trenches, etc." A NASA official testified: "This would provide, by 1990, for $90 million, illumination equal to ten full moons."

But with the SSPS, space partisans have found something more marketable than turning night into day. Moreover, it is something that promises to finally find a major use for the current big NASA project, the Space Shuttle. "The Shuttle," Piet Bos says, "was a solution in search of a problem." NASA has been energetically hustling problems for it in the form of customers who want to build labs and factories aloft; but a big SSPS program would be best of all. Most important, it would require building a bigger and better Shuttle. "They think SSPS is the best thing since candied apples," commented one scientist who has worked with NASA. It would solve their problem of institutional longevity."

The NASA bureaucracy is not entirely gung-ho for the SSPS idea: the top layer seems cool, aware of SSPS's scientific drawbacks. But elsewhere in NASA, particularly in the manned-spaceflight centers, there are enough enthusiasts to have already spent some $8 million in looking into SSPS's. Dr. Alan M. Lovelace, Deputy Administrator of NASA, has said: "The next decade holds a thousand policy challenges in the area of space applications, but the decision on whether to exploit the sun for electric power may dominate them all."

Finally, orbiting in to dock with NASA and the areospace industry, come the futurists. Every big colonization movement needs legitimizers. When Cecil Rhodes colonized Africa and the British East India Company went after the wealth of India, a string of apologists from the missionaries to Rudyard Kipling proved it was all for the greater good. Today, as big business grabs for outer space, with SSPS at the top of its list of priorities, a strange assortment of people are acting as its Kiplings.

Foremost among them is Princeton physicist Gerard O'Neill (see "Mine the Moon, Seed the Stars," MJ, Nov. '76). O'Neill's big thing is populated space colonies. Like most visionaries entranced with space, O'Neill and his followers are a little vague about who would own the colonies. The main point is that the universe, like Everest, is there, waiting to be filled by humans and their ingenuity. O'Neill disciples are somewhat disappointed with the SSPS plan now before Congress because it doesn't go far enough. O'Neill wants to build SSPSs with material mined from the moon. (Some O'Neillans want to use nuclear bombs to get ore out from below the moon's surface.) This mining would require all sorts of additional marvelous apparatus, such as something called a Mass Driver, which would fling payloads up from the moon; Space Tugs holding a giant net would catch the stuff, and so on.

Several years ago California Governor Jerry Brown met O'Neill at a Zen retreat and caught the space bug. Brown borrowed astronaut Rusty Schweickart from NASA to advise him and has been busy ever since hailing space as the new frontier. Brown recently proposed to a somewhat startled delegation of visiting Russians that California cooperate with the USSR in various space ventures, particularly SSPSs. Asked how he squared his new-found spaceophilia with his previous "era of limits" philosophy, Brown said, "Small is beautiful on earth, but in space big is better." One reason: California holds half the country's NASA contracts.

Other space Kiplings are scattered around the country, but the most unexpected is Stewart Brand, creator of the Whole Earth Catalog. Brand did much in recent years to popularize do-it-yourself technology and the ideas of E. F. Schumacher. Yet today star charts and drawings of satellite adorn the magazine Brand now publishes, CoEvolution Quarterly.

What is going on here? For Brand and his disciples, space is the Future (the main Washington space-buff lobbying group is called the Committee for the Future), and a "high frontier" on which no one else has staked a claim. In playing around with space ideas you can indulge a love of science fiction without immediately having to reckon with the economic consequences. Dealing with economics and ownership has always been a weak point of the Whole Earth back-to-the-land wing of the ecology movement Space, yes, but for whom? Hmmmmmm . . . let's worry about that later. Consider Brand's reply when we asked him if he wasn't worried about the SSPS scheme's tendency to centralize power distribution.

"The more people look at the sun for the source of public utilities, the more they'll turn to it for private use. I think that's great. The more things that are up for grabs the better. It's a mixed bag. But it's better than some of the other mixed bags around now."

For some years the futurists spun out their plans to small coteries of admirers, and murk like Brand's did not greatly matter. But lately there have been more listeners. "Gerard O'Neill," says one Congressional aide who has watched the space lobby at work, "has jumped from imagining the future to demanding the future. He is saying: if the government will pour money down the tube we'll get all these things."

A growing number of members of Congress do want to throw that money down the tube. A dozen of them, mostly members of the crucial House Committee on Science and Technology, have just introduced a bill asking $25 million in the next year for an exploratory study of an SSPS program. Hearings are about to begin. The bill's chief sponsor is Representative Ronnie G. Flippo of Alabama. whose district (one-time home of Wernher von Braun and his rocketry team) receives more than a half a billion dollars a year from NASA and the Pentagon. Other sponsors include Bob Gammage of Texas, whose district includes the huge NASA Manned Spacecraft Center; Jim Lloyd of California, former public relations director for Aerojet General Corporation; Dan Glickman of Kansas, whose home district has a huge Boeing plant; and Louis Frey of Florida, who has the Cape Kennedy moon shot center in his.

To be fair, it should be stressed that almost all those involved with the SSPS—scientists, members of Congress, aerospace engineers and futurists—always say they are not advocating immediate production. There are many wrinkles to be ironed out, you understand, and dangers to be explored; we just should commit ourselves to examining the idea. But you can still see the gleam in their eye. And, in the case of the aerospace companies, you can also see the chips on the table. Rockwell International, for example, has contributed campaign funds to five of the 12 initial sponsors of the Flippo satellite bill: Representatives Don Fuqua of Florida, Jim Lloyd of California, Mike McCormack of Washington, Larry Winn of Kansas and—getting the largest chunk—Olin Teague of Texas, who chairs the Science and Technology Committee and is the most powerful member of the House high-technology lobby.

Today, even the SSPS's many critics are not certain the monster can be easily stopped. Lobbies for military hardware and other high-technology projects always have a built-in advantage: even to argue against them effectively requires a vast amount of scientific work.

"Look," says SSPS critic Piet Bos, "Boeing has put something like 60 man-years into coming up with their numbers. Somebody can say: this data proves the project is cost-effective. But it would take me, working alone, a month to figure out if that's true. And so much in this program doesn't even exist yet. You come up with some cost estimate that's way higher than theirs, and they say, 'Oh, but we're talking about a program based on a space vehicle that hasn't even been developed yet.' It's quite frustrating."

THE ANTENNA FARM

Meanwhile, work on the SSPS goes on. It is late on a gray winter afternoon at the Raytheon Company plant in Waltham, Massachusetts. Day-shift workers are streaming out to the parking lot. Electrical engineer William Brown leads the way back through the bowels of the factory to the research laboratories on the other side. It is here that Raytheon is developing the equipment to translate solar electricity into microwaves, then back into electricity when the microwaves strike the earth.

Brown, a kindly, grandfatherly-looking man, heads this project. He puts down on a conference table something that looks like a slightly elongated spark plug whose metal parts are made of copper. He explains that the transmitting antenna in space will be made up of "a million or so of these."

We move to another room, where a car-size piece of machinery is humming; a metal grating with flashing red lights on top warns you not to get too close. This is a microwave transmitter, with various monitoring instruments attached. However, what they are working on here at the moment is the receiving antenna, which the machine is aimed at: a white board with metal strips the size of kitchen matches sticking out of it some two inches apart. If SSPS's are built, the receiving antenna will be attached to row upon row of a fence-like structure. A factory on wheels will roll back and forth across the 5-by-7½-mile Antenna Farm, stringing a continuous fence out the back the way a cable-laying ship lays cable.

Back in the conference room, Brown flicks the lights off and a movie projector starts to roll. The scene is southern California, 1975, the desert near Barstow. We are looking at a mountaintop a mile away from the camera, where a 12-by-24-foot flat receiving antenna and a panel of floodlights are fastened to a metal tower. The lights are off. Beside us, as the camera pans, is a large radar-like dish aimed at the mountaintop tower. A scientist turns a switch near the radar dish and suddenly the floodlights on the mile-distant tower come on and shine brilliantly at us, even through the bright desert air. Then the radar dish is aimed away from the mountain, and the lights go off; it is tilted back at the mountain and the lights go on again. Thirty kilowatts of electricity, enough to feed 20 homes, is being transmitted through the air without wires. So it can be done. It is awesome.

MANHATTANS IN THE SKY

As we leave Raytheon and Stewart Brand, Representative Flippo and NASA orbiting happily around each other in search of our tax money, what can we conclude?

Peter Glaser, when interviewed about his invention, raised the relevant question: well, if you don't like the SSPS concept, where are you going to get centrally distributed electrical energy?

Pressed, he conceded that decentralized solar energy has great potential, but he believes that the problem is getting people to use it. "I can put a solar heater on my house, but how can I get you to put one on yours?" Then, after describing an unsuccessful effort in India to get villagers to use solar cookers instead of burning scarce fuel, he added, "It's not a technology problem. It's a people problem." The implication was that the first was solvable, the second not.

In one frightening sense, Glaser is right. If there is no basic change in American capitalism, it will be necessary to give big industry the major share of the apple if we want widely used solar energy. And the only other future energy alternatives the Carter Administration is paying much attention to, coal and nuclear, are impossible for the long haul. We know how dangerous—and expensive—nuclear energy is. Burning coal adds more fumes to our already polluted air, and causes problems ranging from acid rainfall ("Look What They've Done to the Rain," MJ. Dec. '77) to changes in the temperature of the earth's atmosphere. With those limited alternatives, sending Manhattan-sized objects into space might be the least of several evils.

And within those limited horizons, high technology's solutions mesh perfectly. If there is a problem, engineers—not social reformers or revolutionaries—can solve it. If one complex technique for generating energy doesn't work, commission a multi-company study, throw some money at the universities, get 500 engineers into the act and come up with another.

However, no single technology can replace the various potentially disastrous ways we have of generating energy now. But the last few years have seen an increasingly defined consensus on what the major alternatives should be. Some important ones:

Conservation. Better insulated buildings, slower-accelerating and lighter cars, better mass transit and the use of waste industrial heat can all cut down drastically on energy consumption.

Photovoltaic cells. The same cells necessary to a Satellite Solar Power Station could convert sunlight to electricity on everyone's rooftops. Their cost is dropping dramatically, and with proper government support it could drop still more—enough to make the cells economical on a wide scale.

Solar heating. A study by the NASA-funded Jet Propulsion Laboratory, for instance, says solar heat could supply fully one-third of California's space and hot water heating requirements.

Biomass conversion. Biomass conversion is what happens when you burn a log in your fireplace, when you convert waste foliage or frostbitten crops into alcohol to power internal combustion engines or when you burn California's lumbering and sawmill wastes to generate the energy of two nuclear power plants.

There are other promising techniques, too, such as windmill power. And none of them, like SSPSs, are pie in the sky. They all work. They all are in use somewhere today. Sweden and West Germany conserve enough energy to get by with about 50 percent of the energy use per capita the U.S. has—and maintain the same living standard. Photovoltaic cells power satellites and remote military installations beyond the reach of power lines. There are two million solar water heaters in Japan. Germany ran its autos largely on alcohol fuel during World War II, and Brazil is starting to do so today.

Against this background of promising alternatives, the Carter Administration, astoundingly, is actually cutting by some $10 million this country's rather paltry budget for earth-bound solar research. The Energy Department is firmly under the control of men whose careers have been built on nuclear power.

In what is probably the most comprehensive study yet done on the subject, Dennis Hayes of the World Watch Institute calculates that 20 percent of the energy now used around the world comes from renewable sources (wind, biomass conventions, hydropower and direct sunlight). "By the year 2000," he says, "such renewable energy sources could provide 40 percent of the global energy budget; by 2025, humanity could obtain 75 percent of its energy from solar resources."

That transition will not be simple or cheap. It involves profound structural change. Rooftop photovoltaics will undermine the utilities. Conservation means smaller and lighter cars, and railroads—and that means taking on the automobile and trucking industries. Alcohol fuel, whose production is inherently decentralized because it can be made from a wide variety of crops, will severely threaten the oil industry.

The more you consider Satellite Solar Power Stations, the more turning to space seems a way not of solving a problem but of evading one. It is neither a people problem nor a technical problem; it is a political problem. And it is one that will last long as corporate profits, not human needs, determine how we shall use the earth's resources.●

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS TO FORMER CONGRESSMAN DEWEY SHORT

HON. GENE TAYLOR

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like for my colleagues in the House to join with me today in extending 80th birthday greetings to a former distinguished member of this body, the Honorable Dewey J. Short.

Dewey who has been my close friend and mentor for many years. He was born in Galena, Mo., located in Stone County. He still maintains a residence there although he has spent much of his retirement years here in Washington.

Dewey was elected to the 71st Congress in 1929. Although his bid for reelection was unsuccessful he did return to the House for the 74th Congress where he remained until 1957. He saw service as chairman of the Committee on Armed Services during the 83d Congress. He later served as Assistant Secretary of the Army for 4 years.

Dewey, who was known far and wide as the "Ozark orator," was one of the most eloquent speakers who ever entered the Congress. His colleagues will tell you that when the word got out that he was to address the House many would come to hear him speak. Needless to say, they were never disappointed.

Although he came from a very small community in the Missouri Ozarks, Dewey received an extensive education. He attended Boston College, Harvard, Heidelberg University, and the University of Berlin, and Oxford.

He was a college professor and pastored the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church in Springfield, Mo.

During the Republican National Convention in 1940 he received 108 votes for the Vice-Presidential nomination.

Dewey Short is truly a remarkable man who has had a profound impact on my life and that of my family who love him dearly. He is a man of deep compassion who loves his country, his family and friends and has demonstrated this love throughout his life.

It is my high honor to convey to him my best wishes and congratulations on his 80th birthday.●

EXIMBANK HELPS REDUCE TRADE DEFICIT

HON. STEPHEN L. NEAL

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, everywhere we look on the economic front there are painful choices to be made. Simultaneously, we must resist a new surge of inflation, reduce our oil imports, improve our foreign trade balance and restore confidence in the dollar's value abroad.

These problems are so interrelated that attacking them is like trying to cover a king-size bed with a twin-size blanket. If we cover one part, we leave another part exposed.

If we take strong measures to stop inflation, we risk slowing the economy and creating unemployment. If we tax oil to reduce consumption, we create more price increases and inflation. If we try to ease our trade deficit by importing fewer consumer goods, we diminish competition in the domestic market, which leads to higher prices and more inflation.

As we agonize over the choices before us, we sometimes feel like the fellow described by A. A. Milne:

There once was a sailor my grandfather knew,
Who had so many things which he wanted to do
That, whenever he thought it was time to begin,
He couldn't, because of the state he was in.

Nevertheless, we do not have to be immobilized by our problems. While we prepare for the big decisions, there are many other steps we could be taking—now—to improve the health of our economy.

One useful step would be to strengthen the Export-Import Bank of the United States, a 44-year-old Federal agency that helps American businesses provide competitive financing for sales to foreign customers.

A more aggressive Eximbank could stimulate the sale of American goods abroad, thereby reducing the trade deficit, bolstering the dollar on the world markets and creating more jobs here at home. For every $1 billion in exports, we create 35,000 to 58,000 jobs in the United States.

Increasing our exports is the most immediate way to reduce the chronic trade deficit, which is one of our most serious economic problems. In 1977, the United States purchased $26.6 billion more goods than it sold abroad; that was a record annual deficit.

Our performance this year has been even worse. In February, we had the highest monthly deficit in our history—$4.5 billion. We have had deficits now for 21 consecutive months; and with each month the dollar's value overseas is eroding a little more.

A declining dollar, in turn, makes our imports of oil, consumer goods and vital raw materials more expensive and thus contributes to even more inflation.

The only silver lining visible in this is that a declining dollar also enables us to sell our goods abroad at lower prices. That is another reason to renew our efforts to stimulate more exports.

The Eximbank helps by providing attractive financing to prospective overseas customers who cannot readily obtain adequate credit in the private markets. The bank does not compete with private banks, but induces them to make more export loans by sharing part of the financing package and by assuming certain political and commercial risks.

Best of all, the Eximbank pays its own way. It requires no appropriations from Congress. In fact, it pays dividends of about $50 million a year to the U.S. Treasury. Its activities are sustained by its own profits. The Eximbank is not a foreign aid program in any sense; its benefits go to American companies that are enabled to make overseas sales they might otherwise have lost.

In an ideal world, of course, the U.S. Government should not have to provide this kind of service to exporters. But the reality is that our major competitors in world trade—particularly France and Japan—provide not only government-backed financing but other subsidies to help their companies make sales. Because we value our free enterprise economy, we refuse to resort to massive subsidies. We would prefer to compete on price, quality and service. But until the other trading nations agree to do the same, we must make at least minimal efforts to meet the competition.

In recent years the Eximbank has, in my opinion, been somewhat too cautious. In 1977, for example, it was authorized to make up to $3 billion in loans but used only $760 million of that potential. We want the bank to be prudent, but such figures make us wonder whether we are not passing up some good opportunities to make sales abroad.

The House Subcommittee on International Trade, Investment and Monetary Policy, of which I am chairman, is now considering the Carter administration's request that the Eximbank be extended for another 5 years and that its direct lending authority be increased from $25 to $40 billion. Our subcommittee will be marking up this legislation next week.

The Eximbank is not a perfect institution. Some of its loans and policies over the years have evoked legitimate criticism and questioning. We are trying to improve our congressional oversight system so that we can monitor the bank's work more carefully. But I agree with the Carter administration that the Eximbank can and should be a more aggressive force for stimulating exports.●

TAX AID FOR THE SEVERELY HANDICAPPED

HON. RICHARD NOLAN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would amend the current IRS Tax Code. This legislation would allow a severely handicapped person who is unable to drive a motorized vehicle even with the aid of adaptive equipment to deduct from his taxable income the cost incurred while traveling to and from work.

As current law now reads, the handicapped person is given a deduction for the purchase of a specially designed vehicle, modification of a vehicle; that is, adaptive equipment such as hand controls and special chair lifts, and the maintenance costs. Thus, if the handicapped person is not severely disabled and is able to transport himself, he is given a deduction covering his transportation expenses. Handicapped individuals are also given deductions for transportation costs connected with medical care and business related travel. This includes fee's charged by attendants when their assistance is necessary for such travel. Also deductible are the actual cost for travel, meals, and lodging of the attendant.

Yet, a severely handicapped person who is still able to work but need, the service of a driver to transport him to and from work is not able under current law to deduct this expense from his income. The adjustment, I propose today is a way to facilitate the employment of the handicapped individuals of this country. There is an apparent gap in current law and this legislation will fill in this gap. I, therefore, urge my colleagues to support this legislation which will reduce the burden on the employable handicapped and make our tax laws more fair.●

A TRIBUTE TO KEVIN COLEMAN

HON. PAUL E. TSONGAS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend to the attention of my colleagues the unusual energy conservation activities of a young man from Acton, Mass.

Inspired by an article which appeared in Boys' Life, Kevin Coleman, a 15-year-old high school sophomore, was instrumental in the formation of a Solar Patrol in the Isaac Davis Boy Scout Troop. The goal of the group was to learn about energy conservation and earn the Boy Scout Energy Conservation Merit Badge.

The patrol raised funds to buy books on energy which they contributed to the public library, set up energy conservation displays throughout the community, and participated in a variety of energy conservation projects. The Isaac Davis Solar Patrol was one of the first groups in the country to earn the Energy Conservation Merit Badge.

While working on his merit badge, Kevin came to the realization that there was a critical need for energy conservation. He also learned about the potential for solar energy. What became clear to him was that solving our energy problems would require greater public commitment than exists at the present time.

Kevin felt that the Boy Scouts of America could make a substantive educational contribution through their program. He has proposed to the national organization that they establish Solar Patrols nationwide to stimulate greater public awareness of America's energy problems. Kevin's idea has much merit and should be encouraged.

Kevin has now risen to the rank of senior patrol leader in his troop and the work of the Solar Patrol continues under the leadership of his brother, Tim.

I salute Boy Scout, Kevin Coleman, the Solar Patrol and the Isaac Davis Troop for their dedicated grassroots energy conservation efforts. I hope their activities will provide inspiration for young people all over the country to mobilize a rational effort to develop solutions to our critical energy problems.●

GEN. THADDEUS KOSCIUSZKO

HON. RONALD A. SARASIN

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 3, 1978

● Mr. SARASIN. Mr. Speaker, there are many great heroes that have claimed their place in the annals of American revolutionary history and to whom Americans are indebted and grateful. Among the list of heroes not to be forgotten are many European patriots who, in a show of solidarity and support for the American ideals of liberty and equality, lent their various skills and expertise to the success of the struggle for independence. One of the greatest of these patriots, deserving of recognition and honor, is Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko of Poland.

Arriving in the Colonies in August of 1776, General Kosciuszko was commissioned by the Pennsylvania Committee of Defense as the colonel of engineers. During his tenure in this position he made many invaluable contributions to the war effort, lending his engineering skills to the building of fortifications and defenses. He played a particularly significant role in influencing the tactics of the Continental Army at the Battle of Saratoga and the Ticonderoga Campaign, and then marched south with General Green, building forts and defenses along the Delaware River in Pennsylvania and south to the Carolinas, fending off the British offenses.

General Kosciuszko returned to his homeland in 1784 to help his own countrymen in their struggle against the Russians, but returned to the United States in 1797, and received monetary compensation and 500 acres of land in Ohio for his contribution to the American effort. He only stayed for a year, however, and returned to Poland in 1798, giving the profits from his estate toward the emancipation of his serfs in Poland and the establishment of the Colored School in Newark, N.J.

While I was unable to be present to cast my vote in favor of House Concurrent Resolution 359, I certainly support, with pride and appreciation, the intent of this legislation to recognize the outstanding contributions of this gentleman and to erect memorials to his honor at appropriate sites within the national park system.●

INTEGRATION OF SOCIAL SECURITY WITH PRIVATE PENSION PLANS

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, a number of my constituents, Mr. Robert Lebenson, Mr. Edward Smith, Mr. Melvin L. Maisel, and Mr. Robert Seibel testified recently before the House Ways and Means Committee in opposition to the proposed modification of the rules concerning the integration of social security with private pension plans. This is a matter of tremendous concern to them, and I would like to bring their comments to the attention of my colleagues:

TESTIMONY TO THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS BY ROBERT D. LEBENSON

My name is Robert D. Lebenson. I am an Enrolled Actuary, and am the Executive Vice President of National Pension Service, Inc. in White Plains, New York. My firm administers approximately 600 retirement plans, mostly for small corporate employers averaging 8 covered employees. We have a few larger plans, which to us means 50 to 200 employees.

I would like to testify in strong opposition to the provisions of the Administration's tax law, which would modify the rules concerning the integration of private pension plans with Social Security.

The written material which I have submitted contains a detailed discussion of my arguments against the proposed law.

In the limited time I have for verbal testimony, I would first like to highlight four principal reasons for my opposition and to then comment more extensively on a fifth and most significant reason.

1. Contrary to the contention of the Administration, the current system of integration is equitable. It encourages employers to establish retirement plans which, together with employer provided Social Security, provide a retirement income that is an equal percentage of pay for all employees.

2. The proposed rules are ostensibly aimed at correcting abuses. There is no hard statistical evidence that these abuses exist. Congress has at least twice mandated studies of the topic of integration, but no such studies have been completed. No changes should be made until all concerned have had the benefit of recommendations based on fact.

3. If retirement pensions for many low income Americans are inadequate, it is not appropriate for the Government to attempt to remedy this problem by transferring it to the private pension system, which is an entirely voluntary system. In addition, the attempt will fail because employers will be unwilling to support the costs involved.

4. ERISA has caused administrative costs to escalate, which is particularly burdensome to small plans. Thousands of old plans have terminated, and thousands of new plans have not started, because of these costs and also because of the perception of the small business owner that the rules are unstable. Further change at this time will greatly magnify this problem. Many, many individuals do not have adequate retirement income simply because they work for small companies that have not been adequately encouraged to adopt a plan at all.

More significant than any of these four reasons is the cost impact the proposed rules will have, especially on small plans. This will directly contribute to thousands of plan terminations and will cause more thousands of employees to never receive pensions they expect. It is vital to view these cost increases in the context of a system which, I repeat is voluntary and employer supported in nature. Plans will terminate, and new plans will not start, if the cost burden is excessive.

In order to illustrate the cost impact on a typical plan, my office did some studies for one of our established plans. This is a plan covering 14 employees, of a modest sized Chevrolet dealership in upstate New York. The plan is a retirement program providing 40% of compensation, offset by 66⅔% of the primary Social Security (since there is both a pre and post retirement death benefit feature). Well over ½ of the current benefits to be provided by this plan are for rank and file employees.

The cost increase to amend this plan to comply with the new rules would be approximately 25.4%. This means that to continue this plan the corporation would have to pay one-fourth more each year to provide benefits to their employees than they would under present regulations.

It is vital that the Congress realize that this pension program is one which is entirely paid for by the employer (as are the overwhelming majority of private pension plans) and that the continuance of the plan is entirely discretionary on the part of the corporation. The result of discontinuance of the plan would mean the loss of a substantial portion of the retirement income that the rank and file employees of this firm are counting on. I would now like you to hear from the owner of this business concerning what the result of these cost increases would be.

TESTIMONY TO THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS BY EDWARD R. SMITH

I am Ed Smith, President of Ed Smith Chevrolet, Inc. of Port Jervis, N.Y. I employ 14 people with more than one year service, who are covered by a defined benefit plan which I maintain. I instituted the plan in 1971 for the benefit of my employees and have used National Pension Service as my actuarial consultant since that time.

In 1976 I amended my plan to comply with ERISA. My overall cost to amend the plan was in excess of $1,200 for legal and actuarial services, which was almost ten percent of my contribution that year. My actuary has now informed me that if the proposed integration changes become law, the costs for my plan will increase in excess of twenty-five percent per year. In addition, it appears likely that I will have another $1,200 or more bill to pay to modify the program.

I am already paying for Social Security pensions for these employees, and the changes that were made to the law in 1977 will substantially increase my Social Security costs over the next three years. Now you are asking me to further increase my overhead for pension benefits. I object to these increases and tell you that if this proposed integration change becomes effective, I will have to terminate my pension plan. This will mean that present employees will have their benefits reduced and future employees will not receive any pension benefits whatsoever.

TESTIMONY OF MELVIN L. MAISEL

My name is Melvin L. Maisel. I am the president of Stabilization Plans For Business, Inc. in White Plains, New York. My firm services more than 50 Defined Benefit integrated pension plans in 27 industries that cover 714 employees in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Kentucky and Illinois. We have performed a study and found that approximately 75 percent of the plans will be adversely affected by the proposed legislation. The costs will increase from 28 to 177 percent.

In view of the recent ERISA plan restatements and additional legal and administrative expenses incurred by the various business owners, passage of the proposal will sound the death knell to the private pension system. The treasury is proposing very substantial additional overhead expenses for the small business owner that will break the backs of small businesses.

I have discussed this with my clients and many have advised me to tell you that they will have no choice but to terminate their pension plans if the proposed legislation is enacted.

The following is a statement from Elias Strum. He is the president of Bradley Cleaning Contractors, Inc. in New York City:

"I employ 186 employees and have maintained a Defined Benefit plan for my employees since 1963. My actuary has informed me of the proposed changes regarding the use of Social Security integration that Congress is now considering and has given me an evaluation of my increased costs due to these proposed changes. I am here to protest against these proposed changes in the integration requirements since they will cause my plan to have an increase in costs of approximately $31,000, 173 percent over 1977 plan year costs. I cannot afford to maintain a plan for my employees under this burdensome cost escalation and I can tell you gentlemen that if this amendment to the Law is enacted, I will be forced to terminate my plan and as a result, my employees will suffer the loss of any future benefits that I had planned to provide for them under the existing plan."

TESTIMONY OF ROBERT A. SEIBEL, J.D.

My name is Robert A. Seibel. I am a pension attorney and consultant and I am Vice President of Stabilization Plans for Business, Inc. in White Plains, New York. Our firm specializes in the design of qualified retirement plans primarily for small closely held corporations.

I strongly oppose the consideration of the Administration's proposal to change the method of integration of pension plans with Social Security because the Administration has failed to do its homework by not providing facts to support its allegations. One of the major burdens of ERISA in the past several years has been the inequities created by the legislation dealing with it rather than the law's substance as well as the hasty way bills have been passed by Congress without proper examination of all facts available.

I appeared before the House Labor Committee Oversight Hearings on ERISA on May 1, 1975 at which time it was stated that "Regulatory agencies must not collect data they cannot use and cannot absorb."

Based upon our original research we discovered that 92% of all pension plans in existence cover employers with less than 25 employees. This data was already on file with the Treasury and Labor Departments based upon the old reporting forms 4848 and D-1 respectively. This data, however, was not analyzed prior to ERISA's passage since our data appeared for the first time during the hearings, and only after we had exhaustively searched government public records. We were advised that had the facts been made available to Congress at the time of ERISA's drafting, that the overwhelming number of pension plans covering small businesses, portions of ERISA dealing with reporting and disclosure requirements would have been greatly simplified and administrative costs to small corporations would have been greatly reduced.

If the regulatory agencies of government are intent upon imposing costly reporting requirements for pension plans, it must be done for a reason! Inasmuch as Congress failed to utilize all the data at its disposal during the passage of ERISA. it must not again, legislate without first considering and analyzing all of the data at its disposal.

Currently, on the basis of ERISA mandated reporting forms, there is on file with Treasury and the Labor Departments information regarding the number of employees in all plans, how many plans are integrated with Social Security, how many Social Security excess plans there are, how many offset plans and how many employees who are participants in plans receive little or no benefits.

It is vital that before the Administration and Congress consider enacting legislation which will affect all participants in integrated pension plans that they first analyze carefully the information we, in the pension field, have labored so hard and diligently to provide to the regulatory agencies at a massive administrative cost to all plan sponsors.

Specifically, it is unconscionable to discuss the hypothetical effect of this proposed legislation on integrated plans until the regulatory agencies provide Congress and the Administration with concrete information in their files with respect to how many plans, broken down by type are integrated with Social Security and, more importantly, how many of these plans have 1–9 participants, 10–24, 25–100, 100–150, 500–1,000 and over 1,000. This information is threshold material and should be considered before the enactment of any new legislation or regulations in this area.

If Internal Revenue and Department of Labor computers are unable for any reason, to supply this data, it will be because they have either not put all their data on computers or because they have not written computer programs to retrieve useful information from such data.

If either of these two statements is true (and I hope it is not) it would appear that the costly and burdensome reporting requirements imposed by ERISA are needlessly harassing taxpayers. On the other hand, if this information is available, it must be made available for Congress to study.

Section 3021 of ERISA established a Joint Pension Task Force in which the staff of this Committee participates. One of the mandates of Section 3022 was for this Task Force to study the Social Security integration rules and report back to Congress. This study has not yet been presented to your Committee or to this Congress and, consequently, no new legislation should be considered until the study has been presented, analyzed and digested fully.

It is, indeed, outrageous for the Administration to take the initiative on this subject before the Task Force has completed their study. The Administration has admitted that this proposed legislation would not produce any new revenue and, therefore, there is no urgency for this provision to be made a part of the 1978 Tax Reform package. Surely, any changes in Social Security integration could be made a part of an ERISA reform bill rather obscurely tucked away in one small section riding the coattails of the overall tax legislation.

I urge the members of this Committee to avoid permitting history to repeat itself by allowing consideration of any legislation before factual studies have been made. I further urge this Committee to help save the private pension system from premature legislative overkill by exercising the authority given to it by Congress in ERISA and by weighing all the data which the regulatory agencies can and must provide so that sound and informed opinions can be reached prior to the enactment of any legislation.●

SHE HELPED SHAPE THE LIVES OF HUNDREDS

HON. G. WILLIAM WHITEHURST

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, the following was sent to me by the Reverend William E. Hibbs of Houston, Tex. Mrs. Lillian Chadwick is one of my constituents, and she embodies all that is good in a civil servant.

I am pleased to place this in the RECORD as Reverend Hibbs has requested:

MRS. LILLIAN S. CHADWICK—NORFOLK, VA.

If there ever is a woman you can count on, Lillian Chadwick is the one. It is amazing how a single act of kindness can influence the lives of so many people.

With Lillian Chadwick, she has shown continuous acts of kindness. In her 29 years at the Norfolk, Virginia, Naval Supply Center Customer Services Division, she has, through her own brand of faith and philosophy, helped many who have come into contact with her.

A native of Lexington, Mrs. Chadwick moved to Norfolk in 1943 to work for the government during the war. In 1971, she was named "Outstanding and distinguished personality of the South" by the American Biographical Society. In 1976 she was named "Woman of the Week" by the Virginia Pilot-Ledger Star newspaper. I would like the attached newspaper article to appear with this tribute in todays CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

This woman is probably to many people, a living example of the phrase, "Let There be Love, And Let It Begin With Me".

Mrs. Chadwick, retired on December 16th, 1977 with letters of tribute from the following persons:

The President (Jimmy Carter).
Vice President Walter Mondale.
The Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr.
Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr.
Senator William Scott.
Congressman G. William Whitehurst.
Governor Mills E. Godwin, Jr., Virginia.
The Secretary of the Navy W. Graham Claytor. Jr.
Rear Admiral J. E. McKenna, SC, USN, The Naval Supply Center, Norfolk.
And Mayor Vincent J. Thomas, Proclaimed December 16, 1977 as Lillian Chadwick Day, in Norfolk, Va.

SHE HELPED SHAPE THE LIVES OF HUNDREDS

(By Cathy Jacob)

"A person never knows to what extent he or she shapes the life of another human being. Yet each of us has been shaped—shaped by parents, friends, teachers, and countless others whose influence we hardly acknowledge."

So wrote the Rev. William E. Hibbs of Houston, Texas, recently when expressing his gratitude to the Virginian-Pilot for the assistance he had received from Lillian Chadwick.

"I first met Lillian at Norfolk's Naval Supply Center, Customer Services Division, in 1968," wrote the Rev. Mr. Chadwick, "I was a STOP employee assigned to that department.

"Friendship is a relationship between persons who see themselves as they really are—brothers and sisters. Without regard to one's race, creed, or national origin.

"This is how we saw each other.

"Growing up in a white community in Norfolk, it was socially unacceptable to cross racial boundaries.

"Thank God this is not the case today, thanks to Lillian and many others like her.

"Lillian Lives Life, through her unending love and devotion to youth. She has helped shape the life of hundreds of young Americans without regard to their ethnic background.

"Ours is an age that is reluctant to talk about the influence we have on one another. Yet Lillian saw the best in me and encouraged me to do the same with others. Through her understanding and guidance, I am now able to realize my life long dream—the Catholic Priesthood.

"On a recent visit to Norfolk, she invited me to the Tidewater Dinner Theater where she is the official hostess. I was able to see again one of Norfolk's outstanding women. The love shown her by everyone there and likewise the love and devotion she has for everyone is extraordinary.

"Robert Kennedy wrote:

"'Few of us will have the greatness to bend history itself, but each of us can work to change a small portion of events, and in the total of all those acts will be written the history of this generation.'

"To Lillian, and others like her I send my love and many thanks.

"I'm more because of you!"

Lillian Chadwick smiled when shown the letter from the Rev. Hibbs.

The pleasant soft-spoken woman, who has, through her own brand of faith and philosophy, helped many who have come into contact with her, was having lunch at her Naval Supply Center desk where she has worked as a clerk since 1952.

"Bill calls me his momma," she said. "He was one of the STOP (Southeastern Tidewater Opportunity Program) employes that summer. They would wander in, some in need of love and the hand of a big sister, and I fell in line with them."

"That summer" was 1968. STOP had found jobs at the Naval Supply Center for a number of teen-agers and Mrs. Chadwick said she found time to talk to them when they came in her office.

"I was never assigned to them, but the assistant director of customer service, Ruth Killingsworth, allowed me to work with them," she said. "I would call meetings and counsel them when they walked in."

She also helped plan a STOPers Day luncheon, at which the Rev. Mr. Hibbs, then 17 and with no plans for the ministry, was the master of ceremonies.

"He wanted to be on the stage, like Red Skelton," Mrs. Chadwick said. "He was a great kidder.

"The luncheon at the end of the summer was a beautiful affair. They gave me a set for my dresser, and I just cried," Mrs. Chadwick said.

She said that she wanted to give Hibbs something and presented him with a coin a friend had brought her from Nigeria. The coin had been blessed by the chief of a tribe.

"Early last year he told me that he was being ordained (into the Catholic priesthood) and wanted me to know that the lucky penny had something to do with it," she said.

Mrs. Chadwick said she keeps in touch with several of "that summer's" STOP employes. The program was not repeated she said. "I just adopted them that summer. I felt like a big sister.

"When Bill said I had helped hundreds, he meant that he has been able to train the children he works with through the way I helped him," she explained.

As to the way she helped him, Mrs. Chadwick said she listened, primarily. "Often he would come to me and ask me questions concerning families. He'd come back later and I'd try to answer his questions.

"Often when we have problems, we create them ourselves," she said. "I would tell them that from this day on, when you think you are being mistreated, look in the mirror at yourself, and look from within."

Mrs. Chadwick, who lives in Norfolk, is also the official hostess and group sales representative of the Tidewater Dinner Theater. "I love people," she said.

Early this year she wrote a letter promoting the theater's executive producer, John Sader, for the Boss of the Year award presented by the American Business Women's Association (ABWA) of Virginia Beach. "He has given so many young aspiring actors and actresses a chance," she said.

The Virgina Beach ABWA in 1972 named Mrs. Chadwick their first Woman of the Year.

Mrs. Chadwick, a widow, has lived in Norfolk since 1943 when she left her native Lexington to work for the government during the war. She first worked at the St. Julian's Creek Ammunition Depot in Portsmouth. She transferred to the Norfolk Naval Base in 1952.

Since the death of her husband in 1972, Mrs. Chadwick has housed six students from Norfolk State College whom she says are all "just like my own."

She is an active member of the Queen Street Baptist Church and a member of the Daughters of the Elks, and she has two stepsons who live in the area.

Mrs. Chadwick has a close relationship with her neighbors. "I enjoy very much helping guide the children in my neighborhood. I feel like the neighbor's kids are part mine," she said.

Lillian Chadwick's desire to help her community and those around her are justified by her love and appreciation of Tidewater and people.

"Norfolk has been very kind to me," she concluded.●

SIXTY-TWO MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE URGE THE PRESIDENT TO HALT THE NEUTRON BOMB

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, 61 Members of the House joined with me yesterday in urging President Carter to disapprove production and deployment of the neutron bomb. A copy of the letter sent to the President is printed below this statement together with the names of all the signatories.

We urge President Carter to resist pressure in the upcoming days to reverse his reported position against the production and deployment of this controversial weapon.

The letter follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
April 4, 1978.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Those of us in the House who voted for the Weiss amendment to delete all funds for the neutron bomb are heartened by today's reports which state that you have apparently decided to forego production and deployment of this controversial weapon.

The reports indicate that your decision centers on the arms control disincentives which would result from neutron bomb deployment. We are gratified that you agree with the positions we took in the debate over the amendment last September. It was our concern then, as it is now, that this weapon would lower the threshold of nuclear war and bring us closer to the brink of a nuclear holocaust.

We strongly support your decision and urge you to withstand the efforts to reverse it that you will encounter in the coming days. It is our fervent hope that your decision will become official Administration policy in the very near future.

Sincererly,

Joseph P. Addabbo, Les AuCoin, Alvin Baldus, Berkley Bedell, Anthony C. Beilenson, Michael T. Blouin, David E. Bonior, Don Bonker, William Brodhead, Yvonne Burke, John Burton, Phillip Burton, Shirley Chisholm, and William Clay.

John Conyers, Ron Dellums, Robert Drinan, Robert Edgar, Don Edwards, Joshua Eilberg, Harold Ford, Robert Garcia, Dan Glickman, Mark Hannaford, Tom Harkin, Michael Harrington, Elizabeth Holtzman, Andrew Jacobs, Jr., Robert Kastenmeier, Martha Keys, Dale Kildee, Peter Kostmayer, John Krebs, Jim Leach, Andrew Maguire, Edward Markey, Romano Mazzoli, and Paul Tsongas.

Matthew McHugh, Barbara Mikulski, Abner Mikva, George Miller, Parren Mitchell, Joe Moakley, Toby Moffett, John Moss, Richard Nolan, Mary Rose Oakar, David Obey, Richard Ottinger, Leon Panetta, Charles Rangel, Fred Richmond, Ben Rosenthal, Patricia Schroeder, John Seiberling, Paul Simon, Pete Stark, Gerry Studds, Bruce Vento, Jim Weaver, and Ted Weiss.

Members of Congress.●

MASUK HIGH SCHOOL CURRENT ISSUES QUESTIONNAIRE

HON. RONALD A. SARASIN

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. SARASIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call my colleagues' attention to a recent survey conducted by the social studies club of Masuk High School in Monroe, Conn. This questionaire was returned by 700 students and staff out of a total of 1,350. I think this organization should be commended for the compilation of this information because it is so important that people have a chance to express their views, and in this day in age, surveys and polls are a very effective method. It is my hope that all Members of Congress will be able to utilize the results of this survey when formulating opinions:

NATIONAL ISSUE

Should women in the armed forces be allowed in combat?

Yes	345
No	185
No opinion	85

Do you feel saccharin, the sugar substitute, should be banned from the market?

Yes	215
No	320
No opinion	91

Do you think that there should be stricter gun control laws throughout the country?

Yes	420
No	158
No opinion	55

Do you feel there should be off shore drilling of the New England coast?

Yes	209
No	254
No opinion	185

Should the U.S. Social Security system be restructured?

Yes	317
No	106
No opinion	201

Do you approve of current Government intervention in the National Coal Strike?

Yes	317
No	142
No opinion	190

Should the potential food producing capabilities of the U.S. be used as a political weapon against the third world countries?

Yes	173
No	290
No opinion	185

Should the "cancer curing" drug laetril, be legalized nation-wide?

Yes	350
No	127
No opinion	155

Do you feel capital punishment should be re-instated throughout the country?

Yes	393
No	186
No opinion	66

Do you think New York City should be aided by the Federal Gov't to prevent it from going bankrupt?

Yes	332
No	213
No opinion	100

Do you think illegal immigrants should be given amnesty?

Yes	195
No	324
No opinion	128

Or should these people (immigrants) be sent back to their home land?

Yes	282
No	246
No opinion	121

In your opinion, should prostitution be legalized?

Yes	261
No	253
No opinion	114

How do you rate President Carter's job performance?

Excellent	10
Good	224
Fair	276
Poor	131

Do you think it is right that Bill Carter "cash in" on his name the way he does?

Yes	149
No	352
No opinion	110●

OUT OF REACH FOREIGN AID

HON. VIRGINIA SMITH

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, on March 16, 1978, the following editorial appeared in the Columbus, Nebr., Telegram. Editor Dick Howe makes the case very well for a vote against H.R. 7797.

OUT OF REACH FOREIGN AID

Despite the fact that most Americans do not favor foreign aid, this tremendous rip-off of U.S. taxpayers continues to grow. The program is mistrusted and disliked, but the giveaway of our money, goods and technology goes on unabated.

The increasing unpopularity of foreign aid is shown time and time again by opinion polls. The spending increases and the politicians still claim it is "vital to the interests of this nation." This nation without the people is zero with the rim removed. And the people keep saying they do not want their money spent on foreign aid. So, just who's interest is being served?

Since 1946, our politicans have voted nearly $200 billion for foreign aid. Does anyone know exactly where, to whom and in what amounts this money of ours has gone? Do our representatives, who have voted the funds have any exact knowledge of its disposition?

Now, the Foreign Aid programs Assistance Act of 1978, HR 7797, is the biggest giveaway bill in three decades. Included in this bill is $2.1 billion for six international banks. Virtually all congressional control over these banks has been eliminated. Officials of these international lending institutions have refused to appear before Congress or to furnish any requested information when the bill was being written.

Our tax dollars will be turned over to the banks to be loaned out at low interest rates to all comers, including Communist and other totalitarian regimes. In most cases the money goes to foreign politicians without any accounting as to its final uses.

How much of this money is used to deprive freedom to the people of other lands will never be divulged. Just where does this leave the vociferous incantations of "human rights" which have dinned our ears lately?

Some of the highest paid bureaucrats in the world are the employees of the six international banks. About 95 percent of these people live in the United States and pay no U.S. income tax at all. One of their fringe benefits is to obtain home loans at rates as low as four percent.

In a recent letter, Rep. C. W. Young, R-Fla., said, "It is bad for the American taxpayers to subsidize personal loans for the World Bank employees but even worse when these same people refuse to testify before our committees, refuse to provide us with audits of their loans, and refuse to allow a member of Congress to sit in on their decision making meetings."

Robert S. McNamara, president of the World Bank, bluntly said, "No condition can be imposed which would restrict the power of the bank . ."

Do officials of these American financed international lending institutions, who get tremendous salaries and pay no income tax, consider themselves above and out of reach of Congress and the taxpayers of this nation? ●

USDA NITRITE BAN

HON. TOM HAGEDORN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. HAGEDORN. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Department of Agriculture's comment period has passed with respect to its proposal to ban the use of nitrites and nitrates as preservatives in certain cured meat products, including bacon. On the basis of studies which fed test rats the human equivalent of 15,000 pounds of bacon per day, the Department has claimed that these preservatives may be cancer-causing.

I have commented earlier on USDA's efforts (March 8, E1143), and have introduced legislation with nearly 50 cosponsors to limit its authority to eliminate bacon from our diets (there is no effective substitute for nitrites and nitrates as inhibitors of botulism). I believe that the following statement submitted by the American Meat Institute to USDA clearly summarizes the case against the Department's latest initiative:

NITRATES AND NITRITES IN MEAT PRODUCTS; REQUEST FOR DATA; FEDERAL REGISTER, OCTOBER 18, 1977, PAGES 55526–55527

The American Meat Institute, national trade association of the meat packing industry, presents the material that follows in response to the notice published in the Federal Register October 18, 1977 (Ref. 1), calling for the submission of data "demonstrating whether the use of nitrates and/or nitrites in the production of bacon results in the formation of carcinogenic nitrosamines during its ordinary processing and/or preparation for eating. . . ." The original deadline for submitting data—January 16, 1978—was extended 60 days, to March 17, 1978, by notice published in the Federal Register December 13, 1977(p. 62512) (Ref. 2).

USDA indicated that the data called for in the notice might become the basis for a regulatory proposal. AMI respectfully suggests that the data submitted demonstrate that nitrosamines at the levels found in bacon are not a health hazard. The data, however, support the lowering of permitted nitrite to 120 ppm and the inclusion of 550 ppm ascorbate or isoascorbate as the first step toward eliminating nitrosamines. The complexity of the problem from a scientific standpoint has required a great deal of research, some of which is still underway. As explained herein, the final solution to the problem must await the completion and evaluation of that research.

HISTORY OF NITRITE USE

In discussing the safe use of nitrates and nitrites, it should be noted that they are not newly introduced additives, but rather curing ingredients whose use for literally thousands of years has provided a practical test of their safety (Ref. 3). A primary benefit from the use of nitrite is the prevention of botulism, a deadly form of food poisoning. If nitrite were banned, the danger from food poisoning would be increased to a degree that is difficult to assess. If the consumption of bacon (1.5 billion lbs. per year) were not safe, epidemiological data would have recorded its impact (Ref. 4). The function of nitrate in meat curing was given official recognition in regulations issued under the original Federal Meat Inspection Act, enacted in 1906 (Ref. 5), and some twenty years later, based on further scientific knowledge, the use of nitrite was approved (Ref. 6).

It has been observed that meat products represent only a minor source of nitrates and nitrites in the human diet (Ref. 7 and 8). Green leafy vegetables, such as spinach and celery, contribute far more nitrate and more than 80 percent of the nitrite entering the stomach originates in saliva (Ref. 7, 8, and 9). Even if the Department of Agriculture chose to disregard the positive benefits of nitrate and nitrite and took action to disapprove them as curing ingredients, the effect would be an insignificant reduction in overall nitrate/nitrite consumption (Ref. 8 and 9).

INDUSTRY RESEARCH

The meat industry for the past eight years has been actively involved in research related to the use of nitrates and nitrites. Actually it was the American Meat Institute that called to the attention of USDA (Ref. 10) and the Food and Drug Administration certain European findings concerning the formation of nitrosamines (Ref. 11)—compounds that have been shown to cause cancer in laboratory animals when fed in large quantities.

Research sponsored by the meat industry has demonstrated that nitrite indeed is effective in inhibiting the outgrowth of botulinal spores (Ref. 12). The Secretary of Agriculture's Expert Panel on Nitrites, Nitrates and Nitrosamines found that "As an anticlostridial agent, nitrite has been the most acceptable ingredient yet found and is responsible for the excellent safety record of commercially produced meats." (Ref. 13).

Other research, focusing on nitrosamines, found that virtually all cured meat products are free of nitrosamines (Ref. 14 and 15). However, very small amounts were detected in some bacon samples after frying (Ref. 16). Tests sponsored by the American Meat Institute demonstrated that reducing added nitrite to 120 ppm and increasing the amount of ascorbate (vitamin C) to the legal maximum had the effect of substantially reducing nitrosamines in fried bacon (Ref. 17). Most of the samples tested had none; some had quantities less than ten parts per billion—amounts where testing methods are not uniformly reliable (Ref. 18). Such unreliability was particularly evident in laboratory cross-check nitrosamine analyses conducted in the course of a 10-plant bacon study. This study involved nitrosamine testing of 154 samples of bacon produced with varying levels of nitrite (0, 40, 80, 120 ppm).

Results of the 10-plant study showed that about 90 percent of the samples were free of nitrosamines, after frying. While tests showed that a few samples did contain nitrosamines, the amounts (10 parts per billion or less) were so small as to raise questions about reliability of the results. Based on this and other information (Ref. 19), the USDA Expert Panel endorsed industry's position that bacon be produced with 120 ppm nitrite and 550 ppm ascorbate or isoascorbate (Ref. 20).

The Department of Agriculture chose not to proceed along the lines of the Expert Panel's recommendations concerning the use of nitrite and ascorbate in bacon, but rather published a notice in the Federal Register for October 18, 1977, calling on the industry to submit data demonstrating "whether the use of nitrates and/or nitrites as currently used in the production of bacon results in the formation of carcinogenic nitrosamines during its ordinary processing and/or preparation for eating."

As a result of this action, a variety of research projects was undertaken by AMI as described herein. Provisions have been made for USDA personnel to monitor this research on site at all locations and to take duplicate samples for their laboratory verification of the results. One of these projects was devised to further test the effectiveness of alpha tocopherol (vitamin E) used in combination with two different levels of nitrite and the maximum amount of ascorbate or isoascorbate permitted under current regulations. The protocol was approved by USDA even though that was not a requirement under terms of the October 18 notice. Eight member companies of the American Meat Institute cooperated in the study.

Results of the study (Ref. 21) are submitted with this comment. They clearly demonstrate that tocopherol is beneficial in blocking nitrosamine formation in bacon. If suitable means can be developed to adequately control the amount of alpha tocopherol introduced in conjunction with 120 ppm nitrite and 550 ppm ascorbate or isoa-scorbate under production conditions, the use of this substance may be an acceptable option. However, it is not known what effect tocopherol may have on the essential function of nitrite in preventing the outgrowth of botulinal spores. Research to obtain information on this point is under way (Ref. 22).

Ascorbyl acetals (Ref. 23 and 24) and TBHQ (tertiary butylhydroquinone) (Ref. 25) also show in research studies that other potential means of satisfying requirements regarding bacon can be postulated. Commercial means for application and control of these additives would require development. Effects on botulinal toxin inhibition would need assessment.

Another potential for bacon processing would involve the use of reduced amounts of nitrite in conjunction with potassium sorbate (Ref. 26).

RESEARCH STILL UNDERWAY

In addition to the data being submitted with this comment, the American Meat Institute is continuing its nitrite research on bacon. Several protocols have been submitted to USDA, and while complete results are not available for submission at this time, we believe they will add significantly to the knowledge concerning nitrosamine suppression.

One study is designed to determine the effectiveness of citric acid in combination with ascorbate for reducing residual nitrite and suppressing nitrosamine formation (Ref. 27).

Another study will assess the effects of using higher levels of ascorbate in combination with 120 ppm of ingoing nitrite; in addition to 550 ppm of ascorbate, as presently permitted by regulations, 750 and 1000 ppm will be tested (Ref. 28).

A third study (Ref. 29) has been designed to test the hypothesis that nitrosamine formation is minimized when a combination of low residual nitrite and high residual ascorbate/isoascorbate is present at the time of frying.

It is anticipated that these studies may lead to the identification of processing procedures which will result in lower levels of nitrosophyrrolidine.

RECOMMENDED ACTION

It is the view of the American Meat Institute that regulatory requirements developed as a result of responses to the Federal Register notice must be evaluated in light of their practical application. It should be understood that bacon in the United States is produced with a variety of techniques and with different types of equipment. Requiring a process that would be practical only for certain processors or for certain equipment could easily have an anti-competitive effect and might even put small processors out of business.

Since the use of nitrates and nitrites in curing solutions has a prior sanction under the Food Additive Amendments to the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, the Secretary may only take action against these substances if he finds that their use may be hazardous to health. We suggest that most experts who have considered this question have found the threat to human health to be inconsequential. We urge the Secretary to consider all the evidence, including the recently completed Canadian study, where rats, for a lifetime, were fed bacon containing relatively high levels of nitrosamines with negative carcinogenicity findings.

With this comment we are submitting an application of the Mantel-Bryan extrapolations to determine "safe" levels of nitrosopyrrolidine in cooked bacon. This methodology has been employed by the Food and Drug Administration for other purposes (Ref. 30). Mantel (Ref. 31) has applied this method to results of studies by Preussmann, et al (Ref. 32), in which nitrosopyrrolidine was fed to rats, to estimate "safe" levels of nitrosopyrrolidine in fried bacon. The "safe" levels found range from 12 to 124 ppb and may indeed be much higher. A recent USDA survey (Ref. 33) of nitrosopyrrolidine in fried bacon indicated an average of 11.3 ppb, and a range from none detected to 39 ppb.

Based upon the data submitted, AMI suggests that the only reasonable action at this time is to implement the recommendation of both the industry and the USDA Expert Panel that bacon be produced with 120 ppm nitrite and 550 ppm ascorbate or isoascorbate. Any other action is premature until the research underway has been completed and evaluated.

CONCLUSION

Bacon, as produced today, is not a health hazard. It is, however, possible to reduce the formation of nitrosamines in fried bacon by lowering the amounts of sodium nitrite and including sodium ascorbate or isoascorbate. USDA should no longer delay in implementing this. Also, it is anticipated that industry research now underway will lead to even further reduction of nitrosamines in bacon.

REFERENCES

1. "Nitrates and Nitrates in Meat Products" Statement of Policy, Request for Data. Federal Register, Vol. 42, No. 201—Tuesday, October 18, 1977. pp. 55626. (copy attached)

2. "Nitrates and Nitrites in Meat Products", Extension of Time for Submission of Data. Federal Register, Vol. 42, No. 239—Tuesday, December 13, 1977. pp. 62512. (copy attached)

3. "The History and Use of Nitrate and Nitrite in the Curing of Meat", E. F. Binkerd and O. E. Kolari. Fd. Cosmet. Toxicol., Vol. 13, pp. 655–661, 1975 (copy attached)

4. Researchers Urge Issue of Nitrite in Meat Be Placed "In Perspective", Food Chemical News, December 15, 1975, pp. 50 and 51. (copy attached)

5. Regulations Governing The Meat Inspection of the United States Department of Agriculture, as amended, effective May 1, 1908 (pp. 33 and 44–49 attached)

6. "The Use of Sodium Nitrite in the Curing of Meat", Robert H. Kerr, Clarence T. N. March, Walter F. Schroeder and Edward A. Boyer, reprint from Journal of Agricultural Research, Vol. 33, No. 5, Sept. 15, 1923 (copy attached)

7. "Relative Significance of Dietary Sources of Nitrate and Nitrite" Jonathan W. White, Jr., J. Agric. Food Chem., Vol. 23, No. 5, 1975, pp. 886–891. Correction, "Relative Significance of Dietary Sources of Nitrate and Nitrite" J. Agric. Food Chem., Vol. 24, No. 1, 1976, p. 2021. (copy attached)

8. Progress Report. "Residual Sodium Nitrite in Cured Meat Products", American Meat Institute, prepared for the July 25, 1977 meeting of USDA Expert Panel on Nitrites and Nitrosamines (copy attached)

9. "The Effect of Nitrate Intake on Nitrite Formation in Human Saliva", S. R. Tannenbaum, M. Weisman and D. Fett, Fd. Cosmet. Toxicol. Vol. 14, pp. 549–552, 1976. (copy attached)

10. History of American Meat Institute concern. (copy attached)

11. Articles of General Interest. Nitrosamines: A Jig-Saw Puzzle with Missing Pieces", Fd. Cosmet. Toxicol., Vol. 6, pp. 647–661. 1968. (copy attached)

12. "Summary of Recent Research on Nitrite as it Relates to Botulinal Protection in Cured Meats", American Meat Institute, March 1978. (copy attached)

13. Proposed Final Report to the Secretary by the Expert Panel on Nitrites, Nitrates, and Nitrosamines, September 1977. (copy attached)

14. "Survey of Food Products for Volatile N–Nitrosamines" Donald C. Havery, David A. Kline, Elaine M. Miletta, Frank L. Joe, Jr., and Thomas Fazio, Journal of the AOAC (Vol. 59, No. 3, 1976). pp 540–546. (copy attached)

15. "N–Nitrosamines and Their Precursors In Bacon: A Review" J. I. Gray, J. Milk Food Technol., Vol. 39, No. 10, pp. 686–692, October, 1976. (copy attached)

16. "Food Additives, Nitrosopyrrolidine in Cooked Bacon", Thomas Faxio, Richard H. White, Laurence R. Dusold, and John W. Howard, J.A.O.A.C. 56: 919. 1973. (copy attached)

17. "N–Nitrosopyrrolidine in Bacon Obtained From 10 Commercial Bacon Production Plants", John J. Birdsall. Proc. 2nd Int. Symp. Nitrite Meat Product, Zeist, 1976, pp. 211–213. (copy attached)

18. "Analytical Variability of Nitrosamine Analyses of Bacon" American Meat Institute. (copy attached)

19. "Collaborative USDA, FDA, and AMI Studies on Sodium Nitrate and Sodium Nitrite in Cured Meat Products", J. C. Bard, Oscar Mayer & Co., Madison, WI, presented to the Expert Panel on Nitrites and Nitrosamines, June 27, 1977. (copy attached)

20. USDA, FSQS, Meeting of the Expert Panel on Nitrates, Nitrites and Nitrosamines, September 19, 1977 transcript (pp. 1–198) (pp. 1–3 and Table of Sodium Nitrite, Sodium Nitrate, Sodium Ascorbate/Isoascorbate Usage and Residual Sodium Nitrite in Various Cured Meat Products, attached)

21. "The Effect of Alpha-Tocopherol on Nitrosamine Formation During Frying of Bacon", American Meat Institute. (copy attached)

22. "Effect of Alpha-Tocopherol on Toxin Production by Clostridium Botulinum in Bacon" American Meat Institute. (copy attached)

23. "Long-Chain Acetals of Ascorbic Acid", presented at the Meet of the Expert Panel on Nitrite and Nitrosamines, August 17, 1977. (copy attached)

24. "The Effect of C–16 Ascorbyl Acetal on N–Nitrosamine Formation in Fried Bacon", Geo. A. Hormel & Co. (copy attached)

25. "The Effect of TBHQ on N–Nitrosamine Formation in Fried Bacon", Geo. A. Hormel & Co. (copy attached)

26. "Effect of Potassium Sorbate on Toxinogenesis of Clostridium Botulinum in Bacon", F. J. Ivey, K. J. Shaver, L. N. Christiansen and R. B. Tompkin. (copy attached); "Effect of Potassium Sorbate on Toxinogenesis of Clostridium Botulinum in Bacon', Dr. Merle D. Pierson, VPI, March 3, 1978. (copy attached)

27. AMI, 6-Plant Bacon Study—Citric Acid, "Experimenttal Protocol for Determining Effectiveness of Citric Acid in Combination with Sodium Ascorbate or Sodium Isoascorbate for Reducing Residual Nitrite and Suppressing Potential Nitrosamine Formation in Bacon", Protocol 78–1, American Meat Institute, Revised 2/6/78. (copy attached)

28. AMI—4-Plant Bacon Study—Increased Sodium Ascorbate or Isoascorbate, "Experimental Protocol for Determining Effectiveness of Higher Levels of Sodium Ascorbate or Sodium Isoascorbate in Suppressing Potential Nitrosamine Formation in Bacon", American Meat Institute, Revised 2/6/78. (copy attached)

29. "The Effect of Residual Nitrite and Other Factors in Bacon as Related to Nitrosamine Formation", Protocol 78–3, American Meat Institute, Revised 2/6/78. (copy attached)

30. "Assessment of Estimated Risk Resulting From Aflatoxins in Consumer of Peanut Products and Other Food Commodities", Bureau of Foods, Food and Drug Administration, Jan. 19, 1978. (copy attached)

31. Mantel-Bryan "safe" levels from N-Nitrosopyrrolidine (NPyr) in cooked bacon (based on the published data of Preussmann, Schmahl, Eisenbrand, and Port), and some interpretations, Nathan Mantel, Biostatistics Center, George Washington University, March 6, 1978. (copy attached)

32. "Dose-Response Study with N-Nitrosopyrrolidine and Some Comments on Risk Evaluation of Environmental N-Nitroso Compounds", R. Preussmann, D. Schmahl, G. Eisenbrand and R. Port, Proc. 2nd Int. Symp. Nitrite Meat Prod., Zeist, 1976. pp. 261–268. (copy attached)

33. Data from 1977 USDA Report. (attached.●

A YOUNG WOMAN'S SUICIDE

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, on February 6, 1978 Lynn Thompson committed suicide. Lynn's death was indirectly caused by cold and rigid laws affecting the disabled's working—laws which must be changed.

Lynn Thompson suffered from muscular dystrophy since early childhood. Her condition was so severe that she was immobile from the neck down and so painful that her hip joints had to be disconnected. Obviously she was confined to a bed.

Lynn was quite an extraordinary and remarkable person who did not let MD prevent her from working. On the contrary, she worked from her bed as a night dispatcher for a Los Angeles based firm; she was so successful that she earned up to $492 a month.

I cannot stress the importance that work had for Lynn. Lynn was struggling to find a meaning and purpose in life. Working was the answer, and as a dispatcher she felt that she was finally accomplishing something with her life. Then the Government stepped in and ruined it.

The Government does not believe in giving the disabled an opportunity to work. Since Lynn exceeded the SSI disability earnings limitation of $230 a month she lost all her benefits, including In-Home Support Services and Medi-Cal. The Social Security Administration further penalized her by forcing her to pay back the $10,000 she received in past benefits. Lynn's hopes of making it in society were dashed as she faced institutionalization. In effect, the SSA ruling crushed her courage and enthusiasm for life.

Here is a person who tried to support herself, but was coldly treated by the Government. The current SSA and SSI laws do not take into consideration the disabled's desire to work.

There is a solution. MARTHA KEYS and I have introduced legislation (H.R. 11240) that will raise the earnings limitation so the disabled will better be able to support themselves. I have introduced a bill (H.R. 11792, H.R. 11793) with 28 cosponsors that will remove the disabled's fear of losing their benefits when searching for work. At present, the law discourages work by providing that if people on SSA or SSI disability get a job and earn over $230 a month, they lose their benefits; then if they lose that job they must undergo a lengthy and bureaucratic hassle to be recertified. I believe we should encourage handicapped persons to work; my bill will do that by categorizing any prior SSA or SSI disability recipient as "presumptively disabled" and immediately eligible for reinstatement of benefits should the fear of losing a job be realized.

Lynn Thompson was one out of 30 million disabled, but her aspirations for working are shared by them all. The time has come to knock down the roadblocks confronting the disabled's opportunity to work and give them their place in the work force. I am inserting in the RECORD, for my colleagues to read, the tragic story of Lynn Thompson.

[From the Los Angeles Herald Examiner]

A YOUNG WOMAN'S SUICIDE

THANKS FOR BEING THE STRAW THAT BROKE THE CAMEL'S BACK

(By Robert Knowles)

Lynn Thompson, 27, overcame crippling muscular dystrophy three years ago to find a job she could handle—secretly.

Last month, she committed suicide after receiving a computer-written letter from the Social Security Administration ending all government aid and saying she now owed $10,000 for past benefits.

Mason Rose, a member of the 12-member county commission, yesterday told the Board of Supervisors that the young woman's death was needless—she had never been told of a new state law allowing the working disabled to keep Medi-Cal and local welfare aid.

In a farewell tape recording, Ms. Thompson admitted she knew her $490-a-month job as a night telephone dispatcher violated federal guidelines allowing a maximum of $230 in earned salary.

But the rent on her San Fernando apartment was only $11 a month less than her federal grant of $390. And she had to have a place large enough for the live-in attendant supplied by the county under the Homemaker Chores program.

Ms. Thompson's desire to work even produced a news account of her job-hunting search in a local publication, quoting her as saying: "you learn early to roll with the punches when you are crippled."

Her new employers paid tribute to her "unfailing sense of humor . . . always ready to encourage someone else who may be a bit down."

She took the dispatcher job, working nights from her apartment. She kept the federal money, the attendant and Medi-Cal benefits when needed.

When Social Security found out and sent the form letter, Rose said, she mistakenly thought she would lose everything but the job.

"Someone takes their life because of bureaucratic paperwork," said Supervisor Kenneth Hahn. "People get hardened sometimes, working day after day, it's just another case."

The supervisors said they would make sure disabled county welfare recipients knew of the change in state rules allowing earnings of up to $636 a month.

"If only we had known about this sooner," said Supervisor James Hayes.

Ms. Thompson's death, unofficially thought to be from an overdose of barbiturates pending an inquest, came as she dictated some rambling thoughts to relatives, and ends:

"Anyway, I need a rest.

"I don't want you to think of this as suicide, think of it as (rest and recuperation) forever. And I know I need a rest so this has gotten to be too much of a hassle—the whole thing.

"It's just a matter of time before the county catches up with me anyway so they'll cut me off, too. Then I would be in trouble, without the attendant money.

"No one's to blame. I mean, it's my own doing, you know? I just didn't feel like going through this hassle anymore.

"So, anyway, like I said . . . I've got a few things that I've distributed and . . . don't worry. Everything's cool. I just (want) all of you to know that I'll miss you. I love you very much, I couldn't ask for a better family or friends, even if I could have selected them myself. So, I love you all very much . . .

"I have a couple more requests. First, there's no need for a big hullabaloo. Just plant me and get it over with. And, secondly, give the Social Security Office a message for me: tell them thanks for being the straw that broke the camel's back.

"I realize the system's here to help people but it needs some going over. It'd be great if I could work or support myself and still receive the full attendant benefits and, of course, some kind of medical benefits.

"But the county has the same margins. Anything over $296 is considered extra money. Therefore, anything I make over $296, that's how much I can be shortened in the months to follow.

"So it makes no difference if I'm working 15 hours a day Monday through Thursday, 8 hours a day Saturday and Sunday, or if I worked an extra day or if I worked holidays to make extra pay. It doesn't make any difference. They're still going to cut me off that much more, you know.

"And I know since we (the answering service firm) have profit sharing, that could be as much as $200 or something . . . it's in a quarter, but still, you know, it all adds up.

"And so if it's going to be reported, everything's going to be on the up and up, I have to report it, so that's another shortage.

"So, really, you're working for nothing. So I'm still working the same amount of time for the $296, so it doesn't make any sense. I've got nothing against work . . . but it doesn't make any sense. If I got to the point where I can make, you know, $1,200 or $1,500 a month, fine they can all keep their money and their medical insurance. I wouldn't need it, then, you know, but $492 on salary . . . it's just not enough to pay most expenses."

Members of a reform coalition aimed at changing laws for the disabled said they plan to "confront" local Social Security Asst. Commissioner Hy Geller at his office today.

Douglas Martin, director of the West Side Community for Independent Living said:

"A person's disability needs continue even if they work . . . Social Security (rules) prevent people from working. We want the right to work and survive."

WHAT'S IN THE FOOD?

HON. CHARLES W. WHALEN, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 1978

● Mr. WHALEN. Mr. Speaker, from time to time I use this forum to help educate my colleagues and the public about the need for better and more complete labeling of food products. This has included the insertion in the RECORD of various newspaper reports as well as accounts of research being done by my staff and others.

Today, I wish to call attention to an article that appeared this past weekend in the Baltimore Sun. Written by Andrea Pawlyna, this piece explains quite well the need for better food labeling and discusses the chief legislative proposals for dealing with this problem.

At this point in the RECORD, I would like to insert Ms. Pawlyna's story. The text follows:

CONSUMER MYSTERY: WHAT'S IN THE FOOD?

(By Andrea Pawlyna)

A bottle may appear to contain real orange juice but the label says it's "diluted orange juice beverage" with 10 per cent orange juice.

Another product that looks and tastes like creamy peanut butter is called "peanut spread" because it contains less than 90 per cent peanuts.

A food that resembles but is nutritionally inferior to a certain product (mayonnaise, for example) must be labeled "imitation" while a food concocted in a laboratory (like Eggbeaters) which is nutritionally equal to the food it copies is called a "substitute."

For consumers, the variety of food labels may make choosing between products a bewildering task—one made all the more so consumer groups say, by labeling laws with enough loopholes to keep the contents of the boxes, jars and cans on supermarket shelves largely a mystery.

One of the most criticized gaps in the law concerns the percentage of sugar in presweetened cereals. Some cereals are more than 50 per cent sugar, yet food processors need not say so on the label.

In fact, processors may disguise the way sugar appears on a label by calling it something else, such as corn syrup or dextrose. General Mills' Lucky Charms, a marshmallowy cereal analyzed as containing 50.4 per cent sugar, lists three sweeteners (sugar, corn syrup and dextrose) among its eight principal ingredients.

FLAVORS, COLORS UNSPECIFIED

Another major labeling deficiency singled out by consumer groups involves chemically added flavors and colors. Instead of naming each flavor or color specifically, the law merely requires that they be listed under the broad classification "artificial flavor" or "artificial color."

"Some of these chemicals are questionable substances. It's important to list each one so people know what they are buying," says Ellen Haas, of the Community Nutrition institute, and activist group which concentrates on food and labeling issues.

Indeed, few of the 1,700 artificial flavors on the market have been well tested, leaving consumer groups unsure about their safety.

Colors, however, cause the most worry. These chemicals, derived from coal tar dyes, have become increasingly controversial because of their links to cancer, allergies and hyperactivity in children.

Red No. 2 and Red No. 4 (the coloring added to maraschino cherries) were banned in 1976 as suspected carcinogens. They were replaced by Red No. 40, which itself is being questioned.

Yellow No. 5, widely used in candy, vitamin pills and soft drinks, causes allergic reactions in an estimated 50,000 to 100,000 Americans—the same people who are sensitive to aspirin, according to the Food and Drug Administration. Common symptoms are hives, wheezing, difficulty in breathing and runny noses.

Given such labeling inadequacies, consumers who react to chemical additives must either continually experiment with the foods they eat or avoid certain ones altogether. The FDA, however, has proposed a specific labeling requirement for one color—Yellow No. 5—since it affects so many.

But consumer activists regard this as a small victory (since there are nine other colors still unlisted) and they wonder why so little is being done about better labeling.

"It's a shame people have to put up with such a lack of information," says Michael Jacobson, director of the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a nonprofit, Washington-based group which has long advocated full disclosure of ingredients. "People are tremendously concerned about what they eat."

IMPORTANT TO ALLERGIC PEOPLE

People who suffer from allergies especially need to rely on food labels. Peanuts, chocolate, milk, wheat and eggs are all common foods yet for some people, any one of them can cause vomiting, abdominal pain, asthma, difficulty in swallowing and severe shock which can lead to death.

In extremely sensitive individuals, death can come in minutes as it did to a 10-year-old Boston boy several years ago. The boy, who was violently allergic to peanuts, had stopped by a friend's house one afternoon for ice cream.

Although he checked the carton carefully, he could not have known the ice cream was whipped with peanut butter because no ingredients were listed on the label.

Representative Benjamin Rosenthal (D., N.Y.), sponsor of a food labeling bill pending in Congress, believes that nearly one out of three Americans needs to know exactly what is in the foods they eat. "Some studies have determined allergy incidence as high as 38 per cent. Add to this the number of people who are on low cholesterol diets, low salt diets or who must avoid foods for religious reasons and we are no longer discussing merely a few people," he says.

Well known for his pro-consumer stands (among other things, he sponsored the recently defeated federal consumer protection agency), Mr Rosenthal accuses the food industry and the FDA of collusion in trying to conceal the ingredients in many foods. "Thanks to the FDA, the present law has more holes than Swiss cheese," he adds.

Actually, the only absolute requirement the FDA makes is that every label show the name of the product, the net contents or net weight and the name and place of the manufacturer, packer or distributor.

Beyond that, consumer groups claim the regulations are a hodgepodge of requirements rife with exemptions. For example, one regulation requires that food labels list their ingredients in order of predominance.

"STANDARDIZED FOODS" EXEMPTED

But then the FDA exempts some 400 products (nearly half the food sold) from listing their basic ingredients. These products, described as "standardized foods," include such common items as enriched white bread, noodles, macaroni and mayonnaise.

The term "standardized" (which dates back to the 1930's) means that each kind of food—all strawberry preserves or all flour—must adhere to a basic recipe for that food found in the Code of Federal Regulations.

Such standards were to prevent unscrupulous food processors from adulterating or diluting foods and to assure consumers that certain products would contain the same ingredients regardless of the manufacturer. But with today's stricter manufacturing controls, consumer groups regard the standardizing system as outmoded and an excuse to withhold ingredients. "It's just another way to hide information," Mr. Jacobson says.

But even when ingredient labeling is required, consumer groups contend too much information is missing. For example, listing ingredients by percentage is not required. Without percentages, consumers cannot tell how much beef there is in a can of beef vegetable soup. Or how much fruit, sugar and water a jar of applesauce contains. (The few exceptions where percentages must be listed are seafood cocktails—shrimp cocktails, for example—and certain fruit and vegetable drinks that contain natural juices.)

Consumer groups are equally critical of the net weight requirement which tells the weight of the product exclusive of packaging—not how much solid food there is versus liquid.

Consumers Union, the nonprofit, public interest group which publishes Consumer Reports, petitioned the FDA for a change to another method, called "drained weight," in 1973. Basically, this method measures the weight of the solid food after processing, less any excess liquid. The weighing would take place a minimum of 30 days after canning. "By letting the food sit for a while, we feel this more accurately reflects what the consumer is getting," explains Mark Silbergeld, head of the Consumers Union Washington offic.

It took more than two years but the FDA finally issued a drained weight proposal which was strenuously opposed by the canning industry. Their main objection was the month-long holding period which, the industry claimed, would cost an estimated $100 million a year in lost revenues.

The canners' opposition led to a second proposal which gives industry the option of declaring another weight listing—this time for "solid" or "fill" weight. This method measures the weight of the solids before processing, a much less costly system for industry but one which Consumers Union contends is less accurate since processing alters a food's weight.

So far, the FDA has not acted on either proposal. It has, however, permitted canners to experiment with solid weight listings on the labels of canned fruits and vegetables. The agency expects to make a final decision after July, 1979, when the comment period for the proposal expires.

Nutritional labeling, another area of concern to consumer groups, is required only if nutrients are added to a food (such as "fortified" cereals or fruit drinks) or when nutritional claims are made on the label or through advertising.

Besides protein, at least seven nutrients must be listed—vitamin A, vitamin C, thiamin (vitamin B1), riboflavin (vitamin B2), niacin, calcium and iron—and shown in percentages of the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowances. If the label says a food supplies 35 per cent of the USRDA for vitamin C, an additional 65 per cent is needed for that day.

But despite warnings against diets high in sugar (which causes tooth decay), sodium (which contributes to high blood pressure and strokes) and saturated fat (which contributes to heart disease, the nation's leading killer), the FDA requires no labeling for these items.

Yet of all the labeling practices, perhaps none is so muddled and unhelpful to consumers as the system used for grading foods. Only a few foods are graded, such as meat, poultry, eggs, milk and fresh fruits and vegetables. But the system is voluntary so some brands may carry grades while others do not. Only about 55 per cent of the meat consumers buy, for example, carries a food grade.

What makes the system confusing for consumers is that meats are graded differently from eggs while eggs, in turn, are graded differently from fruits and vegetables.

Meats, for instance, are stamped (in order of value) prime, choice, good, standard or commercial. Eggs are graded AA, A and B. Fresh fruits and vegetables are graded Fancy, A, B and C. Faced with so many grading styles, consumers might assume that an A grade for fruit is better than Fancy simply because it carries the highest letter grade.

Moreover, the grading system is based on characteristics such as taste, flavor and appearance rather than nutritional quality. Eggs, for example, are graded on the firmness of their yolks or the amount of air space in the shell. Prime beef may have more marbling (and hence a higher fat content) than lesser grades yet it is considered a superior meat.

Over the last several years, consumers have become more interested in food labeling and growing numbers of them have expressed dissatisfaction with the inconsistencies and loopholes in the food labeling laws, an FDA spokesman says. "It's been one of the more persistent areas of interest," says Robert Lake, regulations coordinator for the agency's Bureau of Foods.

In response, the FDA will begin reviewing all of its food labelings regulations this spring. According to FDA Commissioner Donald Kennedy, the goal is to turn a "confusing set of policies into a comprehensive strategy [that will help] consumers in guiding their own nutritional planning."

Meanwhile, consumer groups continue to monitor the progress of Mr. Rosenthal's bill which, he says, would do much to "clear up the confusion and . . . give consumers the information they need."

The major provisions would require:

That all foods list their ingredients by percentage, including all additives and preservatives, by their common or usual name.

That all foods carry nutritional listings, including fat content, vitamins, protein, fats and fatty acids, calories and other appropriate nutritional data.

That foods show both the net weight and drained weight for canned or frozen products.

Among the bill's other provisions are the development of a uniform system of food grading based upon nutritional quality and wholesomeness; and labeling statements for perishable and non-perishable foods indicating the date after which such foods should not be sold as well as instructions for storage at home and warning notices on labels alerting consumers to ingredient changes.

A second food labeling bill, introduced by Representative Paul Rogers (D., Fla.), is less sweeping and would give broad authority to the FDA to require nutritional labeling, ingredient percentages and listings for artificial flavors. The bill does, however, require labels to list artificial colors and to show the last sale date for perishable and semi-perishable foods.●

SENATE—Friday, April 7, 1978

(Legislative day of Monday, February 6, 1978)

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, in executive session, and was called to order by Hon. HARRY F. BYRD, JR., a Senator from the State of Virginia.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Edward L. R. Elson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Hear the words of the first Psalm:

Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.

But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night.

And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.

The ungodly are not so: but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous.

For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish.

Guide us, O Lord, by the truth of Thy holy word.

And to Thee shall be the everlasting praise and thanksgiving. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. EASTLAND).

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D.C., April 7, 1978.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HARRY F. BYRD, JR., a Senator from the State of Virginia, to perform the duties of the Chair.

JAMES O. EASTLAND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR., thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF LEADERSHIP

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the majority leader and the acting minority leader have 3 minutes each under their control before the recognition of Senators.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 8:45 A.M. ON MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1978

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 8:45 a.m. on Monday.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRODUCTION OF NEUTRON WEAPONS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, on Tuesday, in response to stories that were appearing in the media, I called President Carter to ask about his reported decision to cancel the production of the so-called neutron bomb warhead. He assured me that no decision had been made to cancel the production of that weapon.

On Wednesday morning at the leadership breakfast the President reiterated that position. On yesterday, in the face of persistent rumors that indeed the President had decided not to go forward with the production of the weapon, I called again and urged that such a decision not be made unless concessions were forthcoming from the Soviet Union, pointing out that the weapon is an antitank weapon and unless the Soviets were willing to reduce several thousand tanks and some men we ought not to make a decision, an absolute decision, that we will not produce the weapon.

Now the matter of deployment is another matter. It is a matter on which our Western European, our NATO allies certainly have to make a decision for themselves. In that regard I think perhaps they have not been vocal enough either in this matter in support of producing the weapon.

But on yesterday, following my conversation with the President, I wrote to him a letter which I shall now read into the RECORD.

APRIL 6, 1978

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I was pleased that, in our conversation earlier today, you reiterated your denial of news stories which speculated that you had decided against production of neutron weapons.

As you know, my personal feeling is that the weapons should be produced, especially in the absence of any acceptable concession from the Soviet Union. I hope that you will decide in favor of the weapons, or, at the very least, defer your final decision until it can be determined whether the Soviet Union is willing to take the steps that would make the production and deployment of neutron weapons unnecessary.

Yours is a hard decision, I know. The Senate wrestled with the question of neutron weapons for several days. Finally, however, the majority of Senators decided the United States should proceed with the weapons. Continued Soviet intransigence, continued Soviet emphasis on military superiority in Europe, convinces me that the decision was the right one.

I strongly believe that negotiations with the Soviet Union must be conducted from a position of strength. For every concession given, there must be a concession received. The neutron weapons would seem to be an ideal bargaining chip to balance the Soviet force of 7,000 sophisticated tanks in Eastern Europe—a force that, according to reports, could most effectively be neutralized by the neutron weapons. It would be naive for America to reject the neutron weapons in the hope—merely in the hope—that the Soviets would match our unilateral gesture of disarmament.

After all, the Soviet Union reacted to the Senate's decision on the neutron weapons not with a call for a mutual reduction of arms, but rather with a massive propaganda campaign against the weapons. They should not be encouraged to believe that they can gain concessions through propaganda, and not have to enter into serious, mutually-beneficial, negotiations.

Certainly, the Soviet Union must realize one of the most definite facts of the situation: If the United States decides not to proceed with the neutron weapons, and does so without any parallel reduction in Soviet strength, the chances of any SALT agreement being ratified by the Senate are seriously jeopardized.

I wish the neutron weapons were not necessary. I wish no weapons were necessary. But, unfortunately, the world in which we live differs from the world in which we would like to live. Reality demands that we match the Soviet Union strength for strength, as you said so well in your March 17 speech at Wake Forest College.

Therefore, I urge that, unless the Soviet Union is willing to significantly decrease the threat it poses in Europe, you proceed with production of the neutron weapons.

Sincerely,

ROBERT C. BYRD.
Majority Leader.

Now, Madam President, let me simply stop with the inclusion of the letter in the RECORD because I think the President will be addressing this matter himself.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HUMPHREY). The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I would like to associate myself with the remarks just made by the able Senator from West Virginia.

It seems to me that the Senator from West Virginia, in his remarks to the Senate and in his letter to the President, put this matter in clear perspective. I think it would be a great mistake to unilaterally cease production of the neutron weapon, and I hope the President will heed the advice of the distinguished majority leader of the Senate.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank my distinguished friend from Virginia.

Mr. STEVENS. Madam President, I commend the distinguished majority leader for the letter he read into the RECORD because it again demonstrates his leadership in areas of national concern. I, too, support the statement he has made in that letter.

PANAMA CANAL TREATIES

Mr. STEVENS. Madam President, while the distinguished majority leader is here I wish to ask another question. At a previous time there was a situation where we sought production of a letter that concerned the Panama Canal treaties. The press now reports that there are two letters being circulated by the Government of Panama. One apparently a letter that seems to be semipublic, at least, although the Senator from Alaska has not received a copy of it yet that is reportedly being circulated by Panama at the United Nations discussing the DeConcini reservation; and a second letter sent by the Panama leader, General Omar Torrijos, to certain heads of state that apparently has not been made public as yet.

I wonder if the distinguished majority leader would do the Senate the courtesy of requesting the Department of State to produce those letters, so that we might consider them in the course of this debate.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I shall be glad to do that. I have been made aware of the letters. I have a feeling that the State Department will make them available without the request, but I shall do that.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator. I know I am one of those in the strange position of being in favor of a new relationship with the Government of Panama, but very disturbed about the Panamanian domestic procedures that are available to the current head of state in Panama should he choose to circumvent the reservations, declarations, or understandings agreed to by the Senate.

I attempted to document that situation with regard to the previous treaty, which has been given advise and consent by the Senate, and the amendment that I shall call up to article XIV again deals with the problem of what happens if Panama, through its own domestic procedures chooses to disregard a reservation or amendment attached to the resolution of ratification by the Senate of the United States and delivered to Panama.

My amendment would have the effect of determining that should General Torrijos, using the powers that he has in Panama, disregard the DeConcini reservation or other reservations or amendments to either of the resolutions of ratification, that action would, in effect, abrogate the two treaties involved, and declare it the U.S. position that the existing treaty relationship with Panama remains in effect.

I know this will be very controversial, but again I think it is important for us to know exactly what position General Torrijos has taken, not only in the public letter but, if possible, in connection with the letter that has reportedly been sent by the Panama leader to the heads of state.

It appears to me that he is trying to create an international climate in which he can disregard the conditions placed upon the ratification of these treaties by the U.S. Senate through either the leadership amendment or reservation such as the DeConcini reservation.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, in response to the request from the distinguished Senator from Alaska, Mr. STEVENS, I would like to have printed in the RECORD the letters and documents he referred to earlier. These have been supplied to me by the State Department. Included is the United Nations documents based on the letter from the Permanent Representative of Panama to the United Nations to the United Nations Secretary General. I am also including a translation of the letter sent by General Torrijos to various heads of state. This translation of the Torrijos letter does not contain the full text of all the documents referred to therein, as these are contained in the United Nations documents.

Finally, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement released by the Panamanian Foreign Ministry today which is directly relevant to the earlier communications from the Panamanian Government and to various press reports.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DECLARATION ON THE STRENGTHENING OF INTERNATIONAL SECURITY

(Letter dated 28 March 1978 from the Permanent Representative of Panama to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General)

I have the honour to send you herewith the note verbale from this mission dated 28 March 1978, together with the following documents:

(a) Resolution of ratification of the Treaty concerning the permanent neutrality of the Panama Canal, adopted by the United States Senate on 16 March 1978 (see appendix I);

(b) Statement by Senator Dennis DeConcini (see appendix II);

(c) Statement by Senator Edward Kennedy (see appendix III);

(d) Communiqué from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Panama, issued on 27 March 1978 (see appendix IV).

In compliance with instructions from my Government, I request you to have the note verbale and the above-mentioned documents distributed as documents of the General Assembly under item 50 of the preliminary list.

JORGE E. ILLUECA,
Ambassador, Permanent Representative.

ANNEX: NOTE VERBALE DATED 28 MARCH 1978 FROM THE PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE OF PANAMA TO THE UNITED NATIONS ADDRESSED TO THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

The Permanent Representative of the Republic of Panama to the United Nations presents his compliments to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and has the honour to inform him that His Excellency Brigadier General Omar Torrijos Herrera, Head of Government of the Republic of Panama, has addressed a letter to the Heads of State and Heads of Government of the States members of the international community.

General Torrijos's letter and the documents enclosed make reference to the vote which took place on 16 March 1978 at the United States Senate on the Resolution of Ratification of the Treaty concerning the Permanent Neutrality of the Panama Canal. In this resolution, approval to the ratification was granted subject to a number of amendments, conditions, reservations and understandings, inserting among them a pre-condition to American acceptance of the Neutrality Treaty, known as the "DeConcini Amendment" (see clause (b)(1) in the attached clipping of the United States Congressional Record, vol. 124, No. 38, pp. S3857–3858 (appendix I)).

According to its proponent, the "DeConcini Amendment" is intended to give to the United States of America the unilateral and perpetual right to "take military action on Panamanian soil without the consent of the Panamanian Government", pretending that said amendment must be construed to permit the United States to intervene in Panama in the event of labour unrest, strikes, a slow-down, or under any other pretext labeled as interference with Canal operations (see text of Senator Dennis DeConcini's statement before the United States Senate on 16 March 1978 inserted in the attached clipping of the United States Congressional Record, vol. 124, No. 38, pp. S3817–3818 (appendix II)).

Not only does the amendment make no reference to the régime of neutrality, but, as stated by Senator Edward Kennedy, who opposed the DeConcini Amendment, "Panama has waited 75 years since its independence to end American occupation of its heartland. It must wait another 22 years before it achieves full control over its national territory." Now Panama is asked, in Kennedy's words, "to accept an amendment which has the ring of military interventionism—not just during this century, but for all time" (see text of Senator Edward Kennedy's statement before the United States Senate on 16 March 1978 inserted in the attached clipping of the United States Congressional Record, vol. 124, No. 38, p. S3824 (appendix III) and the attached text of the communiqué of the Panamanian Ministry of Foreign Relations, dated 27 March 1978 (appendix IV)).

Since the Treaty provides for accession by all States to the Protocol whereby the signatories would adhere to the objectives of the Neutrality Treaty and agree to respect the régime of neutrality, the Panamanian Head of Government has considered it his duty to address this letter to the Heads of State or Heads of Government of the States members of the inernational community that in so many instances have offered their solidarity and support to the Panamanian nation in its long struggle to reach a peaceful solution to the Panama Canal question based on the recognition of her sovereignty over the totality of its national territory.

APPENDIX I: RESOLUTION OF RATIFICATION OF THE TREATY CONCERNING THE PERMANENT NEUTRALITY OF THE PANAMA CANAL ADOPTED BY THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON 16 MARCH 1978

Resolved, (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), that the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal, together with the Annexes and Protocol relating thereto, done at Washington on September 7, 1977 (Executive N, Ninety-fifth Congress, first session), subject to the following—

(a) Amendments:

(1) At the end of Article IV, insert the following:

"A correct and authoritative statement of certain rights and duties of the Parties under the foregoing is contained in the Statement of Understanding issued by the Government of the United States of America on October 14, 1977, and by the Government of the Republic of Panama on October 18, 1977, which is hereby incorporated as an integral part of this Treaty, as follows:

" 'Under the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal (the Neutrality Treaty), Panama and the United States have the responsibility to assure that the Panama Canal will remain open and secure to ships of all nations. The correct interpretation of this principle is that each of the two countries shall, in accordance with their respective constitutional processes, defend the Canal against any threat to the regime of neutrality and consequently shall have the right to act against any aggression or threat directed against the Canal or against the peaceful transit of vessels through the Canal.

" 'This does not mean, nor shall it be interpreted as, a right of intervention of the United States in the internal affairs of Panama. Any United States action will be directed at insuring that the Canal will remain open, secure, and accessible, and it shall never be directed against the territorial integrity or political independence of Panama.' "

(2) At the end of the first paragraph of Article VI, insert the following:

"In accordance with the Statement of Understanding mentioned in Article IV above: 'The Neutrality Treaty provides that the vessels of war and auxiliary vessels of the United States and Panama will be entitled to transit the Canal expeditiously. This is intended, and it shall so be interpreted, to assure the transit of such vessels through the Canal as quickly as possible, without any impediment, with expedited treatment, and in the case of need or emergency, to go to the head of the line of vessels in order to transit the Canal rapidly.' "

(b) Conditions:

(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of Article V or any other provision of the Treaty, if the Canal is closed, or its operations are interferred with, the United States of America shall have the right to take such steps as it deems necessary, in accordance with its constitutional processes, including the use of military force in Panama, to reopen the Canal or restore the operations of the Canal, as the case may be.

(2) The instruments of ratification of the Treaty shall be exchanged only upon the conclusion of a Protocol of Exchange, to be signed by authorized representatives of both Governments, which shall constitute an integral part of the Treaty documents and which shall include the following:

"Nothing in this Treaty shall preclude Panama and the United States from making, in accordance with their respective constitutional processes, any agreement or arrangement between the two countries to facilitate performance at any time after December 31, 1999, of their responsibilities to maintain the regime of neutrality established in the Treaty, including agreements or arrangements for the stationing of any United States military forces or maintenance of defense sites after that date in the Republic of Panama that Panama and the United States may deem necessary or appropriate."

(c) Reservations:

(1) Before the date of entry into force of the Treaty, the two Parties shall begin to negotiate for an agreement under which the American Battle Monuments Commission would, upon the date of entry into force of such agreement and thereafter, administer, free of all taxes and other charges and without compensation to the Republic of Panama and in accordance with the practices, privileges, and immunities associated with the administration of cemeteries outside the United States by the American Battle Monuments Commission, including the display of the flag of the United States, such part of Corozal Cemetery in the former Canal Zone as encompasses the remains of citizens of the United States.

(2) The flag of the United States may be displayed, pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 3 of Article VII of the Panama Canal Treaty, at such part of Corozal Cemetery in the former Canal Zone as encompasses the remains of citizens of the United States.

(3) The President—

(A) shall have announced, before the date of entry into force of the Treaty, his intention to transfer, consistent with an agreement with the Republic of Panama, and before the date of termination of the Panama Canal Treaty, to the American Battle Monuments Commission the administration of such part of Corozal Cemetery as encompasses the remains of citizens of the United States; and

(B) shall have announced, immediately after the date of exchange of the instruments of ratification, plans, to be carried out at the expense of the United States Government, for—

(i) removing, before the date of entry into force of the Treaty, the remains of citizens of the United States from Mount Hope Cemetery to such part of Corozal Cemetery as encompasses such remains, except that the remains of any citizen whose next of kin objects in writing to the Secretary of the Army not later than three months after the date of exchange of the instruments of ratification of the Treaty shall not be removed; and

(ii) transporting to the United States for reinterment, if the next of kin so requests, not later than thirty months after the date of entry into force of the Treaty, any such remains encompassed by Corozal Cemetery and, before the date of entry into force of the Treaty, any remains removed from Mount Hope Cemetery pursuant to subclause (i); and

(C) shall have fully advised, before the date of entry into force of the Treaty, the next of kin objecting under clause (B)(i) of all available options and their implications.

(4) To carry out the purposes of Article III of the Treaty of assuring the security, efficiency, and proper maintenance of the Panama Canal, the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, during their respective periods of responsibility for Canal operation and maintenance, shall, unless the amount of the operating revenues of the Canal exceeds the amount needed to carry out the purposes of such article, use such revenues of the Canal only for purposes consistent with the purposes of Article III.

(d) Understandings:

(1) Paragraph 1(c) of Article III of the Treaty shall be construed as requiring, before any adjustment in tolls for use of the Canal that the effects of any such toll adjustment on the trade patterns of the two Parties shall be given full consideration, including consideration of the following factors in a manner consistent with the regime of neutrality:

(1) the costs of operating and maintaining the Panama Canal;

(2) the competitive position of the use of the Canal in relation to other means of transportation;

(3) the interests of both Parties in maintaining their domestic fleets;

(4) the impact of such an adjustment on the various geographical areas of each of the two Parties; and

(5) the interest of both Parties in maximizing their international commerce.

The United States and the Republic of Panama shall cooperate in exchanging information necessary for the consideration of such factors.

(2) The agreement "to maintain the regime of neutrality established in this Treaty" in Article IV of the Treaty means that either of the two Parties to the Treaty may, in accordance with its constitutional processes take unilateral action to defend the Panama Canal against any threat, as determinated by the Party taking such action.

(3) The determination of "need or emergency" for the purpose of any vessel of war or auxiliary vessel of the United States or Panama going to the head of the line of vessels in order to transit the Panama Canal rapidly shall be made by the nation operating such vessel.

(4) Nothing in the Treaty, in the annexes or the Protocol relating to the Treaty, or in any other agreement relating to the treaty obligates the United States to provide any economic assistance, military grant assistance, security supporting assistance, foreign military sales credits or international military education and training to the Republic of Panama.

(5) The President shall include all amendments, reservations, understandings, declarations, and other statements incorporated by the Senate in its resolution of ratification respecting this Treaty in the instrument of ratification exchanged with the Government of the Republic of Panama.

APPENDIX II: STATEMENT MADE BY SENATOR DENNIS DECONCINI IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON 16 MARCH 1978

Mr. President, I thank the Chair for his indulgence in calling the Senate to order.

For the last three (3) months, I have argued that the treaties as drafted did not appear to contain sufficient safeguards for the United States. But I have also stated publicly that I believed a new treaty with Panama was essential; that history had bypassed the era of simple colonialism when large powers bullied the small. Until recently, I believed that it would be possible for the Senate to make some constructive amendments to the treaty that would satisfy the needs of Panama—but not at the sole expense of the American people. However, as every member of this Chamber knows, the administration was unwilling to accept the slightest changes in the text of the agreement.

Because of this recalcitrance, I suspect that a number of potential supporters of the treaty were lost. Together with Senator Ford, I offered a number of amendments to the treaty. When it became clear that no amendments except the so-called leadership amendments would be accepted, I began to search for alternatives that would accomplish the desired objectives.

After extensive consultations with experts from the executive, Congress, and the academic community, I became convinced that it would be possible to achieve a clearer understanding of American rights and responsibilities under the treaty through the device of an amendment to the resolution of ratification in the nature of a condition precedent to American acceptance of the treaty itself. Such a condition will be binding on the Republic of Panama.

Therefore, I have recast my amendments in this form. I have assured the President that if my amendment No. 83 to the resolution of ratification is accepted by the Senate that I will vote in favor of the Neutrality Treaty. In turn, the President assured me yesterday in a meeting we had at the White House that he would accept and support my amendment. To the best of my knowledge, that is how things stand as of this moment.

I would like to stress that I am offering this amendment in the name of the people of Arizona. Like Senator Ford, I too have crossed my State and spoken personally to hundreds, perhaps thousands of concerned citizens. As a whole, my constituents do not approve of the Panama Canal treaties. However, they are willing to accept their necessity if American rights to insure open and free access to the canal are clearly spelled out. That is all my amendment intends—but that much at least is essential.

AMENDMENT NO. 83 AS FURTHER MODIFIED

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I would like to call up my amendment No. 83, as modified. I would ask, Mr. President, to further modify such amendment. A few of these changes are purely technical and drafting changes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend until the clerk states the amendment.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I have the clarified drafted change amendment that I would ask the clerk to state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The second legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI) and Mr. FORD propose amendment numbered 83, as further modified, as follows:

Before the period at the end of the resolution of ratification, insert the following:

"subject to the condition, to be included in the instrument of ratification of the Treaty to be exchanged with the Republic of Panama that, notwithstanding the provisions of Article V of any other provision of the Treaty, if the Canal is closed, or its operations are interfered with, the United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall each independently have the right to take such steps as it deems necessary, in accordance with its constitutional processes, including the use of military force in Panama, to reopen the Canal or restore the operations of the Canal, as the case may be".

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the changes are technical and draft changes. The one substantive change is to include the phase "according to its constitutional processes," after the words "to take such steps as it deems necessary" and before the words "including the use of military forces."

I send to the desk a clean copy and I thank the Chair and the clerk for reporting the same.

I also would like to ask that Senator CANNON, Senator CHILES, Senator NUNN, Senator LONG, Senator TALMADGE, Senator PAUL HATFIELD, and Senator HAYAKAWA be added as cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The purpose of this amendment is quite simple, Mr. President. It is designed to establish a precondition to American acceptance of the Neutrality Treaty. That precondition states that regardless of the reason and regardless of what any other provision of the Neutrality Treaty might say or what interpretation it might be subject to, if the Panama Canal is closed, the United States has the right to enter Panama, using whatever means are necessary, to reopen the canal. There are no conditions, no exceptions, and no limitations on this right. By the terms of the amendment, the United States interprets when such a need exists, and exercises its own judgment as to the means necessary to insure that the canal remains open and accessible.

A good deal of the discussion involving the the Panama Canal treaties has centered upon threats to the canal which might come from third parties—more specifically—the Communist countries. While this concern is certainly justified, I have been equally bothered by the possibility that internal Panamanian activities might also be a threat to the waterway, should we give it up. Labor unrest and strikes; the actions of an unfriendly government; political riots or upheavals—each of these alone or in combination might cause a closure of the canal. In February 1975, for example, there was a "sickout" which disrupted the efficient operation of the canal. Yet as I read the treaties, there does not appear to be any specific guarantee that a disruption of the canal arising out of internal Panamanian activities can be swiftly and adequately dealt with.

Although General Torrijos has brought a welcome degree of stability to Panama in recent years, it can be argued that the history of Panama is one of substantial political instability and turmoil. Under normal circumstances, the United States would not or should not contemplate intervening in the internal affairs of another nation. However, there are extremely unique and special circumstances surrounding the relationship between the United States and Panama. Since the beginning of this century, the United States has exercised de facto sovereignty over the Panama Canal Zone, and has been responsible for the defense and operation of the canal. We have maintained this control over the canal for one very simple reason: The Panama Canal is vital to the security, economic and military of the United States. This fact must be recognized in any treaty which contemplates a fundamental change in the American-Panamanian relationship.

The amendment contains a very specific reference to the use of military force in Panama. I believe these words are absolutely crucial because they establish the American right—which I am not convinced is adequately provided for either in the body of the treaty or the leadership amendment—to take military action if the case so warrants. It further makes it clear that the United States can take military action on Panamanian soil without the consent of the Panamanian Government.

The question of consent is also crucial. Since the main thrust of this amendment is directed toward situations in which the canal is closed because of internal difficulties in Panama—difficulties like a general strike, a political uprising, or other similar events, the consent of the Panamanians to take action would not make sense. If America is to have any rights at all under this treaty, it must have the right to act independently to protect the canal and to keep it open.

I believe that the question of an attack on the canal by a third party aggressor is adequately dealt with in the treaty. There seems to be little question that under such circumstances the United States does have the right to act with the Panamanians to protect and defend the canal. Thus, my concerns have centered around two problems. The first is the one expressed in the amendment now on the floor. The other is the question of a continued military presence.

We have just adopted an amendment by Senator Nunn that I had the privilege of cosponsoring. It provides that the United States and Panama may conclude an agreement providing for a continued American military presence in Panama after the year 2000. This change is important because it may be vital to both countries to provide for such presence while at the same time not disrupting the regime of neutrality that is established.

It was my desire, and the desire of Senator Nunn, to allow for a continued presence without a new treaty that would, by its very nature, call into question the regime of neutrality. It is much more appealing to have that right embodied in the very document that creates the regime of neutrality. Therefore I compliment the Senator from Georgia in his efforts to gain acceptance of the military presence reservation.

I hope the Senate will support the amendment I offer to the resolution of ratification providing for America's right to keep the canal open. I am also happy to announce that the President of the United States has endorsed this change, and has indicated that he believes it to be a constructive step in fulfilling the goals of the Neutrality Treaty.

I believe I speak for all Senators in stating that it is not our expectation that this change gives to the United States the right to interfere in the sovereign affairs of Panama. The United States will continue to respect the territorial integrity of that Nation. My amendment to the resolution of ratification is precautionary only; and it is based on the long history of American stewardship of the canal. It recognizes the very special relationship that the Panama Canal has to American security.

I certainly hope, Mr. President, that if this right is attached to the treaty it will never need to be exercised. Yet, it is important that the American people know that should the need arise, the United States has sufficient legal sanctions to act.

Mr. President, I commend this change to my colleagues and urge their support.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

APPENDIX III: STATEMENT MADE BY SENATOR EDWARD KENNEDY IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON MARCH 16, 1978

MILITARY INTERVENTION IN PANAMA

Mr. President, we have before us an amendment to the resolution of ratification of the Panama Canal Neutrality Treaty which would permit the "use of military force in Panama" by either party, "if the canal is closed or its operations interfered with."

I am opposed to this amendment. It stirs up what is already an emotional issue in Panama, without adding to rights of the United States already recognized by the treaty.

From the outset, the people of Panama—and all of Latin America—have rightly opposed U.S. military intervention in their internal affairs. That is why the negotiators, the administration, and the Senate leadership have all carefully defined and limited the expression of our military rights to the defense of the neutrality of the Panama Canal. Even the reservation on defense arrangements, adopted by the Senate yesterday, provided that Panama and the United States could jointly—I emphasize jointly—agree to America military deployments, after the year 1999, which facilitate performance of "responsibilities to maintain the regime of neutrality" over the Panama Canal.

Now we have an amendment which starkly insists on our right to use military force in Panama—always the most sensitive issue from its standpoint as a small, proud, sovereign state.

Now we have an amendment which makes no reference to the regime of neutrality which it is our responsibility to defend.

Now we have an amendment which could—but must not—be construed, instead, to permit the United States to intervene militarily on almost any pretext. A strike, a slowdown, even inefficient operation of the canal could—but must not—be used as a pretext to use force, in order to "restore the operations of the canal".

Mr. President, Panama has waited 75 years since its independence to end American occupation of its heartland. It must wait another 22 years before it achieves full control over its national territory. Now we are asking Panama to accept an amendment which has the ring of military interventionism—not just during this century, but for all time.

I recognize that acceptance of this amendment may facilitate ratification of the Panama Canal Treaties. If the amendment is accepted, I believe that our Nation is honorbound to strictly limit its interpretation and not, as General Torrijos warned in Washington last October, to allow the treaties to "become an instrument of permanent intervention" in Panama.

Fortunately, our right of military action continues to be defined by article IV of the Neutrality Treaty, as amended by the Senate.

This is our right "to act against any aggression or threat directed against the canal or against the peaceful transit of vessels through the canal".

This is our right to assure "that the canal will remain open, secure and accessible".

This is not a right to take action "against the territorial integrity or political independence of Panama", prohibited under article IV of the treaty.

This must not be a right to intervene in the Panama Canal on any pretext labeled as interference with canal operations.

With these understandings, Mr. President, we can hope to avoid continuing confrontation between Panama and the United States. Without them, we can look forward to a continuation of the unfairness and the resentment which has characterized our treaty relationship since 1903.

APPENDIX IV: COMMUNIQUÉ FROM THE MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF PANAMA, ISSUED ON MARCH 27, 1978

In our communiqué issued on 16 March, we expressed the decision of the Government not to issue any statement regarding what the Senate had agreed to in relation to the Treaty concerning the permanent neutrality and operation of the Panama Canal. We gave as the reason for such a decision the fact that the Panamanian people had approved two treaties, that is to say, the Neutrality Treaty and the Treaty on the Panama Canal. Until the Senate decides the fate of the latter, it will not have responded to the decolonization programme approved by the Panamanian people.

We also stated in the above-mentioned communiqué that the Government as a whole would study the conditions under which the Senate had given its advice and consent to the Neutrality Treaty and those that it might attach to a decision on the Treaty on the Panama Canal. We have begun that process. But inasmuch as the liberation process is a national undertaking and since, before taking any decision, each citizen must have full knowledge of all the understandings of the Senate regarding the treaties, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has deemed it appropriate to publish the text of the Senate resolution concerning the Neutrality Treaty without waiting for the official text to be delivered to us through the usual channels.

We are living a crucial moment in our history. Now, more than ever, our country demands from its sons serenity, dignity and a sense of national unity.

Panama sees its futures with the serenity of a country engaged in an irreversible process of decolonization.

We must remember that only the peoples that love freedom can be free. Panama has opted for its definitive freedom. In this process we have the decisive support of the peoples of the whole world, as was seen from the session of the Security Council held in Panama in March 1973. On that occasion the world, faced with the veto of the United States delegation, vetoed the United States for not removing the causes of the conflict engendered by the presence of a foreign Government within Panamanian territory.

We recommend to our fellow citizens to study objectively the documents published today in Spanish and English, so that they might assist the Government in taking the most patriotic decision which, as stated by General Omar Torrijos Herrera, Head of the Government of Panama, will be taken within the framework of a great national consensus.

APRIL 7, 1978.

MR. PRIME MINISTER: On March 16 of this year the Senate of the United States gave its approval by a vote of 68 to 32 to the Treaty of Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal. The Senate included, as part of the referenced treaty, the statement of understanding reached between ourselves and President Carter on October 14, 1977.

This statement of understanding gave to both countries the ability to defend the canal against threats and aggressions to the canal including (threats) to the peaceful transit of vessels through the canal. The referenced statement, incorporated by the Senate in the Neutrality Treaty with our previous assent, expressed the following: (there follows excerpt of leadership amendment to article IV starting with "this does not mean, nor shall it be interpreted . .)

The principles contained in the statement described above derive from the mutual recognition of the existence of generally accepted norms of international law which are effectively consecrated in multilateral international agreements. Examples which can be cited are the charter of the United Nations (article II, paragraph 4); The charter of the organization of American States (article XVIII) and the interAmerican treaty of reciprocal assistance (article I). Despite the referenced statement of understanding and the recognized principles of international law, the document of ratification which states the following: (DeConcini reservation quoted in full). To determine the meaning (Alcance) of this amendment it is sufficient, in our judgment to transcribe the reasons which Senator DeConcini made in support of his proposals (here followed extensive extracts from Senator DeConcini's remarks in the Senate of March 16). Because of the support which your people and government have given to the Panamanian cause and because in accordance with Article VII of the Neutrality Treaty Panama and the United States are open for adherence by all the states of the world to the objectives of said Treaty, we have considered it our duty to inform you of this situation about which we have already publicly expressed our deep concern.

Solidarity,

OMAR TORRIJOS HERRERA.

STATEMENT FROM PANAMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTRY

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs informs that the decision of the Panamanian Government as expressed through the letter sent by General Torrijos to President Carter and the Communique issued by this Ministry to the effect of not making statements regarding the approval or rejection of the Treaties together with this amendment reservations and understanding continues to be the official position of the Panamanian Government until the United States Senate finishes the discussions and votes on the second Treaty regarding the Panama Canal.

The present statement is made because our Government believes that the Panamanian people voted on two Treaties and not just one. It is also made to deny news to the effect that our Government has already taken an official position regarding the approval or rejection of the Neutrality Treaty. Said information built on speculation have been spread abroad by foreign news services with the purpose of confusing and distorting the firm position of the Panamanian Government on this important issue.

APRIL 7, 1978.

SPECIAL ORDERS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Madam President, are there orders for the recognition of Senators?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Virginia (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.) is recognized, as in legislative session, for not to exceed 15 minutes.

COSTLY ATTRITION IN OUR ARMED FORCES

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Madam President, in recent months the Congress has been reviewing the effectiveness, the cost and the long-term viability of the All-Volunteer Force.

There have been hearings in the House and the Senate and a number of studies both within and outside of the Government have been done on various aspects of the All-Volunteer Force.

One factor common to all of these endeavors is the conclusion that the All-Volunteer Force has been costly. Estimates vary considerably, but all of them put the figure in the billions of dollars.

Just last month the General Accounting Office released a study which addressed the matter of additional defense costs caused by the All-Volunteer Force.

That study concluded that cost increases attributable to the All-Volunteer Force between fiscal years 1971 and 1977 were approximately $18.5 billion.

The GAO report admitted that this figure did not represent a complete assessment of the costs of the All-Volunteer Force, because some costs clearly associated with the volunteer force were not included in their estimates.

One important cost which has not yet been adequately considered is the dramatic rise in premature separations from the Armed Forces which has accompanied the creation of the All-Volunteer Force.

Although there has always been a certain irreducible amount of attrition from the military, attrition in the first term of military service has risen substantially with the All-Volunteer Force. From a level of 25 percent just 5 years ago attrition has now reached approximately 40 percent.

To put it simply, out of every 100 individuals who joined the Armed Forces, 40 left the service prior to completion of their tour of duty.

This is in direct contrast to what was predicted by the Gates Commission when that Presidential Commission recommended a shift to the All-Volunteer Force.

In its 1970 Report, the Gates Commission laid much stress in the belief that the attrition and turnover rate would be much less under an all-volunteer professional force than for the draft. This was a major reason it recommended the All-Volunteer Force.

However, the opposite has come about. Attrition has increased substantially rather than decreasing.

In fiscal year 1977, enlisted personnel attrition was in excess of 130,000 for the Army alone.

This is a disturbing figure, but it is made more disturbing when one considers the fact that the vast majority of those individuals left the service, because of failure to meet minimum behavior or performance standards.

The costs to our Nation of this massive attrition cannot help but be severe.

Such a high rate of attrition is costly for many reasons.

First, in terms of recruiting, training, and maintenance costs, the Armed Forces are spending a great deal of money for little if any return.

The average recruiting cost for obtaining each recruit is estimated to be about $1,250, but that is only the average. It is estimated that the Army spends well in excess of $5,000 per person for some of the most difficult to persuade candidates for military service.

To this cost must be added the cost of transporting, feeding, housing, training, and paying the recruit.

There are presently no estimates available for the total budgetary cost of this attrition but one can be sure it is very high.

Veterans' benefits are an additional cost that must be considered.

After serving 6 months and 1 day of active duty a serviceman can qualify for veterans' benefits assuming his discharge from service is not punitive.

Of the five types of discharge, honorable, general, undesirable, bad conduct, and dishonorable, only the undesirable, bad conduct and dishonorable discharge are considered punitive, and an individual has to be convicted by courts martial to be awarded a punitive discharge without his consent.

In other words, if an individual cannot be convicted by courts martial, he will receive an honorable or general discharge regardless of how poor his performance is. In either case that individual stands a very good chance of receiving veterans' benefits.

Among those benefits are disability compensation, hospitalization, nursing home care, alcohol and drug treatment, outpatient medical and dental care, vocational rehabilitation, home loans, educational assistance, and burial expenses.

Also, there are non-VA benefits such as unemployment compensation, reemployment rights, job counseling, and employment placement which a former servicemember may use for various periods of time.

There are presently no estimates of the cost to the taxpayer of veterans and other benefits for those who do not complete their first term of service.

Additional, although intangible, costs are also incurred as a result of the massive attrition rates of the All-Volunteer Force.

First, there is the turbulence caused by the high turnover of personnel and its resultant effect on efficiency and combat readiness.

Then there is the impact on morale caused by the number of adverse separations and the circumstances which surrounded each case.

Also, there is a substantial social cost incurred by premature separations from the armed services. There is the problem of what has been called the revolving door where thousands and thousands of young people who are taken into the Armed Forces only to return to society labeled as rejects.

There is also the problem of a weakend sense of responsibilities and commitment caused by individuals who seek an early discharge because they do not want to live up to the commitment they made when they signed that contract and were sworn in.

An additional intangible cost is the harmful impact on future recruiting and on the public's perception of the military.

All in all, these costs, both budgetary and intangible, are clearly undesirable and they are bound to be very large.

I do not claim to know if the attrition problem is a direct result of instituting the All-Volunteer Force or just a coincidental event. However, I do know that insufficient attention has been paid to the matter by the Congress and by the Department of Defense.

I have recently requested the General Accounting Office to look into the budgetary costs of first-term attrition and I am hopeful that a complete review of this matter will be helpful to the Congress in determining the future of our Armed Forces.

I ask unanimous consent that a chart containing attrition and tour completion data provided by the Department of Defense at my request be placed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. The chart also shows that of every 100 enlistees, less than 20 reenlist.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

4-YR ATTRITION, TOUR COMPLETION, AND RETENTION EXPERIENCE (ACTUAL AND PROJECTED) OF NONPRIOR SERVICEMEN ENLISTING DURING FISCAL YEAR 1974

[Rates per hundred accessions]

Military service	Entry group	Attrition prior to tour completion: Total	Attrition prior to tour completion: Adverse reasons [1]	Completion of tour of active duty: Total	Completion of tour of active duty: Reenlistment eligible	Retained after 4 yr of active duty [2]
Army	100	42	(32)	58	(48)	16
Navy	100	39	(26)	61	(54)	19
Marine Corps	100	41	(26)	59	(45)	14
Air Force	100	37	(25)	63	(57)	23
Projections for fiscal year 1978 male accessions:
Army	100	32	(23)	68	(56)	19
Navy	100	37	(24)	63	(56)	19
Marine Corps	100	34	(17)	66	(50)	14
Air Force	100	33	(22)	67	(61)	24

[1] Attrition for failure to meet minimum behavior or performance standards.

[2] Includes men enlisting initially for 6 yr of active service (more common for Air Force and Navy.)

HEW MISMANAGEMENT OF FUNDS

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Madam President, the Inspector General of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare reported this week that HEW last year misspent, through waste, mismanagement, and fraud, approximately $7 billion. To me, Madam President, this is appalling. That Department, according to its own Inspector General, misspent, through waste, mismanagement, and fraud, approximately $7 billion of American tax funds.

To give some indication as to the magnitude of that figure I point out that it takes the combined Federal income taxes of 5 million households, each earning $15,000, to bring into the Federal Government $7 billion of tax revenue.

I point out also that that figure of $7 billion is double the amount of Federal income taxes paid by all of the people of the State of Virginia, a State with a population of more than 5 million persons.

Madam President, I think the Congress and the executive department have a deep obligation to handle the tax funds of the American people as a public trust. I submit that tax moneys of the American people are not being handled as a public trust when one department, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, misspends, through waste, mismanagement, and fraud, $7 billion of tax money which has been taken out of the pockets of the American working men and women.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is seeking a 13-percent increase in the new budget over the amount that was appropriated to HEW last year. I hope the Congress will not approve an increase until the Congress requires from HEW an accounting of that $7 billion that was misspent through waste, mismanagement, and fraud, and until the Congress takes steps to demand that such mismanagement and such waste of American tax dollars be stopped.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am glad to yield to my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. MORGAN. I was interested in the amount of money that the distinguished Senator indicated was wasted by HEW. I am under the impression that that is twice as much income tax as is paid by all individuals in my home State of North Carolina. I wonder, if the Senator has those figures, if that is correct.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I might say it is more than double the amount of all the income taxes paid by all of the people of the great State of North Carolina.

The last available figures show that the total income tax paid by the residents of North Carolina totaled $2,371,474,000. I might say in that connection, too, that it would take the combined income taxes of all the people of 15 different States to equal that figure of $7 billion.

Mr. MORGAN. It is unthinkable that we should waste in one department that kind of money. I thank the distinguished Senator for bringing that to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Let me associate myself——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Virginia has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER

Under the previous order, the Senator from North Carolina is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. Madam President, at this time I am glad to yield a few moments to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Virginia. At this very moment, the Budget Committee is meeting on the HEW function. I understand there is not any great reduction in that budget, though I think the Senator from Virginia has made an excellent case on why there should be. I hope I will have the opportunity to present the facts, as presented to us by the distinguished Senator from Virginia, to that committee if not later this afternoon, then on Monday.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I thank the Senator from Kansas. I might say that those figures are not figures developed by the Senator from Virginia; that is, the amount of money misspent by HEW. Those figures were developed by the Inspector General of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare himself. I thank the Senator from Kansas for his contribution.

Mr. MORGAN. Madam President, in that connection, let me say that I do not believe there is any issue that concerns the people of my State more than waste in Government and more than deficit spending or financing by the Federal Government. I know that a good many people say, and I have said it on many occasions, that only the Congress of the United States can control that. The longer I stay in the Government, the more convinced I become that Congress cannot control it, nor can the Executive, the President, control it until such time as we find some way to provide for reorganization of the civil service program to the extent that this President or a future President can make some changes.

I have been advised that out of 2,200 employees in the Office of Management and Budget, the department that serves as the President's right arm, the Department that he must rely upon to help him put forth his new ideas, the President was only able to bring in about 17 of his own people. That disturbs me.

Second, I would like to say to the Senator and to my colleagues that I am not sure we can ever balance the budget until the people decide they want the budget balanced. I have been amazed that, in almost every given area where the President recommended reductions in order to hold the budget down, I have had well organized groups or movements come in to see me for each given area who said, "Please do not cut this area; this is so vital." Each city and each county in my State—not all of them, but most of them—are constantly seeking Federal grants with the idea that if we do not get it, someone else is. That, unfortunately, is true.

There has to be, I believe, a grassroots movement back home if we in Congress are to stop deficit financing in this country.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I think the Senator has made a very important point. The public must make its wishes known in this regard. The public must become aroused at the tremendous waste and extravagance in Government. If and when the public does become aroused, then I think we shall get some results from Congress.

I might make one suggestion to Secretary Califano, which would not require any legislation or anything else. I note that he has gone to the State of North Carolina, just as he has to the State of Virginia and just as he has to many other States, and spent a great deal of time telling the people of North Carolina how to run the education systems, and the people of Virginia how to run our schools and colleges, and telling the individuals of our country what they should do about their own personal living habits. He has enough of a problem, as I see it, right in HEW. If he would devote his time and attention to eliminating the waste and extravagance and the mismanagement and the fraud in his own Department, then he would be serving the interests of the people of our Nation far better than going around to every State in the Union trying to dictate how those States should handle their own educational problems.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senator is exactly correct. I think that that is the only way that we are going to eliminate it. I think that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare ought to be more forceful in that context.

I certainly cannot condone what he is doing to higher education in North Carolina. I say with a great deal of pride that we have one of the finest systems of higher education and public education in the country. The New York Times and the Washington Star—papers and periodicals that certainly cannot be labeled as instruments of the segregation movement—have condemned his actions with regard to our higher educational system.

But I have to say again that he is not alone in it. I happen to have a friend who was standing in his press conference when he announced that he was going to cut off funds for the university system in North Carolina. My friend was standing in back of three of the so-called middle echelon HEW employees. During his press conference, they were overheard to be voicing their displeasure at the Secretary's leniency with the education system. So I suspect he has some people in his agency that he cannot deal with until we do something about this civil service system that will not permit a person to be dismissed.

When you have 2 million Federal employees and only 226 were dismissed for incompetence in one year, that fact alone ought to tell us something.

While I am certainly not coming to the defense of Secretary Califano, who, I think, has gone outside his area of responsibility in some areas, I suspect he has an unmanageable bureaucracy over there and I doubt that he or anyone else can manage it until we in Congress give him some tools to do it with.

I thank my distinguished colleague for allowing me to engage in a colloquy with him, because I think it is something the people are interested in.

S. 2856—UNIFORMED SERVICES SURVIVOR BENEFIT PLAN AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1978

Mr. MORGAN. Madam President, I did not come here this morning to discuss fiscal responsibility, although I think it is very important. I did come to introduce a bill which I send to the desk at this time. I am introducing this piece of legislation which I think has long been needed and which will, in my opinion, rectify an inequity that exists in the reserve components of our armed forces.

Let me say that when I am talking about Reserve components, I am also talking about the National Guard, which is not thought by many to be a part of the reserve components. It surely is.

My bill, will provide benefits for the survivors of those Reservists or National Guardsmen who have served their nation faithfully for at least 20 years in peace, and in war, yet met with an untimely death short of age 60. As you may know, active duty personnel who retire under title 10, United States Code—chapters 63 and 65—are enrolled automatically in a survivor benefit plan (or SBP)—if the retiree is married or has a dependent child. Unlike his active duty counterpart, the Guard or Reserve member who has served 20 years or more retirement creditable years receives no benefits unless, and until, he reaches age 60. While there are no exact statistics concerning the numbers of members and former members of Reserve components who have died after completing 20 years of qualifying service but before attaining age 60, DOD estimates that 1,300 individuals in this category will die each year.

I am positive that many Senators have heard from constituents who have faced this tragic situation. The injustice in this situation should be clear to all: During his 20 years of retirement creditable service a reservist spends in excess of 240 weekends, and 300 days away from his family, much of it in the case of many reservists, without any pay or monetary compensation at all. Additionally, service schools and correspondence courses and emergency service all cut into the time he is able to be with his wife and children. In fact we could not have an effective National Guard and Reserve without the approval and support of many wives. They have contributed substantially to their husbands' attainment of 20 plus retirement creditable years and yet, under present law, are precluded from benefit eligibility by their husbands' deaths.

Though I have phrased my examples in masculine terms, it is imperative that the survivors of female reservists likewise receive this protection. I have received substantial information that a sizable part of the Reserve community believes that a moral obligation on the part of the Federal Government does exist. Similar legislative proposals have been introduced in both Houses in the 93d, 94th, and 95th Congress, but none so far have resulted in definitive actior. to resolve this inequity. However, the House Armed Services Committee, Subcommittee on Military Compensation, held hearings last fall, and Congressman NICHOLS, subcommittee chairman, introduced a bill which is similar in purpose, H.R. 10438, on January 19, 1978.

Another important point to consider is that the time when patriotic and civic pride alone were a sufficient motivation for the citizen-soldier has apparently passed. I am not being critical of the motivation of todays' reservists; on the contrary, being a member of a Reserve component today is a time-consuming, demanding effort which is desperately needed by our country. However, our Nations' inflation rate has continued to the point where insurance, retired pay, and other benefits have become major recruiting and retention incentives. As the reliance on our Reserve Forces increases, and the Reserve components continue to be an integral part of our total force, the depletion of our military Reserve strength becomes a potentially dangerous threat to our national security. Combat readiness depends upon an effective Reserve retention program. Thus, I believe that this bill, S. 2856, will provide an important incentive to those reservists reaching a career decision point by providing a measure of financial security for their survivors.

Public Law 93–289 offered some relief to reservists in this category by permitting the purchase of a $20,000 serviceman's group life insurance policy at a low premium. However, it does not provide the continuing monthly support which my bill would offer.

One very important feature of S. 2856 is that it provides survivor benefits coverage for reservists prior to age 60—at no additional cost to the Government. This is accomplished by our actuarially sound plan with the cost of this survivor benefit plan absorbed by the Reserve participants by amounts withheld from their retired pay. In other words, those who elect any of the survivor benefit plan options and survive pay a premium in the form of reduced annuity sufficient to finance the annuity payment to survivors of those who elect one of these options and die prior to age 60. Thus, this bill would not cause an increase in Federal budgetary requirements, except for the initial funding. There would be an immediate requirement for Congress to appropriate funds for the early years, because it would be necessary to fund the payment of those survivor monthly annuities which began immediately. The first year's cost would be approximately $2 to $3 million and that amount would grow to a maximum of approximately $10.7 million, and then would decrease until the initial funding had been recouped.

I would like to briefly outline the primary features of this bill:

First. As I indicated, this bill provides survivor protection to the spouse and/or children, or persons with insurable interests, for reservists who have completed 20 years of satisfactory Federal service, but who have not reached age 60.

Second. Each reservist would be required to make an election upon attaining the required 20 years of retirement creditable service: Either, first, no change from the current SBP (meaning no election until age 60); or second, an actuarially reduced benefit deferred until the time the retiree would have attained age 60, if he had lived); or third, an actuarially reduced benefit starting immediately upon the death of the retiree (both of these new options contain a "cost" to the retiree in the form of reduced retirement benefits).

Third. Another important feature of this bill is the "lock-in" provision, whereby, upon selection of an option, the election is generally irrevocable. The locked-in reduced retired pay can be exchanged for a further actuarially reduced retired pay to accommodate a new spouse, but the member is otherwise locked in even if later he has no eligible spouse beneficiary.

Fourth. A member having no spouse, or dependent child, at the time of attaining 20 retirement creditable years would have 1 year from the date of a later marriage to elect to participate in the SBP.

Fifth. The survivor would also be entitled to the other benefits normally associated with retirement—that is, medical and dental care, and commissary and exchange privileges—commencing at the time the member would have reached age 60, if he had lived.

Sixth. To cover the anticipated cost of administering the program and other associated costs, such as, providing medical and dental care for eligible dependent survivors the actuarially reduced survivor benefit, or retired pay, would be further reduced by one-half of 1 percent.

Seventh. The last provision of the bill is that these survivor benefits are not intended to be retroactive, in that those survivors of eligible persons who die prior to enactment of this bill would not become eligible for survivor benefits; but, we can expect many applications from reservists who have already achieved 20 retirement qualifying years and have not yet reached the entitlement age of 60.

I apologize for my somewhat lengthy discussion of the major features of this bill; however, the issue is a very important one which needs to be fully appreciated by each Member of Congress.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2856

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Uniformed Services Survivor Benefit Plan Amendment Act of 1978".

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (2) of section 1447 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) 'Base amount' means—

"(A) the amount of monthly retired pay to which a person—

"(i) was entitled when such person became eligible for that pay;

"(ii) later became entitled by being advanced on the retired list, advanced on the reserve list, performing active duty, accumulating additional points for purposes of section 1333 of this title, or being transferred from the temporary disability retired list to the permanent disability retired list; or

"(iii) would have become entitled under chapter 67 of this title had such person, prior to his death, attained 60 years of age and made timely application for such pay; or

"(B) any amount less than that described by clause (A) designated by such person on or before the first day for which such person became eligible for retired or retainer pay, but not less than $300, unless the amount of retired pay or retainer pay to which a person is or would become entitled is less than $300.".

(b) Section 1447 of such title is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) 'Retired or retainer pay' means the amount of monthly retired or retainer pay described in subclause (i), (ii), or (iii), as appropriate, of paragraph (2)(A) of this section.

"(7) 'Eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title' means, in the case of any person, a person who has completed the years of service required for eligibility for retired pay under chapter 67 of this title but has not, because of age, become eligible for retired pay under such chapter.".

SEC. 3. (a) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 1448 of title 10, United States Code, are amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the Plan applies to (A) any person entitled to retired or retainer pay, and (B) any person eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title

"(2) Except in the case of a person retired or eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title, the Plan automatically applies to a person who is married or has a dependent child when such person becomes entitled to retired pay unless such person elects not to participate in the Plan before the first day for which such person is eligible for that pay.

"(3) In any case in which a person who is married elects not to participate in the Plan at the maximum level or elects to provide an annuity for a dependent child but not for such person's spouse, such person's spouse shall be notified of the decision.

"(4) An election by any person not to participate in the Plan is irrevocable if not revoked by such person before the date on which such person first becomes entitled to retired or retainer pay.

"(b)(1) A person who is not married when such person becomes entitled to retired or retainer pay but who subsequently marries, or acquires a dependent child, may elect to participate in the Plan if the election is made in writing, signed by the person, and received by the Secretary concerned within one year after the date of the marriage or the date of the acquisition of the dependent child, as the case may be.

"(2) A person who is not married when such person becomes eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title but who marries, or acquires a dependent child after such person becomes eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title, may elect to participate in the Plan if the election is made in writing, signed by the person, and received by the Secretary concerned at any time prior to the date on which such person becomes eligible for retired pay under such chapter.

"(3) An election made under paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection may not be revoked and is effective as of the first day of the month after the election is received by the Secretary concerned.".

(b) Subsection (d) of such section is amended by inserting "or eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title," after "been granted that pay,".

(c) Such section is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"(e)(1) Whenever the Secretary concerned notifies any person under section 1331(d) of this title that such person has completed the years of service required for eligibility for retired pay under chapter 67 of this title, the Secretary concerned shall also notify such person of his right to participate in the Plan and of the participation options prescribed in paragraph (2) of this subsection available to such person.

"(2) Within 90 days after receipt of the notice described in paragraph (1) of this subsection by any person, such person must notify the Secretary concerned in writing whether such person elects—

"(A) not to participate in the Plan;

"(B) to defer the decision on participation in the Plan until a later date;

"(C) to participate in the Plan under an arrangement which will provide for the payment of an actuarially reduced annuity to the survivor of such person, payable as of the first day after the death of such person; or

"(D) to participate in the Plan under an arrangement which will provide for the payment of an actuarially reduced annuity to the survivor of such person, payable (i) as of the first day on which such person would have become eligible for retired pay (had he lived) if such person dies before he becomes eligible for retired pay, or (ii) as of the first day after the death of such person if such person dies after he becomes entitled to retired pay.

A person who fails to make an election in writing within the 90 day period prescribed in the first sentence of this paragraph shall be deemed to have elected to defer his decision regarding participation in the Plan as provided in clause (B) of such sentence. Except as provided in subsection (b)(1) of this section, a person who elects under clause (B) of the first sentence of this subsection to defer his decision on participation in the Plan until a later date may not participate in the Plan unless he notifies the Secretary concerned in writing of his election to participate (under clause (C) or (D) of this paragraph) and such notice is received by the Secretary concerned on or before the date on which such person becomes eligible for retired pay.

"(3) The Secretary concerned shall pay an actuarially reduced annuity to the beneficiary, described in section 1450 of this title, of any person who elects to participate in the Plan under clause (C) or (D) of paragraph (1). Such annuity shall be paid in an amount determined under section 1451 of this title.".

SEC. 4. (a) Subsection (a) of section 1450 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) A monthly annuity in an amount determined under section 1451 of this title shall be paid to—

"(A) the eligible widow or widower;

"(B) the surviving dependent children in equal shares, if the eligible widow or widower is dead, or otherwise becomes ineligible under this section;

"(C) the dependent children in equal shares if the person to whom section 1448 of this title applies elected to provide an annuity for dependent children but not for the spouse; or

"(D) the natural person designated under section 1448(b) of this title at the time the person to whom section 1448 applies becomes entitled to retired or retainer pay or eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title, if there is no eligible beneficiary under clause (A) or (B).

"(2) The monthly annuity payable to any beneficiary under this subchapter will be paid effective as of the first day after the death of a person to whom section 1448 of this title applies except that in the case of a person who elected to participate in the Plan on the basis of section 1448(e)(2)(D) of this title and who died before attaining the age at which he would become eligible for retired pay under chapter 67 of this title, the monthly annuity will be paid as of the date such person would have become eligible for retired pay under such chapter had he not died.".

(b) The first sentence of subsection (f) of such section is amended by striking out "(a)(4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a)(1)(D)".

SEC. 5. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 1451 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows: "If the widow or widower is under 62 years of age or there is a dependent child, the monthly annuity payable under section 1450 of this title to the widow, widower, or dependent child shall be—

"(1) an amount equal to 55 percent of the base amount in the case of the widow, widower, or dependent child of a person who was entitled to retired or retainer pay at the time of such person's death, or

"(2) an amount equal to such percentage of the base amount as shall be prescribed in regulations issued by the Secretary of Defense in the case of the widow, widower, or dependent child of a person who was eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title at the time of such person's death.

The percentage of the base amount to which any widow, widower, or dependent child will be entitled under clause (2) shall be an actuarially sound percentage determined by the Secretary of Defense on the basis of age of the person making the election at the time the election to participate in the Plan is made, the difference in age between the person making the election and the designated beneficiary, and specified group annuity tables.".

(b) Subsection (b) of such section is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The amount of the monthly annuity payable to any beneficiary under section 1450(a)(1)(D) of this title shall be an amount—

"(1) equal to 55 percent of the retired or retainer pay of the person who elected to provide the annuity after the reduction in that retired or retainer pay is made in accordance with section 1452(c) of this title; or

"(2) an amount equal to such percentage of the base amount, after the reduction in that base amount is made in accordance with section 1452(c) of this title, as shall be prescribed in regulations issued by the Secretary of Defense in the case of the beneficiary of a person who was eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title at the time of such person's death.

The percentage of the base amount to which any beneficiary will be entitled under clause (2) shall be an actuarially sound percentage determined by the Secretary of Defense on the basis of the same criteria prescribed in the second sentence of subsection (a) of this section."

SEC. 6. (a) Subsection (a) of section 1452 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection and in subsection (b), the retired or retainer pay of a person to whom section 1448 of this title applies who has a spouse or who has a spouse and a dependent child, and who has not elected to provide an annuity to a person designated by him under section 1450(a)(1)(D) of this title, or who had elected to provide such an annuity to such a person but has changed his election in favor of his spouse under section 1450(f) of this title, shall be reduced each month by an amount equal to 2½ percent of the first $300 of the base amount plus 10 percent of the remainder of the base amount.

"(2) In the case of a person who is eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title and elects to participate in the Plan under section 1447(e)(1)(C) or (D) of this title before he becomes entitled to retired pay under such chapter, the retired pay of such person shall be reduced by such an amount as the Secretary of Defense shall determine to be actuarially sound.

"(3) As long as there is an eligible spouse and a dependent child, the amount of the reduction under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be increased by an amount prescribed under regulations issued by the Secretary of Defense.

"(4) The reduction in retired or retainer pay prescribed in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not be applicable during any month in which there is no eligible spouse beneficiary.

"(5) A reduction in the retired or retainer pay prescribed by the Secretary of Defense under paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be applicable in the case of a person even if there is no spouse beneficiary. In the event that any such person who has no spouse beneficiary remarries, such person may elect to have his retired or retainer pay further reduced as prescribed in regulations issued by the Secretary of Defense and name his new spouse as beneficiary.".

(b) Subsection (c) of such section is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the retired or retainer pay of a person who has elected to provide an annuity to an individual designated by him under section 1450(a)(1)(D) of this title shall be reduced by an amount equal to 10 percent plus 5 percent for each full 5 years the individual so designated is younger than such person, but the total reduction may not exceed an amount equal to 40 percent of the retired or retainer pay.

"(2) In the case of a person eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title, the retired pay of such person shall be reduced by such amount as the Secretary of Defense shall determine to be actuarially sound.

"(3) The reduction in retired or retainer pay provided for under paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection shall continue during the lifetime of the person designated under section 1450(a)(1)(D) of this title or until the person who made the election changes his selection under section 1450(f).".

SEC. 7. Clause (1) of section 1455 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting "or eligible for retirement under chapter 67 of this title" after "retainer pay".

SEC. 8. (a) Section 1076 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by (1) redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively, and (2) adding after subsection (b) a new subsection (c) as follows:

"(c) Under joint regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, a dependent of a member or former member who—

"(1) is deceased,

"(2) had, prior to his death, completed the years of service required for eligibility for retired pay under chapter 67 of this title but had not, because of age, become entitled to such pay, and

"(3) had elected, prior to death, to participate in the Survivor Benefit Plan provided for under subchapter II of chapter 73 of this title, may, upon request, on or after the date on which such member or former member would have become entitled to retired pay under chapter 67 of this title had such member or former member attained 60 years of age and made timely application for such retired pay, be given the medical and dental care prescribed in section 1077 of this title in facilities of the uniformed services, subject to the availability of space and facilities and the capabilities of the medical and dental staff.".

(b) Section 1086(c)(1) of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Persons covered by sections 1074(b) and 1076 (b) and (c) of this title, except persons covered by section 1072(2)(F) of this title.".

(c) The first sentence of section 1087 of such title is amended by inserting "and (c)" after "1076(b)".

SEC. 9. The amendments made by this Act shall become effective on the date of enactment except that in the case of any person who completed the years of service required for eligibility for retired pay under chapter 67 of title 10, United States Code, prior to the date of enactment of this Act, and who did not, prior to such date, become entitled to retired pay under such chapter because of age, shall have 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act to make an election under section 1448(e)(2) of title 10, United States Code, as added by this Act, or 90 days after the date such person is officially notified of his right to participate in the Survivor Benefit Plan provided for under subchapter II of chapter 73 of such title, whichever date is later.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STEVENS. Madam President, I commend the Senator as one who has been involved with retirement activities, particularly pertaining to the National Guard and other areas of Federal employment. It sounds to me like he has done an exceedingly good job in researching this particular area and proposing a bill which would not have a financial impact on the Treasury of the United States, but at the same time provides protection for people in the National Guard who need an additional amount of protection from the Federal statute.

I wonder if the Senator would permit me to cosponsor his legislation?

Mr. MORGAN. I would be delighted. I thank the Senator for his remarks.

I might say additionally that while I do not have the right to announce that the Department of Defense supports my bill, I will say that we have cleared it with every department of the Department of Defense and I fully expect the Department support.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. Madam President, I yield the remainder of my time to the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

Mr. STEVENS. Would the Senator add my name to the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I am delighted to, and I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

Mr. DOLE. May I be recognized in the morning business?

Mr. MORGAN. Madam President, during morning business, I ask unanimous consent that speeches be limited to not more than 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Chair.

PANAMANIAN OBJECTIONS SHOW TREATIES SHOULD BE RECONSIDERED

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, the DeConcini reservation adopted by the Senate on March 16 contained the very important guarantee that:

> If the Canal is closed, or its operations are interfered with, the United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall each independently have the right to take such steps as it deems necessary, in accordance with its constitutional processes, including the use of military force in Panama, to reopen the Canal or restore the operations of the Canal, as the case may be.

It was essentially the same as a treaty amendment I had offered a few days before, which was rejected after the Senate leadership argued that the guarantee was already "understood" in the treaties, and that any such amendment was out of the question.

A few days afterwards, a leading Government-controlled newspaper in Panama, Critica, suggested that the DeConcini reservation was unacceptable.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the quote from that article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> 3. Government-controlled Critica, often a sounding board for Government of Panama policy, spoke clearly in its editorial March 28 on the constitutional requirement for a new plebiscite in Panama. According to Critica: "We want to be absolutely clear with regard to the reservations, understandings and amendments to the treaty which the American Senate has just approved. We consider that in the light of our constitutional statute which provided for a plebiscite to approve or disapprove the Torrijos-Carter treaties, any additions to those treaties made by the American Senate will have to be submitted Toha Plebiscite in Panama.
>
> 4. Critica continues: "Some of those amendments are acceptable, such as the one agreed to by President Carter and General Torrijos before the confirming plebiscite. But there is one, because it affects the sole responsibility of Panama in the operation of the Canal after the year 2000, that cannot be accepted and even more so when the armed intervention of the United States is caused by the temporary closing of the canal, something which has happened more than once to its current 'owners.'"

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, General Torrijos has said as much in letters to the United Nations, the Organization of American States, and to European leaders.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks a copy of that letter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, it shows, in effect, that Panama is not prepared to abide by this critical guarantee, which is so important to future American security interests. And it shows that there is no consensus, or agreement between our two governments on important aspects of these treaties.

The Torrijos government could take the initiative to reject the Neutrality Treaty, because of the Deconcini reservation, although I doubt it. But even when the Torrijos government formally ratifies the treaty, it seems clear to this Senator that these guarantees will not be honored in practice. If both popular opinion and government sentiment are opposed to the reservation, we cannot depend upon its being honored at the crucial moment when it is most needed.

This is one reason why the treaties should be rejected by the Senate now, and negotiations begun anew.

DEMONSTRATIONS TODAY

It is my understanding that there will be large demonstrations in Panama today against these treaties—particularly against the Deconcini reservation to the Neutrality Treaty. That reservation is very important to U.S. security. But many Panamanian people do not like it. If another plebiscite were held in Panama today, it might well be rejected.

Consequently, I do not think we can expect that the Panamanian people will strictly observe, or readily consent to our defense rights during the next 22 years, even if the Panama Government ratifies the treaties. That is what concerns me most.

ATTEMPT TO CONCEAL TREATY PROVISIONS

The Panama Government recognizes the popular dissatisfaction with the Neutrality Treaty in Panama, as it was passed by the Senate on March 16. That is why General Torrijos tried to keep the facts from his people as long as possible. The final version of the Neutrality Treaty, with our Senate modifications, was not publically disseminated in Panama until March 27, fully 11 days after we approved the treaty, and then only under pressure by local groups.

The DeConcini reservation was printed incorrectly the first time, giving it a less "threatening" appearance.

Opening day for Panamanian universities has been delayed by the government for several weeks, until April 17, to keep a lid on the extremely volatile situation. Student activists in Panama are, of course, among the leading treaty opponents.

TYPE OF TREATY MODIFICATION IS IMPORTANT

The objections to the DeConcini reservation show just how vital it is that we make all Senate modifications by concrete treaty changes, rather than by "understandings." Only amendments make textual changes in the treaties. They may require a new plebiscite in Panama, but that at least puts the Panamanian people on record as supporting or opposing the changes.

There are fundamental hazards in putting our trust in sideline "understandings" which might be quietly accepted by the Torrijos government today, but disavowed and ignored by the Panamanian people later on, perhaps under a different government.

The Senate majority and minority leaders, along with the floor managers of this treaty, assured us only last month that this and other treaty modifications were "unnecessary" because U.S. defense rights were already "understood." They said it was "redundant" to spell out those rights because President Carter and General Torrijos already had implicit understandings along these lines.

Well, the loud outcry and strenuous objections of the Panamanian people—and of General Torrijos—show that these guarantees were not understood. Either General Torrijos tried to pull a fast one on his own people, or else on us.

Therefore, Madam President, I feel we should reject these treaties now. There has been no consensus—no agreement—between Panama and the United States on vital defense aspects. It is time to go back to the negotiating table and discuss these matters in more detail.

EXHIBIT 1

APRIL 7, 1978.

MR. PRIME MINISTER: On March 16 of this year the Senate of the United States gave its approval by a vote of 68 to 32 to the Treaty of Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal. The Senate included, as part of the referenced treaty, the statement of understanding reached between ourselves and President Carter on October 14, 1977.

This statement of understanding gave to both countries the ability to defend the canal against threats and aggressions to the canal including (threats) to the peaceful transit of vessels through the canal. The referenced statement, incorporated by the Senate in the Neutrality Treaty with our previous assent, expressed the following: (there follows excerpt of leadership amendment to article IV starting with "this does not mean, nor shall it be interpreted . . .")

The principles contained in the statement described above derive from the mutual recognition of the existence of generally accepted norms of international law which are effectively consecrated in multilateral international agreements. Examples which can be cited are the charter of the United Nations (article II, paragraph 4); The charter of the organization of American States (article XVIII) and the interamerican treaty of reciprocal assistance (article I). Despite the referenced statement of understanding and the recognized principles of international law, the document of ratification which states the following: (DeConcini reservation quoted in full). To determine the meaning (Alcance) of this amendment it is sufficient, in our judgment to transcribe the reasons which Senator DeConcini made in support of his proposals (here followed extensive extracts from Senator DeConcini's remarks in the Senate of March 16). Because of the support which your people and government have given to the Panamanian cause and because in accordance with Article VII of the Neutrality Treaty Panama and the United States are open for adherence by all the states of the world to the objectives of said Treaty, we have considered it our duty to inform you of this situation about which we have already publicly expressed our deep concern.

Solidarity,

OMAR TORRIJOS HERRERA.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON FARM AMENDMENTS OF 1978

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, at 9 o'clock on Monday morning, the Senate will consider the conference report on the compromise farm bill.

The Senator from Kansas is not surprised but is somewhat taken aback by the strenuous effort that the White House and the administration generally are making to defeat this compromise, which has the support of Democrats and Republicans, as well as the great majority of the farm leaders and farmers across this Nation. It seems to me a clear effort by the administration to do as it has indicated in the past, and that is to do nothing for the American farmer.

Now our offices are being flooded with statements by the distinguished chairman of our Budget Committee, Senator MUSKIE, by a letter from the President of the United States as to the so-called "facts and figures" from Secretary Bergland about the great cost of this farm legislation to the American consumer. There is clearly an effort afoot by forces within the administration to set the consumer against the American farmer.

I suggest to the consumer and to those in this body, as they study the conference report, in preparation for the very important vote at 11 o'clock on Monday morning, that they look at the alternatives. What are the alternatives to the American farmer if he cannot make a profit?

We will concede some inflationary impact. There has to be some inflationary impact, unless we take money from the Treasury—which is the administration's proposal, I suggest, which farmers do not want—and even then there would be some inflationary impact.

It seems to this Senator that we are talking about the future of American agriculture and literally the future of the American consumer; because, as one farmer stated to us in the committee hearings, "If you don't eat, don't worry about my problem."

I suggest that that stated the problem. It made the point.

I hope the President of the United States, with all his problems and all his concerns, will take just 5 minutes to look at the measure agreed upon by the conferees this week, 5 minutes to understand the problem. It is market oriented. The farmer will get his profit from the marketplace, not from the General Treasury. It has a number of concepts that I believe President Carter supports.

I hope the Senate will adopt the conference report and that the House will adopt the conference report and that then the President will keep his pledge to the American farmer and sign the bill.

Mr. President, on April 5 the conference completed action on the Emergency Agriculture Act of 1978. This timely and necessary measure responds to the nationwide farm crisis by boosting farm prices in a way that is fair to consumers and taxpayers.

Yesterday, the Department of Agriculture released a document assessing the likely costs of the Emergency Agriculture Act. This document is the latest version in a long line of administration cost estimates based on "worst case" assumptions regarding the emergency farm legislation.

I do not accept the total accuracy and reasonableness of these cost assumptions and estimates. The USDA and CBO estimate costs to the Government and the consumer and understate benefits to farmers, consumers, and the total economy.

Drawing upon the Department of Agriculture cost estimates, President Carter has written to the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee (Senator MUSKIE) indicating his decision to veto the Emergency Agriculture Act on the grounds that this bill is too costly. This letter has been made public and copies have been widely distributed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of President Carter's letter be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washinton, D.C., April 6, 1978.

To Senator EDMUND MUSKIE.

Sixteen months ago, I asked Bob Bergland to join with the Congress to help restore a sense of direction and purpose to the farm and food policies of this nation. The extreme volatility of farm and food prices of recent years has not been in the best interest of either our Nation's farmers or consumers.

When we took office, farm income was in sharp decline. We undertook to reverse this trend and return stability to the nation's farm economy. Working with you and other members of the Congress, we developed the most sweeping farm legislation of the past 40 years. Using the authorities of that law, we have moved to improve the incomes of America's farmers.

This policy is working. Our agricultural economy has improved markedly in recent months. To further strengthen this recovery, we announced last week:

An expansion and liberalization of the farmer-held grain reserve.

Paid diversion of 7 to 9 million acres of excess cropland.

And other steps which, in combination with the reserve and the acreage diversion, will add up to $4 billion to crop producer income.

These are carefully considered measures. They will provide decent farm incomes, protect consumers from precipitous price rises, enhance our reliability as a major agricultural exporter, and allow us to meet our humanitarian food aid commitments.

Yesterday a conference committee of the Congress reported H.R. 6782, legislation that was hastily drafted in an atmosphere of emotion and confusion. Should that legislation reach my desk, it will be vetoed.

No one who understands our farm economy should be deceived about the impacts of this measure.

It would increase food price inflation to double digit levels.

It would add as much as $6 billion to the Federal budget.

By sharply reducing production and increasing prices, this bill could seriously undermine our competitive position in world markets.

The higher feed prices that result would adversely affect our own livestock industry.

It would require vast new layers of bureaucracy to administer the complicated and confusing schedule of eligibility requirements and payments.

And, this bill would direct the vast majority of its benefits to a small number of the very largest of our farmers, rather than those in greatest need of help.

This Administration is committed to a strong and prosperous farm economy and one that is able to compete successfully in international markets. We now have a policy to accomplish this objective. I call upon you and other members of Congress to join with me in supporting this policy and in defeating this conference committee bill.

Sincerely,

JIMMY CARTER.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, you will find that President Carter cites six reasons why he intends to veto the emergency farm bill. The Senator from Kansas finds these reasons inadequate and unconvincing. These six points lack validity because they are founded upon unreasonable assumptions. They require immediate response.

POINT ONE—INCREASE PRICES

In the first instance, President Carter claims that the bill "will increase food price inflation to double digit levels."

In fact, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that the bill will increase the Consumer Price Index for food by only 1.1 to 1.5 percent during fiscal year 1979. Even the Department of Agriculture estimates the added food inflationary impact of the bill at no more than 2 to 4 percent. This is a small price to pay for the economic health of our Nation's farmers. Many consumers have indicated to me a willingness to accept a small increase in food prices in order to assure themselves of a plentiful and reasonable priced food supply.

POINT TWO—THE FEDERAL BUDGET

Second, President Carter indicates that the bill will add as much as $6 billion to the Federal budget during 1978 and 1979.

In fact, this $6 billion figure rests on the unlikely assumption that farm prices will remain weak, that nearly all eligible farmers will participate at maximum acreage set-aside levels, and that a massive shift from nonprice support crops to supported crops will occur. In each instance, these assumptions are "worst case" assumptions, technically stated so as to make the cost of the bill appear unreasonably high. The President's budget figure is the worst possible estimate and does not take into account the result in benefits for the farmer, the Government, and the consumer. The economic benefits of the bill to America will far outweigh the costs.

Once again, the Congressional Budget Office estimates maximum costs which are a billion dollars less than the President's figure.

POINT THREE—THE WORLD MARKET

Concerning the President's point that the Emergency Farm Act would undermine our competitive position in world markets, I want to say there is strong evidence that our competitors in export grain markets, for example, follow U.S. price leadership.

If our prices go up so will theirs and farmers around the world will benefit from more reasonable levels of prices. If competitors are determined to take a market from us they can "shave" our prices at either the $2 level or the $4 level. In any event, what does the American farmer gain by a large volume of exports if he loses money on every bushel or every bale that he sells abroad? Every bushel sold overseas, below the costs of production means American farmers are exporting the equity they have in their farms. This is not acceptable to farmers and should not be acceptable to the Congress or the President.

POINT FOUR—ADVERSE EFFECTS ON LIVESTOCK

The President asserts that higher feed prices will adversely affect our own livestock industry. Livestock people have told me that they have always made more money when feed prices were at a reasonable level than they have when feed prices were so cheap that large numbers of cattle or hogs were attracted into feedlots by cheap feed, resulting in an oversupply of fed cattle and hogs which had to be sold at "bust" prices. I do not know any farmers who feed animals that want to profit from the plight of their fellow farmers who are producing grain below the cost of production.

We can have a healthy grain agriculture and a healthy livestock agriculture at the same time.

POINT FIVE—INCREASED BUREAUCRACY

Concerning the President's point regarding layers of bureaucracy to administer "the schedule of eligibility requirements and payments," I do not see why it would take even one more bureaucrat to administer a set-aside which allows a farmer to choose a set-aside level of 20 percent, 35 percent, or 50 percent rather than the administration's single bureaucrat-selected level of 20 percent for wheat and 10 percent for feedgrains.

Under the Emergency Agriculture Act a farmer would merely designate the level of set-aside when he signed up for the program—the same bureaucrat would sign him up under this bill that would have signed him up under the Carter Farm Program.

POINT SIX—LIMITED PAYMENTS

The President stated in his letter that this bill would direct the vast majority of its benefits to the very largest farmers. This is not true.

Farmer payments would be limited to $40,000 as specified in the Agriculture Act of 1977. I deliberately did not give exemptions in my bill from this limitation because I wanted the benefits to go to the small family farmer.

Mr. President, I take this opportunity to respond to President Carter's letter in the hope that President Carter will reassess his position and sign the Emergency Agriculture Act into law.

The need for emergency farm legislation has been fully documented in hearings before the Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry Committee. It is also made evident by the tractorcades, rallies, and spontaneous groundswell of unrest in every agricultural region of the country.

The Emergency Agriculture Act of 1978 was adopted by Congress after several months of deliberations. Several hearings and many different bills were considered. The legislation was drafted in an atmosphere of concern, urgency, and sincere desire to help our Nation's family farmers.

The act was carefully considered and will prove reasonable farm incomes, protect consumers from extreme price rises, enhance our balance of payments and agricultural exports and allow us an adequate reserve to meet our humanitarian food aid commitments.

The cost of this farm bill may appear high. But the cost of doing nothing will be higher still. This Nation cannot afford to see tens of thousands of our most productive farmers driven off the land and into already hard-pressed cities in search of jobs. A slight increase in food prices today is a small price to pay for the preservation of the family farm in America.

THE PANAMA CANAL TREATY

Mr. MORGAN. Madam President, with regard to the Panama Canal treaties and the actions of General Torrijos, as reported in the morning press, let me say that, first of all, as a supporter of the new Panama Canal treaties and as one who voted for the first one, I am disturbed by the actions of General Torrijos.

However, I do not think that the so-called DeConcini amendment did anything that the Neutrality Treaty did not already do. That is, under the Neutrality Treaty, as I understand it, the United States is at liberty, after the year 2000, to take whatever action we think is necessary to maintain the neutrality of that canal, whether it is military or otherwise. I believe that spelling out the Military aspect was expressing the wishes of the American people to make it clear that we did reserve that right.

Unless facts are developed before the next vote, I intend to vote for the first of the Panama Canal treaties. However, I wish to make it clear that the Constitution places the responsibility upon the Senate of the United States to advise and to consent with respect to any treaties that are entered into; that we are not required, by the Constitution or otherwise, to accept any treaties that are submitted to us by the executive branch; that it is our responsibility to try to act in a manner that we believe is in accordance with the national security interests of the United States.

In my opinion the first treaty, the neutrality treaty, represented the consensus of the U.S. Senate that that treaty, as adopted, which included the so-called DeConcini amendment, was in the best interests of the United States. Once we have ratified these treaties—if we do ratify the first treaty, and I think we will—they will represent what we in the U.S. Senate, as representatives of the people of the United States, believe to be in the best interests of this country.

If the officials and the Government of Panama do not want to accept that, so be it. But I do not think that we, as Members of the Senate, can afford to be dictated to by General Torrijos or anyone else.

I want to make clear that I believe a new relationship is necessary with Panama; and I said so publicly 8 months before this treaty came out, after I returned from a visit to Panama on other business.

I wish to reiterate and to make clear that it is the Government of the United States that should determine what treaties this country will enter into. It is up to Senators, as representatives of the people of this country, to decide how far we will go; and once we have gone that far, if the Panamanians do not want to accept it, that is their prerogative.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STONE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Chirdon, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

REPORT OF THE COUNCIL ON WAGE AND PRICE STABILITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 164

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report, which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with Section 5 of the Council on Wage and Price Stability Act, as amended, I hereby transmit to the Congress the thirteenth quarterly report of the Council on Wage and Price Stability. This report contains a description of the Council's activities during the fourth quarter of 1977 in monitoring both prices and wages in the private sector and various Federal government activities that may lead to higher costs and prices without creating commensurate benefits. It discusses Council reports, analyses, and filings before Federal regulatory agencies.

In August 1977 I asked the Council to undertake an in-depth study of the Nation's steel industry. The study was released in October and served as an important information base in the Administration's development of its reference price system for imports of foreign steel.

During the fourth quarter, the Council also issued, among other things, reports on interest rates and inflation, the lumber industry, 1978 model year auto prices, and a detailed analysis of the communications workers' settlement.

The Council on Wage and Price Stability will continue to play an important role in supplementing fiscal and monetary policies by calling public attention to wage and price developments or actions by the government that could be of concern to American consumers.

JIMMY CARTER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 7, 1978.

REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION OF ENERGY CONSERVATION PROGRAMS WITHIN THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 165

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report, which was referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am hereby transmitting the first annual report required to be submitted to the Congress by Section 381(c) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act, Public Law 94–163, and required to be prepared by the Federal Energy Administration, now the Department of Energy, with the assistance of appropriate agencies under Executive Order 11912 of April 13, 1976.

This report covers the implementing activities and actions undertaken during 1976 by Federal Agencies in establishing mandatory Federal Procurement policies and standards with respect to energy conservation and efficiency, developing a 10-year plan for energy conservation in federally-owned or leased buildings, carrying out a responsible public education program to encourage energy conservation, vanpooling and carpooling arrangements, and acquiring fuel-efficient passenger automobiles for the Federal fleet.

JIMMY CARTER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 7, 1978.

EXECUTIVE ORDER WITH RESPECT TO THE HUNGARIAN PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 166

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to Section 402(c)(2) of the Trade Act of 1974, (hereinafter, "the Act") I shall issue today in Executive Order waiving the application of Subsections (a) and (b) of Section 402 of the Act with respect to the Hungarian People's Republic.

I wish to report to the Congress that I have determined that this waiver will substantially promote the objectives of Section 402 of the Act; and that I have received assurances that the emigration practices of the Hungarian People's Republic will henceforth lead substantially to the achievement of those objectives.

JIMMY CARTER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 7, 1978.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 3:15 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 10899. An act to provide for Federal regulation of participation by foreign banks in domestic financial markets.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The following bill was read twice by its title and referred as indicated:

H.R. 10899. An act to provide for Federal regulation of participation by foreign banks in domestic financial markets; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. DECONCINI, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment:

S. 2597. A bill to amend title 28, United States Code, to move the place for holding court for the district court of the eastern district of New York to Brooklyn and Hempstead, and for other purposes (Rept. 95–728).

By Mr. GLENN (for Mr. RIBICOFF), from the Committee on Governmental Affairs, without amendment:

S. Res. 431. An original resolution to implement rule L of the Standing Rules of the Senate, relating to employment practices (Rept. No. 95–729). Referred to the Committee on Human Resources, pursuant to section 310 of S. Res. 110, 95th Congress, 1st session, for not to exceed 60 days.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. MORGAN (for himself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 2856. A bill to amend the survivor benefit plan provided for under chapter 73 of title 10, United States Code, to permit members and former members of the uniformed services who have completed the number of years of service required for eligibility for retired pay under chapter 67 of such title but who have not, because of age, become entitled to retired pay to participate in such plan, to make the dependents of such members and former members who die before becoming entitled to such retired pay eligible for certain medical and dental benefits under chapter 55 of such title, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 2857. A bill to clarify and revise various provisions of title 28 of the United States Code relating to the judiciary and judicial procedure regarding judicial review of international trade matters, and for other purposes. To the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MELCHER:

S. 2858. A bill to amend section 2040 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that a spouse's services shall be taken into account in determining whether that spouse furnished adequate consideration for jointly held property for purpcses of qualifying for an exclusion from the Federal estate tax; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. MATHIAS:

S. 2859. A bill to quitclaim certain property in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, to the Little Sisters of the Poor; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. MELCHER:

S. 2860. A bill to provide for a research, development, and demonstration program to determine the feasibility of collecting in space solar energy to be transmitted to Earth and to generate electricity for domestic purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. MATHIAS (for himself and Mrs. HUMPHREY):

S. 2861. A bill to incorporate the United States Capitol Historical Society; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HASKELL (for himself, Mr. HATHAWAY, Mr. MCGOVERN, and Mr. RIEGLE):

S. 2862. A bill to provide for the regularization of administrative practices and procedures, better congressional control of Federal regulations, periodic review of existing regulations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs and the Committee on the Judiciary, jointly, by unanimous consent.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. MORGAN (for himself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 2856. A bill to amend the survivor benefit plan provided for under chapter 73 of title 10, United States Code, to permit members and former members of the uniformed services who have completed the number of years of service required for eligibility for retired pay under chapter 67 of such title but who have not, because of age, become entitled to retired pay to participate in such plan, to make the dependents of such members and former members who die before becoming entitled to such retired pay eligible for certain medical and dental benefits under chapter 55 of such title, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

(The remarks of Mr. MORGAN when he introduced the bill appear elsewhere in today's proceedings.)

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 2857. A bill to clarify and revise various provisions of title 28 of the United States Code relating to the judiciary and judicial procedure regarding judicial review of international trade matters, and for other purposes.

CUSTOMS COURTS ACT OF 1978

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill, the proposed Customs Courts Act of 1978, which would bring badly needed reform to the law governing the jurisdiction and powers of the U.S. Customs Court and the U.S. Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

Drafted with the help of the Department of Justice and supported by the administration, this bill will simplify many of the complexities surrounding international trade litigation.

For example, while the volume of international trade litigation has grown, and while the importance of international commerce decisions has increased to the point that more and more ordinary citizens are being affected, the statutes relating to the jurisdiction of the courts that handle such litigation have remained relatively unchanged. Enactment of the Customs Courts Act of 1978 will help eliminate much of the confusion over the judicial review of certain international commerce decisions of the President, the International Trade Commission, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Customs Service, and the Office of the Special Trade Representative. The bill will clearly delineate the jurisdictional boundaries between the district courts and the Customs Court. No longer will a litigant's choice of the wrong forum result in a holding that the litigant is in the wrong court, thereby effectively foreclosing him from judicial relief.

This bill will make a number of improvements in Customs Court procedure. For example, current practice permits a suit to be filed and then lie dormant for a period of 2 years thereby encouraging the filing of large numbers of cases by plaintiffs who merely wish to preserve their right to judicial review. Title IV of my bill would abolish the reserve period and extend the current 180-day period in which to seek judicial review of the denial of a protest to 2 years, giving potential plaintiffs sufficient time to decide whether to formally proceed with judicial review.

The bill would make the Federal Rules of Evidence applicable to proceedings before the Customs Court and the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

Another feature of the bill is that it would make the Customs Court completely equivalent to the U.S. district court. Active judges of the Customs Court would be able to serve as judges of the Court of Claims and the courts of appeals under the same circumstances as district judges. The chief judge will be permanently designated by the President, and not subject, as he is now to removal at the pleasure of the President. The bill will insure that the Customs Court may award any type of relief that it deems necessary including equitable relief.

An important part of the bill is contained in title IV which would expand the range of persons entitled to bring an action or to intervene in an action before the Customs Court. By permitting persons adversely affected by certain administrative decisions to bring certain types of suits or to intervene or obtain some type of judicial review, classes of persons such as consumer groups can participate in cases involving classification, value, rates or duties, countervailing and antidumping duties, or the exclusion of merchandise under the customs laws.

Mr. President, enactment of the legislation that I am introducing today will not only improve the operations of the Customs Court and Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, it will make it easier for our citizens to use these specialized courts.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2857

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that this Act may be cited as the "Customs Courts Act of 1978."

TITLE I—PURPOSE

SEC. 101. DECLARATION OF PURPOSE.

The Congress declares that the purposes of this Act are: (1) to provide for a comprehensive system of judicial review of matters directly affecting imports, utilizing, wherever possible, the specialized expertise of the United States Customs Court and Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, and the opportunity for ensuring uniformity afforded by the national jurisdiction of these courts; (2) to prevent jurisdictional conflicts in civil actions directly affecting imports due to the present ill-defined division of jurisdiction between the district courts and the customs courts; (3) to provide expanded opportunities for judicial review; (4) to grant to the customs courts plenary powers possessed by other courts created under Article III of the Constitution.

TITLE II—COMPOSITION OF THE CUSTOMS COURT AND ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGES TO OTHER COURTS

SEC. 201. Section 251 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out the first and second paragraphs of such section and inserting in lieu thereof the following—

"The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, nine judges who shall constitute a court of record known as the United States Customs Court. Such court is hereby declared to be a court established under Article III of the Constitution of the United States.

"The President shall designate one of the judges, under seventy years of age, to be the chief judge of the court. The judge so designated shall continue to serve as chief judge until he reaches the age of seventy and a new chief judge is designated."

SEC. 202(a). Subparagraph (b) of section 293 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out all that appears after the word "duties", and inserting in lieu thereof the following—

"In any circuit, either in a court of appeals or district court, upon presentation of a certificate of necessity by the chief judge or circuit justice of the circuit wherein the need arises."

(b) Subparagraph (d) of section 293 of title 28, United States Code, is amended so as to read as follows—

"(d) The chief judge of the Customs Court may, upon presentation to him by the chief judge of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals or the chief judge of the Court of Claims of a certificate of necessity, designate and assign temporarily any judge of the Customs Court to serve as a judge of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals or the Court of Claims."

TITLE III—JURISDICTION OF THE CUSTOMS COURT

SEC. 301. Sections 1581 and 1582 of title 28, United States Code are repealed.

SEC. 302. Chapter 95 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting the following new provisions:

"Sec. 1581. Questions involving imports.
Sec. 1582. Powers generally.
Sec. 1583. Final agency action.
Sec. 1584. Appraisal and classification.
Sec. 1585. Excusion of goods from entry or delivery.
Sec. 1586. Charges or exactions.
Sec. 1587. Refusal to pay a claim for drawback.
Sec. 1588. Liquidation or reliquidation of an entry or a modification thereof.
Sec. 1589. Refusal to reliquidate an entry.
Sec. 1590. Section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930.
Sec. 1591. Civil penalties, forfeitures, suits to recover on a bond and recovery of customs duties.
Sec. 1592. Set-offs, demands, counterclaims.
Sec. 1593. Cure of defects.

"SEC. 1581. QUESTIONS INVOLVING IMPORTS.

"The Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction, except as otherwise provided by law, over all civil actions against the United States or against any officer or agency thereof directly affecting imports which arise under the Constitution, laws, treaties of the United States or an Executive Agreement executed by the President of the United States or under an Executive Order of the President.

"This section does not confer jurisdiction upon the Customs Court to entertain a civil action in which jurisdiction is precluded by the terms of a provision of this chapter or of any other law which specifically confers jurisdiction only over certain types of civil actions belonging to the same category.

"Nothing in this section shall be construed to create a cause of action, or to permit the maintenance of a suit not otherwise authorized by law.

"Nothing in this section shall affect limitations on judicial review or the power or duty of the court to dismiss any action or to deny relief on any other appropriate legal or equitable grounds.

"SEC. 1582. POWERS GENERALLY.

"The Customs Court shall possess all the powers in law and equity of, or as conferred by statute upon, a district court of the United States. The court, and each judge thereof, shall possess all the powers of a district court for preserving order, compelling the attendance of witnesses, and the production of evidence.

"This section shall not be construed as conferring upon the Customs Court the power to convene a jury.

"SEC. 1583. FINAL AGENCY ACTION.

(a) The Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction, except as otherwise provided by law, to review final agency action of any agency of the United States which directly affects imports into the United States.

"For purposes of this section, the terms "agency," "agency action," and "final agency action" are utilized in the same manner as those terms are utilized in sections 551 and 704 of title 5, United States Code.

"Nothing in this section shall be construed to create a cause of action, or to permit the maintenance of a suit not otherwise permitted by law.

"Nothing in this section shall affect limitations on judicial review or the power or duty of the court to dismiss any action or to deny relief on any other appropriate legal or equitable grounds.

"(b) The Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction over any civil action involving a final decision of the International Trade Commission under sections 201 of the Anti-Dumping Act and 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

"(c) The Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction to review advice, findings, recommendations or determinations of the International Trade Commission pursuant to sections 131, 202, 203, 301, 406 and 503 of the Trade Act of 1974, and 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, after the decision of the President has become final.

"(d) After the decision of the President has become final, the Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction to review actions of the Office of the Special Trade Representative pursuant to section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974 solely for the purposes of determining the procedural regularity of those actions.

"(e) The Customs Court shall not possess jurisdiction of:

(i) any civil or criminal action arising under the antitrust laws of the United States;

(ii) any civil or criminal action arising under the Shipping Act of 1916, as amended;

(iii) any action relating solely to labor-management relations, actions affecting personnel, or actions alleged to be in violation of any statute forbidding discrimination in employment;

(iv) arising solely under the Freedom of Information Act or the Privacy Act.

(v) any action arising under section 305 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended or section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, as amended; or

(iv) any action involving a function vested by law in the Department of Energy including but not limited to the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act.

"(f) Neither the Customs Court nor any other court shall possess jurisdiction to review

(i) a discretionary decision of the President or his delegate pursuant to the authority granted to him by any law relating to international trade;

(ii) any ruling or internal advice relating to classification, valuation, rate of duty, marking, restricted merchandise, entry requirements, drawback, vessel repairs and the like issued by the Secretary of the Treasury or his or her delegate to members of the public or members of the Customs Service except with respect to section 315(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

"(g) Nothing in this section shall be construed to create a cause of action, or to permit the maintenance of a suit not otherwise authorized by law.

"SEC. 1584. APPRAISAL AND CLASSIFICATION

"The Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions which involve the appraised value or the classification and rate and amount of duties chargeable upon imports.

"SEC. 1585. EXCLUSION OF GOODS FROM ENTRY OR DELIVERY.

"Except as otherwise provided by law, the Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions which involve the exclusion of imports from entry or delivery under any provision of the customs laws or the exclusion or required delivery of imports pursuant to the terms of an entry bond.

"SEC. 1586. CHARGES OR EXACTIONS.

"(a) Except as otherwise provided by law, the Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions which involve the imposition of any charge, tax, fee or other exaction imposed upon importation.

"(b) Except as otherwise provided by law, the Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions which involve a decision of the Secretary of the Treasury, imposing any fee, charge, tax, or other exaction, other than customs duties, upon any vessel, aircraft or other instrumentality of international commerce which enters into the customs territory of the United States.

"SEC. 1587. REFUSAL TO PAY CLAIM FOR DRAWBACK.

"The Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions involving a refusal to pay a claim for drawback.

"SEC. 1588 LIQUIDATION OR RELIQUIDATION OF AN ENTRY OR MODIFICATION THEREOF.

"The Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions involving the liquidation or reliquidation of any entry or a modification thereof.

"SEC. 1589. REFUSAL TO RELIQUIDATE AN ENTRY.

"The Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction of all civil actions involving the refusal to reliquidate an entry under section 520(c) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

"SEC. 1590. SECTION 516 OF THE TARIFF ACT OF 1930, AS AMENDED

"The Customs Court shall possess exclusive jurisdiction over all civil actions instituted pursuant to section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

"SEC. 1591. CIVIL PENALTIES, FORFEITURES, SUITS TO RECOVER ON A BOND, AND RECOVERY OF CUSTOMS DUTIES.

"(a) The Customs Court shall possess jurisdiction upon transfer from a district court, over any civil action involving imports in international trade instituted by the United States to (1) recover a civil revenue statute administered by the Customs Service, or (2) to recover upon a bond, relating to the importation of merchandise, required by the laws of the United States or by the Secretary of the Treasury, or (3) to recover customs duties.

"(b) A defendant or defendants may transfer a case referred to in subparagraph (a) of this section by filing in the district court in which the action is pending a notice of a desire to transfer.

"(c) The notice of desire to transfer shall be filed within thirty days after the service upon defendant of a copy of the complaint.

"(d) (1) Upon receipt of a notice of a desire to transfer, the district court shall determine whether the action is of the type defined in subparagraph (a) of this section. If so, the district court shall order the transfer.

"(2) If the case is of the type referred to in paragraph (a)(1) of this section, the United States shall be afforded an opportunity to object to the transfer and, the case shall be transferred only if the district court determines that the case involves a substantial question, other than the amount of any penalty involved, as to the proper classification or validation of imported merchandise or the rate of duty imposed. The decision of the district court to transfer or not to transfer a case shall be final and conclusive and shall not be reviewable on appeal or otherwise, except on appeal from a final judgment on the merits.

"(e) Within 10 days after the issuance of an order of transfer, the defendant or defendants shall file copies of all pleadings and documents with the Customs Court.

"(f) Upon receipt of the copies of the pleadings and documents, the action shall be heard by the Customs Court, sitting without a jury, and shall proceed in the district in which the action was first instituted, as if the case had been instituted in the Customs Court in the first instance.

"(g) In any suit transferred to the Customs Court pursuant to this section, the provisions of sections 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464 and 2465 of title 28, United States Code, shall be applicable where relevant.

"SEC. 1592. SET-OFFS, DEMANDS, AND COUNTERCLAIMS.

"The Customs Court shall have jurisdiction to render judgment upon any set-off, demand, or counterclaim, which arises out of an import or export related transaction, by the United States against any plaintiff in such court.

"SEC. 1953. CURE OF DEFECTS.

"(a) If a case within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Customs Court is filed in a district court, the district court shall, if it be in the interest of justice, transfer such case to the Customs Court, where the case shall proceed as if it had been filed in the Customs Court on the date it was filed in the district court.

"(b) If a case within the exclusive jurisdiction of a district court or a court of appeals is filed in the Customs Court, the Customs Court shall, if it be in the interest of justice, transfer such case to the appropriate district court or court of appeals where the case shall proceed as if it had been filed on the date in which it was filed in the Customs Court."

TITLE IV—CUSTOMS COURT PROCEDURE

SEC. 401. (a) Sections 2631, 2632, 2633, 2635 and 2637 of title 28, United States Code, are repealed.

(b) Section 2634 of title 28, United States Code, is redesignated as section 2638.

(c) Section 2636 of title 28, United States Code, is redesignated as section 2642.

(d) Sections 2638 and 2639 of title 28, United States Code, are redesignated as sections 2644 and 2645, respectively.

SEC. 402. Chapter 169 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting the following new provisions—

"Sec. 2631. Persons entitled to commence a civil action.
"Sec. 2632. Commencement of a civil action.
"Sec. 2633. Customs Court procedure and fees.
"Sec. 2634. Filing of official documents.
"Sec. 2635. Time for commencement of action.
"Sec. 2636. Exhaustion of administrative remedies.
"Sec. 2637. New grounds in support of a civil action.
"Sec. 2638. Notice.
"Sec. 2639. Burden of proof; evidence of value.
"Sec. 2640. Scope and Standard of review.
"Sec. 2641. Witnesses; in spection of documents.
"Sec. 2642. Analysis of imported merchandise.
"Sec. 2643. Relief.
"Sec. 2644. Decisions; findings of fact and conclusions of law; effect of opinions.
"Sec. 2645. Retrial or rehearing.
"Sec. 2646. Precedence of American manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler cases.

"SEC. 2631. PERSONS ENTITLED TO COMMENCE A CIVIL ACTION.

"(a) Except in those civil actions specified in sections 1584, 1585, 1587, 1588, 1589, 1590, and section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, a civil action may be instituted in the Customs Court by any person adversely affected or aggrieved (within the meaning of section 702 of title 5, United States Code) by the agency action (as defined in section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code), which is the subject of the suit. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to create a cause of action, or to permit the maintenance of a suit not otherwise authorized by law.

"(b) By leave of the court, any person who would be adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision in a civil action pending in the Customs Court may intervene in that action.

"SEC. 2632. COMMENCEMENT OF A CIVIL ACTION.

"(a) All civil actions shall be instituted in the Customs Court by the filing of a complaint in the form, manner, and style and with the content prescribed in rules adopted by the court.

"(b) The Customs Court may prescribe by rule that a complaint transmitted by registered or certified mail properly addressed to the clerk of the court with the proper postage affixed and return receipt requested, shall be deemed filed as of the date of postmark.

"SEC. 2633. CUSTOMS COURT PROCEDURE AND FEES.

"(a) There shall be a filing fee payable upon commencing an action. The amount of the fee shall be fixed by the Customs Court but shall be not less than $5 nor more than the filing fee for commencing a civil action in a United States district court. The Customs Court may fix all other fees to be charged by the clerk of the court.

"(b) The Customs Court shall provide by rule for pleadings and other papers, for their amendment, service, and filing, for consolidations, severances, and suspensions of cases, and for other procedural matters.

"(c) All pleadings and other papers filed in the Customs Court shall be served on all the adverse parties in accordance with the rules of the court. When the United States is an adverse party, service of the summons shall be made upon the Attorney General and the relevant Government officials or officials or his or her designee or designees.

"SEC. 2634. FILING OF OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS.

"(a) Upon service of the complaint on the Secretary of the Treasury or his or her designee in a civil action in which the denial, in whole or in part, of a protest under the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is a precondition to the institution of the civil action, the appropriate customs officer shall forthwith transmit the following items, if they exist, to the United States Customs Court: (1) consumption or other entry; (2) commercial invoice; (3) special customs invoice; (4) copy of protest; (5) copy of denial of protest in whole or in part; (6) importer's exhibits; (7) official and/or other representative samples, and (8) any official laboratory reports. If any of these items do not exist in a particular case, an affirmative statement to that effect shall be transmitted to the court.

"(b) Upon service of the complaint on the Secretary of the Treasury or his designee in an action contesting one of the determinations set forth in section 516(d)(A) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, the Secretary or his designee shall forthwith transmit to the United States Customs Court the official record of the civil action, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. For purposes of this paragraph, all relevant rules promulgated pursuant to section 2072 and paragraphs (a) through (c) of section 2112 of title 28, United States Code, shall be applicable to the Customs Court

"(c) Upon service of the complaint on the United States International Trade Commission or its designee in an action contesting one of the determinations set forth in section 516(d)(B)(1) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, the Commission or its designee shall forthwith transmit to the United States

Customs Court, the determination, the reasons or bases therefor, the transcript of any hearing, and all information developed in connection with the investigation.

"(d) Upon service of the complaint on the U.S. International Trade Commission or its designee in an action contesting one of the determinations set forth in section 516(d)(B)(2) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, the Commission or its designee shall forthwith transmit to the United States Customs Court the record, as provided in paragraphs (a) through (c) of section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. For purposes of this paragraph, all relevant rules prescribed pursuant to sections 2072 and 2112 of title 28, United States Code, shall be applicable to the Customs Court.

"SEC. 2635. TIME FOR COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.

"(a) A civil action instituted pursuant to sections 1584, 1585, 1586, 1587, 1588 and 1589 of title 28, United States Code, shall be barred unless a complaint is filed, in accordance with the rules of the Customs Court, within:

(1) two years after the date of mailing of notice of denial, in whole or in part, of a protest pursuant to the provisions of section 515(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or,

(2) if no notice is mailed within the two year period specified in section 515(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, two years after the date of the expiration of the two year period specified in section 515(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or,

(3) if a notice is mailed after the expiration of the two year period specified in section 515(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, two years after either the expiration of the two year period or the mailing of the notice of denial, or,

(4) two years after the date of denial of a protest by operation of law pursuant to the provisions of section 515(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

"(b) An action over which the Customs Court possesses jurisdiction under section 1590 of title 28, United States Code, is barred unless commenced within thirty days after the date of mailing of a notice transmitted pursuant to section 516(c) of the Tariff Act of 1930, or, if the action is instituted pursuant to section 516(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, within 30 days of the publication of the notice specified in that paragraph.

"(c) An action instituted pursuant to section 1581 or 1583(a) of title 28, United States Code is barred unless commenced within two years after the right of action first accrues.

"(d) An action over which the Customs Court possesses jurisdiction under paragraph (c) or (d) of section 1583 of title 28, United States Code, is barred unless commenced within thirty days of the announcement by the President of his final decision.

"SEC. 2636. EXHAUSTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES.

"(a) A civil action may be instituted within the jurisdiction conferred by sections 1584, 1585, 1586, 1587, 1588, or 1589 of title 23, United States Code, only by a person whose protest pursuant to section 515 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, has been denied in whole or in part. All liquidated duties or exactions shall have been paid at the time the action is filed.

"(b) A suit may be instituted pursuant to section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, only by a person who has first exhausted the procedures specified in that section.

"(c) In all other cases, the Customs Court, where appropriate, shall require the exhaustion of administrative remedies.

"(d) In extraordinary circumstances, stated in writing and supported by oath or affirmation, any person subject to an administrative proceeding referenced in subsection (a) or (b) of this section, who has a right of appeal to the Customs Court from the agency final action in that proceeding, may petition the Customs Court for preliminary injunctive relief. The Customs Court may, after hearing, and upon a determination that the petitioner will otherwise suffer substantial irreparable injury, and the public interest so requires, enter an order designed to protect the interests of the parties pending completion of the administrative proceeding. Such order may include a requirement that the administrative proceeding be given priority by the agency over other such proceedings. Financial loss shall not constitute irreparable injury within the meaning of this subsection.

"SEC. 2637. NEW GROUNDS IN SUPPORT OF A CIVIL ACTION.

Where the denial, in whole or in part, of a protest under section 515 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is a precondition to the institution of a civil action in the Customs Court, the court, by rule, may consider any new ground in support of the civil action if the new ground (1) applies to the same merchandise that was the subject of the protest; and (2) is related to the same administrative decision or decisions listed in section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, that was or were contested in the protest.

"SEC. 2639. BURDEN OF PROOF; EVIDENCE OF VALUE.

"In any matter in the Customs Court except an action transferred to the Customs Court pursuant to section 1593 of this title:

"(1) The decision of the Secretary of the Treasury, or his delegate, is presumed to be correct. The burden to prove otherwise shall rest upon the party challenging a decision.

"(2) Where the value of merchandise is in issue:

"(A)(i) Reports or dispositions of consuls, customs officers, and other officers of the United States and depositions and affidavits of other persons whose attendance cannot reasonably be had, which are based upon, and which recite, operative facts, may be admitted into evidence when served upon the opposing party in accordance with the rules of the court.

"(ii) No affidavit of the type specified in the preceding paragraph shall be admitted into evidence by the plaintiff unless the plaintiff introduces evidence to the effect that the affiant has made available to the Secretary of the Treasury or his or her delegate adequate means by which the facts contained in the affidavit can be verified.

"(iii) In the absence of unusual circumstances, mere residence abroad shall not be a sufficient demonstration that the affiant's attendance cannot reasonably be had.

"(B) Price lists and catalogs may be admitted in evidence when duly authenticated, relevant, and material.

"(C) The value of merchandise shall be determined from the evidence in the record and that adduced at trial whether or not the merchandise or sample thereof is available for examination.

"SEC. 2640. SCOPE AND STANDARD OF REVIEW.

"(a) Except for civil actions governed by subsections (d)(3)(A) and (i) of section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, any civil action in which the issue involves the following matters under the indicated sections of title 28, United States Code:

(1) the appraised value of merchandise (section 1584); or

(2) the classification and rate and amount of duties, fees, or taxes chargeable (section 1584) or,

(3) all charges or exactions (except countervailing duties imposed under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and antidumping duties imposed pursuant to the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended) imposed upon imported articles whether imposed by the Secretary of the Treasury or otherwise (section 1586); or,

(4) the exclusion of merchandise from entry or delivery (section 1585); or,

(5) the liquidation or reliquidation of an entry or a modification thereof (section 1588); or,

(6) the refusal to pay a claim for a drawback (section 1587); or

(7) the refusal to reliquidate an entry under section 520(c) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (section 1589);

the Customs Court shall determine the matter upon the basis of the record made in the court. Suits challenging decisions to impose countervailing or antidumping duties upon a class or kind of merchandise shall be subject to review as provided in subsection (c) of this section. Suits challenging the imposition of countervailing or antidumping duties upon particular merchandise shall be determined upon the basis of the record made before the court.

"(b) In all other cases, except those governed by subsections (d)(3)(A) and (i) of section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or subsection (c) of this section, the scope of review shall be provided in section 706 of title 5, United States Code.

"(c) In cases other than those governed by subsection (i) of section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, involving decisions of the Secretary of the Treasury under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or section 201 of the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended, or of United States International Trade Commission, the standard of review shall be as specified in sections 706(1) and 706(2)(a)-(d), inclusive, of title 5, United States Code.

"SEC. 2641. WITNESSES; INSPECTION OF DOCUMENTS.

"(a) Where appropriate in any civil action in the Customs Court, under rules prescribed by the court, the parties and their attorneys shall have an opportunity to introduce evidence, to hear and cross-examine the witnesses of the other party and to inspect all samples and all papers admitted or offered as evidence except as provided in subsection (b). The Federal Rules of Evidence shall be applicable to all proceedings in the Customs Court except as provided in section 2639 or subsection (b) of this section.

(b) In any civil action, the Customs Court may order that trade secrets and commercial or financial information which is privileged and confidential of a non-party to the action or of a party or information provided to the United States by foreign governments or foreign persons shall not be disclosed or shall be disclosed to a party or its counsel or shall be disclosed to the party or its counsel only under such terms and conditions as the court may provide.

"SEC. 2643. RELIEF.

"(a) Except as provided in section 1591 of title 28, United States Code, in any civil action, the Customs Court may order any form of relief which is appropriate including, but not limited to declaratory judgments, orders of remand, writs of mandamus and prohibition, injunctions, and money judgments both for and against the United States.

"(b) If, in any civil action referred to in subparagraph (a) of section 2640 of this title, the plaintiff both (1) proves that the original decision was incorrect and (2) introduces evidence as to the correct decision, but the Customs Court, based upon the evidence introduced by both the plaintiff and the defendant, is unable to determine the correct decision, the court may either permit the parties to introduce additional evidence or remand the matter to the Customs Service for a determination as to the correct decision. The order of remand shall be final and appealable pursuant to sections 1541(a) and 2601 of this title and the decision after remand shall be subject to protest and judicial review in the same manner and under the same procedure as was the original decision.

"SEC. 2646. Precedence of American manufacturer, producer, and wholesaler cases.

"Every case instituted under sections 1585 and 1591 of title 28 or sections 516(c) or 516(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, shall be given precedence over other cases on the docket of the court and shall be assigned for hearing and trial at the earliest practicable date and expedited in every way."

TITLE V—COURT OF CUSTOMS AND PATENT APPEALS

SEC. 501. Section 1541 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by

(1) redesignating paragraph (b) as paragraph "(c)"; and,

(2) by inserting the following new paragraph—

"(b) The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals has jurisdiction of appeals from interlocutory orders of the Customs Court, or of the judges thereof, granting, modifying, refusing, or dissolving injunctions, or refusing to dissolve or modify injunctions."

SEC. 502. Section 2601 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by deleting the following from the first sentence of paragraph (b): "which shall include a concise statement of the errors complained of"; and, by inserting a period after the word "appeal" in that sentence.

SEC. 503. (a) Paragraph (a) of section 2601 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new sentence—"if a timely notice of appeal is filed by a party, any other party may file a notice of appeal within 14 days after the date on which the first notice of appeal was filed."

(b) The first sentence of paragraph (b) of section 2601 of title 28, United States Code, as amended by this Act, is amended by inserting the following after the word "appeal" where it first appears—"or cross-appeal."

SEC. 504. Chapter 93 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting the following new section:

"SEC. 1546. Rules of evidence; powers in law and equity; exclusive jurisdiction.

"(a) Except as provided in section 2639 or subsection (b) of section 2641 of title 28, as contained in this Act, the Federal Rules of Evidence shall be applicable in the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals in any appeal from the United States Customs Court.

"(b) The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals shall possess all the powers in law and equity of, or as conferred by statute upon, a court of appeals of the United States.

"(c) The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals shall possess exclusive jurisdiction to review:

"(1) any decision of the Secretary of the Treasury to deny or revoke a customs brokers' license under section 641(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or

"(2) any action challenging an order to revoke or suspend a license under section 641(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

"(d) The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals shall possess exclusive jurisdiction to review any decision of the Secretary of Labor or the Secretary of Commerce certifying or refusing to certify workers, communities, or businesses as eligible for adjustment assistance under the Trade Act of 1974. This jurisdiction shall not extend to any other decision of the Secretary of Labor or Secretary of Commerce.

"No injunction or writ of mandamus shall be issued in any case arising under this section."

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 601. (a) The title of section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (46 Stat. 735) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 516. Suits by American Manufacturers, Producers or Wholesalers and by Adversely Affected Parties."

(b) Subsection 516(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1516(a)), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary shall, upon written request by an American manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler, furnish the appraised value, the classification, the rate or amount of duty, the additional duty described in section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (hereinafter in this section referred to as "countervailing duties"), if any, and the special duty described in section 202 of the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended (hereinafter in this section referred to as "antidumping duties"), if any, imposed upon any designated imported merchandise of a class or kind manufactured, produced, or sold at wholesale by him, her, or it or shall state whether the designated imported merchandise is excluded from entry under the customs laws.

"If such person believes that the appraised value is not correct, that the classification is not correct, that the proper rate or amount of duty is not being assessed, that countervailing duties or antidumping duties should be assessed upon the particular merchandise specified in the petition, or that the merchandise should be excluded from entry under the customs laws, he, she, or it may, except as provided in subsection (d) of this section, file a petition with the Secretary setting forth (1) a description of the merchandise, (2) the appraised value, the classification, the rate or amount of duty that he, she, or it believes proper, or that he, she, or it believes that the merchandise should be excluded from entry under the custom laws, and (3) the reasons for his, her, or its belief (including, in appropriate instances, the reasons for his or her belief that countervailing duties or antidumping duties should be assessed)."

(c) Subsection 516(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) If, after receipt and consideration of a petition filed as provided in subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary decides that the appraised value of the merchandise is not correct, that the classification of the article or the rate or amount of duty assessed thereon is not correct, that countervailing duties or antidumping duties should be assessed pursuant to determinations previously made under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or a finding issued under section 201 of the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended, or that the merchandise should be excluded from entry under the customs laws, he or she shall decide the rate or amount of duty, whether countervailing, or antidumping duties should be assessed or that entry of the merchandise should be prohibited and the decision shall be immediately published in the Federal Register.

"(A) Except for countervailing duty and antidumping duty purposes, all such merchandise entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption more than thirty days after the date such notice to the petitioner is published in the Federal Register shall be appraised or classified or assessed as to rate or amount of duty or permitted or denied entry in accordance with the Secretary's determination.

"(B) For countervailing duty and antidumping duty purposes, the determination of the Secretary under this subdivision shall be effective with respect to merchandise entered or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption on or after the date upon which the Secretary's determination is published in the Federal Register.

"(2) If the Secretary decides (a) that such merchandise is not subject of a prior determination under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or a finding issued under section 201 of the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended, or (b) that conditions or practices have materially changed since such prior determination or finding was made and that there are reasonable grounds to initiate an investigation under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or section 201 of the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended, to determine whether countervailing duties or antidumping duties should be assessed on such merchandise, or (c) that a prior determination under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or section 201 of the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended, was not correct, he or she shall treat the petition as a request for a proceeding under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or section 201 of the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended, and shall so inform the petitioner, and the procedures set forth therein shall thereafter apply. A decision rendered by the Secretary under this subsection to so treat the petition shall not be subject to judicial review."

(d) Subsection 516(c) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) If the Secretary decides that the appraised value or classification of the articles or the rate or amount of duty or the entry of merchandise under the customs laws with respect to which a petition was filed pursuant to subsection (a) of this section is correct or that countervailing or antidumping duties should not be imposed, he or she shall so inform the petitioner.

"(2) If dissatisfied with the decision of the Secretary, the petitioner may, except as provided in subsection (d) of this section, file with the Secretary, not later than thirty days after the date of the decision, notice that he, she, or it desires to contest the appraised value or classification of, or rate or amount of duty assessed upon, or the failure to assess countervailing duties or antidumping duties upon, or the entry of the merchandise designated in the petition.

"(3) Upon receipt of notice from the petitioner, the Secretary shall cause publication to be made in the Federal Register of his decision as to the proper appraised value or classification or rate or amount of duty or that countervailing duties or antidumping duties should not be assessed, or of the decision to permit entry of the merchandise under the customs laws and of the petitioner's desire to contest, and shall thereafter furnish the petitioner with such information as to the entries and consignees of such merchandise, entered or denied entry after the publication of the decision of the Secretary at such ports of entry designated by the petitioner in his or her notice of desire to contest, as will enable the petitioner to contest the entry of the merchandise into the United States or the appraised value or classification of, or rate or amount of duty imposed upon or failure to assess appropriate countervailing duties or antidumping duties upon, such merchandise in the liquidation of one such entry at such port. The Secretary shall direct the customs officer at such ports to notify the petitioner by mail immediately when the first of such entries is liquidated.

"(4) Any person (except a person specified in section 514(b)(1) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended) adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision of the Secretary made pursuant to subsection (b)(1) or (c) of this section, in response to the petition of an American manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler as provided in subsection (a) of this section is entitled to judicial review as provided in subsection (i) of this section."

(e) Subsection 516(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d)(1) Within 30 days after a determination by the Secretary under section 201 of the Anti-dumping Act, 1921, as amended, that a class or kind of foreign merchandise is not being, or is not likely to be sold in the United States at less than fair value, or under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, that a bounty or grant is not being paid or bestowed, and only within such time, an American manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler of merchandise of the same class or kind as that specified in the determination of the Secretary may file with the Secretary a written notice of a desire to contest the determination. Upon receipt of such notice the Secretary shall cause publication to be made in the Federal Register of the notice of desire to contest the determination. Within 30 days after publication, the petitioner may commence an action in the United States Customs Court contesting the determination.

"A petitioner may also challenge, pursuant to subsection 1 of this section, (1) the rejection of a petition by the Secretary as containing insufficient information or as failing, as a matter of law, to allege dumping or a bounty or grant, or (B) the discontinuance, under section 201 of the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended, of an antidumping investigation. If the court determines that the Secretary erred in rejecting the petition, the court shall remand the matter to the Secretary in order to permit an investigation to be conducted.

"(2) Within 30 days after a determination by the United States International Trade Commission—

"(A) under section 201 of the Antidumping Act, of 1921, as amended, that an industry in the United States is not being or is not likely to be injured or is not prevented from being established, by reason of the importation of a class or kind of merchandise into the United States at a price which is or is likely to be less than its fair value, or

"(B) under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, that an industry in the United States is not being or is not likely to be injured or is not prevented from being established by reason of the importation into the United States of merchandise, otherwise free of duty, on which a bounty or grant is being paid or bestowed, and only within such time, an American manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler of merchandise of the same class or kind as that specified in the determination of the Commission may file with the Commission a written notice of a desire to contest the determination. Upon receipt of the notice the Commission shall cause publication to be made in the Federal Register of the notice of desire to contest the determination. Within 30 days after publication, the petitioner may commence on action in the United States Customs Court contesting the determination.

"(3)(A) Any suit instituted pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2) of this section shall be subject to judicial review as provided in section 2640(c) of title 28, United States Code.

"(B) Any person adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision of the Secretary or the Commission of a kind that is appealable by an American manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler pursuant to subsection (d)(1) or (d)(2) of this section, is entitled to judicial review as provided in subsection (i) of this section."

(f) Subsection 516(g) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(g) If the cause of action is sustained in whole or in part, on the merits and without remand for further proceedings by a decision of the United States Customs Court or of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals or of the United States Supreme Court: (1) merchandise of the character covered by the published determination of the Secretary or of the Commission which is entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption after the date of publication of the court decision in the weekly Customs Bulletin shall be subject to appraisement, classification, assessment of duty and entry in accordance with the final judicial decision in the action; Provided that: in the event a judicial decision relating to (a) a decision of the Secretary of the Treasury under section 201 of the Antidumping Act, as amended, or (b) a decision of the Secretary under section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, relating to merchandise which is free of duty, no additional duties shall be assessed unless and until the Commission makes the affirmative determinations required under subsection (b)(1) of section 303 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or section 201(a) of the Antidumping Act, as amended, whichever is applicable; and (2) the liquidation of entries covering such merchandise so entered or withdrawn shall, to the extent the court overrules the determination of the Secretary or of the Commission and from the time of such publication of the decision, be suspended until final disposition is made of the action.

Upon final disposition of the action, all entries the liquidation of which was or should have been suspended shall be liquidated, or if necessary, reliquidated in accordance with the final decision."

(g) Section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by adding the following new subsection (i):

"(i)(1) Any person adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision or determination of the Secretary or the United States International Trade Commission that is subject to judicial review under subsections (c)(4)(b) or (d)(C)(2) of this section, may file an action for such review in the Customs Court. Such action must be filed within thirty days of the decision or determination, or, if notice of the decision is required to be published, within thirty days of publication, whichever is later.

"(2) Upon the filing of an action for judicial review under subsection (1) of this subsection, the Customs Court shall review the record of the decision of the Secretary or the United States International Trade Commission. The Court may affirm the decision or order that the entire matter be returned for further consideration, but the Court may not modify the decision.

"(3) In any action for limited judicial review under this section, the findings of fact of the Secretary or of the Commission shall be conclusive upon the Court and the parties. The decision shall be affirmed unless the Court determines that it was arbitrary, capricious, or contrary to the applicable statute.

"(4) Upon application of any party, the Court may make the action a preferred cause on its docket, but the Court may not suspend the effectiveness of the decision until final disposition of the action, including any appeals.

"(5) Except as specifically provided in subsection (c) and (d) of this section, the limited remedy provided in this subsection constitutes the exclusive form of judicial review of decisions of the Secretary and the United States International Trade Commission under sections 303 and 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and section 201 of the Antidumping Act, 1921, as amended."

(h) The amendments specified in this section shall become effective on the day following the date of its enactment: Provided, that nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to require the dismissal of any action otherwise validly brought before that date under former subsection 1582(b) of Title 28 of the United States Code to contest any failure of the Secretary of the Treasury to assess countervailing duties or antidumping duties, pursuant to subsection 516(c) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1516(c)), due to negative injury determinations by the United States International Trade Commission under section 323 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1303), or under section 201 of the Antidumping Act of 1921, as amended (19 U.S.C. 160).

SEC. 602. (a) Paragraph (b)(1) of section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by deleting the last sentence of the paragraph and by inserting in lieu thereof the following new provision:

"Except as otherwise provided in sections 485(b), 516, and 557(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, protests may be filed with respect to merchandise which is the subject of a decision specified in subsection (a) of this section by (a) the importers or consignees shown on the entry papers; (b) any person paying any charge or exaction; (c) any person seeking entry or delivery; (d) any person filing a claim for drawback; or, (e) any authorized agent of any of the persons specified in (a)-(d).

"A surety may file a protest if it has paid all or part of the duties due and the insured has failed to file a protest. Notwithstanding subparagraph (2) of this subsection, a protest may be filed by a surety only within ninety days of the date of liquidation or ninety days from the date of notice of delinquency, whichever is later; Provided, that the surety certifies in the protest that it is not filing the protest on behalf of another party who is entitled to file a protest but because of mistake, inadvertence or misunderstanding failed to file a protest within the time specified in subparagraph (2) of this subsection. If the protest filed by the surety is granted or if the protest is denied and the surety institutes an action in the Customs Court, any recovery of the surety shall be limited to the amount of duties it paid."

(b) Paragraph (a) of section 514 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end of the first sentence the following:

"A protest against a liquidation does not include a protest against the other types of decisions specified in this paragraph."

TITLE VII—TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Sec. 701. The first sentence of paragraph (a) of section 250 of the Trade Act of 1974 is amended by deleting all that appears after "United States" and by inserting in lieu thereof "Court of Customs and Patent Appeals".

Sec. 702. (a) The second sentence of the second paragraph of paragraph (b) of section 641 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by deleting all that appears after "filing," and before "sixty," and by inserting in lieu thereof "the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, within".

(b) The second paragraph of paragraph (b) of section 641 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by adding the following new sentence immediately after the third sentence of that paragraph "For purposes of this paragraph, all relevant rules prescribed in accordance with sections 2072 and 2112 of title 28, United States Code, shall be applicable to the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals."

SEC. 703. Section 1340 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new sentence—

"The Customs Court shall possess jurisdiction over any civil action, not within its exclusive jurisdiction, arising under any act of Congress providing for revenue from imports or tonnage upon transfer from a district court as provided in sections 1592 and 1594 of title 28, United States Code."

SEC. 704. Section 1355 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new sentence—

"The Customs Court shall have jurisdiction of any such action or proceeding upon transfer from a district court as provided in section 1592 of title 28, United States Code."

SEC. 705. Section 1356 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new sentence—

"The Customs Court shall have jurisdiction of any such action or proceeding upon transfer from a district court as provided in section 1592 of title 28, United States Code."

SEC. 706. Section 751 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new paragraph (f)—

"(f) When the Customs Court is sitting in a judicial district, other than the Southern and Eastern Districts of New York, the clerk of each district court, or an authorized deputy clerk, with the approval of the district court, shall act in the district as clerk of the Customs Court, in accordance with rules and orders of the Customs Court, for all purposes relating to the case then pending before that court."

SEC. 707. Section 1491 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the word "suits" where it first appears in the first sentence of the second paragraph of that section the following: "within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Customs Court, or".

SEC. 708. Section 2414 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after "court" in the first sentence of the first paragraph of that section the following "or Customs Court."

SEC. 709. Section 1919 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the word "court" where it first appears, the following: "or the Customs Court."

SEC. 710. Chapter 125 of title 28 is amended by adding a new section thereto as follows:

"§ 1963a. Registration of judgments of the Customs Court.

"A judgment in an action for the recovery of money or property entered by the Customs Court which has become final by appeal or expiration of time for appeal may be registered in any district by filing therein a certified copy of such judgment. A judgment so registered shall have the same effect as a judgment of the district court of the district where registered and may be enforced in like manner.

"A certified copy of the satisfaction of any judgment in whole or in part may be registered in like manner in any district in which the judgment is a lien."

SEC. 711. Section 1331 of title 28, United States Code, as amended, is amended by adding the following new sentence—

"The district courts shall not possess jurisdiction pursuant to this section over any matter within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Customs Court."

SEC. 712. Paragraph (a) of section 2602 of title 28, United States Code is amended by deleting all that appears after "appeals" and before "shall" and by inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: "arising under sections 1585 and 1591 of this title or sections 516(c) or 516(d) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended."

SEC. 713. Section 3 of the Act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. 119), is amended to read as follows—

"The decision of the Commissioner of Customs on all questions of interpretation growing out of the execution of the laws relating to the collection of tonnage tax and to the refund of such tax when collected erroneously or illegally, shall be subject to judicial review in the Customs Court as provided in title 28, United States Code; Provided that, in the Customs Court, and upon appeal, if any, from that court, the findings of the Commissioner as to any fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive."

SEC. 714. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) The provisions of section 2631 as contained in section 402 of this Act shall become effective as to entries liquidated on and after the date of enactment;

(b) All other provisions of this Act shall become effective upon the date of enactment; Provided that, this Act shall not cause the dismissal of any action instituted prior to the date of enactment under the then existing jurisdictional statutes concerning the Customs Court or the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

By Mr. MATHIAS:

S. 2859. A bill to quitclaim certain property in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, to the Little Sisters of the Poor; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

LITTLE SISTERS OF THE POOR

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill which would quitclaim certain property within the city of Washington, D.C., to the Little Sisters of the Poor.

In 1893, Congress closed certain alleys in the District of Columbia which run through a block owned by the Little Sisters. The use of the land was conveyed to the adjacent owners. Until recently, this property has been used as a home for the aged poor. The act of December 21, 1893 included a reversion clause, however, which would invalidate the conveyance at such time as the land ceased to be used for charitable purposes.

The Little Sisters of the Poor have now moved their home away from this property and wish to sell it. Such a sale cannot be completed however, unless the Congress takes steps to remove the reverter clause included in the original 1893 conveyance. This bill will convey all title and interest of the United States in these alleys and allow the Little Sisters of the Poor to sell the property.●

By Mr. HASKELL (for himself, Mr. HATHAWAY, Mr. MCGOVERN, and Mr. RIEGLE):

S. 2862. A bill to provide for the regularization of administrative practices and procedures, better congressional control of Federal regulations, periodic review of existing regulations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs and the Committee on the Judiciary, jointly by unanimous consent.

REGULATORY CONTROL ACT

● Mr. HASKELL. Mr. President, every day we hear complaints that Government has become too big—that it is faceless, unresponsive, insensitive, cumbersome, meddlesome, bewildering, and even intimidating. One major criticism is that we lawmakers pass too many pieces of legislation in our efforts to better a very complex society.

Far too often, we who legislate forget the vital next step. After the President signs a bill, the new law enters the domain of the rulemaker.

Because many of the bills we pass are "policy in theory" rather than "policy in practice," our laws which we intended to simplify matters, become hopelessly mired in too many rules and regulations.

Every law spawns a host of regulations which in turn generate a crowd of amendments as the rules are fine tuned to fit a maze of changing circumstances.

All of this begets piles of paperwork. Out of the controlled chaos comes government documents, pronouncements, directives, "action memorandums," and rules. Enough paper each year, in its final approved version, to fill 51 major league baseball stadiums or erect 11 new Washington Monuments, a 1974 study says.

And much of this mountain is not innocuous paper. It is backed with the might of the law and can be followed by fines, loss of Federal aid, harassment, even imprisonment. The extent of regulation is having the net effect of sapping creativity, inhibiting private enterprise, and transforming people's perception of government.

To further complicate the soup, "regulationese," a language spoken only by the initiated, has become the predominant tongue of the land.

Last month President Carter acted to remedy "regulationese" by issuing an Executive order directing heads of bureaus and agencies to use plain English in regulation writing. This was a necessary and vital first step.

But it is time Congress acted to stem the costly and duplicative cause of the problem: insufficient direction.

We must start with more carefully crafted legislation and more effective oversight.

In theory Congress should make the policy and leave the particulars to the Government experts. The laws should be the skeleton, the rules and regulations should be the flesh.

But in practice the legal bones become weighted down.

In their effort to do a proper job, rule writers have been overzealous, trying to cover all nuances and answer all comments at every turn. Sometimes their guidelines will cover situations never intended by Congress.

While bureaucrats most often are the object of scorn, many of them suffer right along with the public from overregulation. They are the ones who must contend with a rule written for every action. They have just as much trouble trying to tiptoe through the regulation minefield, making those perilous trips quite frequently.

Congress deserves much of the scorn. In our eagerness to pass laws we are, at times, too anxious to include a clause for a constituent or special interest group, too vague in our directions to the Departments, too lax in our oversight responsibilities. The Regulatory Control Act has the following major provisions:

First. Require the General Accounting Office to report to the Congress "on the timeliness, workability, and consistency with law" of all new rules and regulations.

Second. Require the executive to periodically submit all rules and regulations subject to the Administrative Procedures Act to the same regimen of public comment and review required when the rule or regulation is originally promulgated. Such review would occur every 5 years.

Third. Require each committee reporting a bill or resolution to select one of five options delineating the degree of regulatory discretion permitted the executive and specifying Congress authority to approve or reject the rule or regulation.

The bill is essentially a step toward making Congress accountable for the rules which are fostered by its legislation. Congressional eagerness to pass more and more legislation could be stemmed by these new responsibilities. And hopefully we will witness less quantity and more quality.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2862

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Regulatory Control Act".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that:

(1) the issuance of complicated, duplicative, and unnecessary rules and regulations imposes a great cost on the economy, alienates the public, and depletes the Federal budget;

(2) some rules and regulations are promulgated which are inconsistent with the law pursuant to which they are authorized;

(3) some rules and regulations become dated by new conditions arising subsequent to their promulgation;

(4) adequate procedures for pericdic review of rules and regulations by the Congress and the Executive do not now exist;

(5) the Congress lacks an institutional framework to anticipate and analyze the regulatory impact of legislation which it enacts;

(6) once a rule or regulation has been promulgated the public has no adequate mechanism to cause high level Executive review of a problem rule or regulation, nor to impact on such review when it may occur;

(b) It is the purpose of this Act to provide that:

(1) Congress exercise responsibility for reviewing rules and regulations for their consistency with the law;

(2) the Executive periodically resubmit rules and regulations to the substantive scrutiny and public criticism required when they are originally promulgated;

(3) the Congress discipline itself to insure the passage of thoughtful, responsible legislation which will not result in complicated, unworkable, excessive, or duplicative rules or regulations.

REGULATORY SUNSET

SEC. 3. Every rule or regulation subject to the provisions of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, shall, not later than the fifth anniversary of the effective date of such rule or regulation and thereafter periodically every five years, be reviewed by the agency promulgating such rule or regulation in the same manner as provided under section 553 of title 5, United States Code.

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE REVIEW

SEC. 4. The Comptroller General of the United States shall participate in the original promulgation and subsequent public review of all rules and regulations authorized by section 3 of this Act or otherwise under chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, and report to the Congress on the timeliness, workability, and consistency with law of all such rules and regulations.

LEGISLATIVE CONTROL

SEC. 5. Section 133 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (2 U.S.C. 19(a) is amended by redesignating subsections (g) and (h) as subsections (h) and (i), respectively, and by inserting immediately after subsection (i) the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) Each committee of the Congress which reports a bill or resolution shall designate one of the following rulemaking options which shall be applied to such device should it become law on a title-by-title or section-by-section basis:

"(A) No regulations shall be required for specified titles or sections or for the entire bill or resolution. However, if changing circumstances should prompt the executive department or agency charged with responsibility for the implementation of the provisions of a bill should it become law to seek to issue regulations under such Act, such regulations shall be submitted to the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate having legislative jurisdiction or oversight responsibilities with respect to such agency and such law for approval as part of the rule making process.

"(B) Proposed regulations shall require approval by the appropriate committees of the Senate or the House of Representatives.

"(C) Proposed regulations shall be subject to a veto by either House of Congress within a specified period of time.

"(D) Proposed regulations shall require approval by one House of Congress.

"(E) None of the foregoing requirements of Congressional review shall be applicable.

"(2) In any report accompanying any legislative measure the reporting committee shall specifically explain its reasons for selecting one of the rulemaking options set forth in paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a bill introduced earlier by Senator HASKELL, for himself and others, to provide for the regularization of administrative practices and procedures, better congressional control of Federal regulations, periodic review of existing regulations, and for other purposes, be jointly referred to the Committees on Judiciary and Governmental Affairs.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 2141

At the request of Mr. SCHWEIKER, the Senator from Michigan (Mr. RIEGLE) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2141, a bill to facilitate the naturalization of applicants who are 50 years old and have lived in the United States for 20 years.

S. 2295

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. MARK O. HATFIELD) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2295, the Families with Alcoholism Assistance Act of 1977.

S. 2462

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2462, a bill to permit a limited individual retirement deduction to individuals who are participants in retirement plans.

S. 2505

At the request of Mr. JAVITS, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. LAXALT) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2505, a bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that certain handicapped individuals shall be eligible for medical assistance.

S. 2564

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON) and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) were added as cosponsors of S. 2564, a bill to amend the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.

S. 2809

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the Senator from Minnesota (Mrs. HUMPHREY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2809, a bill to amend the National School Lunch Act.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 73

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), the Senator from Vermont (Mr. STAFFORD), the Senator from California (Mr. HAYAKAWA), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. MATSUNAGA), the Senator from Utah (Mr. GARN), and the Senator from Indiana (Mr. LUGAR) were added as cosponsors of Senate Concurrent Resolution 73, regarding the imposition of import fees on crude oil.

SENATE RESOLUTION 429—SUBMISSION OF A RESOLUTION TO DISAPPROVE ENERGY ACTION DOE NO. 1

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. BROOKE, and Mr. STAFFORD) submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

S. RES. 429

Resolved, That the Senate does not favor the energy action numbered DOE No. 1 transmitted to Congress on April 4, 1978.

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask its appropriate referral a Senate resolution disallowing an "energy action" filed by the President regarding the strategic petroleum reserve plan.

The energy action in question expands to 1 billion barrels the strategic reserve of the United States. This is an important objective, one for which there is substantial support in the Congress. It is not my intention to express disapproval for this portion of the plan and I anticipate the Congress would approve an amended version of this energy action if submitted.

My objection goes to that portion of the energy action which stipulates that a 20 million regional reserve of petroleum product should be stored at a cost no higher than that for salt domes in the Gulf Coast.

I believe this submission by the Department of Energy should be rejected for two reasons: First, because a major study of the potential for storage in Canada has not been completed by the United States and Canadian Governments; and, second, because the Congress should not agree to the principle that a reserve established to guarantee our national security must be judged solely on the basis of a uniform cost, using as a ceiling the least expensive site available.

When the Congress accepted in 1976 an amendment I offered to the Energy Policy and Conservation Act to guarantee regional reserves no one contemplated that the legal requirement could be met by designating a quantity of oil in Louisiana for use in New England. Oil in Louisiana will not prevent prices from skyrocketing if another embargo is imposed. Nor can we be satisfied that tankers will be available and can navigate to northern ports in emergency situations.

It is not simply the size of strategic reserve but its location and its influence on the market and consumer behavior which must be considered. In this light, the energy action should be rejected.

The recognition that at least 20 million barrels for New England will be needed is a step forward. The recognition that this reserve should be in the form of product is also a step forward. However, if the Senate should adopt my resolution, the Department of Energy, on behalf of the President, is free to resubmit this energy action at any time without the stipulation on to the cost of storage or such other provisions as might be found objectionable by other Members of the Senate.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 431—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED RELATING TO EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

Mr. GLENN (for Mr. RIBICOFF), from the Committee on Governmental Affairs, reported the following original resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Human Resources, pursuant to section 310 of Senate Resolution 110, 95th Congress, 1st session, for not to exceed 60 days:

S. RES. 431

Resolved, That this resolution may be cited as the "Lee Metcalf Fair Employment Relations Resolution".

PURPOSE

SEC. 2. It is the purpose of this resolution to implement the provisions of rule L of the Standing Rules of the Senate, which will become effective on January 3, 1979, by establishing a Senate Fair Employment Relations Board, a Senate Fair Employment Relations Office, and procedures for hearing and settling complaints alleging violations of rule L by Members, officers, and employees of the Senate.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For purposes of this resolution, the term—

(1) "Board" means the Senate Fair Employment Relations Board established by section 101;

(2) "Office" means the Senate Fair Employment Relations Office established by section 201;

(3) "Director" means the Director of the Senate Fair Employment Relations Office established by section 201;

(4) "employee of the Senate" means any individual who is an employee of the Senate, or is treated as an employee of the Senate, for purposes of the Senate Code of Official Conduct;

(5) "complainant" means an employee of the Senate or other individual who applies for a position in the Senate and who files a complaint under section 302;

(6) "respondent" means a Member, officer, or employee of the Senate against whom a complaint is filed under section 302;

(7) "office of the Senate" includes the office of a Senator;

(8) "rule L" means rule L of the Standing Rules of the Senate; and

(9) "supervisor" has the meaning given to it by paragraph 12 of the rule XLV of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

TITLE I—FAIR EMPLOYMENT RELATIONS BOARD

ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 101. (a) There is established an office of the Senate to be known as the Senate Fair Employment Relations Board. The Board shall consist of six members, selected from among individuals in the private sector, who have a demonstrated commitment to fair employment relations—

(1) three of whom shall be appointed by, and may be removed by, the Majority Leader of the Senate with the approval, by majority vote, of the Conference of the Majority; and

(2) three of whom shall be appointed by, and may be removed by, the Minority Leader of the Senate with the approval, by majority vote, of the Conference of the Minority.

No individual who has served as a Member, officer, or employee of the Senate or the House of Representatives or as an officer or employee of the Congress may be appointed as a member of the Board during the three-year period following the termination of his or her service as such a Member, officer, or employee.

(b) Each member of the Board shall be appointed for a term of four years commencing with the day after the expiration of the term of his or her predecessor, except that of the members first appointed—

(1) one member appointed by the Majority Leader and one member appointed by the Minority Leader (as designated by the respective Leaders) shall be appointed for a term of two years commencing on the day on which this resolution is agreed to; and

(2) two members appointed by the Majority Leader and two members appointed by the Minority Leader (as designated by the respective Leaders) shall be appointed for a term of four years commencing on such day.

Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of a term shall be appointed only for the unexpired portion of such term. Any member serving at the expiration of a term may continue to serve until his or her successor is appointed.

(c) The Board shall elect one of its members to serve as Chairperson.

(d) A quorum of the Board shall consist of four members, but no action of the Board in performing the functions and duties specified in paragraphs (1) and (3) of section 104(a) or in appointing or removing the Director under section 201 may be taken except with the concurrence of a majority of the members holding office.

(e) The Board is authorized to delegate to the Chairperson or any other member of the Board the authority to approve on behalf of the Board those actions of the Director which require approval of the Board under sections 201, 202, and 203.

COMPENSATION

SEC. 102. Each member of the Board shall receive compensation equal to the daily equivalent of the salary of the Secretary of the Senate for each day on which the member is engaged in performing his or her duties as a member of the Board and in traveling from or to his or her home to attend meetings of the Board. Each member shall also be entitled to reimbursement for transportation costs and actual travel expenses while so traveling in the same amounts as are payable to employees of the Senate.

MEETINGS; ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES

SEC. 103. (a) The Board shall meet at least once every three months and shall also meet upon call of the Chairperson or of a majority of the members holding office. Notice of any meeting of the Board shall be given to all members at least three days prior to such meeting.

(b) All necessary administrative services required by the Board shall be furnished by the Office.

FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES

SEC. 104. (a) It shall be the function and duty of the Board—

(1) to establish and publish policies and guidelines for the implementation and enforcement of rule L;

(2) to supervise the actions of the Director and the operations of the Office through the Director; and

(3) to hear and determine complaints alleging violations of rule L in accordance wih title III.

(b) In order to carry out its functions and duties under title III, the Board is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation (subject to applicable limitations imposed by or pursuant to law on the salaries of employees of the Senate) of such number of hearing examiners as may be necessary. Any such hearing examiner may be appointed on a temporary (not to exceed one year) or intermittent basis and any hearing examiner so appointed may be paid, for each day on which he or she performs services, not in excess of the daily equivalent of the highest salary which may be paid to a hearing examiner appointed on a permanent basis.

(c) The Board may adopt such regulations as it determines necessary to carry out its duties and functions.

PAYMENT OF EXPENSES

SEC. 105. The expenses of the Board (including compensation of members of the Board and hearing examiners) shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate pursuant to appropriations made to the contingent fund for such purpose. Until funds are first so appropriated, such salaries and expenses shall be paid from the contingent fund out of funds appropriated for "Miscellaneous Items". Such salaries and expenses shall be paid out of the contingent fund upon vouchers approved by the Chairperson, except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees paid at an annual rate.

TITLE II—SENATE FAIR EMPLOYMENT RELATIONS OFFICE

ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 201. (a) There is established an office of the Senate to be known as the Senate Fair Employment Relations Office. The Office shall be headed by a Director who shall be appointed by, and shall serve at the pleasure of the Board. The Director shall receive compensation at an annual rate fixed by the Board but not in excess of the highest rate of compensation which may be paid to an employee of a committee of the Senate under section 105(e)(3)(A) of the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act, 1968, as amended and modified (2 U.S.C. 61–1).

(b) The Director, with the approval of the Board, shall appoint and fix the compensation (subject to applicable salary limitations imposed by or pursuant to law on the salaries of employees of the Senate) of such personnel as may be necessary to carry out the duties and functions of the Office. All personnel of the Office shall be appointed without regard to political affiliation and solely on the basis of their fitness to perform their duties.

(c) In carrying out the functions and duties of the Office, the Director, with the approval of the Board, may procure the temporary (not to exceed one year) or intermittent services of experts or consultants or organizations thereof by contract as independent contractors, or, in the case of individual experts or consultants, by employment at rates of pay not in excess of the daily equivalent of the highest rate of compensation which may be paid to employees of the Office appointed on a permanent basis.

(d) The Director may prescribe the duties and responsibilities of the personnel of the Office, and delegate to them authority to perform any of the functions and duties imposed on the Office or on the Director, with the exception of the submission of reports under sections 302 (b) and (c).

FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES

SEC. 202. (a) In addition to the functions and duties imposed on it by title III, the Office shall (1) develop procedures to implement the policies and guidelines of the Board to encourage full compliance with rule L by all Members, officers, and employees of the Senate and (2) perform such other functions as may be prescribed by the Board.

(b) The Office shall gather and maintain information with respect to each category of employees and individuals who are afforded equal employment opportunity by rule L, including, to the extent possible, information relating to individuals who apply for positions on the staffs of committees and offices of the Senate. The Office shall also gather and maintain information with respect to the employment practices of committees and offices of the Senate. Each year the Director, with the approval of the Board, shall submit to the Senate a report with respect to the information gathered under this subsection. Each report after the first report shall contain a comparison and evaluation of the data contained in such report with the data contained in prior reports.

(c) Upon the request of any committee or office of the Senate, the Office shall submit to such committee or office its recommendations for improvements in the employment practices of such committee or office. The Office shall assist the placement office with the development of procedures to collect and disseminate applications submitted by individuals from categories which are afforded equal employment opportunity by rule L.

(d) The Office shall review the procedudes and practices for receiving, hearing, and settling complaints of alleged violations of rule L under title III and make recommendations regarding the continuation or improvement of such procedures. Not later than January 3, 1981, the Director, with the approval of the Board, shall submit to the Senate the results of such review, together with his, or her recommendations. Such report shall be referred to the appropriate committee or committees of the Senate which, within one hundred and eighty days after the date of referral, shall submit their recommendations on the report of the Senate.

SUPPLIES; PAYMENT OF EXPENSES

SEC. 203. (a) The Director is authorized to procure such books, stationery, and other supplies as may be necessary for the proper performance of the functions and duties of the Office. The Architect of the Capitol and the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate shall furnish the Office such furniture and office equipment as may be necessary.

(b) The expenses of the Office (including salaries) shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate pursuant to appropriations made to the contingent fund for such purpose. Until funds are first so appropriated, such salaries and expenses shall be paid from the contingent fund out of funds appropriated for "Miscellaneous items". Such salaries and expenses shall be paid out of the contingent fund upon vouchers signed by the Director and approved by the Board, except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees paid at an annual rate.

TITLE III—COMPLAINTS OF VIOLATIONS OF EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY

PART A—COUNSELING AND CONCILIATION

COUNSELING AND ASSISTANCE

SEC. 301. (a) Any employee of the Senate, or other individual who applies for a position in the Senate, who believes that he or she is being or has been discriminated against in violation of rule L may make a request to the Office for counseling and assistance. The Director shall designate employees of the Office to serve as counselors. Counselors shall advise employees and other individuals as to their rights under rule L and furnish such other advice and assistance as may be requested with respect to the application of rule L. No written statement shall be required for an employee or other individual to receive counseling and assistance under this section.

(b) Counseling under this section must be requested within sixty days of the action giving rise to the alleged discrimination, unless the Director authorizes counseling after such sixty-day period or unless the alleged discrimination is based upon a continuing practice or policy.

INFORMAL COMPLAINTS AND CONCILIATION

SEC. 302. (a) Any employee of the Senate, or other individual who applies for a position in the Senate, who believes that he or she is being or has been discriminated against in violation of rule L may, within twenty days after counseling is requested under section 301, file an informal complaint with the Director. Such an informal complaint may be filed only against an individual whom the complainant believes actually participated in the alleged violation or the individual who has authority to remedy the alleged violation, or both. Such an informal complaint shall consist of a brief written statement of the alleged violation. The Director shall furnish a copy of such informal complaint to the respondent and, if the respondent is an officer or employee, shall furnish a copy of such informal complaint to the respondent's supervisor.

(b) Upon the filing of an informal complaint under subsection (a), the Director shall collect information concerning the alleged violation. Within forty-five days after the date of filing, the Director shall submit a report to the Board with respect to such informal complaint and shall furnish copies of such report to the complainant and respondent and, if the respondent is an officer or employee, shall furnish a copy of such report to the respondent's supervisor.

(c)(1) If as a result of the information collected under subsection (b), the Director determines that there is no reason to believe that a violation of rule L may have occurred, he or she shall so state in the report submitted pursuant to such subsection, together with his or her reasons for such determination.

(2) If as a result of the information collected under subsection (b), the Director determines that there is reason to believe a violation of rule L may have occurred, he or she shall attempt to resolve such violation by informal means. If an informal agreement between the complainant and respondent is reached, the Director shall so state in the report submitted pursuant to such subsection. If an informal agreement between the complainant and the respondent is not reached, the Director shall include his or her findings in the report submitted pursuant to such subsection.

PART B—FORMAL COMPLAINTS AND HEARINGS

FILING OF FORMAL COMPLAINTS

SEC. 311. (a) If the report of the Director under section 302 with respect to an informal complaint sets forth the Director's determination that there is reason to believe that a violation of rule L may have occurred but no agreement has been reached between the complainant and the respondent, then the complainant may, within thirty days after the date on which such report is submitted to the Board, file a formal complaint with the Board. A formal complaint shall be under oath and shall be in such form and set forth the basis of the complaint in such detail as the Board may prescribe by rule or regulation.

(b) If the report of the Director under section 302 sets forth the Director's determination that there is no reason to believe that a violation of rule L may have occurred, the complainant may request the Board to review such determination. Such request shall be in writing and shall be made within thirty days after the date on which such report is submitted to the Board. The Board shall complete its review within thirty days after such request is made and if it determines that there is reason to believe that a violation of rule L may have occurred, the complainant may, within thirty days after the date of the Board's determination, file a formal complaint under subsection (a).

HEARINGS

SEC. 312. (a) Each complaint filed under section 311 shall be assigned by the Board (or by such individual as the Board may designate) for a hearing by a hearing examiner appointed under section 104(b). The hearing examiner shall cause a copy of the complaint to be served on the respondent and, if the respondent is an officer or employee, shall furnish a copy of the complaint to the respondent's supervisor. The respondent shall be entitled to file, within ten days after such service, or within such longer time as the Board may permit, a formal answer to such complaint. A formal answer shall be under oath and shall be in such form as the Board may prescribe by rule or regulation.

(b) The hearing on a complaint shall be conducted expeditiously with a record in transcript form. Upon conclusion of the hearing, the hearing examiner shall submit to the Board a report containing his or her findings and recommendations (if any) for remedial action.

DECISIONS BY THE BOARD

SEC. 313. (a) The Board shall review the transcript and the findings and recommendations of the hearing examiner with respect to each complaint filed under section 311. If the Board finds that the hearing is incomplete, it may remand the case to the hearing examiner. The Board shall render a decision in each case within sixty days after the filing of the formal complaint, unless prior thereto the complainant and the respondent reach an agreement disposing of such case.

(b) If the Board determines in any case that there is or has been a violation of rule L, its decision shall include an order for such remedial action as it determines appropriate, except that no remedy may be ordered which the Board determines would result in undue benefit or undue hardship to the complainant or the respondent.

RULES; PROCEDURE

SEC. 314. The Board shall prescribe such rules or regulations as it determines proper to carry out the provisions of this part, including rules or regulations relating to the conduct of hearings and proceedings under this part and the rights and privileges of complainants and respondents in such hearings and proceedings. The Board shall publish all rules and regulations which it proposes to prescribe under this section and shall give interested persons on opportunity to comment thereon.

PART C—APPEALS TO SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS

APPEALS

SEC. 321. (a) A complainant or respondent who is aggrieved by a decision or order of the Board under section 313 may, within thirty days after the decision or order is issued, appeal the decision or order to the Select Committee on Ethics.

(b) Within sixty days after an appeal is filed under subsection (a), the Select Committee on Ethics shall render its decision with respect to such appeal. Such decision may affirm the decision or order of the Board, reverse such decision or order in whole or in part, or remand the case to the Board for further proceedings. In any case in which the select committee reverses a decision or order of the Board in whole or in part, if the select committee determines that there is or has been a violation of rule L, it may order such remedial action as it determines appropriate, except that no remedy may be ordered which the select committee determines would result in undue benefit or undue hardship to the complainant or the respondent.

PROCEDURE

SEC. 322. The Select Committee on Ethics shall prescribe such rules or regulations as it determines proper to carry out the provisions of section 321.

PART D—MISCELLANEOUS

REMEDIES

SEC. 331. (a) The remedial actions which may be specified in an order issued by the Board under section 313 or by the Select Committee on Ethics under section 321 include, but are not limited to—

(1) if the discrimination is failure or refusal to hire an individual, a requirement that such individual be employed within a specified period of time, or the payment of a specified sum to such individual, or both;

(2) if the discrimination is discharging an individual, a requirement that such individual be reemployed within a specified period of time, or the payment of a specified sum to such individual, or both;

(3) if the discrimination is with respect to the promotion or compensation of an individual, a requirement that such individual be promoted to or compensated at a specified level within a specified period of time, or the payment of a specified sum to such individual, or both; and

(4) if the discrimination is with respect to terms, conditions, or privileges of employment of an individual, a requirement that such terms, conditions, or privileges be changed within a specified period of time, or the payment of a specified sum to such individual, or both.

(b) Any payment ordered to be made to an individual under an order issued by the Board or the Select Committee on Ethics shall be made out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon a voucher signed by the Chairperson of the Board or the chairman of the select committee, as the case may be.

(c) No complainant or witness in a proceeding under this title shall be subject to any reprisal, interference, intimidation, or coercion by any Member, officer, or employee of the Senate as a result of filing such complaint or appearing as such a witness.

RECORDS; CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION

SEC. 332. (a) The records, files, and papers relating to each informal complaint filed under section 302, each formal complaint filed under section 311, and each appeal taken under section 321 shall constitute papers of the Senate and shall be retained for at least five years. All such information, including the existence of a case, shall be maintained on a confidential basis, and, except as provided in subsection (b) or as otherwise ordered by the Senate, such information shall not be disclosed to any person (other than the complainant and the respondent) and shall not be available for inspection other than by the Board, the Director and employees of the Office, and, with respect to any appeal taken under section 321, the Select Committee on Ethics.

(b) Decisions and orders of the Board under section 313 and decisions and orders of the Select Committee on Ethics under section 321 shall be made public.

COOPERATION BY COMMITTEES AND OFFICES

SEC. 333. Each committee and office of the Senate shall cooperate with the Board, the Office, and the Select Committee on Ethics in order that the functions and duties imposed on them by this resolution may be properly and effectively carried out.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 76—SUBMISSION OF A CONCURRENT RESOLUTION WITH RESPECT TO PRODUCTS OF HUNGARY

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD (for himself and Mr. BAKER) (by request) submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. CON. RES. 76

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress approves the extension of nondiscriminatory treatment with respect to the products of the Hungarian People's Republic transmitted by the President to the Congress on April 7, 1978.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED FOR PRINTING

FULL EMPLOYMENT AND BALANCED GROWTH ACT OF 1977—S. 50

AMENDMENT NO. 1765

(Ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.)

Mr. NELSON (for himself, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. HATHAWAY, and Mr. RIEGLE) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to amendment No. 1703 intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 50) to translate into practical reality the right of all adult Americans able, willing, and seeking to work to full opportunity for useful paid employment at fair rates of compensation, and for other purposes.

● Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, today I am submitting an amendment in the second degree to the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, S. 50, as amended by amendment No. 1703. This amendment will strengthen the employment, inflation, and price stability objectives of the legislation by increasing the sensitivity of Government policymakers to the needs and special problems of our Nation's smaller businesses.

Senators JAVITS, HATHAWAY, and RIEGLE have joined me as cosponsors of this amendment.

The Humphrey-Hawkins legislation has been endorsed by President Carter, and also has received widespread support from civil rights, church, small business, farm community, and other organizations representing millions of Americans. I cosponsored the legislation when it was introduced by Senator MURIEL HUMPHREY several weeks ago; the Subcommittee on Employment, Poverty, and Migratory Labor, which I chair, held 4 days of hearings on the bill, as amended, this session; and, I fully endorse the objectives of the bill.

The most important and essential provisions embodied in this legislation would establish an annual dialog among the executive branch of Government, the Congress, the Governors of the Federal Reserve Board and the American people to consider our fiscal and monetary policies and programs and to determine the appropriate roles the public and private sector should take with respect to employment, national growth, and inflation.

The Humphrey-Hawkins bill—if enacted—will not be a miracle cure for the American economy. But its passage would establish a constructive process which would enable the administration, Congress, the Federal Reserve, and interested and knowledgeable people from all over the country to formulate national economic goals and policies in an orderly framework, and to deal with economic problems on a coordinated basis.

One of the shortcomings of the bill, however, which was pointed out by Leon Keyserling, a former Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, and George Doyle, chairman of the Department of Economics at Assumption College, in the Employment, Poverty, and Migratory Labor Subcommittee's recent hearings, is its failure to give sufficient attention to the needs, problems and potential of small businesses. The purpose of this amendment is to give small businesses the attention they must be given in the highest councils of Government if the objectives established in the Humphrey-Hawkins bill are to succeed.

There are 13 million small businesses in the United States today. These range from the ma-and-pa corner store to fairly substantial businesses with many employees. Most are in the service sector—gasoline stations, fast-food restaurants, dry cleaners, retail stores, professional service businesses, independent proprietors in many lines of endeavor—but a large number also are manufacturing firms that produce high-quality consumer and investment goods.

Each and every one of these smaller businesses provides someone with a job and an income.

Altogether, small businesses account for about 55 percent of the nonagricultural jobs in the private sector and for nearly all of the agricultural jobs. This amounts to more than 50 million jobs. To achieve the job creation goals established in the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, small businesses should be given a prominent role.

Right now, most of the new jobs in our economy are created by new, small, dynamic independent businesses. This is a fact that is often overlooked or ignored because Government policies and programs, as well as the media, focus on this Nation's large corporations.

A recent study completed at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, published last year in the Senate Small Business Committee's print on "Small Business and the Quality of American Life," compared sales and job creation by 5 young high technology companies with the performance of 11 other companies composed of 5 older, innovative companies and 6 mature companies, between 1969 and 1974. The sales of the high technology companies grew an average of 42.5 percent during these 5 years, compared to 13.2 percent for the older, innovative companies and 11.4 percent for the six mature companies. The number of jobs in the high technology companies increased 40.7 percent compared to 4.5 percent in the innovative companies and 0.6 percent in the mature companies.

This study indicates that a rapid increase in jobs can be accomplished more efficiently by creating an atmosphere conducive to the creation and growth of young dynamic companies rather than by trying to bolster older or mature companies.

The findings of the MIT study are reinforced by data presented to the Small Business Legislative Council, an organization composed of a number of small business groups, on February 8, 1978. Congressman JOHN BRECKINRIDGE, chairman of the House Small Business Committee's Subcommittee on Antitrust, Consumers and Employment, testified that in the 7-year period, 1969 through 1976, the Nation's 1,000 largest manufacturing firms, as listed by Fortune magazine, created 74,897 new jobs. This amounts to less than 1 percent of the 9,583,000 jobs created in the whole economy during those 7 years.

Thus, while these largest 1,000 accounted for 19.1 percent of all jobs in 1976, they contributed virtually nothing to new job creation.

The compelling conclusion of these statistics is that smaller businesses have been the major source of new job opportunities. Therefore, it is extremely important that the Humphrey-Hawkins bill recognize the crucial role smaller businesses can have in this Nation's effort to provide job opportunities.

Small businesses also contribute significantly to the goal of reducing inflation and achieving price stability.

Small businesses are tough competitors. They have to be if they want to survive. The corporate giants—General Motors, Ford, Kellogg, ITT, Proctor and Gamble, Sears, and all the others—can use their multimillion-dollar advertising budgets to insure that they receive their share of aggregate consumer spending.

But a small business, without these resources, has to compete on price and quality. There is just no other way.

A strong small business sector, which constantly maintains tough market pressure on the corporate giants, is vital to holding inflation in check. Small businesses, to a great extent, prevent unreasonable and unjustifiable price increases from being imposed by large corporations.

In the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, several major goals are established for the purpose of guiding and directing Government economic policy—a reduction in unemployment, a reduction in the rate of inflation, and overall price stability.

The unemployment goals can be achieved directly by Government policies and programs. For example, tax incentives for the private sector, policies to stimulate capital formation and investment, and direct job creation all create employment opportunities.

But the goals of maintaining low rates of inflation and price stability cannot be achieved through Government policy in as direct a fashion. Wage and price controls, we have learned, can mask and hide inflation, but they cannot cure or alleviate the economic pressures that result in inflation. Experience in the past few years indicates that monetary and fiscal policies to harness economic growth do not work very well either, since reduced sales only create a situation in which firms raise their prices to protect their profit margins; a recent Joint Economic Committee study has demonstrated this phenomenon.

However, one of the most effective ways to hold down prices is to stimulate competition, and the Humphrey-Hawkins bill should recognize this.

That is part of the rationale for this amendment. It will strengthen our ability to achieve the inflation and price stability of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill by strengthening the role of small business in economic policymaking at the highest levels in our Government and help make future Government policies and programs more sensitive to the needs and problems of small business. It also will help to achieve the employment related objectives of this legislation.

First, the amendment makes the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers responsible both for advising the President and Congress on how economic issues and policies affect smaller businesses and for making policy recommendations to strengthen our small business sector.

No one in the White House now does this.

During his campaign for the Presidency in 1976, President Carter pledged to the National Small Business Association that he would establish an effective voice for small business in the White House. On December 15, 1977, I introduced legislation with other Senators that would help President Carter fulfill that campaign promise by creating a Council on Small Business in the Executive Office of the President, to consist of three individuals with the experience and knowledge needed to advise the President on small business issues.

The amendment I am introducing today would accomplish the same goal without creating a new organization in the White House or increasing the White House budget, since President Carter has made clear he does not want to do that.

The amendment accomplishes this by requiring the Council of Economic Advisers to undertake additional responsibilities set out in the following language:

It shall be the duty and function of the Council "to analyze and interpret the effects of government policies and programs on smaller businesses, and to recommend economic policies to (A) promote the creation and growth of smaller businesses, (B) increase competition and reduce the concentration of economic resources, (C) eliminate monopoly and other anticompetitive market structures, (D) increase the availability of capital and other resources at reasonable costs to smaller businesses and (E) make other appropriate recommendations to promote the establishment and growth of smaller businesses."

The Employment Act of 1946 now lists five duties for the Council which include helping the President prepare his annual economic report. Other duties and functions are: Gathering information, analyzing Government programs and policies as they affect employment and inflation, recommending economic policies, and preparing studies and reports requested by the President. This amendment adds a sixth function.

The Council of Economic Advisers has the prestige, the experience in economic matters, and the staff to implement this additional function.

To insure that the Council carries out this duty diligently, the amendment requires that the Council report annually on its accomplishments in this area as part of its own annual report to the President and Congress.

Second, this amendment expands the areas the Council of Economic Advisers can examine in considering measures which affect the structure of the economy. This amendment authorizes the Council to make: "recommendations to increase competition in the private sector and to improve the economic climate for the creation and growth of smaller businesses, including recommendations concerning the antitrust laws, the patent laws, and the internal revenue laws and regulations."

Last January 24 and 25 the Senate Small Business Committee held hearings on the status of competition in the American economy and received testimony on the need to establish a Competition Review Commission as proposed in legislation (S. 2071) introduced by Senators HATHAWAY and HART. FTC Chairman Mike Pertschuk and U.S. Assistant Attorney General for Antitrust John Shenefield both testified at these hearings, along with a number of private witnesses.

Although the witnesses had varying opinions on which issues a Competition Review Commission should study, they all agreed that the impact of the antitrust laws, the patent laws, and the internal revenue laws and regulations on the structure of our economy, and on the ability of small businesses to survive and complete had not been sufficiently studied.

For example, Assistant Attorney General Shenefield recently wrote Senator HATHAWAY a followup letter to the hearing in which he stated:

During my testimony on January 24, 1978, before the Select Committee on Small Business on S. 2071, you requested that I submit to you a list of suggestions for a focused inquiry by the Congress or a specially created study commission into timely issues relating to the state of competition in our economy.

We believe that two areas are particularly worthy of such consideration at this time. The relationship between the federal tax laws and competition has never been adequately explored. The tax laws may be primarily responsible for the evolution of many business structures and methods of operation, and the public interest would be served by a detailed examination of those effects. * * *

FTC Chairman Pertschuk also was asked to submit his suggestions for issue areas concerning competition that needed further study and investigation. He replied:

Certainly, the study of the effect on competition of federal laws, regulations, and contract and bidding policies called for by Section 4(a) of the [Competition Review Act] is important and ought to be undertaken. Such an analytic overview would be invaluable to the continuing evolution of a rational government-wide competition policy.

These two Government officials, who administer and enforce the antitrust laws and the other laws which aim at stimulating competition in our economy, both have stated that there are a number of factors affecting competition in our economy that need to be studied and given close attention.

This amendment to the Humphrey-Hawkins bill will take these issues right into the highest levels of economic policymaking—the Council of Economic Advisers, the President, and the Congress.

The Council will have to examine issues relating to competitiveness within the American economy. The President and Congress also will have an opportunity to examine these issues after the Council reports.

This process should help generate a coherent competition policy that will lead to an economic climate conducive to the creation and growth of smaller competitive businesses thus helping to keep down inflation, provide new jobs, and contribute to price stability throughout the economy.

Third, this amendment proposes new language to section 207 of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, the section of the legislation which is concerned with capital formation. The amendment would add to the congressional findings that an important goal of national policy shall be to remove obstacles that hinder the free flow of resources into new investment "particularly those obstacles that hinder the creation and growth of smaller businesses because general national programs and policies to aid and stimulate private enterprise are not sufficient to deal with the special problems and needs of smaller businesses."

Further, this amendment includes language to assure that the President shall recommend, as appropriate, new programs or modifications to improve existing programs concerned with private capital formation "in both small and larger businesses and industries."

The availability of capital to smaller businesses is a problem this country has had for many years, but it has become particularly acute during the past 3 or 4 years. Both equity and loan capital has virtually dried up for small businesses.

The Small Business Committee has compiled figures which show that during the years 1974–76 only 41 smaller companies, with net worth of $5 million or less, were able to sell stock to the public compared to 698 such companies in 1969. In 1975, only three small companies were able to sell any stock to the public, compared to 208 stock issues by larger companies.

This declining ability of smaller companies to raise equity capital is further demonstrated by the fact that the average size, in terms of total dollars of stock issues rose from $4.4 million in 1969 to $29.5 million in 1976.

This lockout of smaller businesses is widely acknowledged throughout the business community. For example, Business Week recently reported:

> For some years now, capital market(s) have been pretty much open only to the nation's big companies, the top 1,000 or so corporation.

Mr. President, this lack of capital for smaller businesses places these business concerns at a disadvantage in their ability to compete with larger corporate organizations. This disadvantage creates a situation in which competition in the economy is reduced, which in turn, creates inflationary tendencies. It has also contributed to the takeover of certain high technology smaller businesses by foreign corporations and a flight of technical know-how and jobs to foreign countries.

At hearings held by the Small Business Committee on February 8, 1978, concerning capital formation in smaller businesses, the committee released a study showing that many small high-technology firms were being forced to turn to foreign sources of capital to meet their needs for research and expansion funds. This study compiled a list of 16 firms that have been wholly or partially acquired by foreign firms, and this trend must be carefully monitored.

Foreign capital may help these few companies grow, but foreign acquisitions raise several problems since they enable the buyers to take new products and technology nurtured in this country and exploit them abroad for the benefit of foreign jobs, profits, exports, and foreign economic and military advantages.

These matters have caused serious concern among members of the Small Business Committee, as well as among other knowledgeable individuals, and that is why I have included this provision in this amendment to the Humphrey-Hawkins bill.

Fourth, this amendment modifies section 203 of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, as amended, the section which deals with cooperation between the public and private sectors in achieving the bill's goals. This amendment specifies that,

> In considering programs and policies related to the private sector, full consideration shall be given to promoting the growth and well-being of smaller businesses.

The amendment further provides additional language in section 204, the section of the bill that deals with the authorization of regional and structured employment policies. The amendment provides that,

> To the extent feasible, such policies and programs shall foster the establishment and growth of smaller businesses in such localities and regions.

These are very important amendments because the Humphrey-Hawkins bill—despite the controversy over what it is and what is not—is a bill designed to strengthen the private sector of the economy.

The bill specifically places "primary emphasis upon the expansion of private employment," and says that "all programs and policies under that Act shall be in accord with that purpose."

Any policies undertaken under the Humphrey-Hawkins bill to expand jobs are to emphasize and establish as the first priority "expansion of conventional private jobs through improved use of general economic and structural policies."

Following private job creation through the use of conventional monetary and fiscal policies, the bill establishes a specific priority listing of job creation measures which continues to put primary emphasis on job creation in the private sector.

Only after private sector job creation measures have been expanded, consistent with balanced economic growth, are public job creation measures to be emphasized under the bill.

Thus, the Humphrey-Hawkins bill is primarily a private jobs bill which relegates public job creation to a secondary role.

These particular amendments specifies that when Congress develops private job creation measures under the auspices of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, it should emphasize measures which make the most use of smaller businesses and which contribute to the health of the smaller business sector of the economy.

As I already have pointed out, the majority of all jobs in our economy are in smaller businesses. Fifty-five percent of all working Americans depend on a smaller business for employment and an income. During the years from 1969 to 1976 virtually all the new private jobs in the economy were created by smaller businesses.

I support the emphasis on job creation programs that promote new private jobs, rather than in the public sector. In developing private sector jobs, special attention should be given to new private jobs in smaller businesses.

Fifth, this amendment adds another priority to the national priorities section of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, section 106, which establishes energy, rural America, the quality of health and education, national defense, and the strength of State and local governments as areas on which the President has a responsibility in the first economic report, and from time to time thereafter, to report. The small business priority section would require:

> Proper attention to the problems and needs for smaller businesses including (A) the availability of investment capital, management and technical expertise, technology and labor needs, (B) analysis of economic and social trends which may affect smaller businesses, (C) government policies and programs (including agency regulations and excessive paperwork requirements) that may create undue hardships on or reduce the competitiveness of smaller businesses, and (D) other policies and programs to remove barriers to competition and to strengthen and promote the creation and growth of smaller businesses.

The Senate Small Business Committee has held hearings and discovered problems for smaller businesses in almost every one of these areas during this and past Congresses.

In addition to the hearings on the capital formation problems of smaller businesses, the committee has held hearings to examine the fact that no Government agency adequately analyzes the impact on smaller businesses of social and economic trends, largely because no agency collects the necessary data. The committee has called for the creation of a small business databank.

The Senate Small Business Committee also has held numerous hearings on the heavy burden imposed on smaller businesses by unnecessary paperwork and excessive Government regulations. For example, this past January the committee held 2 days of hearings to look into overregulation of small local land developers by HUD's Office of Interstate Land Sales Registration (OILSR), which administers the Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act of 1968. We found that OILSR had used its jurisdiction under this interstate act to extend its regulatory control over land sales that were intrastate in nature, which Congress did not intend to come under the provisions of the Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act. This has imposed an extraordinary burden on thousands of small intrastate land developers and has contributed to rising land costs.

The purpose of this particular amendment is to insure that special attention is given in the President's economic report to these kind of regulatory problems and to other serious problems confronting small businesses. Such attention clearly is needed to insure the prosperity, not only of small businesses, but also of every sector of American society.

Finally, this amendment would modify Section 2 of the bill, the "general findings" section of the Humphrey-Hawkins legislation. The amendment provides that "a decline in smaller business enterprises contributes to unemployment by reducing employment opportunities and contributes to inflation by reducing competition."

Mr. President, implementation of the various goals encompassed in the Humphrey-Hawkins bill depends significantly on small business. Almost all the new jobs created in the economy are jobs in small business. To create new meaningful employment opportunities, we will have to depend on small businesses to a significant extent.

Moreover, a strong competitive small business sector in each industry is one of the most effective policy goals we can pursue to curb inflation and achieve price stability.

Mr. President, this initiative may be labeled as a "small business amendment" to the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, but there are major issues addressed in this amendment that go far beyond the needs of small businesses.

Employment is not just a small business issue. It affects 99 million Americans who are in the labor force today, as well as those individuals who do not have jobs. Efforts to expand employment opportunities is of particular importance to the more than 6 million Americans who are jobless today.

Inflation is not just a small business issue. It is a "labor" issue, an "Older Americans" issue, a "minority issue, a "nutrition" issue, a "foreign affairs" issue, and an "energy" issue. Yet it will require a strong small business sector as part of the solution.

So, this amendment is not just a "small business" amendment. It is an important amendment that will affect all Americans.●

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

HEARINGS ON FOREIGN ASSISTANCE LEGISLATION

● Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, since Congress reconvened in January the attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations has been almost completely absorbed with the Panama Canal treaties. As a result, the committee has not yet been able to hold needed hearings on the several annual authorization bills or on S. 2420, the major foreign assistance reorganization bill developed by the late Senator Hubert Humphrey and introduced in his behalf by a number of committee members.

By law all authorization measures are to be reported to the Senate by May 15. In addition to the routine authorization matters, the committee will consider many controversial issues during this period—aid to Turkey, transfer of U.S. military equipment to Korea, and Middle East arms sales proposals. The prospective committee workload in the months ahead is also formidable.

Under these circumstances, it is simply not feasible for the committee to deal adequately in this session with the major reorganization questions posed in S. 2420. However, I expect that individual members of the committee may propose some of the less controversial provisions as amendments during our work on the authorization bill.

The coming months will allow needed time for public discussions, and also more study within Congress and the executive branch, of the far-reaching reorganization and policy aspects of the bill so that the next Congress will have a better foundation for considering it.

At this time, I wish to announce the committee's schedule for hearings on foreign assistance authorization legislation for fiscal year 1979:

Subcommittee on Foreign Assistance:

April 24—Peace Corps (Hearings and markup).

April 25—Security supporting assistance.

April 26—(1) Assistance to international organizations; (2) General public witnesses.

April 28—General arms sales and military assistance matters.

Full Committee on Foreign Relations;

May 1—Aid to Korea related to the withdrawal of U.S. forces.

May 2—Assistance to Turkey and Greece.

Hearings on the Middle East arms sales program will be announced at a later date.●

CHANGE IN HEARING ROOM—ARBITRATION OF CIVIL CASES IN U. S. COURTS

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, on February 1, 1978, I announced that an open public hearing would be held by the Subcommittee on Improvements in Judicial Machinery of the Committee on the Judiciary on S. 2253, a bill to amend title 8 of the United States Code to encourage prompt, informal, and inexpensive resolution of civil cases by use of arbitration in U.S. district courts, and for other purposes, and on March 23, 1978, I noticed a room change.

The hearing on this subject is now scheduled to be held on April 14, 1978, in room 2228, Dirksen Senate Office Building, commencing at 9 a.m.

Those who wish to testify or submit a statement for inclusion in the record should communicate as soon as possible with the Subcommittee on Improvements in Judicial Machinery, 6306 Dirksen Senate Office Building, telephone 202–224–3618, Washington, D.C. 20510.●

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE NEUTRON BOMB

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, it is with great reluctance that I take the floor to criticize President Carter's handling of the neutron bomb issue, a matter of obvious strategic importance and significance to this Nation and our allies. I would vastly prefer, Mr. President, to rise in support of the Carter administration's handling of such an important issue, but on the question of the neutron bomb, I believe the President is wrong.

If recent reports are to be believed—and I have yet to see them effectively rebutted—the administration has determined to defer production of the neutron bomb, leaving the option to produce contingent on Soviet actions. I believe this is a mistake. As far as this Senator is concerned, the correct decision should be perfectly clear: We will produce the neutron bomb unless the Soviets scrap a weapon or group of weapons of equal importance.

I am afraid that the administration's hesitancy is due in part to the distance from which they view the area where these weapons would be deployed. Apparently, they cannot bring into focus the military picture in Eastern Europe. If they looked closely they would see the thousands of new Soviet main battle tanks and armored personnel carriers. They would see the highly mobile Soviet air defense systems. They would see the improvements the Soviets have made in chemical warfare. They would see how the Soviet air forces have converted from a defensive orientation to a modern conventional attack orientation to support large mechanized forces. They would see the new aircraft and the new air-to-surface missiles.

Mr. President, outmanned and outgunned, the NATO forces are charged with defending Western Europe in the face of the Warsaw Pact buildup. Recognizing this problem U.S. military leaders sought to provide the NATO countries with a weapon that could aid them in this task. Superior U.S. technology provided us with the answer—the neutron bomb which, in effect, neutralized thousands of Soviet tanks and gave the United States a credible deterrent to Soviet aggression.

Now, after years of development and months of consultation with our NATO allies, we have opted for hesitation. We have chosen the line of least resistance. We will not produce the neutron bomb today, when it is clearly required, but suggest we may do so in the future if the Soviets do not behave themselves. This disturbs me, Mr. President, and it clearly disturbs our friends and allies.

Twenty years ago, in the wake of Sputnik, this Nation set out to develop a scientific and technical capability second to none. Now that we have achieved our goal, we seem a little embarrassed; strangely uncertain of our own strength.

A few months ago, the B–1 was sacrificed, yet the Soviets were forced to give nothing up. Now, the neutron bomb may be scrapped as a gratuitious act. Next, I hear it will be the cruise missile that will be crippled through the SALT talks.

Mr. President, I am in favor of strategic arms limitations, as long as they are balanced and equitable, as long as they do not enhance the potential threat to this Nation. I do not rejoice at the prospect of the neutron bomb. I am alarmed, however, at the apparent trend toward the unilateral sacrifice of our strategic advantages. I submit that there is a current, manifest requirement for a neutron bomb in Europe. We can produce such a weapon. If we are going to forsake this option, let us at least get something in return. Let us not repeat the mistakes of the B–1 bomber.

We cannot permit our judgement on issues such as the neutron bomb to be colored by Soviet propaganda or emotionalism. One consideration should be paramount: whether our strategic interests and those of our allies would be best served by deployment or by deferral of a decision to deploy.

I would ask my friends in the administration two simple questions: What are the strategic benefits of a decision not to produce the neutron bomb? What are the benefits from a policy of deferral? ●

THE CARTER ADMINISTRATION'S SUPPRESSION OF THE FACTS ABOUT OIL AND GAS: THE CASES OF DR. McKELVEY AND DR. KNUDSEN

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of the Senate to an excellent article by Bruce Bartlett in the April 1978 issue of the Washington Monthly. Mr. Bartlett calls our attention to the systematic disregard of energy facts by the Carter administration in its effort to establish a Federal monopoly over energy and, thereby, control the allocation of resources in the United States. The obvious result of Federal energy is to neutralize the financial power of American business by destroying the ability of business to allocate resources.

Mr. Bartlett documents how close the Carter administration has come to the Lysenkoism of the Stalin era, when scientists who would not falsify their results to justify a political program were removed. This is precisely what happened to Dr. Vincent McKelvey, the distinguished Director of the U.S. Geological Survey. This is precisely what happened also to Dr. Christian Knudsen, whose MOPPS study at ERDA refuted the basis for the Carter energy program. I would point out to my colleagues that the politization of science is an even more serious Presidential offense than Watergate.

I ask that Mr. Bartlett's article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

KILLING THE MESSENGER: THE CARTER ADMINISTRATION AND THE FACTS ABOUT OIL AND GAS

(By Bruce Bartlett)

Last September Secretary of the Interior Cecil Andrus announced that he was replacing Vincent McKelvey as director of the U.S. Geological Survey. This was an unusual announcement for several reasons:

No director of the U.S. Geological Survey had ever before been removed from office for political or any other reasons. There have, in fact, been only nine directors in the 99-year history of the Survey.

Although the directorship is a political appointment, it has never been treated as such by previous administrations. It has been thought of as more a technical than a policy position.

McKelvey's standing as a geologist has never been higher. Indeed, by all accounts he is one of the finest geologists in the United States, the recipient of virtually every award that can be achieved in his profession.

McKelvey's dismissal came on the heels of a speech in which he seriously questioned the view that America is dangerously close to exhausting its oil and gas resources.

McKelvey's firing followed closely a similar forced resignation—that of Dr. Christian Knudsen from his job at the Energy Research and Development Administration after he completed a report showing that large quantities of natural gas and petroleum would become available if prices were decontrolled.

These circumstances are now leading congressmen and members of the scientific community to ask why McKelvey was fired and, more importantly, what effect his firing is going to have on the objectivity of scientific research in government. They contend not that the Carter administration does not have the right to have its own people in the government, but that McKelvey was a technical advisor, not a policy-maker. In policy positions a president needs people who will support him; in technical jobs he needs people who will tell him the truth. The implication is that scientists and technicians who produce data that contradicts administration positions will be replaced by people more compliant.

McKelvey was born in 1916, received his Ph.D. in geology from the University of Wisconsin, and has been with the U.S. Geological Survey since 1941. He became chief geologist in 1971 and was appointed director the same year by President Nixon. In keeping with the tradition of maintaining the non-political nature of the directorship, McKelvey was appointed on the recommendation of the National Academy of Sciences.

McKelvey has always held the view that there is a great deal of oil, natural gas, and coal left to be discovered in the United States. This view has frequently brought him into conflict with environmentalists and others who hold a much more pessimistic view of the nation's ability to meet future energy demands unless growth is radically reduced.

When scientists like McKelvey talk about the availability of energy they do so with qualifications that are frequently lost in the discussion. For example, when one talks of "reserves" of oil and gas it means those quantities of the mineral fuels that have already been identified and are considered, on the basis of existing geological and engineering knowledge, to be recoverable under current economic conditions, with existing technology. The term "resources" includes reserves but also includes deposits already identified but not yet recoverable under current economic or technological conditions. Thus, as prices change and technology changes, oil and gas deposits are continually moving from the resource category to the reserve category. One may also speak of "potential" resources, which are not yet identified but, on the basis of good evidence, are considered to be recoverable some time in the future.

Thus when it's said that proven reserves of natural gas in the United States amount to 216 trillion cubic feet (tcf) and that this is sufficient to last the country for only ten years, several assumptions are involved: It's assumed that the price will not go up, that costs will not go up, that demand will stay at roughly 21 tcf per year, that technology will not change, and that no new reserves will be discovered in other words, a static situation in which nothing changes.

By contrast, discussions about oil and gas resources imply that prices and technology can and will change. A change in price will affect the use of certain technologies, and a technological breakthrough may change the price necessary to make certain resources recoverable. This is the way it has always been, and it's why it is not surprising that the United States has never had more than a dozen years' worth of oil reserves at any time. In 1914 the U.S. Geological Survey estimated total future domestic production of petroleum at only six billion barrels. The U.S. now produces this much oil approximately every 20 months and has done so for years. Thus, Professor Edward Mitchell of the University of Michigan has said:

"This fact that oilmen hold only ten or 15 years' supply of oil under the ground should be of as much concern to us as the fact that shoe stores keep only 30 days' supply of shoes on the shelf. To hold more would be unprofitable for the businessman and uneconomical for society."

VAST RESOURCES

In this light we can now consider what McKelvey said in a Boston speech on July 13, 1977. McKelvey talked about the vast fuel resources that are potentially available in the United States. In the case of natural gas, for example, he said:

"By far the greatest potential sources of natural gas are the geopressurized zones underlying the Gulf Coast region, both on and offshore. The limited investigations that have been made of this region led to estimates of as much as 60,000 to 80,000 trillion cubic feet of gas dissolved in water at a ratio believed to average 25 cubic feet per barrel of water. This is an almost incomprehensibly large number. Even the bottom of the range represents about ten times the energy value of all oil, natural gas, and coal reserves in the United States combined." (Emphasis added.)

The importance of this statement is that it came at a time when Congress was in the middle of a debate over deregulation of new natural gas. The Carter administration was fighting deregulation on the grounds that there was little new natural gas left to be discovered. If this were true, then it would make sense to argue that an increase in prices would only increase profits to producers and accomplish nothing else. But McKelvey's estimates of potential reserves totally contradict this position. If the resources exist, then incentives can be provided for their discovery and production. President Carter made this point himself prior to the election in a letter to the governors of Texas, Oklahoma, and Louisiana:

"The decontrol of producers' prices for new natural gas would provide an incentive for new exploration and would help our nation's oil and gas operators attract needed capital. Deregulation of new gas would encourage sales in the interstate market and help lessen the prospect of shortages in the nonproducing states, which rely on interstate supplies. While encouraging new production, this proposal will protect the consumer against sudden, sharp increases in the average price of natural gas."

Keep in mind that Carter was talking about deregulating the price of only newly discovered natural gas, not gas that has already been discovered and is under production. But when deregulation forces in the Congress, a few months later, proposed the same thing, the administration opposed it. The logic of Carter's new position is not entirely clear, but when asked by Senator Herman Talmadge to comment on press reports of large potential natural gas resources, Energy Secretary James Schlesinger replied, "I haven't read those carefully because they seem to be based on smoking pot."

Schlesinger's statement is consistent with the administration's position that there is no natural gas left to be discovered and that price therefore has no influence on supply. As White House press secretary Jody Powell said during a press conference on June 3, 1977, President Carter believes "that even if we increased the price of oil to provide an additional $20 per barrel, there would be very little, if any increase in our production . . . and the same is true in the price of natural gas."

THE TWO ASSUMPTIONS

McKelvey's data called into question the first major assumption needed to justify the administration's position—that America has no potential resources. The second major assumption—the non-influence of price on supply—was contradicted in a study done for the Energy Research and Development Administration by Dr. Christian Knudsen.

Early in 1977 ERDA set up a task force called the Market Oriented Program Planning Study (MOPPS) to determine what the availability of oil and natural gas would be under various price assumptions. Knudsen, a chemical engineer, was appointed head of the study.

The study's first set of projections, hereafter referred to as MOPPS I, showed that at a price of $2.50 to $3.00 per thousand cubic feet (mcf), as compared to the federally controlled price of $1.45 per mcf, the nation would be engulfed in natural gas.

The reason is that at somewhere around $2.50 per mcf it becomes profitable to drill into geopressurized methane deposits, which are known to lie at depths of 15,000 feet or more. Because of the enormously high drilling costs, you simply cannot begin exploring the geopressurized regions unless there is a higher rate of return than is attainable at the controlled price. ERDA has done at least one test well at this depth without conclusive results, but recently Chevron has been reported to have drilled a well in Louisiana that hit a huge geopressurized methane deposit.

Following the completion of MOPPS I Knudsen was transferred, the estimates thrown out, and a new study commissioned to find estimates closer to the views of the Carter administration. The MOPPS II study came out with supply estimates considerably lower than those of MOPPS I. But while these were more in line with the thinking of the administration, they were still too high. Thus MOPPS III was born, and it showed still less natural gas available at even higher prices.

TWICE THE GAS AT TWICE THE PRICE

Throughout all this revision of the MOPPS data, the studies were kept highly confidential. Finally, on June 3, after the press had picked up reports of the studies, all three MOPPS studies were released to the public. Although they differ in their estimates of how much supply responds to higher prices, all three studies confirm that such a response exists. Even the most pessimistic estimate, MOPPS III, showed that twice the present reserves of natural gas would become available at roughly twice the controlled price: 465 tcf at $3.00 per mcf.

Knudsen testified under oath that when his MOPPS report was released, after he had been removed from the project and moved to another job within ERDA, he was told that the real reason for his transfer was that the results of his study conflicted with conventional wisdom and concurred with industry estimates.

The case of Knudsen has been pretty much forgotten, but the case of McKelvey continues to draw interest on Capitol Hill and in the scientific community, due to his unquestionably high qualifications. Several members of Congress recently asked the House Government Operations Committee to undertake an investigation of the McKelvey matter, and Rep. Leo Ryan's subcommittee on Environment, Energy, and Natural Resources is expected to hold hearings this year.

POLITICIZE A FEDERAL ORGANIZATION

On the day McKelvey was dismissed, The New York Times reported, "Administrators of the survey supporting Dr. McKelvey . . . charged that this was an attempt to politicize a federal organization that is basically scientific in nature." This is really the most serious issue involved in the entire McKelvey matter, for it conjures up memories of Lysenkoism in the Soviet Union. This is not to say that an incoming administration should not have the right to appoint to politically sensitive jobs people who are compatible with its views. But it is another thing to fire, for example, the head of the Bureau of Labor Statistics because he produces unfavorable unemployment statistics. So it is with McKelvey, and it's a shame that just because they don't find his information pleasant, liberals haven't jumped to his defense. You don't have to agree with the idea of deregulation to admit that more gas would be available at a higher price; you could just as easily choose to stick with a lower price and less gas.

To this charge the Carter administration responds that McKelvey was removed from office because he was a poor administrator, not because his data contradicted its energy policy. But this runs counter to the views of almost everyone who has ever worked with McKelvey.

There is no evidence at all—and none is implied—that McKelvey or Knudsen personally opposed any of the administration's policies. The contention is that they produced scientific data, objectively derived, that contradicted the administration's position. If they were in fact removed from office for this reason, then it signals a kill-the-messenger mentality in the Carter administration that ought to be strenuously opposed.●

SUN DAY MINNESOTA

● Mrs. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on May 3, 1978, a national day of celebration is planned for solar energy. Sun Day addresses a vital issue—the need to develop safe, efficient, and environmentally sound energy alternatives—and it presents an opportunity for dynamic citizen education in an area where technological advancements have outpaced citizen awareness.

Modeled after Earth Day in 1970, which reached an estimated 20 million people and provided impetus to the environmental movement, Sun Day is a major effort to focus national attention on the world's only nonpolluting, inexhaustible, predictable, and safe energy source.

Solar energy is still envisioned by many as a fuel source for the future. Solar energy is for the future, but it is also a solution which has to be looked at for today's world. It is now an economical and technologically practical alternative to meeting our energy needs today.

Currently, the United States relies on oil, coal, and nuclear power for most of its energy needs. It is imperative that we develop nonpolluting renewable resources that can provide heating, cooling, and power for homes, businesses, and farms.

The Federal Government and private organizations are engaged in ongoing research and development to improve solar technology and encourage greater use of this clean, safe, and inexhaustible energy source. Success, however, depend in large part upon an informed and involved public. Citizen understanding and acceptance of solar energy is essential for its development as a widespread and economically feasible energy source.

Hubert Humphrey was one of the first Senators to realize the potential of solar energy and was deeply committed to its development. Designing effective solar legislation was one of his major efforts over many years in Washington. In support of the Sun Day festival, Hubert said:

Sun Day is designed to focus specifically on this solar information gap. It is going right to the heart of the solar situation. By focusing public attention on solar energy, its technology and economics, Sun Day can do more than any bill or law to stimulate the greater use of solar energy.

The Sun Day Minnesota Committee has been established to raise the awareness of the citizens of Minnesota to present and future potentials of solar and other alternative renewable energy sources. Representatives from a broad spectrum of our community in Minnesota, including labor, business, education, government, citizen action organizations, and community groups have joined in supporting the Sun Day Minnesota efforts.

The strength of Sun Day Minnesota and Sun Day U.S.A. lie in broad positive public support. I actively encourage citizens everywhere to promote, initiate, and participate in Sun Day activities.

I would like to share a list of possible Sun Day activities prepared by West Central Communities Action, Inc., Elbow Lake, Minn. Mr. President, I include with this statement a list of "Things To Do On Sun Day."

The list follows:

THINGS TO DO ON SUN DAY

1. Form a coalition to participate in Sun Day. Contact local public interest, environmental, consumer, business, church, and other community groups.

2. Contact a local radio or TV show and ask them to run public service announcements, interviews, and debates on solar energy.

3. Urge your local bank to offer mortgage credits for solar installations and energy conservation retrofits.

4. Urge the schools your children attend to run Sun Day programs. Schedule a Sun Day PTA meeting about solar energy.

5. Plant a vegetable garden—demonstrate photosynthesis sun power.

6. Work with neighbors to plant community gardens on vacant lots. Plant sun flowers.

7. Persuade a local community center to build a solar green house.

8. Urge your local library to set up a Sun Day exhibit and to acquire books on solar energy for the collection.

9. Write your federal and state legislators and ask what they are planning for Sun Day. Urge them to meet in your area to discuss solar legislation.

10. Contact your mayor, county commissioners and local planning boards and urge them to pass resolutions encouraging consideration of solar technologies for new construction in the area.

11. Set up a tour of solar homes in your area.

12. Meet with the staff where you work to discuss ways to participate in Sun Day.

13. Plan a Sun Day marathon.

14. Research some sun facts and send them to newspapers, magazines, disc jockeys.

15. Arrange for films, slide shows and video tapes on solar energy to be shown in your community. Lists are available from Solar Heating and Cooling Information Center.

16. Look into outfitting your community center with a solar installation—a solar heated pool, window box, etc.

17. Find someone to teach a course for homeowners on energy conservation teaching how to insulate walls, lay caulking and other weatherization jobs.

18. Gather some neighbors together and build a solar water heater on Sun Day.

19. Devise a solar alternative to the numerous eternal flames around the country.

20. Wear Sun Day t-shirts, buttons.

21. Organize a gathering to celebrate the sun rise on May 3.

22. Make Sun Day banners to hang on local buildings and bridges.

23. Give a book on solar energy as a gift to yourself or a friend.

24. Wear cotton clothing on Sun Day, cotton fibers are grown with solar energy while synthetic fabrics have a petroleum base.

25. Sponsor a teach-in, have talks by local solar experts and show films.

26. Develop a traveling exhibit on solar energy to take to local schools or community groups.

27. Set up a solar resource center for the community.

28. Construct solar equipment. There are plans available for solar cookers water heaters, window box collectors, and others. Contact Solar Heating and Cooling Information Center.

29. Investigate solar energy use in other countries. Japan has used solar water heaters for years.

30. Explore man's relation to the sun in other times.

31. See what solar legislation your state has passed and what has passed in other states as well.

32. Conduct a training workshop on how to install solar collectors, solar water heaters, and solar greenhouses.

33. Do research on additional jobs that would be generated by retrofitting houses, energy conservation policies, implementation of solar technologies.●

SENATOR CHURCH ON FOOD AND FOREIGN POLICY

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, our distinguished colleague from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH) recently addressed the National Farmers Union annual convention in Salt Lake City, Utah. His talk focused on the growing importance of foreign policy considerations in determining the welfare of our Nation's farmers.

This is a time of economic crisis for American agriculture and as Senator CHURCH points out "with more than one-fourth of our harvest being exported overseas, the foreign economic policy of the United States has become a critical element in restoring prosperity to our farms."

I was pleased to join with Senator CHURCH in introducing the Consumer and Agricultural Protection Act of 1978 along with Senators BUMPERS, HODGES, and ABOUREZK. I believe that this legislation addresses many of the concerns that the American agriculture movement has raised about our domestic farm policy.

But we cannot ignore the fact that we depend on foreign markets and world trade to maintain a healthy agriculture. Senator CHURCH, who serves as chairman of the Foreign Economic Policy Subcommittee, is well qualified to speak to this issue and I commend his speech to my colleagues.

Mr. President, I ask that the full text of Senator CHURCH's remarks to the National Farmers Union be printed in the RECORD.

The address follows:

FOOD AND FOREIGN POLICY

(By Senator FRANK CHURCH)

Although I am here tonight to speak to you on Food and Foreign Policy, I would be remiss if I did not recognize the splendid job that the Farmers Union is doing in the Green Thumb program for many of our senior citizens. It took awhile to get Green Thumb started in Idaho. But we have it now, thanks to the help of your President, Tony Dechant, and your Executive Director, John Baker. I want to thank you all for this good work.

First of all, I want to say that I think you farmers are beginning to get your message through.

We have a businessman in Boise who always has a message which he puts up on a marquee up in front of his store on Main Street. And people watch for his messages because they have a lot of zip and novelty. For instance, about a month or six weeks ago, he had a message on his marquee which read: "Yes Sir, Sadat's my baby!"

And during the Christmas season, he put up a message that had everybody puzzled. It was simply the alphabet. People looked at it and shook their heads and wondered. Then a sharp observer or two noticed that it was a 25 letter alphabet—it lacked the letter L. People who noticed that, of course, were motivated to go in and tell the businessman that he had forgotten to put the letter L in the alphabet. And he replied, "That's right. That's our message, NOEL."

You farmers have had a message too and for many years you've been unable to put it across. Subtlety hasn't worked, but I think that the tractor parades down Mainstreet USA, which began several months ago, have been effective in educating the American people.

And since then, with the commencement of the new session of Congress, the organized effort of many farmers to come to Washington and to remain in Washington to fight for meaningful agricultural legislation, has reinforced your message. Farmers are walking the hallways of Congress, making their case.

It's the most effective lobbying job by farmers that I've seen in my 21 years in the Senate.

And I believe we're beginning now to get the reaction to the national effort by farmers to get their message across. Legislation is now beginning to surface in the Congress to improve the Farm Bill and it looks like the Senate may soon be voting on emergency agricultural legislation.

For my part, on Thursday, I joined as a cosponsor of new legislation endorsed by many members of the American Agriculture Movement. It is known as the Consumer and Agricultural Protection Act of 1978, and it aims for establishing prices for farm commodities at a level which reflects their true value. I don't know what the fate of this bill will be. But I come from farm country—let me assure you at the outset that during the coming months, I intend to work for, speak for and vote for legislation in this session of Congress that will help assure the farmer of a fair price for his product. I don't know what's wrong with that—everyone else gets a fair price for their goods.

I do not pretend to have all the answers to the problems plaguing American farmers. But it must be plain by now that planting from fence row to fence row and depending on so-called "free trade" in the world market, as advocated by former Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz, hasn't worked.

Take the European Economic Community, for example. When agricultural prices are high, they work to exclude us from their market. When they over-produce, they dump their excess on us, often with the help of export subsidies.

To our European friends across the sea, I would say: It is up to you to share equitably with us the burden of adjustment to world market changes. If you refuse to do this, then we are no longer willing to travel a one-way street in the name of "free trade." We are just going to stop providing all the freedom if you get the benefit of all the trade!

With more than one-fourth of our harvest being exported overseas, the foreign economic policy of the United States has become a critical element in restoring prosperity to our farms.

You know, the United States, along with Canada, constitutes the biggest granary in the world. And, except for North America, Australia, and New Zealand, every major region of the world has moved into a food deficit position since the end of World War II. When famine strikes, the world looks to us for relief.

But, as the world's largest food producers, American farmers also serve as a global shock absorber for fluctuations in international food prices. It is a burden we have borne alone, and it has been costly, both in terms of dollars and in terms of the millions of farmers and ranchers who have been driven from their land over the years by the cruel, recurrent cycle of boom and bust.

The global marketplace is extremely volatile and American farmers are not as isolated from its dangers as they used to be. Beyond local and national considerations, our farmers are today vitally affected by a shortfall in the Soviet Union or a bumper harvest in India. Foreign developments, perhaps as never before, can easily determine a farmer's profit or loss in any given year.

In addition to an erratic world market, our farmers must also contend with the fact that a handful of privately owned multinational grain companies virtually control the world's grain trade. To give you some idea of their size, the largest of the Big Six, Cargill, enjoys annual sales of about $11 billion. Only 45 nations in the world have a Gross National Product greater than this one company's yearly volume of sales!

These multinational corporations view themselves as "economic nation-states", making decisions on where to store, where to buy, and where to sell, without much thought to their effect upon farmers or consumers in any one country, including our own.

I don't know what is to be done about these global giants. But one thing we can all agree upon: the Big Six could use some competition! I welcome the initiative of this Administration in offering farm cooperatives an opportunity to enter the export market directly. I hope, with follow-up support, that cooperatives will be able to break the stranglehold of the Big Six.

Since American farmers must sell the product of one out of every four acres abroad, the federal government must find ways to help them. First of all, let the government help in expanding their share of the export market.

American farmers had no better friend than the late, great Senator from Minnesota, Hubert Humphrey. At his invitation, I joined him last year in introducing the Agriculture Trade Expansion Act of 1977, a bill designed to make this country fully competitive in the food markets of the world.

The legacy of the Cold War has been hard to shake off. It took us a long time to discover that fat communists are less dangerous than hungry ones. It took us a long time to admit that we were only punishing ourselves by refusing to engage in trade with Russia and China which was both profitable and peace-producing.

I don't know whether any of you are still victims of that same old ideological hangup, but I am here to tell you this: For any country that has the most efficient farmers in the world, for any country that depends upon its farmers for more than 20% of its exports, for any country which is faced, as we are, with the largest trade deficit in our history, we had better start selling food whenever and wherever we can! As far as I'm concerned, I am for selling food to any country that needs it and can pay for it, whether I approve of its government or not. As Hubert Humphrey used to say: I'm for selling anything they can't shoot back!

Let it be emphasized that the Humphrey bill does not create a new give-away program. Why, we can't even sell food abroad, without accusations of "give-away." How often have I heard it said that we aren't getting paid for the grain we have sold to the Soviet Union and China. Well, of course, that's not true. Those governments couldn't engage in international trade unless they paid their bills. The fact is, they pay, and they pay on time, and we ought to have the sense to offer them credit terms that meet our competition!

Still, experience has taught us that a cutthroat race among exporters is one in which there will be no long-term winners. In such a race, everyone loses, consumers and producers alike. Wildly fluctuating prices in the world market must be avoided in the interest of both sellers and buyers.

An example of how this might be accomplished is to be found in the recently negotiated International Sugar Agreement. It uses buffer stocks and export quotas as tools for bringing world sugar prices within a corridor, ranging from a minimum of 11 cents per pound to a maximum of 21 cents. This translates into a delivered price range in the United States of from 13.5 cents to 23.5 cents per pound.

If the new treaty works, if it is successful in raising sugar prices into the mid-range, the problems of our beleaguered sugar beet growers may be solved. Last month, I took the Foreign Relations Committee to Burley, Idaho, for a hearing on the proposed treaty. Burley, as you know, is in the heart of sugar beet country and the hearing was attended by more than 200 farmers, who were keenly interested in learning about the terms of the agreement.

A former Idaho Senator once served on the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator William Borah. He was the Chairman of the Committee during the 20s and a very influential man. But back then, the work of the Foreign Relations Committee seemed very remote from the day to day concerns of Idaho farmers. How that's changed!

At the Burley hearing, which probably was the first hearing of the Foreign Relations Committee ever to be held in Idaho, I gave the farmers the opportunity to question officials of both the Departments of State and Agriculture, our negotiators. I put them up in front of the group as a panel to respond to the farmers. And it was a tremendously useful meeting.

The farmers, along with other representatives of our domestic sugar industry, approved of the agreement, but insisted on one vital pre-condition. They rightly observed that the track record of international commodity agreements has not been reassuring. They insisted on a back-up domestic sugar program that they could rely upon in the event that this agreement were to fail. I agree with their position, and I have notified the Secretary of Agriculture that there will be no further hearings on ratification of the sugar treaty until the Administration formulates a satisfactory domestic program.

Negotiations have now commenced on an international wheat agreement. The United States is proposing that a coordinated system of nationally held grain reserves be established that would make possible, on a shared basis, the shifting of grain supplies forward from years of excess production to years of shortage. Under this arrangement, participating nations would agree to maintain reserve stocks, with common guidelines for accumulation and release. Again, the objective would be to stabilize world wheat prices within an acceptable range.

The critical question is what the floor price will be. I emphatically disagree that our current loan rate—under the present farm bill—is sufficient for this purpose. It is well below the current cost of production, and therefore cannot be considered a fair price for our farmers!

For this reason, I have recently introduced a sense-of-the-Senate resolution urging our negotiators to bargain for a price range which will guarantee American farmers a fair return for their wheat. If that is not obtainable, the United States should refrain from joining the agreement. Otherwise, I will do everything possible to prevent its ratification by the Senate!

But whatever our success in negotiating better international commodity agreements, they will never eliminate the importance of strengthening our markets at home. And here it happens that the energy front offers us a new and promising opportunity. What is the crux of the energy problem? Summed up in one sentence, it is that we have become too dependent on foreign oil. We must reduce our reliance upon it, since we are unable either to control its price or assure its supply. That's the crux of the energy problem, and the American farmer can play a crucial role in solving it.

For years we have been bombarded with talk about achieving energy independence. But its been largely talk. From the time President Nixon first declared Project Independence as our primary national energy goal, despite all the programs, research and development, our importation of foreign fuel has actually gone up, not down, from one-third of our yearly requirement to nearly one-half. We have been losing the battle at an alarming rate, becoming more, not less, dependent on foreign oil with every passing year.

Yet the farmer can help in turning that picture around, because if we would just begin to use crops and other renewable resources for alcohol to mix with gasoline, at a ratio of 10 percent alcohol to 90 percent gas, we could produce a product called gasohol, on which our cars would operate even more efficiently than on pure gasoline. This alone could reduce our import of foreign oil by fully one-fifth. It would cut into our huge trade deficit and boost the sagging dollar in the money markets of the world.

The present farm bill contains a provision authorizing federally guaranteed loans for the construction of four gasohol demonstration plants. This approach faithfully adheres to the Department of Energy's research and development syndrome of pilot plants and demonstration projects, all financed, directly or indirectly, with federal funding accompanied by another horde of federal employees, dutifully colonizing the problem and developing a vested interest in its perpetuation rather than its solution.

To avoid this pitfall, I have just introduced the Gasohol Motor Fuel Act of 1978. It puts the burden where it belongs, directly on our oil refineries. They possess the distribution network for liquid fuels in this country, and they have the corporate capability to put gasohol on the commercial market. If we wait for the Department of Energy to do it, we'll wait forever.

Those who argue that deriving alcohol from renewable sources is too expensive, forget that each gallon of fuel that we grow at home replaces a gallon of fuel that we otherwise must import from abroad, at prices which will only go higher. Moreover, a gallon of gasoline made from oil or coal can never be replaced. But a gallon of alcohol made from crops grown on our farms can be replaced, as long as the soil lasts and the sun shines.

My bill would require American refineries to begin mixing alcohol (from renewable sources) with gasoline no later than 1981. A 10 percent blend nationwide would be required by 1990. Such a goal would mean a savings, at today's prices, of over $9 billion on our oil import bill. At the projected price of foreign oil by 1990, the savings could easily exceed $20 billion a year!

I learned in the Senate a long time ago that when dealing with fundamental problems such as those I have discussed tonight, we have got to rise above narrow partisanship, put away the long knives, and collaborate. That is what is required of those who would be statesmen today. If we do that, then I think the prospects for agriculture in this country will brighten again. These problems are not unsolvable, and anything as productive and efficient as American agriculture is bound to rise again to the prosperous level it should enjoy in our economy. To that end, I pledge you my cooperation, as I am sure you will give me yours.●

FARM RELIEF CONFERENCE REPORT

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, on Monday the Senate will vote on the conference report of the Emergency Agricultural Act of 1978. I intend to vote against the report—as I voted against the original bill.

The measure agreed to by House and Senate conferees is no improvement over the hastily and ill-conceived farm aid bill rushed through the Senate in March.

I fully understand the plight of American farmers—the fact that they are not receiving an adequate return for the cost of their labors—however, I believe in attempting to correct this problem in one segment of our population, we must not shift the burden to another segment. It is estimated that this massive farm bill, if enacted, would add 2 percent to retail food costs and cost $3 billion more than farm aid programs now in effect. The farmers have a case, but it does not justify the other 95 percent of the Nation having to pay a kind of double indemnity through higher prices for products as well as taxes for farm subsidies.

In racing the emergency farm bill through the Senate and rejecting more modest proposals in conference, Congress has ignored the budget process and the inflationary impact of this bill. It is unfair that consumers, who are already burdened by the high cost of energy and the increasing costs of living, should now be asked to pay even higher prices for their food, because of an ill-conceived farm relief measure. The Nation's farmers have a real problem. This bill just happens to be the wrong way to solve it.

Because Congress has acted so hastily on this measure and without proper deliberation, there is no assurance that this bill is truly in the interest of most farmers, or our export trade, or, most importantly, of our consumers. What is certain is that the Emergency Agricultural Act of 1978 is at odds with the administration's plans to build up grain reserves, will affect the financial stability of livestock producers, raise food prices, and increase our Federal budget deficit.

Last year the Congress passed and the President signed into law a farm bill designed to provide relief to farmers. This current law has not had time to achieve its intended results. The farm measure the Senate will be voting on on Monday is a careless and frivolous attempt to hike farm incomes and in my opinion is a caricature of good legislation.●

FAIR HOUSING LAWS

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, Tuesday of this week I brought to the attention of the Senate a threatened lawsuit between the Department of Justice and Brigham Young University (BYU) in Provo, Utah. BYU is a private, church-supported school that has entered into agreements with off-campus landlords which require that buildings or wings of buildings be restricted to renters of one sex. If a landlord does not agree to meet this minimal requirement, the school does not approve the building for student housing.

Fortunately, both the Justice Department and BYU are approaching the situation in a reasonable manner and negotiations are proceeding in a calm and responsible atmosphere. The Department of Justice is to be particularly commended for its wise approach; it takes only a little thought to realize that there are other Federal agencies that would have acted much differently. It appears that Justice is proceeding in a manner calculated to carefully resolve the important issues dealing with constitutional law; freedom and morality; congressional intent; bureaucratic authority, trustworthiness, and responsiveness, and commonsense.

The two parties met this last Wednesday and both are optimistic that further discussions will bring a satisfactory result. The Department of Justice indicated that it will postpone any further legal action pending the outcome of the talks.

Three days ago I said, "No conflict should exist between antidiscrimination laws and a private, church-supported school's right to teach high moral principles and exercise first amendment rights." I am pleased to submit for the RECORD recent editorials from the New York Times and the Los Angeles Times which confirm the point that fair housing laws do not conflict with either constitutional rights or commonsense.

The editorials follow:

WHEN SEPARATE IS EQUAL

Some 13,000 students at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, live off campus. Landlords who wish to rent to them must sign an agreement with the university, a Mormom institution, to separate the sexes by building or wing.

Two years ago, a nonstudent sought to rent an apartment in one of these approved buildings, only to discover that it was reserved for males. She sued, and when the suit was dismissed on technical grounds, the Department of Housing and Urban Development referred her complaint to the civil rights office of the Justice Department.

Now Justice has put the university and 36 landlords on notice that their rules violate an amendment to the Federal Housing Act which prohibits landlords from refusing to rent to any person because of sex. The Justice Department charge does not distinguish between students and nonstudents.

The university president, Dallin Oaks, raises a provocative question. He observes that the law seems to require that if a landlord has signed rental agreements with five women students to live in a six-student apartment and a man applies for housing, the landlord must rent the sixth space to him.

Justice responds that it is not aiming for such a result. "Any suit that would try to put men and women in the same room would quite justly be classified as kooky," observes one official. But then, asks President Oaks, if a landlord is permitted to consider sex in assigning someone to a multiple-occupancy apartment, may not the landlord consider sex in assigning an applicant to a building or a wing of it?

Since the sex-discrimination provision, which was added to the Fair Housing Act of 1974, has not been subject to much interpretation by the courts, Justice has no certain answer. Nor is Federal policy entirely clear, since the law that forbids discrimination by sex in schools specifically provides that housing separation of men and women students, on campus or off, is not discriminatory so long as comparable facilities are available.

A murky issue—but need it be an issue at all? Our dictionary defines discrimination as involving "a difference in treatment or favor on a basis other than individual merit." Racially segregated schools, for example, were declared unconstitutional in 1954 on the ground that they were "inherently unequal," and did harm to black children. But what group is being harmed in Provo? Who is being favored over whom?

Although the original complaint was brought by a woman, it could as readily have been brought by a man who wanted to live among women. If women were permitted to mingle with men but men were not permitted to mingle with women, that would be patently discriminatory—though such a policy might prove awkward to apply. But can there be sex discrimniation where neither sex is being treated better or worse than the other?

As for those people who like to be close to members of the opposite sex, their desire is neither novel nor unnatural. We had not realized until now that it required the intervention of Washington to be satisfied—The New York Times.

SEX AND THE SINGLE UNIVERSITY

Brigham Young University, a private church-sponsored Institution at Provo, Utah, is in trouble with the federal government, and may be the target of a Justice Department lawsuit.

The issue is deceptively simple. The university has an agreement with 36 off-campus landlords to restrict buildings or wings of buildings to members of one sex. Officials in the Justice Department's civil rights division are challenging the agreement on the grounds that it affects the rights of nonstudents.

As evidence, they cite the complaint of a woman, not a student, who said that she was denied the right to rent an apartment in a building reserved for men. This was viewed by the Justice Department as sex discrimination, although a man who applied for an apartment in a building reserved for women also would be turned down under the agreement.

Dallin H. Oaks, president of the university, said the Justice Department told him that the government was not trying to force the university "to allow students of different sexes to live in a single apartment." This assurance, Oaks replied, is "very little comfort if there is no legal distinction between this result and the one you are presently pursuing."

Oaks raised an issue, highly pertinent here, of the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of religion. "We cannot believe," Oaks said, "that our proscription against students living with or next to persons of the opposite sex is a sufficient injury to justify interference with the fundamental rights of religious freedom at this church-sponsored university."

The threatened suit appears an abrasive, meddlesome intervention in a situation where the discrimination alleged is more theoretical than real, and where the risk of government intrusion in the area of religious freedom is more real than theoretical—Los Angeles Times.●

STATEMENT OF BILL BALLHAUS BEFORE WAYS AND MEANS

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to the statement of William F. Ballhaus, the president of Beckman Instruments before the Committee on Ways and Means in the House on March 10. Mr. Ballhaus has the kind of vision that we need here in the Senate. I agree with him that we cannot continue to support tax and economic policies that discourage investment and the formation of equity capital. Those Senators who think that they are somehow striking at the rich and helping the working people in this country by reducing the incentives to invest will be stunned by Mr. Ballhaus' figures showing the relationship between investment and the growth of real wages. Over the past 10 years Japanese and West German workers have benefited from a growth in wages that is five to six times the growth in American wages.

There are really only two kinds of governments. One concentrates on redistrubuting income, usually from the people to the government. The other concentrates on the accumulation of capital in the hands of the people. The former become cultural and economic backwaters. The latter are the successful nations in history.

I ask that Mr. Ballhaus' statement be printed in the RECORD.

The statement follows:

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM F. BALLHAUS

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, my name is William F. Ballhaus. I am the President of Beckman Instruments, Inc., and for this year, President of the California Chamber of Commerce. However, I am appearing before you as a concerned private citizen.

I became concerned—I might say deeply concerned—about the state of our economy several years ago. Economists as a group, and particularly those in the academic community, were saying that inflation could not be reduced without increasing unemployment and that if unemployment were reduced to an acceptable level, inflation would grow to unacceptable levels.

Gentlemen, I am not an economist. I received my Ph.D. degree in Aeronautical Engineering—a discipline in large part based on the observation and evaluation of data. Fortunately, a wealth of pertinent and reliable data are available from both government and private sources—the Departments of Commerce and Treasury, Committees of the Congress, the New York Stock Exchange, and the Conference Board.

After collecting these data, I evaluated them as an engineer—without political or philosophical bias—as an aerodynamicist evaluates wind tunnel data on an aeroplane. My first hypothesis was that something of great significance occurred in 1969. That was the year in which the Congress enacted fundamental changes in the internal revenue code. The immediate result of that action was a dramatic change in the tax impact on the investment climate in our country.

Let us examine the consequences of that change in the treatment of investments in the equity market and its economic impact on our society.

For the ten years prior to 1969 the Consumer Price Index had grown at a compound rate of 1.78 percent. Since 1969 it has risen 270 percent—to a compound rate of 6.59 percent per year.

Until 1969, the growth in the labor force and the number of shareholders holding equity stocks had grown apace. Since that bench mark year, the number of investors related to the labor force has shrunk by 28.6 percent. I should add that these were the small investors who—in an exercise of good judgment—left the market.

The immediate result of the flight of these investors from equity stocks was a dramatic decline in the number of companies going for equity capital. In 1969 some 1800 companies went to the market. By 1975, such offerings had dwindled to 150. The impact on small companies was equally dramatic. In 1969 they raised over $1.1 billion in equity capital. By 1974 this had decreased to roughly $16 million—down 98.5 percent.

This dramatic change in the investment climate had an immediate impact on the ability of our economy to create jobs for our growing work force. It has been this small and dynamic segment of our industry which has suffered the most from the equity shortage. Unfortunately, this is the group which creates new jobs at a rate 40 to 60 times greater than very large and mature companies and which is a key to restoring our balance of payments to the plus side of the ledger.

Over the four years prior to 1969 the growth in our labor force and the annual growth in jobs created was in relative balance. Unemployment was low and remained relatively constant while productivity and wages grew in parallel. Since 1969 the annual growth in real GNP is down 72 percent—productivity is down 53 percent—and the growth in real hourly compensation is down 40 percent.

Translated into economic impact, everyone has suffered.

Unemployment is too high—new businesses and new jobs have not been created for the young people entering the labor force each year.

Inflation has robbed every segment of our society—with the brunt being borne by the poor and older people on fixed incomes.

The growth in real hourly compensation of our workers lags far behind that of West Germany and Japan.

Today the economic health of our country is undermined by unacceptable international trade and budgetary deficits—the results of low rates of growth in productivity.

How do we—the greatest free industrial society in the world—set our house in order?

The foundation of my thesis is that the changes in our tax laws since 1969 and their effect on the individual investor are the root cause of our current economic difficulties. There are those who say that the oil embargo and the rise of the cost of energy are the driving forces behind our economic woes. Certainly they are elements in the equation, but I suggest to you that both West Germany and Japan, who import over 99 percent of their petroleum products, still enjoy large positive balances of trade.

A reasonable question to ask is how have our two largest trading partners and competitors for world markets managed to do this while we—who are blessed with large domestic resources—have fallen behind?

I believe the answer lies in their governments' encouragement of savings and investment. There are no taxes on capital gains in either West Germany or Japan. Investment as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product in Japan is twice that of our own and is substantially higher in Germany. This ratio of investment translates directly into increased productivity.

The major beneficiaries of their healthy investment climate have been the German and Japanese workers. Taking 1967 as the base year in an index of hourly compensation, by 1976 Japanese workers have realized a 500 percent increase in pay and West German workers a 400 percent increase.

Our own workers have seen their hourly compensation rise by only 80 percent in the same period and much of that increase has been eroded by inflation because productivity has not kept pace with the rise in wages.

I believe that our nation's economy can be restored to its former vigor by three straightforward changes in the tax code that will encourage investment—bring the individual investor back to a revitalized equity market—and draw the large investor away from contrived tax shelters.

These are:

1. Permit the "rollover" of investments, or defer all taxes on capital gains until an investor stops investing. Provide for the "rollover" of equity investments or deferral of the tax on capital gains derived from the sale of common or preferred stock or bonds so long as the total proceeds of sales are reinvested in common stock or preferred stock or until an individual disinvests or passes on his investment through a gift or through his estate at death.

At disinvestment the total net Capital Gains would be taxed as earned income averaged over the years the investment is held, or the total estate would be taxed at gift or estate tax rates when given or bequeathed.

2. Provide for the deduction of all short or long-term capital losses against ordinary income.

3. Provide for the deduction of all interest paid on money borrowed to invest in equities or bonds—except tax-free municipal or state bonds—against ordinary income.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen, I would like to finish my statement with two remarks. As I mentioned earlier, I appear before you as a private citizen who is concerned about the economic health of his country. I am not here to ask for help from my government for my industry, my company, or myself. We are doing very well—and that leads me to a reality that underscores my thesis.

In 1971 my company saw its first downturn in sales in over thirty years. I went to my board of directors with the largest research and investment program we had ever undertaken. Its objective was the development of new products for our markets and the penetration of new growth markets. They were skeptical, but approved my plans.

Since that time we have grown at a compound rate of over 14 percent per year in sales and 28 percent in net profits.

Our courage to invest in those troubled times enabled us to continue to grow in spite of subsequent downturns in the economy.

Now, let's examine who has been the beneficiary of our courage to invest. Our shareholders have seen a 4 percent annual increase in their dividends. Our profits have grown by 28 percent each year to a factor of 4.89 and allowed us to continue to expand our jobs, our products, and our markets. But—who is the primary beneficiary of our courage to invest? It is the government. In that same period, our taxes paid have increased 39 percent annually to a factor of 8.45.

By encouraging private investment, you can make our country the economic model for the free world:

1. We can provide the jobs we need to reduce unemployment.

2. We can reduce inflation, and help the poor and elderly to survive.

3. We can improve our productivity, regain our leadership in world markets, and achieve positive trade balances.

4. We can increase real economic growth so that we can collect the taxes required to feed the poor, care for the sick, and pay for other essential needs of our country and balance our federal budget.●

EXPORTS

● Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the Subcommittee on International Finance has been conducting hearings on U.S. export policy and the effectiveness of U.S. programs to increase U.S. exports. Last year the United States had a $27 billion trade deficit and the prospects for improvement this year are not promising. In February alone we had a deficit of over $4 billion.

Unlike the United States, Japan, and Germany, and other nations have relied on exports to offset their large oil imports and some have enjoyed substantial trade surpluses. There has been insufficient effort by the U.S. Government and U.S. companies to export. The lack of a national export policy contributes to the U.S. trade deficit and costs Americans jobs and inflation. Administration witnesses who have testified before the subcommittee have suggested few measures to improve our export performance.

I call to the attention of my colleagues, an article in the April issue of Business Week which aptly describes the United States as a "reluctant exporter."

The article follows:

THE RELUCTANT EXPORTER—TRADITIONAL U.S. ATTITUDES AND ANTIEXPORT POLICIES

The U.S. is the world's biggest, and most indifferent, exporter. Last year, American industries and farms shipped $120 billion worth of goods—from soybeans and blue jeans to machine tools, computers, and aircraft—to foreign customers, compared with $118 billion for Germany and $81 billion for Japan. But U.S. imports—of oil, autos, TV sets, and thousands of other products—soared to $147 billion and opened up a yawning $27 billion trade deficit (chart). Meanwhile, the export-minded Germans and Japanese piled up fat surpluses of $18 billion and $10 billion respectively, partly by stepping up sales to the U.S.

The unprecedented shortfall in the U.S. trade account, which is likely to be repeated this year, signals a dangerous erosion in the ability of U.S. industry to compete in world markets. That deterioration is not due to traditional business factors: costs of labor and capital, or productivity. In those respects U.S. companies are now competitive. The real problems lie in the attitude of many corporate managers that exports are marginal business, and in the anti-export policy of Congress and successive Administrations, which have paid lip service to promoting exports while actually inhibiting them with laws and regulations. The U.S. is a reluctant exporter.

One immediate result is the dollar's headlong plunge. It stems, in large part, from the huge outflow of unwanted dollars as U.S. payments for imports outstrip U.S. income from exports.

The quick and easy diagnosis is that oil imports are to blame. Last year the U.S. bought $45 billion worth of oil from abroad. President Carter insists that if Congress would only pass his energy bill, the problems of the dollar would evaporate. But economists, such as Rimmer de Vries of Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. insist that solving the energy problem is only part of what is needed to put the dollar on a sound basis. The other requirement is a national export policy. Says de Vries: "I think we have a negative policy on exports. We sometimes discourage agricultural exports because of domestic price pressures; we discourage military exports for political reasons; we discourage trade with eastern Europe, and we have the problem of Arab boycott legislation."

The thinking on trade in many U.S. companies and in government is a holdover from the days when the U.S. had little need of export markets. But today, to pay for the oil it imports, the U.S. must find takers for tens of billions of dollars worth of additional products abroad.

Until it does, the U.S. is likely to be a major obstacle to worldwide economic recovery. Indeed, the current turbulence and uncertainty in international money markets threatens to abort the slow recovery of the global economy from the largest and deepest recession since World War II. And within the U.S., the falling dollar, by making imported goods more expensive, is adding fuel to inflation.

Longer term, the U.S. failure to earn its way in international markets is costing the nation hundreds of thousands of jobs, millions of dollars of corporate profits, and billions of dollars of added business activity that expanded exports would generate for industries and communities throughout the country. The consequences is likely to be lower economic growth and, ultimately, a slower rise in living standards.

A DEEP-ROOTED DISINTEREST

The response of labor unions, Congress, and many industries to deteriorating U.S. trade competitiveness has been to demand restrictions on imports rather than stepped-up efforts to boost sales of U.S. products abroad. "There is no concern at all about exports," says Senator Adlai E. Stevenson (D–Ill.), who is trying to stir interest in the issue by conducting extensive hearings before the Senate Banking Committee's subcommittee on international finance. "The objective of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill is jobs, and it has been estimated that each $1 billion of exports creates 40,000 jobs," he adds, referring to the Administration's proposed legislation to spur employment. "But Humphrey-Hawkins has something in it for everybody, except exports, and that demonstrates our indifference to this sector." Stevenson's comments are echoed by the executive in Brazil of a major U.S. goods capital exporter. "For American companies, there is no reward for exporting, nor any penalty for failing to export," he says.

Such widespread U.S. disinterest in exports—despite the success of individual U.S. companies in foreign markets is nothing new. The American colonies exported timber, tobacco, and cotton to Britain to pay for manufactured goods, and Yankee ship captains later traded products of New England's budding industries on a small scale as far away as China. But the emergence of a continent-sized internal market in the 19th century turned the attention of U.S. manufacturers inward. Unlike the Germans and Japanese, most American companies do not need to export to achieve economies of scale.

Following World War II, U.S. companies did participate in the rebuilding of Europe primarily by exporting. But as country after country regained its strength, many U.S. companies built manufacturing plants and marketing operations abroad to serve local markets. U.S. multinationals spread management skills, capital, and technology rather than U.S.-made products around the world. The exception was Japan, where restrictions kept out most multinationals as well as many U.S. exports.

For nearly 20 years the economics of overseas production, compared with high costs at home, compelled U.S. companies to continue building plants abroad, rather than export, to serve foreign markets. But many of the factors that made that practice desirable no longer exist. For example, the increase in unit labor costs in the U.S. from 1974 to 1976 was the second-lowest of the major industrial countries. (It was bettered only by the rate in West Germany.) The U.S. increase in hourly compensation over the same two years was also the second best. (West Germany again had the best record.) What is still lacking is the determination to export.

Frank A. Weil, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for domestic and international business, estimates that 20,000 U.S. companies export, but another 20,000 that could successfully sell in foreign markets are not doing so. The resulting asymmetry in U.S. trade relations with the rest of the world is typified by the auto industry. Detroit designs big cars for the U.S. market and exports very few: Europeans and Japanese build smaller cars for world markets, and last year they shipped 2 million to the U.S.

THE PROBLEM OF OIL IMPORTS

There are also shorter-term causes of the current lag in U.S. exports. In part, the trade gap reflects the slow economic recovery in Europe and Japan at a time when the U.S. is at the peak of its business expansion. The result is a strengthening demand in the U.S. for foreign products and weak demand in those countries for U.S. goods. Eventual reversal of the cycles should sharply improve the trade balance, as happened in 1975 when the U.S. ran up a record $11 billion surplus.

A more fundamental problem is soaring oil imports (chart). In itself, the huge bill for foreign oil reflects a leveling-off of domestic supplies rather than a loss of U.S. trade competitiveness.

In contrast, official doctrine among Administration policymakers, at least up to now, has held that the trade gap would automatically be closed by an economic revival abroad and by depreciation of the dollar under the system of floating exchange rates. The cheaper dollar should achieve this, in theory, by giving American goods a price advantage in world markets and making foreign products more expensive in the U.S.

To some extent, this is happening. John A. Armbruster, general manager for Asian operations of J. I. Case Co., a subsidiary of Tenneco Inc., for example, expects to sell more construction equipment in South Korea and Taiwan this year against Japanese competition because of the depreciating dollar. George F. Newman, assistant treasurer of Hewlett-Packard Co., a Palo Alto (Calif.) maker of computers and instruments, sees growing signs that the company's price cuts in foreign markets, as the dollar declines, are helping to increase export sales.

Price, of course, is only one factor—along with quality, delivery, service, and credit terms—in world market competition. Numerous nonprice barriers, ranging from foreign governments' "buy local" rules to the European Community's "variable levies" on farm imports, also nullify the impact of currency changes on trade in many products.

MULTINATIONALS' STAKE

Moreover, an increasing share of U.S. exports—anywhere from 25% to 50%—is now made up of intracompany shipments of materials, components, and finished products by parent companies of U.S. multinational concerns to thousands of their own affiliates abroad. The multinationals' huge financial stake in overseas production, as well as foreign government pressures against worker layoffs, inhibits any moves to cut back foreign output and replace it with stepped-up exports from the U.S., even if they are cheaper. Thus, the structure of international trade is moving further and further from the classical model of unimpeded commerce based strictly on "comparative advantages." Eventually, the large reverse flow of foreign multinational investment that is now moving into the U.S. should help narrow the U.S. trade gap by substituting U.S.-made products for imports of everything from Volkswagens to Japanese TV sets.

On the export side of the trade ledger, though, U.S. companies that already have well-established export networks are the only ones in position to make aggressive use of the new price competitiveness of American products in order to sell more abroad. Unfortunately, many U.S. companies turned away from exports in the 1960s when the dollar was overvalued. More recently, they have been deterred from making costly investments in overseas sales and service organizations by a rash of laws, executive actions, and court rulings that impede exports (table, page 57). Unless a more favorable business environment is created for U.S. exporters, they will continue to lose world market shares to foreign rivals, regardless of business cycles and the cheapening dollar. Says David C. Garfield, vice-chairman of Ingersoll-Rand Co., which annually exports more than $400 million worth of heavy machinery and equipment: "It doesn't make much difference what you are willing to sell for if you are unable to represent your product, service it, and get it into customers' hands."●

THE NEW SLAVERY

Mr. HAYAKAWA. Mr. President, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to an article by my distinguished friend, the junior Senator from Utah, which on February 27 appeared in the Baltimore Sun. Under the appropriate label, "The New Slavery," Senator HATCH discusses the principal obstacles which prevent young black Americans from entering the mainstream of American economic life. Minimum wages that kept black teenagers out of the labor force and employment taxes that raise the cost of hiring the unskilled are correctly singled out as main culprits. Other aspects are the artificially created dependency on welfare handouts and the economically unsound reliance on temporary Government jobs. In his careful analysis, Senator HATCH draws attention to the unholy alliance of unions, the articulate elite, and the politicians which prevent black teenagers from advancing on the social ladder. "The New Slavery" is an original and important piece which deserves the attention of all Members of Congress. I, therefore, ask it be printed in the RECORD. Thank you Mr. President.

The article follows:

FINDING A WAY OUT: THE NEW SLAVERY

(By Orrin G. Hatch)

WASHINGTON.—It seems that for every step forward toward their freedom and dignity, American blacks get pushed one step backward. First blacks had to acquire freedom from slavery. Then they found that they could not get into the mainstream of American economic life, because of barriers to their full exercise of their civil rights. Now that they have acquired their civil rights they find that they still cannot get into the mainstream of American economic life, because of unions, because of the advocates in the universities and in the Carter administration of no economic growth, and, above all, because of the welfare dependencies created by self-serving politicians.

Unions, through their representatives in the Congress, legislate minimum wage rates that force black youths out of the labor force. The minimum wage and employment taxes raise the cost of hiring an unskilled, untrained youth above the value of his work to an employer. It is just as if we had passed a law that said: "It is illegal to employ black youths." Of course, the unions claim a moral justification, which is that it is immoral to pay anyone below "a living wage." But the effect of the minimum wage law is not moral. When people are legislated out of gainful employment, they cannot acquire that first job that lets them develop habits and skills that will raise their earning potential. The minimum wage does not provide black youths with good jobs. It prevents them from being able to get even a bad job. By championing their own interest and legislating black youths out of the job market, unions keep the job market tighter and in that way keep their own wage rates higher.

The chic "no-growth" attitude of white liberal elites has the effect of freezing people to whatever rung of the economic ladder they happen to be on. As an article, "Environmentalism and the Leisure Class," in the December, 1977, issue of Harper's magazine pointed out, this attitude serves the interest of those who have it made, but, as we all know, few blacks are in this group. By legislating and regulating no-growth under various guises, this elite class reduces the number of job opportunities, while maximizing its own enjoyment of its leisure time.

The legislative activities of both unions and the leisured elite help politicians keep the blacks in a state of welfare dependency in which handouts are exchanged for votes. This is the broad self-serving arrangement between three power blocks of society—the unions, the articulate elite, and the politicians—that keeps the blacks out of the mainstream of American economic life. This is a new slavery worse than the old. I cannot imagine a worse humiliation than to be freed, given civil rights, and then told: "Don't worry, the government will look after you."

Leaders in the black community have realized that blacks have been placed in a new position of dependency. The black community gets income transfers, but not opportunities for blacks to earn their own way and to be economically and politically independent. It is not easy to get out of this position. Black leaders who attempt to lead their people out of the new slavery soon find that the power elite begins referring to them as "Uncle Toms." The NAACP's recent effort to oppose the Carter energy program illustrates the problem that they face. Black leaders realized that the Carter program's emphasis on regulation and holding down energy supplies would mean less economic growth potential for the economy, and, therefore, fewer opportunities for blacks to enter the mainstream of American economic life. Black leaders understood that in addition to closing off growth opportunities, the Carter program simultaneously raises prices as a result of all the energy taxes, thus worsening the welfare-dependent position into which the blacks have been legislated.

The NAACP leaders rightfully spoke out against the Carter energy program. And what happened? There were accusations that they had sold out to "the interests." The New Republic and the Washington Post took pains to emphasize that the NAACP's task force on energy consisted of people who worked for the big oil companies. The connection was not emphasized in order to point out that these would be people with professional knowledge on the subject but, instead, to suggest the presence of an illicit element in the NAACP's stand on the Carter energy program. The Village Voice declared that the NAACP had placed blacks "beneath the boot of the most merciless defenders of corporate privilege." Soon the politicians were busy protecting their investment in their largest welfare dependency by alleging that the NAACP's stand would mean higher profits for big oil at the expense of poor blacks. And, of course, the White House twisted all the black arms it could grab. The courageous, intelligent black leaders who attempted to lead their people out of the new slavery soon found themselves on the defensive. Serious attempts are being made to force a reconsideration and reversal of the NAACP's position on the Carter energy program.

People cannot continue to enter the mainstream of American economic life unless they have opportunities for gainful employment in the private sector of the economy. Wage subsidies to private employers to employ and train the unskilled unemployed may be required to overcome the politically erected barriers to employment. That the power elite chose to subsidize unemployment instead of employment suggests to me that it will not be easy to legislate effective wage subsidies. Blacks may find it more difficult to get out of the new slavery than they did the old. Perhaps the party of Lincoln will find the energy to lead the fight in this moral equivalent of the Civil War. Whoever leads it, we all have a stake in overthrowing the new slavery.●

EQUAL RIGHTS RESOLUTIONS OF THE FIRST RURAL AMERICAN WOMEN LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE

● Mrs. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on February 25, 1978, the First Rural American Women Leadership Conference unanimously passed a variety of equal rights resolutions.

In passing the equal rights resolutions, the conference explicitly acknowledged that what is at stake with respect to passage of the ERA is the fundamental right of economic independence for women.

The ERA is not a "women's only" issue. The issue of women's economic independence affects everyone in this country. As long as women, nationally, earn only 57 percent of what men earn, to cite only one of many appalling statistics regarding the status of women in this country, everyone is affected. Husbands, children, and families suffer when women work long hours and bring home a little over half of what men bring home for working the equivalent number of hours.

Anyone who cares deeply about poverty, inequality, and injustice in this country should care deeply about the ERA.

Mr. President, I attach the equal rights resolutions passed by the First Rural American Women Leadership Conference. The text follows:

EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT RESOLUTIONS

(Passed February 25, 1978)

CONSTITUTIONAL EQUALITY FOR RURAL AMERICAN WOMEN

(Passed unanimously)

Whereas, the Equal Rights Amendment is rooted in the traditional values of individuality and independence embodied in the quality of rural American life, and

Whereas, existing laws in the United States do not fully recognize the contributions of rural homemakers to the home and family, and

Whereas, rural American women share equally in the work to support their families and run their farms and or business enterprises, and

Whereas, rural American women do not have full equal legal protection in the ownership and taxation of property, the guardianship of their children, and access to public employment, credit, education, and housing under the present United States Constitutional framework, and

Whereas, the federal government and state legislatures should base their laws on the principle that marriage is a partnership in which the contribution of each spouse is of equal importance and value, and

Whereas, gender-based laws are unjust and irrational because they use gender rather than ability or need to determine an individual's rights, responsibilities, and benefits, and

Whereas, the Equal Rights Amendment constitutionally guarantees that each person shall be treated by government as an individual, with unique talents, dreams, and aspirations, and

Whereas, the principle of legal equality of women and men is as important as the principles set forth in the Bill of Rights and should be written into the United States Constitution,

Therefore, be it resolved that the First Rural American Women Leadership Conference endorses the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the United States Constitution.

EDUCATION ABOUT WEAKNESSES OF EXISTING LAWS

Be it resolved that the First Rural American Women Leadership Conference encourage traditional women's organizations to fully utilize their resources in educating their members about the inadequacies and inequality of existing laws adversely impacting on American women, particularly emphasizing the problems of homemakers and rural women.

EDUCATIONAL BROCHURE ABOUT CONSTITUTIONAL EQUALITY

Be it resolved that the First Rural American Women Leadership Conference calls upon Rural American Women, Inc., to facilitate the publication of an informational brochure presenting the case for rural American women's support for and need of the Equal Rights Amendment.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE COOPERATIVE EXTENSION SERVICE

Whereas, the U.S. Department of Agriculture Cooperative Extension service is the broadest based vehicle for reaching and teaching rural women,

Be it resolved that Rural American Women work closely with this agency to insure that accurate and factual information about the Equal Rights Amendment be made available to rural women throughout the country.

BOYCOTT OF UNRATIFIED STATES

Be it resolved that the First Rural American Women Leadership Conference calls upon President Jimmy Carter to prohibit all Federal Agencies from holding and/or funding interstate conferences and conventions in the unratified states.

DISPLACED HOMEMAKERS*

Whereas, rural homemakers who are displaced by such causes as widowhood, divorce, disability, or desertion suffer such special problems of isolation, poverty, and invisibility,

Be it resolved that state and federal legislatures enact legislation which addresses the problems and concerns of rural displaced homemakers.

EXTENSION OF THE DEADLINE FOR RATIFICATION OF THE EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT

(Passed unanimously)

Whereas, thirty-five states, comprising three-fourths of the United States population, have ratified the Equal Rights Amendment, and

Whereas, in the remaining unratified states, representing a large rural population, a few politicians representing a repressive vocal minority, are preventing the Equal Rights Amendment from coming up for a vote in their state legislatures,

Be it resolved that the First National Rural American Women Leadership Conference calls upon the United States Congress to extend the deadline for the ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment, guaranteeing equal protection for women and men under the law.

DEPLORE DISTRIBUTION OF INFLAMMATORY AND FALSE INFORMATION BY ERA OPPONENTS

Whereas, obtaining constitutional equality for women and men is of paramount importance for rural American Women, and

Whereas, consideration of the Equal Rights Amendment by state legislatures should consist of a rational review of the facts and legal arguments concerning this proposed constitutional amendment,

Be it resolved that the First Rural American Women Leadership Conference deplores the tactics of various anti-ERA individuals and groups who seek to inflame emotions and falsely represent the facts about the Equal Rights Amendment through the distribution of materials to federal and state legislators misrepresenting the publications and official activities of the National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year and the National Women's Conference.

Be it resolved that RAW, Inc. implement these resolutions by distributing them to the relevant agencies, institutions, media, and individuals, and

Be it further resolved that RAW, Inc. distribute said resolutions in the appropriate legislative bodies when relevant legislation is pending.

*Although passage of the Equal Rights Amendment will help alleviate some of the legal barriers with which displaced homemakers are faced, the Equal Rights Amendment does not address the programs which are needed for these women. This legislation would complement the Equal Rights Amendment.

HOW TORRIJOS SWEET-TALKS WOMEN AND THE U.S. SENATE

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to an article by Joan Peters in the April 1978 issue of Harper's magazine about Torrijos, "Panama's Genial Despot." Ms. Peters provides an interesting character study, from firsthand experience, of the Panamanian ruler. The general is obviously skilled at eliciting obsequious behavior, but not from Joan Peters.

I ask that her article from Harper's be printed in the RECORD. In addition to his character, his ideas on democracy should be interesting to the Senate, especially his idea that—

Having a leader on top and those below pulling him down, that is not democracy, that is group interest. I have spoken to some of the Soviet leaders and they insisted we should copy their way of doing things.

The article follows:

PANAMA'S GENIAL DESPOT: LEARNING TO DO HOMAGE TO BRIGADIER GENERAL TORRIJOS

(By Joan Peters)

For the past six or seven months the Carter Administration's "top priority" campaign to ratify the Panama Canal treaties has loosed a barrage of propaganda upon the country. The President has addressed the nation in an informal "fireside chat" on the subject. Congressional figures and people of importance in various spheres of domestic influence (media, business, labor, et cetera) have wandered up and down the land answering objections from the disciples of Ronald Reagan and explaining, in patient voices, that the treaties constitute "a good thing," "an idea whose time has come, and that Brigadier General Omar Torrijos Herrera, "El General" to his subjects, should not be thought of as a "strongman," "military ruler," or just another "tinhorn dictator." This last epithet unfortunately brings to mind a starchy-uniformed ignoramus, surrounded by armed, uniformed guards, who stomps around repressing the public and smothering the democratic opposition. Obviously it would be unthinkable, or at least inconsistent with President Carter's avowed concern for "human rights," to abdicate United States sovereignty of the hard-won Panama Canal to a tyrant. So for the past two or three months the government has encouraged a large number of civic-minded citizens to go on "fact-finding missions" to Panama, there to meet General Torrijos and to inquire about the benign effects of the treaties.

Given a chance to join one of these tours (sponsored by the National Committee on American Foreign Policy), I made the ceremonial trek to Panama City in December of last year with a delegation under the protection of Ambassador Angier Biddle Duke, formerly a chief of protocol in the Kennedy Administration and now a minister without portfolio who represents what might be called the best of American internationalism.*

*Among other members of the delegation were the following: NCAFP president Eugene Foley; former CBS president Arthur Taylor; former NBC chairman Robert Sarnoff; Forbes magazine's Malcolm Forbes, Jr.; Louisville Courier-Journal scion Barry Bingham, Jr.; veteran journalists Jay Rutherford and Benjamin Welles; New York congressional aspirant Robin Chandler Duke; Duke University president Terry Sanford; Cleveland Amory; Freedom House honorary chairman Leo Cherne and Appeal of Conscience Foundation's Rabbi Arthur Schneider; Frank Dorn, former U.S. Congressman from Brooklyn; and an enigma described by the sponsoring committee's press release as "Raymond Maduro, former Deputy Special Assistant to President Gerald Ford."

On a Monday, the day before our delegation departed for Panama, we attended a day-long series of briefing sessions in Washington. They began auspiciously with National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski at the White House. We were ushered into the "Roosevelt Room," which, we were reminded by one of Brzezinski's followers, was particularly appropriate for this meeting because it was named after Theodore Roosevelt, who had delivered the canal in 1903. The mood of cordiality in the room changed to a more tense, combative tone from the moment Brzezinski entered to take his place at the head of the oversized conference table. It quickly became apparent that the National Security Adviser would not happily or humorously brook challenge to the policy of ratification, even if that challenge was merely a request for explanation of the charges made by the treaties' opposition. After Brzezinski had left, his eloquent aides managed to ease the situation during another hour or so of explanations, which were substantiated later in the day by smiling representatives of COACT ("The Bi-Partisan Citizens Committee of Americans for the Canal Treaties"), who handed each of us an inch-thick packet of "literature" that included a "How-To Kit," replete with "suggested sample" speeches, letters to the editor, and "op ed" columns for our local newspapers.

THE ATMOSPHERE IN PANAMA

We landed at Panama City after dark on Tuesday in the ovenlike steam of the Panamanian rainy season. The waiting U.S. embassy officials escorted us from the airfield to our "headquarters" at El Panama Hotel. Ambassador Duke had sent an advance man to assure that Panamanian opposition to the general would be given as close to equal time as possible by the delegation; so for the first two days in town we listened to people who argued against either Torrijos or the treaties. They mentioned Torrijos's alleged connections to drug rings and prostitution and the millions he supposedly stashed in Spain after his coup. Several of Torrijos's detractors had been imprisoned or exiled as members of the government overthrown nine years before, and they reported that their underground organizations had only very recently been allowed official sanctions as a part of what Torrijos's officials term a "liberalization from censorship and repression." By and large, they thought Torrijos more closely associated with Castro than would appear, and they believed that once the treaties have been ratified, Torrijos will resort to a policy of harsh repression.

Among those working in Torrijos's behalf in Panama, we spoke to the puppetlike foreign minister and his staff, protreaty businessmen, U.S. military and political officials, religious authorities (among them the Jewish leader who is principal of the parochial school from which Torrijos's children graduated), teachers, drivers, so-called independent journalists, and assorted other citizens. Dr. Nicolas Ardito Barletta, the minister of planning and economic policy, explained the necessity of ratification for Panama's economy. Barletta presented a compendium of facts and figures defending Torrijos against allegations that the astronomical increase in Panama's external debt was due to corruption. He cited the costs of his government's 70 percent increase in aid to education, 65 perecnt increase in health services, 50 percent in roads, and 500 percent in agricultural credit.

The delegation also talked to both Americans and Panamanians who live in the U.S. Canal Zone and who would be subject under the treaty to Panamanian authority. The Zone's present status as a colony, complete with Baptist gothic style churches and cut-rate supermarkets, provokes bitter resentment among neighboring Panamanian nationalists. It is described by Panama City residents and U.S. embassy officials alike as a remnant of "the day of the Raj." As might be supposed, the Zonians denounce Torrijos and object to the treaties.

We had been in Panama City two days when we got our day with the dictator. Our audience with Torrijos was scheduled for Thursday morning and was to last "no longer than an hour and a half." Around 8:30 a.m. we were flown from Panama City to the village of Farallon, where Torrijos has his beachfront retreat. Torrijos reportedly had visited the place as a luncheon guest several years before, whereupon he became enamored of it and promptly announced to his Panamanian host that the government would be confiscating the property for official use.

EL GENERAL AT HOME

We were escorted into the casually well-furnished house, through a couple of corridors, and into a small sitting room, where we met the forty-nine-year-old "supreme leader." The official interpreter who'd met us at the door introduced "El General"—an unsmiling man of medium height dressed in khakis and boots. Torrijos's trim figure was marred by just a touch of paunch. Holding an unlit cigar in one hand, he smoothed down his dark hair with the other. Somebody whispered, "He looks like Bogart." As though he'd heard, Torrijos flashed a bright-white mischievous grin and mumbled perfunctorily in a low, deep voice some words of welcome that were loudly and mechanically translated by the interpreter. Then, hiking up his trousers, he turned and strode purposefully out onto a breezy veranda that overlooks the beach and sea. Torrijos hopped nimbly into the red, white, and blue hammock woven especially for him by Indian villagers, from which point of vantage—and while swinging to and fro—he recited some preliminary amenities in a bored monotone.

The delegates began awkwardly to broach questions through Torrijos's interpreter. It quickly became apparent that El General was distracted. He interrupted a journalist, who was expressing solemn concern about the Torrijos government's ties with Cuba, to order coffee for those who wanted it, then again to instruct one of his aides to distribute "Torrijos" cigars with "personalized" bands after a guest inquired whether the long cigar he was lighting up was from Castro. Yes, it was indeed a gift from the Cuban leader, Torrijos said with a gleam in his eye, swinging the hammock more enthusiastically and flinging his used matches not into the nearby ashtray but onto the tiled floor. He appeared not to notice that with each forward swing the hammock hit one of his visitors on the head or that the matches often fell on somebody's foot.

Suddenly he jumped out of his hammock and conferred for a moment with his aides. They hurried away in all directions while Torrijos sauntered back to the hammock and announced that all political questions would be answered later. Now, he had just decided, he was taking the group to see "his country," his "Plains, Georgia"—the village of Santiago, where he was born. Would the visitors mind changing their schedule to spend the day with him? Everybody murmured their joyous assent, delighted at the seemingly whimsical change of plans—everybody, that is, except the long-suffering U.S. embassy officials. They were faced not only with the logistics of postponing and rescheduling our itinerary as originally planned but also with the prospect of yet another in a long series of identical treks.

William Jordan, our ambassador in Panama, was along with us at the meeting, and his face froze perceptibly for a brief moment before he managed a pained smile at Torrijos's announcement. Jordan is a former journalist and a man of keen intelligence, not given to platitudinous remarks. He has been in Panama three-and-a-half years and is thoroughly convinced of the wisdom of ratifying the treaties. Sensitive to the hazards presented on both sides of the "powder keg," as he terms the issue of the treaties, he was uncomfortable with easy answers to the complicated human circumstances.

These included the handling of Torrijos. Jorden listened politely as El General enthusiastically revealed our schedule for the day. We would fly down as soon as planes were ready, except for a few guests who might ride with Torrijos in the twin-turbine helicopter he'd grown accustomed to—he said he seldom flew any other way. Ambassador Jorden would fly with the general, of course. To accompany them, Torrijos chose three women, plus one more—the delegation's rapporteur—because "all the other women are ugly and I need some beauty along." The rapporteur, Elizabeth Ames, blushed; everybody else applauded. The guests had to decide among themselves who would take the places that were left in the helicopter. The rest would be flown down immediately to "have the chance to vist the children in their classrooms."

Torrijos's spontaneity and the welcoming mood of the invitation gave the visit a festive air. From then on, Torrijos responded more candidly, and those questions that he hedged were evaded not in anger but with wisecracks and crude analogies, some of them censored by a blushing woman interpreter as "untranslatable." Yes, he was against political parties in Panama—they were "illegal." But, Torrijos said, swinging faster in his hammock and waving his hands in emphasis, the former corrupt power elite—"oligarchy"—from which Torrijos had liberated Panama in his 1968 coup had been a political party, and it is they, the oppossing "Panamanistas," who are most unhappy with the leader's "populist" goals. The Panamanistas, the former ruling power, were themselves repressive, but it was the upper-class white elite of Panama. Its leader, Arnulfo Arias, now exiled in Miami—or, as they call it, the "Valley of the Fallen"—is a fierce nationalist who followed the National Socialism of the Nazis in his first term of office during the Forties, and is viewed alternately as hero and monster, depending on whom you talk to.

Someone raised the question of suppression of "human rights." Prefacing his answer with an exposition of his government's newly relaxed censorship and his protection of the "little people's freedoms," Torrijos got up, paced back and forth among the visitors, and delivered a sly speech about the people who try to tell him what to do—like the Soviet Union and the United States. "Castro is the only one who tells me what not to do," he said acidly, stamping his feet. He plopped heavily into his hammock. Furthermore, Texas has some very repressive laws still on the books—what about those? he asked. As someone started to answer, Torrijos interrupted: "I'm going to write a book giving twenty lessons on 'How to Avoid Being an Enemy of the United States.' . . . They're probably going to start talking about the hidden drugs, that I am a dictator—they're already talking about it anyway. . . . I'm going to invite President Carter after this to come down and solve the internal problems of Panama. . . .

"But you haven't put your finger on the button of our problem—it is not whether we'll be partners in the canal or whether we'll get a lot of money or whether the Panamanians will be employed, preferably in the canal. The problem is that this is a possible guerrilla area or a possible Vietnam of this hemisphere. Nobody invests a penny in our country. For a country that had an economic growth of 8 to 12 percent—we had forecast an economic growth of 12 percent for 1980—we had an economic growth last year of zero. If the country is not advancing and not moving forward and we are surrounded in the country by 100,000 unemployed . . . that is where our problem is. They are about to jump all over me," Torrijos complained, his voice rising. "If you could tell me that there are huge helicopters that can move the canal to some other country, I will tell you 'Go ahead.' And the people would be happy to see it go."

At this, the delegates stiffened, wondering what might come next.

"Take away all your police," Torrijos went on. "Take away your military base, the high-voltage fences, the 'no trespassing' signs—take everything away and build a rice plantation and it will grow more! We could stock the lake with fish that would help to sustain us and we could use the water for the hydroelectric projects that we are working on. I know this [the treaty] is priority number one, but the people feel like they're orphans, because so much attention is given to the canal that the rest of the domestic problems are being put aside." Then his voice softened, he leaned back and puffed his cigar. "Before I was head of government, I used to talk about fifty people daily, solve their problems, listen in the government. The bad thing is that I'm beginning to enjoy all this traveling, and pictures, and coat and tie."

He laughed, and his audience, too, leaned back and laughed. Some remained skeptical about the impulsiveness of the general's last-minute invitation; surely the scene had already been set? But Torrijos explained.

"The reason I've just informed them we are coming is to avoid prefabricated atmosphere and above all to avoid all speeches!"

The school we would visit, Torrijos said with some pride, "has produced thousands of teachers and professors, and almost all the rebel movements in Panama have roots there. That is my province, and everyone there," he added with a grin, "feels they are very intellectual." One delegate told the translator to "tell the general that most of us are proratification," and another asserted firmly that "the general knows we are primarily with him." Torrijos responded, "I do not want emotional support, I want a well-informed and conscious support—we must put a little order in what we are about to do, and this"—he laughed—"is almost impossible in a group of intellectuals. Nevertheless, let's see if we can have some order in this disorder!" To which one of the delegation shouted "Bravo!" and Torrijos promptly invited him to ride in the helicopter.

By now the conversation was informal, seemingly carefree; Torrijos was touching people often—a shoulder or a hand of the man or woman nearby. The delegation crouched on the floor or sat on couches and chairs—laughing at the jokes, responding obsequiously to Torrijo's random notes and observations.

The resulting scene seemed a preposterous Buchwaldian parody—we the visiting Americans applauding a dictator's disparagement of us as he directs the terms of our accommodation to his desires.

A DICTATOR'S SENSE OF HUMOR

While Torrijos obviously enjoys the limelight and the power to produce raucous laughter at his jokes, he can afford to tell those jokes on himself. His lusting after women? He answered the question with a laugh, labeling himself "dictator—of love, ha, ha." His self-declared fondness for his "title of dictator," the meetings with starchy European leaders, which left him unimpressed?—here he jumped up, stood stiff, and pursed his lips, mocking European diplomatic etiquette, then flashed a brilliant grin, relaxed his face, and flopped back to the hammock—their formality prompted him to teach them a lesson in "how to relax." "After I told them," Torrijos said, quite amused with himself, "they relaxed." He is a talented mimic and his audience was delighted with his impersonations. Who impressed him most in the countries he'd visited on that trip? Israel's Prime Minister Begin was one, Torrijos said, because "Begin is a leader, and the world is full of bosses—bosses get to the top on the Peter Principle—but it doesn't have enough leaders." Torrijos feigned concern, with exaggerated frown, that "Begin will not be killed by his heart but by his chief of protocol. Because he's new, Begin doesn't realize that protocol shouldn't be bothered with," El General said, pulling out his hip flask and taking a swig. Not that Begin's protocol chief wasn't "agreeable," or that he didn't "handle everybody strictly and with finesse," but, Torrijos said bitterly, "he's a pest!" Several of us blanched at that remark, mindful of Ambassador Duke's efforts as protocol chief under Kennedy and Johnson. But nobody picked it up, and there was a frozen silence. Then many began to talk at once, and the awkwardness passed.

Torrijos stressed constantly the importance of "the people" and regarded education as a "priority." "We have doubled it in nine years—600,000 are going to schools out of the 1.8 million population. I designed it so that in the rural areas the distance between school and village is no more than a half-hour's walking distance, and in the city no school is farther away than a nickel on a bus. I designed this." How many are high-school graduates eligible to attend college? "About 15,000," Torrijos answered easily. "But too much intellectual study deforms, and too much work makes you dumb, so you have to combine them and mix them like a cocktail." At this point the translator volunteered the remark that her son's private school sends him to the country for "two months of enforced rural service each year, and I like that."

Torrijos shouted with mock sternness, "Shut up, creature, I have the floor!" He repeated the characteristic gesture of throwing his head forward so that his hair flew in oily strands over his forehead, then he shook it back and smoothed it into place with his fingers. Laughing, he repeated, "The old man has the floor."

Then, more seriously, he continued: "Our educational system is our national pride. People see terrorism and guerrilla actions and they think this is because of Communism, but it isn't—its the apparent cause . . . but not the cause. The fundamental cause is the lack of schools. The lack of hope, he said, pausing, puffing cigar frowning, "lack of education, lack of development, lack of everything. In Panama we spend 30 percent of the total budget on education and not more than 10 percent on military and defense. In other countries its 40 percent for defense and 10 percent for education. But its only when the people have no peaceful solution, no roads open—then they fight." Talking through his cigar, he said, "The Americans are always looking for Communists—more than the Communists are looking for Americans!" More laughter.

Torrijos spoke about the letter he wrote to Ted Kennedy in 1969, after Kennedy's statement about the failure of the Alliance for Progress: "Kennedy was very pessimistic about it, so I wrote to him and recounted . . . what made the young officers of the Guardia Nacional of Panama take over the oligarchy and place the armed forces at the service of the people.

"It was a long account of . . . why we were so ashamed, at a certain point, of being used as an instrument of repression. Politicians were taking advantage of force to repress the just and healthy unrest of the people. Things like this: The cattle of a big landowner would come and eat all the produce of a country man's little vegetable crop, and then they would imprison the little farmer because he hadn't fenced in his garden—and I had to put him in the jail! I knew that was not fair and it could not go on; always the justice favored the powerful and mighty," Torrijos said, springing from the hammock to gesture broadly with his hands; the general seemed to be warming to his role. He leaned forward, talking more softly, conspiratorially. "What I would do is, I would give the farmer a .12-caliber pistol so that he could kill the cow and eat it, but I warned him, 'Don't tell them I told you.' " Here Torrijos laughted with great gusto. "So after he did what I suggested, they would take him to jail and torture him to get at the truth but the farmer refused to implicate me or get me into trouble. So the high headquarters would send me a report—I was Major Torrijos at that time—that 'Communists are giving guns to the farmers,' and I would answer that 'I'm looking for them but I can't find them.' Then I would tell the guys to hide.

"That's one of the examples I gave to Kennedy in that letter . . . and that was Panama about ten years ago. Since then we have started to correct the direction . . . and everything is not taken care of yet but we have started, and many countries haven't started yet, and people who don't make peaceful changes risk having drastic changes made for them."

Torrijos's fierce nationalism was evident in his reaction to a question about the U.S. Peace Corps. "I sent them out," he shrugged. When the audience laughed uncomfortably and after too long a pause, he added, "The people in the Peace Corps are nice guys, but for us its hard to understand the problems of each [Panamanian] region. For them it's even more difficult to understand . . . they'd be drastic about solutions. Let's go back to the example of the farmer I gave a gun to, and the cow. The Peace Corps would have shot the cow themselves instead of going through the farmer. So then, if you arrest a gringo, they send the United States Marine Infantry after you!"

The general's view of contemporary culture for Panama is quite concise: "Everyone creative in the intellectual sphere or in art is anarchical, and when they get together they ask questions—so the government gives them answers." The government bought the old golf club three years ago, he explained, and "we're going to build a palace of fine arts with a Coney Island sort of park around it. So these people can blah blah about it and nothing gets done," which is just what Torrijos intended. "When they're about to come up with a solution, I get into the picture with something controversial to distract them because we don't have the money yet to finance all these projects," he boasted delightedly. Reading the disapproval of his listeners, he added quickly, "There is a renovation of the people's cultural expressions and ideas. Once a month I invite the people working in the cultural program to be at leisure here. Some of them sing or play music, some of them take a dip . . . mostly informal." Torrijos's favorite writer, José de Jesús Martinez, is a philosopher, professor—and a sergeant in the National Guard, because "all of a sudden he decided he wanted to be part of the team." "And General Torrijos agreed," his translator said. "I used to read very much," the general added, "but all I can read now is about an hour a day before I go to sleep. I have to read all the reports that are sent to me by the government, the correspondence. . . . I finish a book in about a month. I have just finished reading the autobiography of Anthony Quinn. I think it's a great book."

One of the general's staff ran up nervously and spoke to him in urgent tones, then he looked up, rolled his eyes, and reported sheepishly, "I forgot, there's no school today in Santiago—because of Teachers' Day. All the others I sent to see schools and there are no classes." He laughed, unperturbed. The larger group that had not been anointed to ride in the general's helicopter had left two hours before; instead of touring a Santiago school they were languishing around a Santiago gas station in sweltering heat, waiting for El General.

AMONG SCHOOL CHILDREN

Finally Torrijos swaggered off the veranda through the yard toward his helicopter, sporting pistol-in-holster on one hip and newly refilled canteen on the other, donning his Cuban-revolutionary-style gaucho hat and grabbing a cassette player that blared forth Latin American rumba rhythms. His entourage came shuffling behind, stumbling when Torrijos paused to drink heavily from his flask.

It was "ladies first" up into the waiting copter, assisted by the general and his aides. Then Torrijos leapt agilely up the side and into the craft, clutching his blaring cassette player. He slipped into his seat, where he easily faced side, back, and front simultaneously by just a slight turn of his head. The pilots were on his left in front, the women all in a row on his right, with "the beauty" seated nearest him, the U.S. ambassador, NCAFP president Gene Foley, and a couple of others riding steerage behind the first row.

As the helicopter lifted up, motor shrieking, Torrijos bellowed to the interpreter, who bellowed to us, "There are two hundred people in Santiago—so I understand how the little guy feels. This must be just like Plains, Georgia. How many in Plains, six hundred? Well out of Santiago's two hundred there were eighty people who voted no in the plebiscite. And those votes were not against the treaties but against me!" Torrijos waited to see the reaction, which was confusion, then he burst out laughing and began swaying and tapping his fingers in time to the music that was audible even above the roar of the motor. "I've been riding mainly in helicopters for eight years now," he said, "and I really enjoy it."

Caught up in Torrijos's conviviality, Foley shouted from his seat on the far side of the copter the playful suggestion that, with all these "beauties" aboard, the helicopter ought to make an emergency landing in the jungle. Torrijos guffawed and rolled his eyes, answering appreciatively, "You are a man of brilliant ideas!" I for one had a moment's pause that the general might act on the idea, because his macho exploits were not a secret, and a Guatemalan colleague had gleefully recounted the recent, rumored Torrijos escapade with "a dozen-or-so female journalists at a Panamanian island resort." But Torrijos began shouting over the din of twin engines and rumba to point out crops of okra, sugar, rice, and the world's little-known fourth-largest deposit of copper in the invisible distance. "Yes," Torrijos admitted, "there are commitments by industry—Texas Gulf, for instance—to begin mining operations for the copper; a great potential. We expect to export $500 million worth of copper by 1982—financing is promised by several countries—but only if the treaties are ratified." Would that consideration really delay industry from investing where there is so much potential profit? "Yes, because no country wants to invest where there is the possibility of guerrilla fighting. They could turn into the same kind as the copper mines in Angola: now they don't produce."

We set down in what appeared to be a grazing field a few hundred feet from the cluster of buildings near the school, and as the door was opened children came rushing up on bicycles, with older villagers running along behind. The swarming children swooped down affectionately upon Torrijos from the moment he stepped out of the helicopter. The progress to the school was a colorful if arduous ceremony with kisses and hugs as well as irreverent wisecracks exchanged along the way, and no bodyguards as Torrijos threw himself into the crowds. Ambassador Jorden assured the skeptics that the enthusiasm was sincere. The cheering that accompanied Torrijos as he made his way through the throng of admirers to enter the crowded gymnasium would have been difficult to feign. We were led with Torrijos to the front of the gym, surrounded by stadium bleachers on all sides, to sit behind the long speaker's table. The rickety table was flanked by formal floral bouquets; the school band played a rousing march entitled "American Colony, No!"

Torrijos took frequent swigs from his flask during his own and other speeches. He shared some laughs with the rabbi in the delegation, and Ambassador Jorden managed another pained smile as he presented one of the many diplomas to be distributed.

Jorden and Torrijos together presented a melancholy sight, this gentle man being subjected to the whim of Omar—following into helicopters, suffering a six-hour sojourn into the dictator's home camp for the umpteenth time, wincing and depressed when Torrijos capriciously and unpredictably warned a Panama TV camera that the United States had better ratify the treaties within six months or else. . . . (By the end of the day with the dictator, one senior United States embassy official would introduce a disillusioning and disquieting note of American censorship by bluntly stating, "This is the last time we'll allow such a free-wheeling visit; orders have been given . . . !")

THE MOODS OF TORRIJOS

The speeches in the hot school gym had long lost their charm by the time we adjourned. Torrijos immediately charged out with his army of kids, on into a tiny classroom, and finally out to the swimming pool, where he stopped to hand someone his watch and cigar lighter, then jumped—uniform and all—into the pool.

The delegation and the local press went by bus to a private house for lunch; the owners had been informed a few hours before that they would have the honor to serve the disheveled fact-finding mission. The imperial helicopter set down in the yard. Furious flurry emanated from the small kitchen; another room had become Torrijos' staff office, and Torrijos himself barged in soaking wet to borrow a change of clothes.

When he reappeared, the slightly crumpled crowd came to sudden attention and Torrijos strode over to a dining table, immediately followed by his attentive guests. Cameras flashed and the sound of scuffling chairs being pulled up around him fairly drowned out his voice as he began speaking, almost too fast for the interpreter. His good humor was obviously on the wane. The questions grew more pointed, and while Torrijos was edgy, he was trying to keep his anger under control. He called on a local schoolteacher to address the analogy Congressman Dorn had drawn between Panama and Vietnam. When the teacher concluded, in English, "You would force us to go into the struggle of violence if justice is not made good," Dorn asked, "Could we hear it from the General?" And then Torrijos lost his temper. Glowering, he looked directly at Dorn, told a story concerning a man accused unjustly of "blackmail, of being a 'dirty so-and-so' [untranslatable]—and that is the way I feel, Senator. You have me up to my neck, and you don't want me to defend myself. This is the way I feel."

Several gasps, then many talking at once, trying to mollify. One of our treaty supporters tried to soothe the general by telling him the questions were only to resolve doubts "back home," but the next question only aggravated matters. It was a relatively mild inquiry about Torrijos's promise to Senator Byrd regarding the relaxation of his press laws. Torrijos sat up rigid and said angrily: "This is part of the humiliation we have to continue to accept. . . . These repressive laws will be abrogated. Tomorrow I will also comply with another commitment I made to Senator Byrd about a law that it was never necessary to implement, so we almost forgot about it.

"What does worry us is that many United States leaders seem to know more about Panamanian newsmen than Panamanian newsmen do. And they are very much worried about repressive laws which our own people are not worried about. . . You have a law in Texas . . . that you do not use but it's still there, which says that anyone found with a cutting knife can get up to twenty-five years in jail. I am not interested in your laws. One gets tired of another meddling in his life. We know that you are our friends, but do not carry out justice with a shotgun; people will not like you. I will comply with my commitment to Senator Byrd . . . but certain members of the Senate, not Byrd, seem to think they will tell us what aspirin to take for our headache, in spite of the fact that it will not take away our headache. Well then, we will have an aspirin with blue eyes, blond hair, and a lot of freckles!"

Despite Torrijos's exasperation, several people persisted in questioning his control of the press, and some alluded to his government's lack of democracy in the American manner. For a time, Torrijos tapped his fingers on the table, listening to the translation of the questions, although he seemed to understand before the interpreter had even begun to speak. Then he glared at the inquiring journalists sitting nearby; quietly, through gritted teeth, he said that, despite all the imported fuss about an opposition newspaper, the fact was, "the Panamanians do not use newspapers for opposition, we use the radio, and there are over fifty radio stations in Panama. The government has only one!"

As Torrijos became increasingly defensive he reached for a personal story to illustrate his pique at the interfering visitors. Pushing his chair back from the table, he looked directly at his interpreter and began: "The other day I went to have treatments because I had sunstroke, and I don't mean to be rude or vulgar; but I must tell you how it happened; I felt burning when I went to urine, and the doctor said, 'I can cure you by giving twenty prostatic massages,' and I said, "Forget it. I don't want your cure.' Sometimes the excess of the remedy exasperates a man."

He had his own ideas about democracy: "Having a leader on top and those below pulling him down, that is not democracy, that is group interest. . . . I have spoken to some of the Soviet leaders and they insisted we should copy their way of doing things. Could it be that you are making the same mistake the Communists are?" He looked around at the group defiantly and paused; his audience was tense, silent, waiting. Then he continued, comparing the U.S.-Panama Canal breakup to a divorce in which one partner is "still in love," and observing tersely that "there is always an excuse. It hurts, it hurts to leave the canal." Then he stood up and was out of his chair before the interpreter could complete his translation of the general's adjournment for lunch.

A couple of American correspondents, veterans in Latin America, speculated about the significance of the general's fury, and a few of the delegates longed to "get back to Farallon for a dip in the general's sea." But clearly the party was over. After an hour we were collected and flown back to the retreat at Farallon, where a few of us ran down to the beach while others lounged on the veranda waiting for El General to return.

A smiling Torrijos reappeared about half an hour later, barefoot and dressed in a red T-shirt and workpants. He lit a cigar and resumed holding court from his hammock. He had regained considerable composure and his earlier, simian sort of charm. Now he seemed mindful that his lunchtime performance may have cost him some valuable support, and he attempted to ingratiate himself with his audience in a fascinating monologue that ranged from his similarities to Libyan strongman Qaddafi, whom he admires—they both like to meditate alone—to America's great leaders like Jefferson, Kennedy, and Lincoln, who were much less "Communist" than he, Torrijos, is. He pledged "real peace" for Panama, disdained Communism and fascism as equal "dictatorships," and talked seriously about the wounds he'd suffered twenty years before in Panama's mountains, at the hands of Castro-inspired guerrillas who emulated the Cuban leader "just after the guerrilla victory in Cuba." He elaborated on Fidel's advice: "This is what Fidel said—you're not going to believe me. Fidel Castro told me, "Slow, Torrijos, take it slow. . . . At first I was very fast and I had to pay a very high social cost.' And Fidel was right."

With that remark the fact-finding mission was at an end. Torrijos grabbed two or three of the girls and kissed them goodbye. Then, in a swirling of aides and followers, he left the house and retired to the mountains for what was given out as a period of rest and meditation.

Later that evening, on the occasion of the delegation's departure for the United States, Ambassador Jorden expressed concern at what he thought would be an angry Congressional reaction to expected press reports of Torrijos's threat—even those who were protreaty might be licensed by the arrogant ultimatum of Panama's boss. A few in the delegation who were pushing ratification of the treaties would regret having encouraged the meeting, which they feared had prompted the general's outburst. But no such fears were warranted. The U.S. daily press, with the exceptions of the Boston Globe, the Christian Science Monitor, and one or two others, chose to ignore Torrijos's potentially explosive pronunciamiento (at least as far as could be ascertained until several weeks later when People magazine quoted from it in a pictorial profile of "El General." Our group learned of the televised threat just two hours after Torrijos issued it, when the Panama Canal Company manager—who represents antitreaty interests—grimly distributed hastily xeroxed copies of the "statement-aired-through-Panama-television-stations-on December 2, 1977," which read:

"Panama cannot yield any more or wait much more. Either the United States ratifies the treaties or send the Marines. Our patience machine has fuel for six months. Statements by the Pentagon that Panama can turn into another Vietnam have paralyzed the economy of the country. Legions of hungry [people] around the Canal have put our patience to the test. Three hundred million Latin Americans will not permit Panama to become another Dominican Republic, Bay of Pigs, Korea, or Vietnam."

While American embassy officials and other treaty supporters were frantically fearful of the damage done, antitreaty activists were gleeful and unworried by Torrijos's threat.

One Zonian shrugged it off as only "the latest" in the dictator's long history of ominous ultimatums, a sample export to the United States of the harsh measures by which he has long kept his Panamanian people's nerve ends jumping.

Ambassador Jorden insisted that Torrijos is "not to be passed off as a tinhorn dictator," and Panamanian supporters pointed out that Torrijos's patience had been sorely tried by the long, hard history of American demands and "fact-finding" missions.●

ARMS CONTROL IMPACT STATEMENTS

● Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, last month, the executive branch submitted arms control impact statements on requests for authorization and appropriation for defense and nuclear programs for fiscal year 1979. Much of the material in the statements was classified. In the period since the statements were submitted, the executive branch has worked with the staffs of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and the House Committee on International Relations to sanitize the statements.

Sanitization of the statement on the Lance missile with an enhanced radiation warhead—the so-called neutron bomb—has just been completed. In view of the current executive branch study of the neutron bomb issue, and congressional interest in that issue, I believe it would be helpful to make that sanitized arms control impact statement on the Lance missile available to my fellow Senators.

Mr. President, I ask that the arms control impact statement on the Lance missile with an enhanced radiation warhead be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The statement follows:

ARMS CONTROL IMPACT STATEMENT

(LANCE—W70 Mod 3 (RB/ER) Warhead)

I. Program description:

A. Capabilities—Lance in the Nuclear Role:

The W70 Mod 3 (W70-3) is a [deleted] warhead under development for the LANCE missile system. [deleted].

RB/ER is achieved by fusion reactions that produce high energy neutrons. When these neutrons are produced in connection with relatively low yield fission reactions, the range of the lethal effects of the neutrons on the battlefield is greater than the range at which blast or thermal effects are lethal. At higher yields, blast and thermal effects would predominate over both neutron and gamma radiation effects of any type. [delete.] By employing RB/ER, a reduction in collateral damage will result since lower fission yields can be used. As the weapon would have a personnel kill radius comparable to much larger fission yields, but with greatly reduced blast and thermal outputs, much of the damage to adjacent equipment and structures would be spared. For example, a 1 KT fission + 1.0 KT RB/ER warhead if detonated on target would incapacitate adversary tank crews through radiation effects to the same degree as would a 10 KT SF warhead (also through radiation effects), while avoiding much of the collateral damage associated with the 10 KT SF yield.

In other words, we are comparing two weapons which have the same military effectiveness against a given radiation sensitive target: one, an SF and the other, a RB/ER with a smaller yield. Thus in characterizing these two types of weapons, we are, in effect, holding constant the radiation output while RB/ER technology decreases the blast and thermal effects on a given target.

Security is enhanced in all W70 series warheads by including a command disabling feature which non-violently renders the warhead incapable of use. [Deleted.] Command and control is provided by employing a Multiple Code Coded Switch (Category D PAL).* This electronic switch prevents unauthorized arming of the projectile by requiring activation using a six digit code. Multiple codes can also be programmed to allow selective unlock. This provides for flexibility in the release of warheads to satisfy a variety of tactical employment options.

[Deleted.] Delivery of the first production W70-3 warheads is dependent upon the timing of a Presidential certification to Congress that production of RB/ER weapons is in the national interest.

The LANCE missile system is a mobile, surface-to-surface, ballistic missile system which can provide tactical nuclear artillery support on the battlefield under all weather conditions and other visibility limitations. [Deleted.] The LANCE system (presently deployed with non-RB/ER warheads) has replaced the Honest John and Sergeant missile systems in U.S. forces deployed in Europe and is replacing the Honest John and Sergeant in several NATO countries (UK, FRG, Belgium, Italy). In both cases, this replacement is taking place on a less than one-for-one basis. [Deleted.] A total of 92 LANCE launchers is now programmed for Europe. Additionally, two LANCE Battalions are to be based in the U.S., with one presently earmarked for deployment in the Pacific should the need arise. The LANCE system is more survivable, more accurate, and more responsive to the commander's requirements than the systems it is replacing. Its longer range allows it to remain further behind the forward edge of the battle area, and thus contributes to its survivability.

B. Justification: An RB/ER warhead provides increased kill capability principally against people and reduces collateral blasts and thermal effects. With this weapon, armored vehicles, for example, which are relatively unaffected by blast effects except at extremely close range, can be disabled by making radiation casualties of their crews. Consequently, enemy armor could be neutralized with less collateral damage than would be expected from weapons that depend more on blast for their effectiveness.

Thus, the presence of RB/ER weapons in the U.S. stockpile and their deployment in Western Europe would contribute to offsetting the heavy advantage of the Warsaw Pact in tanks and armored personnel carriers. In the event of a decision to employ nuclear effort by the Warsaw Pact to achieve a breakthrough with massed forces.

Casualties to civilians and damage to property in a congested region from the blast and thermal effects of a non-RB/ER weapon of sufficient yield to destroy armor would be greater than that expected from RB/ER weapons. Table I compares the effects of the SF W70 and W33 (8") yields with [deleted].

These relative differences in areas of damage would vary depending on the type, location, and configuration of the target. However, as a rule the area of collateral damage from RB/ER weapons will be substantially less than that produced by the SF weapons needed to give comparable military effectiveness against a given radiation sensitive target.

[Deleted].

TABLE I

[Deleted].

[Deleted].

[1] Personnel would become incapacitated within 5 minutes of exposure to 8000 rads and, for physically demanding tasks, would remain incapacitated until death. Death would occur in 1–2 days. 8000 rads inside the tank corresponds to 24,000 rads outside.

[2] At yields at or around 5 KT, thermal radiation causes casualties (2nd degree burns) at greater distances from ground zero than does nuclear radiation (150 rad level). Protection from this level of thermal or nuclear radiation is readily available (equivalent to a foxhole, a basement, or relatively sturdy walls).

[3] The representative yield shown in this table varies somewhat from the yields listed on page 1. This is due to a recent change in the desired yields for this weapon. Specific radii for the above effects for the requested yield are not presently available but would not vary significantly from those given above.

[Deleted].

The LANCE system lends itself to increased safety, security, and command/control compared to earlier nuclear weapons systems. This is accomplished through [deleted] and (3) a more versatile PAL device.

The LANCE range of [deleted] km provides a capability to attack targets well beyond cannon artillery range in all conditions of visibility and weather. The system is designed to cover the Corps front to a depth of 100 km beyond the forward edge of the battle area (FEBA). This enables LANCE to be fired in support of operations near the FEBA and, by virtue of its range, to fill the gap in coverage between the maximum range of cannon artillery and the area in the enemy's rear where tactical aircraft might more freely operate (behind the greatest density of forward air defense systems).

The Lance systems would be less vulnerable to conventional attack if not discovered in the act of firing, and its missiles would have high probability of survival once launched. Lance is most vulnerable in peacetime garrisons, but once deployed into the field, its detectability would decrease and its survivability thus increases dramatically. Vulnerability to conventional attack is a direct function of the ability of enemy systems to acquire the target and bring fire on it. At firing positions located 25 km behind the FEBA, the only present Soviet systems capable of being used to attack Lance with conventional munitions are Frog and Scud missiles, or tactical air. [deleted] target acquisition in this zone is expected to be less than 10 percent of targets present. [Deleted.]

The Lance missile/W70-3 warhead combination does not have a strategic capability, since the range of the missile is limited, and the RB/ER characteristics of the warhead provide no special advantage in the strategic role. [Deleted].

The residual radiation (fallout and neutron-induced activity) produced by an RB/ER warhead is less than that from an SF weapon with equivalent military effects. Although an RB/ER weapon would produce about [deleted] times as many neutrons per kiloton as would an SF weapon, typical RB/ER yields are 10–20 percent that of SF weapons for equivalent military damage.

[Deleted].

[Deleted].

II. Funding—DOE funding ("then year" dollars in millions as of January 1978.)

* Mod O LANCE did not use a Category D, but rather a single 6-digit Category C PAL. Conversion of MOD O LANCE to a configuration with Category D PAL is underway.

	Fiscal year 1977 and prior	Fiscal year 1978	Fiscal year 1979	Fiscal year 1980 (estimate)	Estimate to complete
Development dollars [deleted]
Procurement dollars [deleted]
Number of units
Total development [deleted]
Total procurement [deleted]; procurement unit cost [deleted]

Total RDT&E and production costs, based on an inprocess production change to RB/ER warheads, and assuming that the LANCE warhead authorization is kept constant at [deleted] are estimated at [deleted]. These funding levels may be somewhat increased if there is a significant delay in a decision to produce and deploy RB/ER weapons. Army costs include (1) relatively minor changes to the warhead adaption kit to insure compatability with the missile, (2) manufacture of the required adaption kits, and (3) a minimum ground and flight test program to demonstrate compatibility and operational viability. Savings would be achieved by incorporating several of the required flight tests on previously scheduled Annual Service Practice flights and stockpile reliability flight tests. [Deleted].

III. Analysis:

The LANCE system (missile, transporter-erector, nuclear warheads, and support equipment) has been in the field since 1974. This analysis focuses on the proposed W70–3 warhead and only incidentally touches upon the LANCE missile as its delivery vehicle.

A. Consistency with US Arms Control Policy and Related Presidential Decisions:

The W70 RB/ER Lance warhead program is not inconsistent with declared arms control policy. The President has stated that in the absence of satisfactory international agreements to reduce nuclear stockpiles, there is a need to retain and modernize theater nuclear capabilities, especially those which support NATO's strategy of flexible response.

By reducing the blast and thermal radiation that cause unintended collateral damage, RB/ER warheads protect non-combatants and friendly troops. The reduction in collateral damage may be said to serve a second arms control goal—reducing the destructiveness of war. This depends, however, on whether an adversary responds "in kind." Yet, it is not evident that the use of these weapons creates incentives for an adversary to refrain from escalation.

In weighing the costs and benefits of a decision to deploy RB/ER nuclear weapons it is important to consider the possible effects on US efforts to curb nuclear weapons proliferation. The prospect of a US decision to deploy the RB/ER weapons has already been widely, but incorrectly perceived by many, here and abroad, as representing a change in US doctrine which would make use of nuclear weapons more likely in a tactical situation. The President and other responsible US officials have stated repeatedly that such weapons would remain under the same strict political control of the President, who would take a decision to employ this weapon as seriously as any other nuclear weapon.

According to Article 6 of the Non-Proliferation Treaty signed in 1968 by the United States, it was agreed that:

Each party to the treaty undertakes to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament, and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control.

The intent of article 6 of the NPT was to get the nuclear weapon states on record as to their intent to reach agreements on cessation of the nuclear arms race, which has both quantitative and qualitative aspects. The non-nuclear weapon states that signed the NPT agreed to foreswear developing nuclear weapons of their own (horizontal nuclear proliferation) in other parts of the treaty, in return for this pledge of future restraint by the nuclear powers.

Some political leaders in non-nuclear states have criticized US and Soviet nuclear modernization programs, especially those that have become publicly prominent, as being inconsistent with the nuclear powers advocacy that others forego developing nuclear weapons altogether. Whether or not this type of criticism has any real effect on the policies of other countries is a matter of dispute. Some believe that extensive nuclear modernization programs make it more difficult for the US to press non-nuclear states toward steps to lessen the risk of further nuclear weapons proliferation. Others believe that US (or Soviet) programs are referred to only as rationalizations in the countries in question. Indeed, many non-nuclear countries look upon US nuclear modernization as essential if they are to continue to rely on the US nuclear umbrella rather than building their own nuclear weapons. In any event, the political effect of projected increases in the number of Soviet nuclear warheads must be considered in the same light.

To the extent that the RB/ER warhead is perceived to lower the nuclear threshold, or as a fundamental innovation in nuclear weapons, it may be perceived as inconsistent with the US commitment to non-proliferation. The US believes, however, that RB/ER weapons would not lower the nuclear threshold, represent an evolutionary rather than revolutionary modernization of theater nuclear forces, and that, in any case, weapons modernization is not precluded by the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Since US policy is not to transfer nuclear weapons to other states, the LANCE W70–3 warhead poses no difficulty with regard to policies governing arms transfers.

B. Consistency with Agreed Arms Control Obligations:

The proposed system is not subject to any constraints by existing arms control agreements.

Since Lance is a relatively short range tactical missile system, it is not addressed in SALT.

The W70–3 development and deployment would not be affected by the TTBT since the underground testing of warheads under 150 KT is not prohibited.

There is no customary rule of international law or international convention prohibiting the use of nuclear explosive weapons. The RB/ER warhead is a nuclear explosive weapon. Thus, on the basis of existing international law, the RB/ER warhead is not in a different category than other nuclear explosive weapons.

It is the U.S. view that the recently concluded additional protocols to the 1949 Geneva Convention (which were adopted on June 8, 1977 by the Diplomatic Conference on the Reaffirmation and Development of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts, also known as the Law of War Conference) were designed with a view to conventional weapons.

It is the understanding that the rules established by this Protocol were not intended to have any effect on, and do not regulate or prohibit the use of nuclear weapons. The US made this understanding clear several times during the conference, and it was also stated explicitly by the British and French Delegations. It was contradicted by only one delegation (India).

C. Effect on Current and Prospective Negotiations:

The Soviets have sought to gain a propaganda advantage from a production or deployment decision in connection with ongoing arms control negotiations. On December 23, for example, Brezhnev proposed a reciprocal renunciation of RB/ER weapons production. [Deleted].

[Deleted].

The W70–3 program does not constitute an increase in existing US or allied delivery systems in Europe. In fact, the Lance system is replacing its predecessors on a less than one-for-one basis. There is no proposal now tabled in MBFR by either side that would prohibit the Lance missile/W70–3 warhead combination, nor is weapons modernization as such, specifically prohibited. The US offer of December 1975 to reduce its tactical nuclear stockpile by 1000 weapons, if accepted by the Warsaw Pact, probably would not impact directly upon the LANCE RB/ER program [Deleted]. Soviet commentators have already publicly broached the theme that RB/ER would greatly reduce the value of the Western offer to reduce and limit American nuclear elements, [deleted]. Yet neither the Eastern nor Western proposals have included constraints on modernizing the forces.

If future MBFR talks, like SALT, were to consider proposals for qualitative limits on weapons, as well as limits on numbers of weapons or units, then MBFR could affect future Lance RB/ER deployments.

Since testing has been completed, the W70–3 program will not be affected by a CTB.

It is the US position that any agreement prohibiting radiological weapons will not apply to direct radiation from nuclear explosive weapons or to their consequences. This includes radioactive fallout from explosions of nuclear weapons. [Deleted].

The transfer of the W70–3 to other nations is not envisioned. Such a decision would go against current US laws and every principle governing US nuclear weapons deployment abroad. The US in deploying its nuclear weapons systems in Europe, only transfers to our European Allies ownership of the delivery vehicles, not the nuclear warheads. The warheads remain under US ownership and custody subject to release only by Presidential decision. In Asia, the US policy governing our tactical nuclear weapons has been even more strict. At present no LANCE delivery systems have been deployed to Asia. Thus, the W70–3 program would have no current impact on discussions between the US and the USSR concerning possible limitations on arms transfers.

Deployment of the W70–3 to Europe should not contribute to the horizontal proliferation of nuclear weapons or delivery systems since the LANCE systems are already located in the countries where it is likely the W70–3 would be deployed. Acquisition of the W70–3 would not increase the number of nuclear weapons available since the RB/ER warhead is programmed as a modification to the final portion of an already programmed buy of LANCE warheads.

D. Effect on Global or Regional Stability:

Since the early 1960s, the US has viewed theater nuclear forces to have an important role in the defense of NATO. As part of NATO's strategy of flexible response, the possession and threat to utilize theater nuclear forces is believed to have helped deter the initiation of conflict by the Warsaw Pact with either conventional or nuclear weapons. NATO doctrine specifies that, should deterrence fail, and NATO's conventional forces prove inadequate, theater nuclear forces could have an important role in countering aggression by providing flexible options to support conventional forces and in controlling escalation of an armed conflict once it began. Furthermore, theater nuclear forces are important to deterrence as a link between conventional capabilities and the US strategic deterrent.

The W70–3 RB/ER warhead could increase NATO's capability to deter a conventional or tactical nuclear attack by the Warsaw Pact. Moreover, if deterrence were to fail, the W70–3 could enhance NATO's capability to inflict significant military damage on the aggressor while reducing structural damage and casualties to individuals not in the immediate target area, including both friendly troops and civilians. The overall Lance system should also contribute to stability, since its deployment has increased the level of operational control, survivability and flexibility of these weapons.

Such improvements need not lower the nuclear threshold. The use of any nuclear weapon would constitute the most agonizing decision that any of our political leaders could face because of the risk of a nuclear response and the potential nuclear escalation. As President Carter has said: "These weapons would not make that decision any easier." Clearly, the US must do all that it can to avoid having to face such a decision. The strength of conventional forces, for example, is a far more significant factor with respect to the nuclear threshold and for that reason, among others, deployment of RB/ER warheads would not in any way diminish the need to improve NATO's conventional forces. For this reason, the NATO Alliance has set conventional improvements as its highest priority.

On the other hand, the existence of more effective nuclear weapons with expected lower collateral damage and significantly fewer civilian casualties may be perceived by an adversary to increase the likelihood that these weapons would actually be used in combat. [Deleted.] In this event, the W70–3 RB/ER program may increase Soviet propensities to employ nuclear weapons should they go to war, insofar as they may believe that NATO's nuclear threats are more credible and that, indeed, NATO has placed greater reliance on nuclear weapons for war-fighting. [Deleted.]

Of course, Soviet perceptions pertaining to RB/ER technology and capabilities are difficult to analyze. [Deleted]. They would presumably follow their own doctrines whether or not this weapon is introduced. Nor can the fact that the W70–3 warhead may cause less collateral damage be expected to moderate possible Soviet responses. Its use would be no less likely than the present Lance warhead to evoke Soviet retaliatory use of tactical nuclear weapons. And unless the Soviets develop a comparable warhead, their response with their existing warheads would create the same kind of devastation that RB/ER weapons would avoid because of their reduced blast effects. [Deleted].

Overall, the political effects associated with the deployment of RB/ER warheads relate to characteristics of the entire class of weapons, rather than to the Lance warhead alone. Possible effects on the nuclear threshold lie more in the gray area of perceptions—those of the US public, Allied leaders and public, Soviet leadership, and the third world—than in judgments based on hard analytic criteria or weapons characteristics.

The public debate over the merits of RB/ER systems, reflects the basic dilemma which has surrounded our theater nuclear posture since the 1950s. On the one hand, the mere presence of nuclear weapons has contributed to deterrence, and to the perceived strength of the US commitment, and has been welcomed as such. However, their deterrent strength rests on a belief that NATO has the will to use them should that prove necessary. On the other hand, any suggestion that these weapons might actually be employed in a battlefield warfighting role has evoked images of mass destruction in densely populated Europe.

[Deleted].

When the current program became public in the US there was an unfortunate degree of uninformed and sometimes distorted commentary. The Soviets have picked up the theme in a coordinated world-wide propaganda campaign.

Clearly, RB/ER weapons have become a politically difficult and controversial issue, especially in Western Europe [deleted] tried to ensure that the issue is considered in the proper strategic and political context. The US Government has sought to correct misinformation, point out the one-sidedness of the Soviet campaign, and has made clear that we will make our basic decisions in consultation with our Allies.

The description of RB/ER as a weapon that "kills people while leaving buildings undamaged" is an inaccurate interpretation by the press that has served to catch public attention all over the world. For this reason, a decision to produce and deploy RD/ER weapons could be seen in many quarters in terms of an inaccurate impression of the effects of this weapon alone, rather than in terms of the dangers of all nuclear weapons on the one hand, and their importance to deterrence on the other hand. Conversely, a decision not to deploy could create future problems, both for the US and the NATO Alliance, if it were widely perceived that such a decision was the result of Soviet pressures and that it thus invited new Soviet efforts to undercut other NATO force modernization measures.

The prospect of escalation remains a central component in, and factor weighing against, any US decision to use nuclear weapons regardless of the specific performance characteristics of this or other classes of nuclear weapons. Thus, any US decision to use nuclear weapons would be in all likelihood insensitive to whether or not RB/ER weapons were deployed. The decision to use nuclear weapons of any kind including RB/ER weapons, would remain in the hands of the President, not in the hands of local theater commanders. The principal dilemmas are whether the perceived gains for deterrence and warfighting capabilities outweigh the risks of some perceiving a lowering of the nuclear threshold and the adverse political reactions. Deterrence is enhanced because of the adversary's perception of a greater US willingness to use the weapon. This same perceived greater willingness, however, if deterrence fails, may provide an incentive for an adversary to escalate to the nuclear level more readily. Of course, he would still face the high risk of further nuclear escalation.

E. Technological Impact:

[Deleted].

As to whether US deployment of RB/ER weapons would stimulate similar deployment by the Soviet Union, there has never been any inhibition, [deleted] to the Soviet Union's deployment of such weapons. There has been much discussion of the capability in open literature for many years. Moreover, in its stockpiles since the late 1950s, NATO has had small-yield artillery weapons [deleted].

Recently Chairman Brezhnev stated in general terms that the Soviet Union would respond to the US deployment of RB/ER weapons. [Deleted]. For further discussion of nuclear proliferation effects refer to section III A.

F. Verification:

At the present time, there are no arms control agreements that would include the W70–3 warhead. [Deleted].

IV. Conclusions:

In practice, the production and deployment of the LANCE W70 Mod 3 warhead would likely have only slight impact on arms control, including the course of ongoing arms control negotiations, deterrence and stability in Europe, or the destructiveness of war should it occur. There has been considerable public controversy about this and other enhanced radiation weapons, however, in part because of contradictory perceptions of the impact of these weapons on the nuclear threshold and related arms control concerns.

On the one hand, the prospective introduction of these weapons has been perceived by many as representing a potential lowering of the nuclear threshold. The greater military utility and lower expected collateral damage associated with these weapons, it is argued, would contribute marginally—in the event of an extreme crisis or outbreak of conventional warfare—to a decision to employ nuclear weapons by making such a decision easier. The continued existence of such body of significant opinion could have an adverse effect on US efforts toward stemming nuclear proliferation. Moreover, if Soviet leaders perceived that RB/ER technology made the use of NATO nuclear weapons marginally more plausible, their incentive to make first use of nuclear weapons themselves may increase. Any such effects, if they materialize, would be adverse from an arms control standpoint.

However, continued US (and Allied) public statements may, over time, be able to counteract the factual inaccuracies and Soviet propaganda that have created the public controversy and misperceptions of RB/ER weapons as fundamentally different from other nuclear weapons. As to the effect on the threshold, as the President and USG officials have repeatedly stated, a decision concerning the employment of RB/ER weapons would be treated no less seriously, and no differently than that for any other nuclear weapon. Thus, the deployment of these weapons would not affect the actual nuclear threshold. Moreover, because of the military utility of RB/ER weapons, their deployment could enhance deterrence, reduce the risk of war and, if war should break out, marginally reduce the prospect for escalation and the destructiveness of war.●

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

THE PANAMA CANAL TREATY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of Executive N. 95th Congress, 1st session, Calendar No. 2, which the clerk will state.

The second assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Executive N, 95th Congress, 1st Session, The Panama Canal Treaty.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

AMENDMENT NO. 41

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 41 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT) on behalf of himself and Mr. HANSEN proposes amendment No. 41.

At the end of paragraph 4(c) of article XIII, add the following: "Nothing in this subparagraph may be construed to commit the United States of America to pay any part of such unpaid balance to the Republic of Panama after the date of the termination of this Treaty.".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for debate on this amendment is limited to 3 hours, equally divided and controlled by the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT) and the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH).

The Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT) is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, article XIII, section 4(c) of the proposed Panama Canal Treaty provides that the Panama Canal Commission to be created by the new treaty will pay a sum of $10 million a year out of surplus revenues to the Government of Panama. This so-called contingency payment is above and beyond other payments to be provided by section 4 to the Government of Panama.

In addition, section 4 provides that, in the event insufficient surplus is generated each year to make a $10 million contingency payment, the obligation to make that payment will carry over into subsequent years, thus increasing the chances that the Government of Panama will get each of its contingency payments as soon as possible and in less inflated dollars. What is unclear is whether Panama can be certain of getting all of its 22 years' worth of contingency payments.

Article XIII, section 1 of the Panama Canal Treaty reads as follows:

Upon termination of this Treaty, the Republic of Panama shall assume total responsibility for the management, operation, and maintenance of the Panama Canal, which shall be turned over in operating condition and free of liens and debts, except as the two parties may otherwise agree.

Thus, article XIII, section 1 makes it clear that the canal must be turned over free of debt, unless otherwise agreed, thus implying that the accumulation of contingency payment debts, if considered an obligation of the Panama Canal Commission, would become a just debt of the United States and would be payable by the United States upon termination of the Panama Canal Treaty on December 31, 1999.

While such an interpretation is consistent with the language of the treaty, and consistent with the expectations of some Panamanians as reported to our committee, it is inconsistent with the notion that the contingency payment is to come only out of toll revenues and is not to involve appropriated funds.

The State Department has said that the United States will have no obligation to pay this accumulated contingency payment debt after 1999. However, this interpretation does not spring from the text of the Treaty in a clear and lucid manner. None other than H.R. Parfitt, the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone and President of the Panama Canal Company, and Mr. Elmer B. Staats, the Comptroller General of the United States, have commented specifically on the ambiguity inherent in this section of the treaty. Both indicated that differences of opinion existed in Panama as to whether the Government of the United States would be obligated to pay that part of the 22 years' worth of $10 million annual contingency payments which the Panama Canal Commission might not have been able to pay out of generated revenues.

In an effort to clarify this issue, I sent a telegram to General Torrijos on February 1, 1978, asking for his interpretation of this part of the Panama Canal Treaty. I received no direct answer to this telegram, but I did receive a reply to a second telegram I sent on February 22. The Panamanian Ambassador to the United States sent me a letter dated March 6 explaining that General Torrijos had asked that I be given a copy of a statement made by his Minister of Planning and Economic Development to an audience in San Francisco.

To that audience, this Panamanian economics minister, Dr. Nicolas Barletta, said that the United States would have no commitment to make good on the contingency payments after 1999. In his opinion, there was little reason to be concerned because Panama fully expects that the Panama Canal Commission will generate sufficient revenue to make good on the contingency payment.

This may be an unwarranted assumption. Examination of the draft implementing legislation shows that the requirement for a $10 million contingency payment will not be considered in setting toll rates, and the low priority for payment given the contingency payment, relative to other ongoing debts of the Panama Canal Commission, makes it clear that there is little chance that Panama will receive any significant payments out of revenues. Thus, even if the Government of Panama, under whatever regime might exist, did not maintain in 1999 that the United States has a legal obligation to make good on the contingency payments, there is ample reason for them to argue that the United States has a moral obligation to make good on all or part of this debt.

Because I believe it is important to resolve this issue now, before hard feelings over the contingency payments develop between the United States and Panama, I would like to explain my amendment and justify it in detail.

The original language of section 4(c) provides payments to Panama as follows:

An annual amount of up to ten million United States dollars ($10,000,000) per year, to be paid out of Canal operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Panama Canal Commission including amounts made pursuant to this Treaty. In the event Canal operating revenues in any year do not produce a surplus sufficient to cover this payment, the unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years in a manner to be mutually agreed.

My amendment would make the following changes:

Viz: At the end of paragraph 4(c) of Article XIII, add the following: "Nothing in this subparagraph may be construed to commit the United States of America to pay any part of such unpaid balance to the Republic of Panama after the date of the termination of this Treaty.".

The ambiguities in article XIII which my amendment seeks to correct were identified quite clearly in the Armed Services Committee hearings. In fact, the issue predated those hearings as was made clear in prepared Senate testimony by the Comptroller General of the United States. I quote:

Last November in our testimony before the House Subcommittee on the Panama Canal, we noted the possible ambiguity concerning the treaty-specified payment to Panama of up to $10 million if operating revenues exceed expenditures. Under one interpretation, if no payments were made during the lifetime of the treaty, a lump sum payment to Panama of over $200 million could be required at termination of the treaty.

The Department of State, however, has said that the proposed Commission is obligated to make this payment only to the extent that operating surpluses exist during the treaty life and that there will be no obligations by either the Commission or the U.S. Government to pay Panama any unpaid cumulative balance after December 31, 1999. Accordingly, the Panama Canal Company has excluded this amount from all its cost projections, including those we used.

At this point in Mr. Staats' statement the distinguished senior Senator from the State of Nevada correctly identified the problem when he said:

That is a unilateral statement on the part of the Department of State. There is nothing in the Treaty to clearly spell that out.

The Comptroller General could only agree with Senator Cannon. I quote:

Mr. STAATS. As was indicated this morning, the Panamanians have a different interpretation with respect to that. You could, under one interpretation, provide that the roll over take place up to 1999, but not carry over into the year 2000 when the property would be transferred. Under those circumstances, if there were profits, some or all of it could be paid, but the question is whether or not there is an obligation on the part of the U.S. Government, and there is no doubt about it, if this [is the] interpretation that Panama has made, then it will have to come out of the Federal Treasury unless it is otherwise provided for in the toll base.

Mr. Staats urged that ambiguities concerning the contingency payment be eliminated and hoped that the operation of the contingency payment might be clarified in the implementing legislation. And he went on:

Furthermore, there should be a clear understanding with Panama on the treatment of this obligation, particularly in view of the treaty language which requires mutual agreement.

I would like to read that again as this comes from Mr. Staats:

Furthermore, there should be a clear understanding with Panama in the treatment of this obligation, particularly in view of the treaty language which requires mutual agreement.

This theme was continued during the questioning of Governor Parfitt:

Senator MCINTYRE. I understand that Torrijos or somebody down there is saying that if they don't get the $10 million by the year 2000, they will expect 22 times $10 million, or $220 million in payment. Do you know of this?

Governor PARFITT. I think that alludes to the fact that the treaty does say in any given year to the extent you don't pay the surplus it rolls over to the next year, and he is assuming then at the year 2000 it no longer rolls over, it is then paid off. It has been our negotiator's position that since the treaty says these funds will be paid to the extent earned, if they aren't earned they are not a liability of the U.S. Government and they would not be paid.

Governor Parfitt again repeated the theme in his exchange with the junior Senator from Colorado:

I think that everybody agrees to the extent they do not pay it in any given year it rolls over. I don't think there is any difference of understanding on that issue. It rolls over until the year 2000. That is where there is a difference of interpretation.

And again:

There is no difference in opinion on rollover annually. The difference of opinion comes at the year 2000. To the extent that it is not earned at that point in time, the administration concludes that since we didn't earn it we are not required to pay it.

I think Mr. Staats' testimony asks does Panama agree with that. What we hear is Panama does not agree.

And again:

Everybody agrees it rolls over in a given year to the next year until the year 2000. Then there is a difference in point of view.

There are basically two ways in which the United States can resolve the difficulties associated with the contingency payment. The first method is to clarify the language of the treaty. The second is to insure that there is no accumulated contingency payment debt in 1999.

The best way to resolve the difficulties associated with the contingency payment is to clarify the language in the treaty whose ambiguity has created the problem in the first place. This is the approach taken by my amendment. Given the very real confusion over the language of the treaty, and given the language of the treaty, and given the divergent interpretations which have already appeared, an informal agreement between the two governments as to the obligation of the United States to make good on the accumulated contingency payment debts after 1999 would lack credibility. I believe the difficulties associated with efforts to clarify the contingency payment in the implementing legislation are pointed out in the following dialog between Governor Parfitt and myself:

Senator BARTLETT. I believe you told Senator McIntyre that the Canal Commission would expect to set its toll revenue to meet its cost and that if this contingent payment was not included in the plan for setting tolls, there would be little surplus to pay the Panamanians since the Commission is not a profitmaking organization.

Governor PARFITT. That is correct, sir.

Senator BARTLETT. So what we would have here is a situation in which we have promised to pay the Panamanians out of any surplus which the Commission earns but the Commission is not expected to have any surplus.

Governor PARFITT. Under a situation which we now forecast, which is one of ever-increasing demand for additional tolls, we would not be generating surpluses, at least in very significant amounts.

Senator BARTLETT. And if we include the contingency payment in the estimate of operating costs, we increase the chance of the Canal Commission running into debt, and we have said to the Panamanians that we will turn the canal over to them free of debt.

Governor PARFITT. That is correct, sir.

Senator BARTLETT. Given the large sums of money involved and the ambiguities in the treaty, which could cost either the United States or Panama large sums of money, depending upon how the disputes are resolved, could you, Governor Parfitt, tell me how the two nations are going to avoid disputes and conflicts over the interpretation? In other words, the same question I asked Mr. Staats.

Governor PARFITT. Obviously there are built in some difficulties and we hope that these can be ironed out through the various committees that have been established in effect to try to resolve these problems. Certainly the problem related to the contingency payment seems to be one that cannot be resolved in that fashion in view of the conflicting views of both parties right now.

Senator BARTLETT. I would assume that the Congress would want to see that these differences are resolved, and how would you suggest the Congress do that?

Governor PARFITT. We had hoped most of them at least can be resolved through the implementing legislation that the Administration is now trying to develop.

Senator BARTLETT. But if the implementing legislation expresses a Congressional point of view or even an Administration point of view, and if that is not the point of view of the Panamanians, then there would still be the controversy.

Governor PARFITT. That is correct, if this does not represent really the agreement of Panama and the United States the implementing legislation will not resolve that conflict.

Senator BARTLETT. Unless the Panamanians reach some agreement with the United States executed by President Torrijos or someone from Panama?

Governor PARFITT. Or unless they in fact agree with the interpretation of the Administration as it is implemented in the legislation. There seems to be a little difference of opinion as to what the Panamanians agree to and do not agreed to. I have not had that direct an association with them so I do not know directly what their position is.

Senator BARTLETT. That would require a signed instrument, would it not?

Governor PARFITT. It would appear to involve some kind of a signed instrument or some kind of a reservation or amendment to the basic documents.

This view receives support even from Mr. Staats, as the following statement makes clear:

Mr. STAATS. Well, there might be several ways on the $10 million surplus issue of dealing with that. One would be to have an exchange of notes or something in writing which would interpret this, have an agreement on the interpretation of what is the surplus and whether or not there is an obligation to carry that over from year to year, the so-called rollover idea.

There is another way, even in the absence of an agreement, it could be written right into the implementing legislation. I would think the former would be the preferred way to deal with it.

But lacking that, it seems to me certainty is more important in this case than to have the uncertainty and the kind of irritation and controversy that would flow from it. We are talking about a substantial amount of money.

It is because I feel strongly that we need to have certainty in the agreement rather than uncertainty, rather than ambiguity, that I am presenting to the Senate this amendment to the Panama Canal Treaty.

Following a discussion of problems associated with the $10 million contingency payment, the senior Senator from the State of New Hampshire expressed a similar view as follows:

Senator MCINTYRE. As one Senator who sees these treaties as something whose time has come, I want to say I have been very upset that I could find all of these mishmash of negotiations that are still hanging fire, far from creating what I was hoping for, which would be a nice, good, strong relationship with our Panamanian friends. I can see all kind of troubles on the horizon.

I, too, see much trouble on the horizon, especially resulting from the probability that the Government of Panama will receive little, if any, of the contingency payment they anticipate out of excess revenues generated by the Panama Canal Commission. The problem is a simple one, outlined in my exchange with Governor Parfitt quoted above. If plans for the contingency payment are not included in setting the toll base, there is little likelihood that the Commission will have excess revenue because it is not a profitmaking organization. Testimony before the Armed Services Committee indicated that the surplus payment would not be considered in setting tolls, and the draft of implementing legislation made available to the Congress by the administration supports this view. In setting guidelines for the establishment of toll rates, the implementing legislation takes into consideration maintenance costs of the canal, depreciation of assets, amortization of use rights, and the payment to Panama described in sections 4(a) and 4(b) of article XIII of the treaty, but not section 4(c) which deals with the contingency payment.

Furthermore, in determining the actual amount of the annual contingency payment, the implementing legislation requires that priority first be given to operations, maintenance, inventory, payable unfunded liabilities, services, other payments to Panama, a capital reserve account, and programed reserved accounts designed to maintain the financial liquidity of the Commission during periods between toll rate increases.

The likelihood that the Panama Canal Commission might run a deficit during the treaty period prior to 1999 was studied extensively by the Armed Services Committee. A study for the Committee by American Management Systems, Inc., concluded on January 26, 1978, that the proposed Panama Canal Commission would have to engage in major cost reduction programs and would have to link tolls closely to the rate of inflation in order to avoid a serious deficit. The study done for the Administration and for the Panama Canal Company was summarized in this respect by Senator McIntyre. I quote:

Senator MCINTYRE. It is obvious from your testimony today that you do not feel that if the $10 million contingency payment is not included in the toll base, it will be very unlikely that we will have a $10 million surplus running around.

Governor PARFITT. I feel very definitely if it is not included in the toll base it will not be generally earned.

These pessimistic conclusions about the likelihood of achieving a sizable surplus from which to derive a large number of contingency payments contrasts with the optimism expressed by the Panamanian Minister of Planning and Economic Development in his San Francisco statement. I quote Mr. Barletta:

> However, I would like to say, that in our estimation, the revenues of the Canal and all the projections and studies that have been made should be able to cover this second $10 million that should come to Panama if revenues permit, so I don't foresee much of a problem in respect to (a) deficit.

I wish to point out that several times in the hearing before the Armed Services Committee, Governor Parfitt referred to the fact that in the out years, in the years approaching the year 1999, it would be much more difficult for the canal commission to make a profit or to keep from having a significant debt. In fact, he pointed out, in his answers to various questions, that the large amount of traffic that now exists going through the canal, carrying oil from the North Slope of Alaska to the east coast or the gulf coast, is giving a lot of business to the canal that is not expected to be permanent, because it is anticipated that in the not too distant future, there will be a facility, a pipeline facility, to transport the oil from the west coast to the east coast, or at least, to the midsection of the 48 States. So it is anticipated that the traffic through the canal, the income from that traffic, will decline rather sharply in a matter of a few years.

If ambiguity in the language of the treaty leaves open the question of whether the United States has a legal obligation to make good on the accumulated contingency payment debts after 1999, then the less-than-straightforward manner in which Panama has been led to believe that it will receive the accumulated contingency payment leaves open the question of whether the United States will have a moral obligation to make such a payment.

Much has been said in recent weeks about so-called killer amendments. By no stretch of the imagination could this amendment be given that title. If Panama agrees with the State Department's interpretation of the contingency payment, then Panama agrees with this amendment. If Panama does not agree with the official State Department interpretation, then my amendment is the only way to resolve the issue. Given the numerous Members of this body who have expressed their concern over the ambiguities associated with the contingency payment, and given the concern expressed by members of the administration itself, I urge all of my colleagues to support this clarifying language to eliminate the ambiguity as it exists.

I should like to stress that the proper place and the only place to eliminate the ambiguity is in the treaty itself. If the plan is that this matter can be resolved by a reservation, I would hardly disagree, because all that will do is add one more, a third, conflicting interpretation, rather than resolving the two conflicting provisions that exists in article XIII.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

(The following colloquy occurred during Mr. BARTLETT'S remarks and is printed at this point in the RECORD by unanimous consent.)

Mr. PERCY. I wonder if the Senator knows whether or not the position taken by Panama's Minister of Planning and Economic Development, Nicolas Barletta, has been put on the record? I realize that it was a statement made by a government official of Panama and is not equivalent to language in a treaty. However, I think it should be made clear as to how the Panamanians view this. I visited with Minister Barletta both in Panama and discussed this matter with him in my office here when he visited here a few weeks ago, and I would like to make certain that we have on the record his statement which interprets his particular section of the treaty.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have already referred to it. I note it was made a part of the RECORD, I think, by Senator BYRD some days ago or some weeks ago.

Mr. PERCY. This was the statement that he made in his appearance before the World Affairs Council in San Francisco on February 28.

Mr. BARTLETT. It was a statement he made in response to a question after his speech and in which he made the statement that the Senator alludes to.

I would point out that this in no way obligates the Panamanians or necessarily the Government of Panama. Before the Senator arrived, I believe I pointed out that it was, I think, on February 1 that I sent a wire to President Torrijos asking for his interpretation. I did not get an answer. So 3 weeks later I sent another wire and I still did not get an answer from President Torrijos. I finally got an answer from the Ambassador from Panama, and what he did was just give me a copy of the statement made by Mr. Barletta in answering the question in San Francisco.

I would say this to my good friend from Illinois that I regard the inaction by President Torrijos in answering my inquiries in either case or refraining from answering as avoiding the question.

I asked him what he thought of it and he did not tell me what he thought of it nor did he tell me what the people in Panama, according to his point of view, think about it.

But whether or not he agrees with the State Department, it does not eliminate the ambiguity that exists in the treaty.

The people in Panama, according to testimony by Governor Parfitt and Mr. Staats, are of the opinion in some cases that we would owe this amount, whatever the unpaid balances would be, the contingency payments by the year 1999.

The other interpretation—which is mine—is that we do not owe it. But I recognize that the ambiguity exists, and I know that the distinguished Senator from Maryland, who is managing the floor right now, has said before, and many of his colleagues who support the treaty sincerely hope and expect, that these treaties, if ratified, will enhance the relations between the United States and Panama.

But this is not going to be the case if there is an ambiguity over a rather potentially large amount of money.

Mr. PERCY. I could not agree more.

Mr. BARTLETT. So what I am trying to do with this amendment is eliminate that ambiguity, so it will not be ambiguous in the treaty itself.

Mr. PERCY. I would like to state to my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma that of the many, many witnesses that we had before the Foreign Relations Committee hearings on the treaties, one or two indicated there was probably a virtue in ambiguity.

I have never found that to be true in any agreement or contractual relationship I have had with a second or third party, and I think one of the purposes of this debate is to remove as much ambiguity as possible.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in the dialog the statement made before the World Affairs Council of San Francisco by Panama's Minister of Planning and Economic Development, Nicolas Barletta, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> Actually this question refers to the fact that in the treaties Panama should be getting $10 million if the revenues permit. If revenues do not permit, the deficit will be accumulated to be paid by revenues from later years. If there is an accumulated deficit by the time the treaty ends, in 1999, that's it, the U.S. is not committed to make it up if such amount has not been able to be collected from the revenues of the Canal operation. We do not hope in our interpretation of this clause of the treaty, that the U.S. is committed to pay any such deficit that might have accumulated. However, I would like to say, that in our estimation, the revenues of the Canal and all the projections and studies that have been made should be able to cover to Panama if revenues permit, so I don't foresee much of a problem in respect to deficit. But if such a deficit is accumulated and is pending when the treaty ends, then the U.S. is not committed to make it back from the U.S. Treasury.

Mr. PERCY. Second, I feel that our distinguished colleague has done a service to the Senate and the country in raising this issue and pinpointing it. My preference would be to have a reservation or understanding on this particular point, rather than an amendment, for a variety of reasons. I would like just to just ask one last question, because during the debate on understandings and reservations, the Senator from Illinois intends to discuss the revenue we can expect from the Panama Canal and the operation of it for the next 22 years.

It would seem to me, and I would ask our distinguished colleague whether he concurs, that in the development of our relationship with Panama, it is going to be in the interests of both our countries to maximize revenues for the next 22 years, to raise tolls sufficiently so that they cover as much of our own expense as possible, including the loss of the interest that the Treasury has enjoyed every year on our investment.

That means we must maximize revenue by setting the tolls at a level where we do not lose so much volume that it reaches the point of diminishing returns. If we maximize the revenue, Panama would come closer to earning this $10 million a year until the year 2000, when we have no further interest and no further obligation whatsoever.

The expectations of Panama are high, and to the extent that we can realize those by charging the users of the canal a reasonable fee for the passage, they can have that benefit and we can recover the legitimate costs we will have from the ratification of these treaties.

I understand the Senator from Oklahoma is supportive of an amendment rather than a reservation or understanding, and I think that is probably the only point we disagree on.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would point out to the distinguished Senator that, yes, I feel very strongly about this being an amendment rather than a reservation. The reason is that I think it is important to eliminate from the treaty itself the ambiguity that exists.

A reservation would just add a third conflicting interpretation, but the ambiguity would still be there. It would still exist, and the Torrijos regime or administration, or succeeding administrations, could very definitely, if they so desired, hang their hat on the first part of the 13th article, section 1, on the basis that this canal should be turned over free of debt.

As the RECORD will heretofore show my having done, I am going to, very soon, get into a recitation of the dialog that I had with Governor Parfitt, which impacts directly on the matter as to which the Senator inquired whether I agreed, and I think the Senator will see there are real doubts about any expectation of contingency from payments on the part of Governor Parfitt, and that the Panamanians should not expect that.

On the other hand, as the Senator from Illinois noted in the Barletta statement, he was anticipating that the ambiguity would not make much difference, because they are going to receive the contingency payment on time anyway. I do not think his confidence in that respect is very well grounded.

Mr. PERCY. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BARTLETT. I appreciate the comments that the Senator from Illinois, and I apologize to the Senator from Maryland for the delay.

(This concludes proceedings which occurred earlier.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I have listened carefully to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma with respect to his proposed amendment. In responding to him, I should like first to refer to the actual provisions of the treaty, then to some of the questioning that took place in the Foreign Relations Committee when this matter was considered, then discuss and insert fully in the RECORD, because I think it is very important, the statement that was made by Dr. Barletta, who is Minister of Planning and Economic Development in Panama.

Then I should like to discuss some of the testimony which the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma cited that was given before the Committee on Armed Services. All of that discussion will go to the point of showing that the amendment is completely unnecessary. Then, finally, I should like to discuss some international law and make the point that, if there is any reason whatever to think there is any ambiguity, which I do not think there is, the best way to go about remedying it is by an understanding to the articles of ratification.

The Panama Canal Treaty, which we are now considering, provides, in article XIII, for a certain economic participation by the Republic of Panama in the return from the tolls of the Panama Canal. Of course, the theory behind that participation, among other things, is to compensate Panama for committing its major national resource; namely, its location, at the isthmus, the fact that it holds this unparalleled geographical position to be the pathway between the seas; and second, to give to Panama an involvement in the effective financial operation of the canal. The canal then, as a national asset, would be making a return to the Republic of Panama.

One of the provisions contained in article XIII, section 4, is for what is called a contingent payment.

It provides that Panama shall receive "an annual amount of up to 10 million U.S. dollars per year, to be paid out of canal operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Panama Canal Commission, including amounts paid pursuant to this Treaty". So that payment is to come out of Canal operating revenues—operating revenues—to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Panama Canal Commission. The rest of that provision then goes on to say:

> In the event Canal operating revenues in any year do not produce a surplus sufficient to cover this payment, the unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years in a manner to be mutually agreed.

So if in, any year of operation, they do not produce out of operating revenues, revenues do not exceed expenditures sufficient to make this payment, then the unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years.

The important words to underscore there are "In the event canal operating revenues in any year do not produce a surplus sufficient to cover this payment, the unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years"—I emphasize "from operating surpluses in future years". So if there is any carryover in the payment to future years, that unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years.

Now, it is then contended, or it is asserted, that an ambiguity arises because article XIII, section 1, provides:

> 1. Upon termination of this Treaty, the Republic of Panama shall assume total responsibility for the management, operation, and maintenance of the Panama Canal, which shall be turned over in operating condition and free of liens and debts, except as the two Parties may otherwise agree.

It is asserted that this contingent payment, if carried over and existing at the termination date, could be a lien or a debt.

Mr. President, article XIII, section 4 (c) is very clear in saying that the contingency payment shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years. If there are no operating surpluses, it will not be paid and it does not, therefore, remain as a debt, an accumulated debt or lien, that has to be cleared before the canal is turned over.

Now, this matter was discussed in the Foreign Relations Committee at the time of our hearings. In fact, Senator GLENN specifically put the question to Ambassador Bunker. Senator GLENN, and I quote the exchange between Senator GLENN and our treaty negotiator, Ambassador Bunker:

> Article XIII, section 4(c), provides that in the event revenues are not sufficient to meet the payments provided for in that paragraph, the obligation will be carried over. In the event there is a balance owing at the end of the year 1999, what will be the obligation of the United States to pay that balance? Should there be any such obligation, will an appropriations bill be required to provide the funds for this?
>
> Ambassador BUNKER. No. There will be no obligation after the treaty expires, Senator.
>
> Senator GLENN. There will be no obligation?
>
> Ambassador BUNKER. No.

The committee concluded in its report that if there are no operating surpluses from the canal at the end of the treaty period, the United States and the Panama Canal Commission are under no obligation to pay Panama any cumulative balances.

Now, the same question was addressed in the letter signed by Secretary Brown, Secretary of Defense; Secretary Vance, Secretary of State; Secretary Alexander, Secretary of the Army; in a letter sent by them to all Members of the Senate on February 10 of this year. They responded in that letter to a number of questions that had been raised and on this matter they said the following:

> Q. What about the contingent $10 million payment? Will we be obligated to pay off on that in the year 2000? Will it be part of the toll base?
>
> A. The contingent $10 million annuity is payable only if operating revenues produce a surplus over expenditures, which include among others the variable annuity due Panama of $.30 per Canal ton and the fixed annuity of $10 million. The contingent annuity will not be figured in the calculation of the toll base.
>
> If the surplus is insufficient to cover the entire payment of the contingent annuity the shortfall is carried over to succeeding years. Since payment is contingent on available surpluses, the United States is not obligated to pay off on any accumulated unpaid balance in the year 2000. Panama's negotiators have acknowledged this fact.

Let me simply repeat that last paragraph in the letter from Secretaries Brown, Vance, and Alexander. They stated:

> If the surplus is insufficient to cover the entire payment of the contingent annuity, the shortfall is carried over to succeeding years. Since payment is contingent on available surpluses, the United States is not obligated to pay off on any accumulated unpaid balance in the year 2000. Panama's negotiators have acknowledged this fact.

The distinguished Senator from Oklahome made reference to the questioning before the Armed Services Committee, of which he is a member, both of Comptroller General Staats and Governor Parfitt.

Comptroller General Staats indicated that under one interpretation, if no payments were made during the lifetime of the treaty, a lump sum payment to Panama, over $200 million, could be required at termination of the treaty.

He then went on to say:

The Department of State, however, has said that the proposed Commission is obligated to make this payment only to the extent that operating surpluses exist during the treaty life and that there will be no obligations by either the Commission or the U.S. Government to pay Panama any unpaid cumulative balance after December 31, 1999. Accordingly, the Panama Canal Company has excluded this amount from all its cost projections, including those we used.

Senator CANNON. That is a unilateral statement on the part of the Department of State. There is nothing in the treaty to clearly spell that out.

Mr. STAATS. As was indicated this morning, the Panamanians have a different interpretation with respect to that.

He then goes on to suggest that one way to make the State Department view clear is to spell it out in the implementing legislation.

Now, Governor Parfitt in his questioning, again with the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BARTLETT), talked on this same issue and said, among other things, when the question was raised:

Or unless they in fact agree with the interpretation of the administration as it is implemented in the legislation. There seems to be a little difference of opinion as to what the Panamanians agree to and do not agree to. I have not had a direct association with them so I do not know directly what their position is.

Now, the Senator from Oklahoma quoted two witnesses before his committee, both of whom said that this was an interpretation being made by the Panamanians, the interpretation that an outstanding obligation would exist at the end of the treaty period.

I have not heard the Senator quote to me the Panamanian sources for that assertion, and our Secretaries of Defense and State, in a letter to Members of the Senate, have said:

Since payment is contingent on available surpluses, the United States is not obligated to pay off on any accumulated unpaid balance in the year 2000, Panama's negotiators have acknowledged this fact.

I repeat:

Panama's negotiators have acknowledged this fact.

Further, as the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma recognized—I think quite fairly—Dr. Nicolas Barletta, the Minister of Planning and Economic Development of the Republic of Panama, in a major address in San Francisco on the 28th of February, agreed with the interpretation given to the Foreign Relations Committee by Ambassador Bunker in his testimony and the interpretation presented by the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Army in their letter of February 10 to the Members of Senate.

Let me quote in full Dr. Barletta's statement in San Francisco in his address to the Commonwealth Club—California Council of International Trade, World Affairs Council of San Francisco, World Trade Association of the Chamber of Commerce. This was in the question and answer period which they had before that distinguished audience.

The question was asked of Dr. Barletta, the Panamanian Minister of Planning and Economic Development. This is the moderator speaking:

I received a question which asks if there is an accumulated unpaid balance under Article XIII, Section 4(c) of the contingency payments stipulated in the Panama Canal Treaties, would the United States be liable for payment of the accumulated unpaid balance?

That is the question on which the Senator from Oklahoma is asserting there is such ambiguity that an amendment to the treaty is called for and is necessary.

Dr. Barletta replied as follows:

Actually this question refers to the fact that in the treaties, Panama should be getting $10 million a year from the revenues of the canal operation and an additional $10 million if the revenues permit. If revenues do not permit, the deficit will be accumulated, to be paid by revenues from later years. If there is an accumulated deficit by the time the treaty ends in 1999, that's it, the United States is not committed to make it up if such amount has not been able to be collected from the revenues of the canal operation.

Let me repeat that sentence:

If there is an accumulated deficit by the time the treaty ends in 1999, that's it. The United States is not committed to make it up if such amount has not been able to be collected from the revenues of the canal operation. Dr. Barletta then goes on to say: "We do not hope, in our interpretation of this clause, that the United States is committed to pay any such deficit that might be accumulated.

However, I would like to say that, in our estimation, the revenues of the canal and all the projections and studies that have been made should be able to cover this second $10 million that should come to Panama if revenues permit, so I don't foresee much of a problem in respect to deficit.

That was the sentence that the Senator from Oklahoma alluded to in his statement—namely, that the Panamanians expect there to be no deficit, and it is correct that they have that expectation that the revenues will produce sufficient margin to make this payment. Therefore, Minister Barletta said:

So I don't foresee much of a problem in respect to deficit.

However, he then went on to conclude as follows:

But if such a deficit is accumulated and is pending when the treaty ends, then the United States is not committed to make it back from the United States Treasury.

Mr. President, that is pretty explicit. As pointed out earlier, Mr. Barletta said:

If there is an accumulated deficit by the time the treaty ends in 1999, that's it, the United States is not committed to make it up if such amount has not been able to be collected from the revenues of the canal operation.

Our negotiators interpret this clause in the way I have outlined. The Panamanian negotiators interpret this clause in the way that has been outlined. The minister of planning has made this very clear and explicit statement, which I understand from the Senator from Oklahoma was delivered to him by the Panamanian Ambassador in response to his telegrams to the Chief of State in Panama.

So I believe, Mr. President, that there is not any ambiguity which needs to be resolved.

Finally, Mr. President, I suggest that under a proper understanding of treaties and international law, if one still has the slightest trace of a doubt—and I am saying that I do not—but if one does in an instance in which both parties are in agreement as to the meaning or the interpretation of a provision in a treaty, the way to eliminate that last element of a doubt is with an undertsanding as to the meaning of the provision. That is the very purpose of understandings. By definition, an understanding is the agreed-upon interpretation of some provision in a treaty about which someone says there is a doubt or an ambiguity, as to what it means. I do not agree that there is doubt or ambiguity here. I have read the language of the treaties, and, in particular, I do not think there is any doubt and ambiguity; because article XIII, section 4(c), very clearly says that the unpaid balance shall be paid from the operating surpluses in future years—operating surpluses in future years. So there cannot be a lien or debt there that has to be paid from some other source. That has been precluded by the language of the treaty.

I find it interesting how many ambiguities opponents, who do not want the treaties at all, can find. In any event, in an instance in which both parties have clearly stated identical views of what the language means, the way to meet that situation, the way to handle it, is through an understanding.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SARBANES. I yield.

Mr. BARTLETT. In addition to the Barletta statement, which I discussed—and I will discuss it further—what proof does the Senator from Maryland have of an understanding of their negotiators with our negotiators? Does the Senator have a signed statement from their negotiators?

Mr. SARBANES. No, I have the statement made by our own negotiator who was in long and continuous consultation with the Panamanian negotiators and the statement made by our Secretary of State and our Secretary of Defense.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Senator from Maryland has one Panamanian answering a question, in San Francisco, speaking for all Panamanians?

Mr. SARBANES. I must say to the Senator that I think the assertions we received from our negotiator, Ambassador Bunker, and the assertions made by our Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense——

Mr. BARTLETT. That is not what the Senator from Maryland said earlier. The Senator said that he had agreements from the Panamanian negotiators. The Senator did not say he had it from Ambassador Bunker or from other people testifying to that effect.

Mr. SARBANES. No. If the Senator will forbear for a moment, what I said was that the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State had sent a letter in which they had stated:

Since payment is contingent on available surpluses, the United States is not obligated to pay off any accumulated unpaid balance in the year 2000. Panama's negotiators have acknowledged this fact.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Senator said that, but he also said that the Panama negotiators have acknowledged this fact.

Mr. SARBANES. That is right.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Senator is not submitting any evidence to the effect that they themselves did it?

Mr. SARBANES. I am submitting the letter from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense which have told us that.

I am glad the Senator has brought up the point. Let me contrast a letter from the Secretary of State, and Secretary of Defense, and Secretary of the Army, leading officials who have been in contact with Panamanian officials, who tell us Panama's negotiators have acknowledged this fact, with the distinguished Senator citing the view of Governor Parfitt that a different interpretation exists on the part of the Panamanians.

I am nwo quoting from page 409 of the hearings before the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the Senator read that clear through to the end? The last time the Senator stopped before the conclusion of that dialog, and I think if he continues the dialog he will get additional information which I think is very pertinent to the question.

Mr. SARBANES. Governor Parfitt, in response to the Senator's line of inquiry with respect to this supposed differing interpretation, says:

There seems to be a little difference of opinion as to what the Panamanians agree to and do not agree to. I have not had a direct association with them so I do not know directly what their position is.

And then, of course, the Senator went on to say:

That would require a signed instrument, would it not?

Governor PARFITT. It would appear to involve some kind of a signed instrument or some kind of a reservation or amendment to the basic documents.

Senator BARTLETT. I thank you both very much.

Of course, Comptroller General Staats earlier talked about amending the implementing legislation.

What I ask the Senator to provide is the Panamanian interpretation that is contrary to the position that I have outlined as to the meaning of these provisions, other than an assertion by Comptroller General Staats and Governor Parfitt that they think or they have heard or someone has told them that there is a difference of opinion; Of course. Parfitt goes on to say:

I have not had a direct association with them so I do not know directly what their position is.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. SARBANES. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thought the Senator was still talking.

The testimony that they gave indicated that there was, without being specific, a misunderstanding on the part of the Panamanians. What the Senator from Maryland has not mentioned at all has been section 1 of article XIII which says that the Panama Canal must be turned over free of debt.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will not yield at this point until I conclude.

Mr. SARBANES. I read that section in full. The Senator said I had not mentioned. Perhaps he left the room. Not only did I mention it, but I quoted it word for word. I read it in the course of developing my presentation.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Senator did not mention that in arguing the point. He may have read it. I was here. I did not leave the room. I did not hear it. But the Senator did not mention that in his argument and that is where the ambiguity exists in article XIII, that is, that you can have one interpretation, that the debt at the end of 22 years must be paid by the United States; you have the other interpretation in article XIII, section 4(c) to the effect that the moneys are paid out of revenues and hence if the revenues are not there the money is not owed.

I agree that that is a correct interpretation of the position of the United States and the State Department.

Mr. President, the plain facts are that we have ambiguity.

The only statement that the Senator from Maryland can attribute to a specific person is an answer to a question following a speech by Mr. Barletta in San Francisco. He, of course, was expressing a personal opinion. He was not saying that he was designated by President Torrijos to lay out the Torrijos administration position in that answer to a question after a speech as the official position of Panama.

I sent a wire to Gen. Omar Torrijos on February 1, and I wish to place this in the RECORD, but "I would appreciate your personal interpretation of article XVIII, section 4(c) of the proposed Panama Canal Treaty which provides to Panama," and I then quoted section 4(c), asking for his interpretation.

I ask unanimous consent that this wire be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 1, 1978.

Gen. OMAR TORRIJOS,
Panama City, Panama.

GENERAL TORRIJOS: I would appreciate your personal interpretation of article 13, sec. 4(c) of the proposed Panama Canal Treaty which provides to Panama:

"An annual amount of up to ten million United States dollars ($10,000,000) per year, to be paid out of canal operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Panama Canal Commission including amounts paid pursuant to this treaty. In the event canal operating revenues in any year do not produce a surplus sufficient to cover this payment, the unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years in a manner to be mutually agreed."

In the event there is an unpaid debt derived under this section accumulated at noon, Panama time, December 31, 1999, is it your understanding that the United States must assume such debt and make payment to the Government of Panama? Also, is it your understanding that the Panama Canal Commission is committed to raising tolls in order to maximize the possibility of making this additional payment annually to Panama?

Please cable reply. Thank you.

DEWEY F. BARTLETT,
U.S. Senate.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Senator from Oklahoma did not receive an answer from General Torrijos. So he was given the chance to respond, I point out to the Senator from Maryland, and he refused to answer the inquiry. So I sent him another wire 3 weeks later and pointed out that I had not received a response to my earlier inquiry, and asked him again. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that this second wire be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 22, 1978.

Gen. OMAR TORRIJOS,
Panama City, Panama.

GENERAL TORRIJOS: As of this date, I have not received your response to my telegram of February 1, 1978.

If the Panama Canal Treaty and the Treaty of Neutrality are to be thoroughly and objectively considered, the Senate must have a firm and complete understanding of the terms of the documents. The information I have requested of you is essential to our present debate.

I again request your personal interpretation of Article 13, Sec. 4, Subsection (c) of the proposed Panama Canal Treaty which provides to Panama:

(c) "An annual amount of up to ten million United States dollars ($10,000,000) per year, to be paid out of Canal operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Panama Canal Commission including amounts paid pursuant to this Treaty. In the event Canal operating revenues in any year do not produce a surplus sufficient to cover this payment, the unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years in a manner to be mutually agreed."

In the event there is an unpaid debt derived under this Section accumulated at noon, Panamanian time, December 31, 1999, is it your understanding that the Panama Canal Commission or the United States must assume such debt and make payment to the government of Panama? Also, is it your understanding that the Panama Canal Commission is committed to raising tolls in order to maximize the possibility of making this additional payment annually to Panama?

I would appreciate your prompt response.

DEWEY F. BARTLETT,
U.S. Senate.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then a short while later I received an answer from the Ambassador from Panama saying that the General wanted me to have the Barletta answer to a question after a speech in San Francisco and, of course, I never did hear from General Torrijos.

The fact that he did not answer me on this very fundamental question as to what the President thought, leaves in the mind of the Senator from Oklahoma considerable doubt as to what his position is on this.

Does he have some reason not to answer? Certainly I think he had the opportunity on two occasions, and he failed to do it. so he failed to express an answer.

But I did receive an answer from Gabriel Lewis, Ambassador from Panama. He said:

MARCH 6, 1978.

Hon. DEWEY F. BARTLETT,
U.S. Senator, State of Oklahoma, Russell Senate Office Building.

DEAR SENATOR: General Omar Torrijos, Chief of Government has received your telegram of February 22, 1978. He has requested us to send the transcripts of recent statements made by Dr. Nicolás Ardito Barletta which answer your question.

Dr. Barletta is our Minister of Planning and Economic Development and the negotiator in behalf of our country for the economic issues in the new Treaties.

Hoping to have been able to serve you, I remain

Very truly yours,

GABRIEL LEWIS,
Ambassador.

Senators will notice that he made no mention of my telegram of February 21, 1978.

This leaves, of course, a lot of doubt as to what the President of Panama really does think and how he does interpret the ambiguities that exist in article XIII.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the lecture and answers to questions be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LECTURE AND ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The Audience who invited him to address them were members of the Panamerican Society (organizers); World Affairs Council; World Trade Association of the Chamber of Commerce; Latin American Section of the Commonwealth Club; and California Council of International Trade.

Mr. DE LA OSSA: I received a question which asks: If there is an accumulated unpaid balance under Article XIII (4)(C) of the contigency payment stipulated in the Panama Canal Treaties? Would the U.S. be liable for payment of the accumulated unpaid balance?

Dr. ARDITO BARLETTA: Actually this question refers to the fact that in the treaties Panama should be getting $10 million a year from the revenues of the Canal operation and an additional $10 million if the revenues permit. If revenues do not permit, the deficit will be accumulated to be paid by revenues from later years. If there is an accumulated deficit by the time the treaty ends, in 1999, that's it, the U.S. is not committed to make it up if such amount has not been able to be collected from the revenues of the canal operation. We do not hope in our interpretation of this clause of the treaty, that the U.S. is committed to pay any such deficit that might have accumulated. However, I would like to say, that in our estimation, the revenues of the canal and all the projections and studies that have been made should be able to cover this second $10 million that should come to Panama if revenues permit, so I don't foresee much of a problem in respect to deficit. But if such a deficit is accumulated and is pending when the treaty ends, then the U.S. is not committed to make it back from the U.S. Treasury.

Mr. BARTLETT. But if the present Government of Panama and the Government of the United States do, in fact, agree on their interpretation, then this amendment eliminates the ambiguity that exists in article XIII so that it would not be a source of conflict or controversy in the coming years up to and including 1999.

Whether or not President Torrijos agrees with Mr. Barletta, or Minister Barletta, the fact remains that the issue is the ambiguity that exists that the Senator from Maryland does not want to eliminate.

I cannot understand for the life of me why the Senator from Maryland, one of the floor managers of the treaty, does not want to have an instrument representing the understanding between the two nations that is unambiguous, that is clear, on the question of contingency payments.

I think it is incumbent upon the Senate of the United States to make any corrections of ambiguity that exist so that there will be clear understanding between the two parties as to what actually is agreed to.

So I find it very difficult to see why the Senator from Maryland does not support this amendment, because it has the effect of eliminating two different points of view as to how contingency payments would be paid.

If the intention of the Senator from Maryland and the leadership is to have a reservation similar to the amendment that I am offering, then all that is offering, as far as I am concerned, is just one more point of view. What would remain in the treaty is the conflict, the ambiguity, the difference of opinion. It would still be there, and attention to it could still be called by one party or the other in succeeding years.

So I think it is very vital that we not add to the confusion by having a reservation with one more point of view, but that we eliminate the confusion, the ambiguity, so that there would not be hard feelings developed over this particular point.

I know the Senator from Wyoming has been waiting patiently, and I would be very happy to yield to him.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma for yielding and I would like, at the same time, to express my very genuine appreciation to him for the service he is providing our country, and for the contribution he is making toward a good relationship between the United States and the nation of Panama.

I, too, find it extremely difficult to understand or to comprehend why proponents of the treaty are so insistent, so adamant, in their refusal to clear up sources of trouble, areas of misunderstanding, and points that could very well be in contention, or will come into contention, in the years ahead.

No one need remind anyone on this floor that the action this body has already taken on the Treaty of Neutrality, which was adopted some time ago, and which included, not as an amendment in the definition of that term as propounded by proponents of the treaty but rather, an amendment to the Resolution of Ratification of the Treaty of Neutrality, as I recall it, so as to escape the charge that the treaty was being amended, has led to real difficulties between Panama and the United States.

I refer, of course, to the so-called DeConcini amendment. I would venture to say that we have seen so far only the tip of the iceberg. First, there was concern on the part of the people of Panama, and now it appears as though when the full impact of that so-called DeConcini amendment is understood by other Latin American and South American countries it may be a point that will be objected to by more than simply the nation of Panama.

I have felt all along that no one contends, or few indeed are those who contend, that a treaty should not be renegotiated with Panama. I have never contended that there should have been no changes since 1903 and no subsequent modifications that ahave in fact been agreed upon by our countries after the initial treaty signing back at the beginning of the century. But I have insisted, and I now feel that it is more important than ever, that whatever a new treaty to agreed upon, adopted and ratified by both countries says must be clear, easy of interpretation, and devoid of any ambiguity, so as to leave no doubt at all, for future persons and officials, judges who may be called upon to interpret what the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States and the nation of Panama intended was agreed upon.

So it is in that context that I applaud my colleague from Oklahoma for his diligent pursuit of the intricacies of this treaty so as to take out ambiguities or to qualify or to explain in a fashion that will make clear precisely what we are saying.

Now, it is not difficult at all to find all kinds of authorities, and to quote this official or that official. It is not difficult at all to say what Panama understands. Then I hear someone making the assertion as to what is the understanding of the negotiations for the United States, on the other hand, and what is the understanding of the representatives of Panama, on the other, I cannot escape recalling similar assurances that have been given over the years to each of us in this body by the White House.

Earlier this year we were talking about some other legislation which has nothing to do with the treaty between Panama and the United States. I was told and assured that a certain provision in a bill then before the Senate would have the full and unqualified support of the White House. I was further assured by persons I felt competent to give the assurances, that a letter would be forthcoming supporting completely a position I then was taking on the floor of the Senate.

I have had the same experience I am certain a great many others have had—and I might add that it does not make all that much difference which administration may be in power at the White House—of this same willingness of people around the President, people in the executive branch of the Government, to speak for the President.

It is a long story. It is one that, as I have indicated, has included Republicans and Democrats both.

Yet the bottom line is that when you come down to delivering what the President of the United States has been reported to be willing to do, you have to look finally to the President of the United States himself, and no one else. No one else can speak for him.

I think the most recent example of the ability of a President to take first one position and then another was demonstrated in connection with the neutron bomb issue. For more than a year, our Nation actively pressed the West German Republic to endorse the neutron bomb concept, and, with understandable misgivings, that great nation, our valued ally in the Western European part of the world, examined the ramifications of such an endorsement, all the time under the continued prodding of the present administration to give that endorsement.

Finally that Government endorsed the concept of a neutron bomb; and within a few days later, to the great chagrin and amazement of the West German Republic, and indeed as well of the rest of the world, the President of the United States changed his mind yet another time, and said in effect, "I am going to stop production of the neutron bomb."

What the Senator from Oklahoma is talking about is precisely this sort of situation, compounded by the fact that we are not talking in-house, as we have been on the neutron bomb, but rather between two countries.

I have listened closely to a person I admire very much, the distinguished junior Senator from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES), who is a very brilliant scholar and an excellent lawyer, and yet I do not find in what I hear him say, or what I have read he has said, anything that confirms in my mind the unreasonableness of this amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma. I do not find any reason at all for not adopting and including in the treaty the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

It is all well and good, in talking about different positions in Panama, to refer, as has been done repeatedly, to statements by the Governor of the Panama Canal Commission and others. I would like to quote, if I may the Comptroller General of the United States, the Honorable Elmer Staats; from a letter dated April 4, 1978, and addressed to our colleague, the Honorable RICHARD STONE.

On page 3 of that letter—and if it has not yet been included in the RECORD, I would ask unanimous consent that it may be. Has it been ordered to be printed in the RECORD, does the Senator from Maryland know?

Mr. SARBANES I do not think it yet has. I hope the Senator will include it, and I hope very shortly to be quoting from it also.

Mr. HANSEN. The Senator will not be quoting it very shortly, because I do not intend to yield shortly, but I appreciate my friend's interest in the letter, and I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. President, that the letter to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., April 4, 1978.

In reply refer to: B–114839.
Hon. RICHARD STONE,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR STONE: This is in reply to your letter of March 15, 1978, expressing concern that the Panama Canal Treaty might require future appropriations caused by the payments to Panama specified in the treaty. You requested our views on this issue in light of the recent testimony to the Senate Armed Services Committee, the March 3, 1978 draft of legislation to implement the treaty, and the Secretary of State's January 27, 1978 letter to you.

As you know, there has been an extensive discussion of whether the proposed Panama Canal Commission will be financially self-sufficient during the lifetime of the Panama Canal Treaty. There is no definitive answer to this question because of the inherent uncertainties of long-term cost and revenue estimates.

In his February 1, 1978, testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee, Governor Parfitt of the Canal Zone testified that, unless there was a significant drop in anticipated North Slope oil traffic, the Commission should be able to raise toll rates and generate sufficient revenues to meet its estimated costs through fiscal year 1984. Governor Parfitt, however, alerted the Committee to the possibility that the Commission might require appropriations or loans to cover operating deficits in the years after 1984. The Governor stated that deficits might occur because of cost inflation, the limit to which toll rates could be raised, a falloff in North Slope oil transits and competition from alternative modes of traffic.

I indicated in my testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee that the Panama Canal Company's financial study for the 1979–84 period was a conservative analysis in that a 5 percent inflation factor was used for future costs and capital expenditures were estimated at a low level. In addition, I pointed out some of the implementation uncertainties which would affect the financial viability of the Panama Canal Commission. Governor Parfitt and I agreed at the hearings that the implementing legislation should resolve these issues.

We have analyzed the March 3, 1978, draft implementing legislation for the Panama Canal Treaty in terms of the concerns I expressed in testimony. The enclosed table shows this comparison.

The Secretary of State noted in his January 27, 1978, letter to you that in fiscal year 1976 the Panama Canal Company had deferred $9.3 million of interest payments to the Treasury and that $3.9 million of this amount remained to be paid in fiscal year 1978. We understand that this remaining payment has been made. We should point out that the Secretary's statement to you that after this payment "the (Panama Canal) Company will have no outstanding long-term obligations" is not completely accurate. As of September 30, 1977, the Company had the following long-term obligations:

$15.1 million liability for retirement benefits to certain former employees and for employees' repatriation (The Canal Zone Government had a comparable liability of $4.3 million.);

$72.3 million contingent liability for a 25-year contract, effective May 9, 1969, with the Institute de Recursos Hidraulicos y Electrificacion, an autonomous agency of the Republic of Panama, for the purchase of electric power to be produced by that agency; and a $26.6 million commitment under uncompleted construction contracts and unfilled purchase orders.

Settlement of these liabilities and commitments will extend beyond the normal operating cycle of 1 year and, therefore, in that sense they can be considered to be long-term obligations.

Concerning the payments to Panama, the treaty provides for four types of payments by the Panama Canal Commission. First, Article III, paragraph 5, of the treaty provides for an annual payment of $10 million from the Commission to Panama to reimburse Panama for the costs incurred in providing public services. Every 3 years from the date the treaty enters into force the costs involved in furnishing the services shall be reexamined in order to determine whether adjustment to the payment should be made because of inflation and other factors affecting costs.

In addition to the annual payment for services under Article III, Article XIII, paragraph 4, of the treaty provides that the Republic of Panama shall receive from the Panama Canal Commission three other forms of payment:

"(a) An annual amount to be paid out of Canal operating revenues computed at a rate of thirty hundredths of a United States dollar ($0.30) per Panama Canal net ton, or its equivalency, for each vessel transiting the Canal after the entry into force of this Treaty, for which tolls are charged. * * *

"(b) A fixed annuity of ten million United Stated dollars ($10,000,000) to be paid out of Canal operating revenues. This amount shall constitute a fixed expense of the Panama Canal Commission.

"(c) An annual amount of up to ten million United States dollars ($10,000,000) per year, to be paid out of Canal operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Panama Canal Commission including amounts paid pursuant to this Treaty. In the event Canal operating revenues in any year do not produce a surplus sufficient to cover this payment, the unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years in a manner to be mutually agreed."

Under the treaty, Panama grants the United States the rights to manage, operate, and maintain the Panama Canal. Art. III, para. 1. The treaty provides for the United States to "carry to its responsibilities by means of a United States Government agency called the Panama Canal Commission, which shall be constituted by and in conformity with the laws of the United States of America." Art. III, para. 3. Because the Panama Canal Commission is a United States Government agency, it is clear that the financial obligations of the Commission are also obligations of the United States.

Furthermore, Article XIII, paragraph 1, provides that upon termination of the treaty, Panama shall assume total responsibility for the management, operation, and maintenance of the Panama Canal, "which shall be turned over in operating condition and free of liens and debts, except as the two Parties may otherwise agree." Accordingly, the United States would be precluded from turning the Panama Canal over to Panama subject to financial encumbrances, unless both parties agreed otherwise.

It is of course conceivable that the revenues of the Panama Canal Commission will not be sufficient to cover the expenditures of the Commission. Such a deficit would need to be offset either through borrowings of appropriations. Accordingly, it has been proposed that the $40 million borrowing authority under current legislation be retained. Since the treaty provides for the Canal to be turned over to Panama free of liens and debts (unless otherwise agreed), to the extent that such borrowing becomes necessary and could not be repaid from future revenues of the Commission the United States would either need to appropriate funds for the Commission or forgive the Commision's indebtedness to the Treasury under this line of credit.

The treaty provides that the payments to Panama under Article XIII, paragraph 4, are to be paid out of Canal operating revenues. Since the treaty authorizes the United States to determine tolls and other charges, the United States has some control over the amount of Canal operating revenues. Art. III. (Of course, the extent to which tolls may be increased is dependent upon future economic conditions.) Although Canal operating revenues are the specified source for the payments to Panama under Article XIII, there is at least a possibility that the payments may indirectly result in funds being paid out of the United States Treasury should there be a substantial, protracted shortfall. As stated earlier, the Commission may need to borrow money from the Treasury and those loans may not be liquidated by the year 2000. Since the possibility of Treasury funds being needed is related to the Commission being a United States agency and the United States' authority over tolls, it would be difficult if not impossible, to amend the treaty to eliminate the possibility that funds from the United States Treasury might be needed without affecting other provisions of the treaty that appear to be in the interest of the United States, such as retention of control of the Commission.

Some confusion has arisen concerning the interpretation by GAO and the Government of Panama of Article XIII, subparagraph 4(c), which provides for an annual amount of up to $10 million per year to be paid by the Commission to Panama out of Canal operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Commission. See, e.g., 124 Cong. Rec. S2621–23 (daily ed. March 1, 1978). By tracing our testimony with respect to this provision, we would hope to aid in clarifying the matter.

In my statement of November 30, 1977, before the Subcommittee on the Panama Canal of the House Marine and Fisheries Committee, I indicated that a question had been raised whether a lump-sum payment of $220 million would be required at the time the treaty is terminated—in the event that there were no surplus during the lifetime of the treaty. In other words, would the annual shortfall accumulate as a debt to the extent it exceeds any surplus as of December 31, 1999? I indicated that we had not yet formed an opinion on this issue.

I again referred to the contingent $10 million payment in my prepared statement of February 1, 1978, before the Senate Committee on Armed Services. I stated in pertinent part as follows:

"Last November in our testimony before the House Subcommittee on the Panama Canal, we noted the possible ambiguity concerning the treaty-specified payment to Panama of up to $10 million if operating revenues exceed expenditures. Under one interpretation, if no payments were made during the lifetime of the treaty, a lump sum payment to Panama of over $200 million could be required at termination of the treaty. The Department of State, however, has said that the proposed Commission is obligated to make this payment only to the extent that operating surpluses exist during the treaty life and that there will be no obligations by either the Commission or the U.S. Government to pay Panama any unpaid cumulative balance after December 31, 1999." Hearings on the Defense, Maintenance and Operation of the Panama Canal, Including Administration and Government of the Canal Zone before the Senate Comm. on Armed Services, 95th Con., 2d Sess. 375 (1978).

Except for the reference to our November testimony, the above quoted portion of my statement was included in the summaries of testimony contained in the Senate Armed Services Committee Report. However, "one interpretation" was inadvertently changed to "our interpretation," in the text of the summary, thus giving the impression that GAO's interpretation of the provision was at odds with the interpretation of the Department of State.

Our interpretation of Article XIII, subparagraph 4(c), is that the $10 million payment is contingent upon the revenues of the Commission exceeding expenditures and therefore, a lump-sum payment would not be required at termination of the treaty. Subparagraph 4(b), which provides for the fixed annuity, specifically provides that the amount of the fixed annuity "shall constitute a fixed expense of the Panama Canal Commission." In contrast, subparagraph 4(c), which provides for the contingent $10 million payment, does not contain such a provision. Subparagraph 4(c) provides for an "annual payment of up to ten million United States dollars ($10,000,000) per year, to be paid out of operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Panama Canal Commission including amounts paid pursuant to this Treaty." (Emphasis added.) Thus the right to receive a payment is conditioned upon the existence of a surplus and is, in effect, limited by the amount of the surplus. Subparagraph 4(c) further provides that, "in the event Canal operating revenues in any year do not produce a surplus sufficient to cover this payment, the unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years in a manner to be mutually agreed." (Emphasis added.) The right to receive payment of the unpaid balance is conditioned upon the existence of an operating surplus in future years. In the event there is not an operating surplus, there would be no right to receive payment. The provision in Article XIII, paragraph 1, which requires the Canal to be turned over to Panama upon termination of the treaty "free of liens and debts" is not pertinent since there would be no debt where the condition precedent to the right to receive payment (i.e., an operating surplus) had not occurred. Accordingly, GAO's interpretation of Article XIII, subparagraph 4(c) is that there would be no obligation by either the Commission or the United States to make a lump-sum payment to Panama under this provision at termination of the treaty.

In addition to the confusion with respect to GAO's interpretation of the contingent payment provision, there also appears to be confusion with respect to the interpretation given the provision by the Government of Panama. The summaries of testimony in the Senate Armed Services Committee Report state:

"In response to a question whether this was a unilateral understanding on the part of the State Department concerning the $10 million contingent payment, Mr. Staats answered: 'the Panamanians have a different interpretation with respect to that.'" S. Rep. No. 95–633, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 18 (1978).

The quotation in the report is incomplete, and thereby may create an erroneous impression. I had stated in full: "As was indicated this morning, the Panamanians have a different interpretation with respect to that." Hearings before the Senate Committee on Armed Services, at p. 379. I was referring to the testimony of Mr. Parfitt, Governor of the Panama Canal Zone and President of the Panama Canal Company, who had preceded me as a witness. With respect to the $10 million contingent payment, the following exchange took place during that earlier testimony:

Senator McINTYRE. Further, I understand that the Panamanians expect this payment; is this true?

Governor PARFITT. As recently as Sunday I was advised to this effect by several Senators who were visiting [sic] with the Panamanian Government.

Senator McINTYRE. They are claiming not that they expect it but that they are entitled to it under the treaty.

Governor PARFITT. I have no direct information to that effect, but the Senators who have visited with them have reported that to me.

Hearing before the Senate Armed Services Comm., at p. 332.

The State and Defense Departments subsequently indicated that the matter is not open to differing interpretations. The February 10, 1978, letter to Senators from the Secretaries of Defense, State, and Army contained the following question and answer:

"What about the contingent $10 million payment? Will we be obligated to pay off on that in the year 2000? Will it be part of the toll base?

"The contingent $10 million annuity is payable only if operating revenues produce a surplus over expenditures, which include among others the variable annuity due Panama of $.30 per Canal ton and the fixed annuity of $10 million. The contingent annuity will not be figured in the calculation of the toll base.

"If the surplus is insufficient to cover the entire payment of the contingent annuity, the shortfall is carried over to succeeding years. Since payment is contingent on available surpluses, the United States is not obligated to pay off on any accumulated unpaid balance in the year 2000. Panama's negotiators have acknowledged this fact." (Emphasis added.)

Furthermore, a letter to Senator McIntyre dated February 23, 1978, from Douglas J. Bennett, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations stated:

"You asked whether the Panama Government agreed with our interpretation that any accrued unpaid balance of the annual contingent $10 million payment would not be paid by the United States. We have raised this issue with the Panamanian Government within the last two weeks and have been assured again that their interpretation is the same as ours." (Emphasis added.)

In light of the assurances given by the Department of State concerning the Panamanian Government's interpretation of the contingent payment provision, it is our view that an amendment, reservation, or understanding to the treaty is not necessary.

We trust that the above is responsive to your request.

Sincerely yours,

ELMER B. STAATS,
Comptroller General of the United States.

COMPARISON OF GAO CONCERNS AND DRAFT IMPLEMENTING LEGISLATION FOR PANAMA CANAL TREATY

Issue, draft legislation, and reference:

Interest payments to the U.S. Treasury, eliminates obligation, sec. 202, p. 9.

Contingent payment of surplus to Panama, provides method of calculation not included in toll base; no mention of carryover beyond 1999 [1], sec. 203, pp. 10–11, sec. 232, pp. 20–21.

---

[1] The Department of State contends that the Panamanian Government agrees that United States has no obligation for payment after 1999 per letter of February 23, 1978, to Senator McIntyre (attached).

Recovery of existing investment through accelerated depreciation of returned assets, provides for depreciation; no mention of acceleration depreciation in toll base, sec. 210, pp. 14–15, sec. 232, p. 20.

Resolution of Panama's debt for prior service, no mention.[2]

Public services payment to Panama, no mention of calculation or quality.

Capital improvements during life of the Treaty, establishes capital reserve account which is included in toll base, sec. 203, p. 10, sec. 232, pp. 20–21.

Liquidation of transferred inventories, transfer to other U.S. agencies may be with or without exchange of funds, sec. 213, p. 18.

Valuation of transferred assets; to Panama, no mention (in second draft value determined by Commission with Presidential approval).

Valuation of transferred assets to other U.S. agencies, U.S. investment to be adjusted by value of transfer, sec. 213, p. 18.

Transfer and termination of employees, numerous provisions, including 1) early optional retirement, 2) special immigrants, pp. 28–49, sec. 325, 326, pp. 37, sec. 410, p. 59.

Form of U.S. Government agency, Government corporation, sec. 201, p. 8, sec. 209, p. 13–14.

Responsibility for external audit, GAO under authority provided by Government Corporation Control Act, sec. 2, pp. 1–2.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D.C., February 23, 1978.

Hon. THOMAS J. MCINTYRE,
U.S. Senate,

DEAR SENATOR MCINTYRE:

I appreciate the opportunity to answer the questions you raised yesterday about the Panama Treaties and the present state of the implementing legislation.

First, you asked what would happen if, in any year between now and 2000, while the United States continues to operate the Canal, toll revenues were insufficient to cover costs. We are confident that toll revenues will be sufficient to cover the operating costs of the Canal until the year 2000. Our expectations in this regard are supported by recently-conducted cost and revenue projections. Of course, it is possible, with or without the new Treaty, that unanticipated events of major significance may cause losses which cannot be totally recovered from revenues.

As you know, our negotiators fought hard to assure as extended period during which the United States would continue to operate the Canal. Having assumed responsibility for operating the Canal during this 21-year period, we naturally have an obligation to cover any unforeseen losses as well. If operating losses should occur in a given year, we anticipate that deficits would be financed through use of stand-by borrowing authority. These deficits would be recovered in subsequent years through an adjustment of the tolls base.

With regard to the $8.9 million debt owed by Panama to the present Company, the Treaty in no way extinguishes this obligation. If the debt remains uncollected when the new Treaty becomes effective, it would become an account receivable of the Panama Canal Commission. The amount of the debt is disputed by Panama. We intend, through diplomatic means, to resolve this dispute and liquidate the debt.

You asked whether the Panama Government agrees with our interpretation that any accrued unpaid balance of the annual contingent $10 million payment would not be paid by the United States. We have raised this issue with the Panamanian Government within the last two weeks and have been assured again that their interpretation is the same as ours.

Finally, I am enclosing a summary of the implementing legislation in its present stage of development. This summary identifies the major issues and in some cases indicates how we expect the Administration to decide them. If you have any further questions on the implementing legislation. I would be happy to arrange a detailed briefing.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS J. BENNET, JR.,
Assistant Secretary for Congressional Relations.

[2] The Department of State intends to resolve this debt through "diplomatic means" per letter of February 23, 1978, to Senator McIntyre.

Mr. HANSEN. On page 3 of that letter, the Comptroller General of the United States, the person who speaks for Congress, says this:

Under the treaty, Panama grants the United States the rights to manage, operate, and maintain the Panama Canal. Art. III, para. 1. The treaty provides for the United States to "carry out its responsibilities by means of a United States Government agency called the Panama Canal Commission, which shall be constituted by and in conformity with the laws of the United States of America." Art. III, para. 3. Because the Panama Canal Commission is a United States Government agency, it is clear that the financial obligations of the Commission are also obligations of the United States.

Furthermore, Article XIII, paragraph 1—To which Senator Bartlett has made numerous references—provides that upon termination of the treaty, Panama shall assume total responsibility for the management, operation, and maintenance of the Panama Canal, "which shall be turned over in operating condition and free of liens and debts, except as the two Parties may otherwise agree."

Mr. Staats continues:

Accordingly, the United States would be precluded from turning the Panama Canal over to Panama subject to financial encumbrances, unless both parties agreed otherwise.

I think it is terribly important, Mr. President, to understand what the chief spokesman for the Congress of the United States is saying here.

He continues:

It is of course conceivable that the revenues of the Panama Canal Commission will not be sufficient to cover the expenditures of the Commission. Such a deficit would need to be offset either through borrowings or appropriations. Accordingly, it has been proposed that the $40 million borrowing authority under current legislation be retained. Since the treaty provides for the Canal to be turned over to Panama free of liens and debts (unless otherwise agreed), to the extent that such borrowing becomes necessary and could not be repaid from future revenues of the Commission the United States would either need to appropriate funds for the Commission or forgive the Commission's indebtedness to the Treaty under this line of credit.

This is not what Panama is saying. This is not what Mr. Torrijos is saying. This is not what Mr. Barletta is saying. This is what Mr. Elmer Staats is saying.

It is not for anyone to say, as has been done, that there are no ambiguities in this treaty. Here is the person who heads up the Comptroller General's Office, which speaks for the Congress of the United States. Essentially, the Comptroller General recently said that the particular use for which arms sold by the Government of the United States or delivered to the nation of Israel had been used in Lebanon probably constituted a violation of the law on the books of the United States of America.

This is the same man who is making a statement on the treaty. I think it fortifies, undergirds, and supports the contention made by the Senator from Oklahoma that, indeed, there is ambiguity in this treaty; indeed, there is the real probability that revenues from the operation of the canal will not be sufficient to satisfy all of the demands put upon those funds, and to pay, as well, the $10 million per year which, if default should occur in any year, will become cumulative and will become due very conceivably, as many people read the treaty, before the Panama Canal can be turned over to the nation of Panama.

I quote gain from article XIII, paragraph 1:

Upon termination of this treaty the Republic of Panama shall assume total responsibility for the management, operation, and maintenance of the Panama Canal, which shall be turned over in operating condition and free of liens and debts,

That is exactly what we are talking about. I think it needs to be cleared up, it needs to be understood, it needs to be resolved, so that next year, the year after, or at the end of the year 1999, we are not having a hassle with Panama as to what was intended by what seems to be very clear and precise language.

The Treaty provides that the payments to Panama under article XIII, paragraph 4, are to be paid out of canal operating revenues.

I am reading further from Mr. Staat's letter to Senator STONE.

Since the treaty authorizes the United States to determine tolls and other charges, the United States has some control over the amount of canal operating revenues. Article III. (Of course, the extent to which tolls may be increased, is dependent upon future economic conditions.) Although canal operating revenues are the specified source for the payments to Panama under article XIII, there is at least a possibility that payments may indirectly result in funds being paid out of the United States Treasury should there be a substantial, protracted shortfall. As stated earlier, the commission may need to borrow money from the Treasury and those loans may not be liquidated by the year 2000. Since the possibility of Treasury funds being needed is related to the commission being a United States agency and the United States authority over tolls, it would be difficult if not impossible, to amend the treaty to eliminate the possibility that funds from the United States Treasury might be needed without affecting other provisions of the treaty that appear to be in the interest of the United States, such as retention of control of the commission.

I make these points to call attention to the fact that the amendment by the Senator from Oklahoma is very relevant. It is specific and precise. It does deserve serious consideration because it calls attention specifically to obvious ambiguities which cannot be denied by virtue of the fact that the Comptroller General, too, finds in the language of the treaty very real reasons to support the contention that we could wind up, at the end of this 22-year period of time, owing Panama, in addition to all other debts and encumbrances, as much as $220 million if revenues between now and the end of 1999 were not sufficient to make these payments.

Mr. President, I do not know how much time the Senator from Oklahoma has. Could I be advised?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the pending amendment offered by my good friend and distinguished colleague, Senator BARTLETT. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of his amendment. The amendment would clarify provisions of paragraph 4, section c, article XIII, under which the United States is obligated to pay an annual amount of up to $10 million per year out of canal operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Panama Canal Commission.

Senator BARTLETT's amendment would provide that the United States would not be committed to pay any part of such unpaid balance to the Republic of Panama after the date of the termination of this treaty. This amendment is especially important in light of conflicting interpretations of that clause in paragraph 1 of article XIII which provides that the canal shall be turned over free of liens and debts to the Republic of Panama.

Mr. President, the entire debate, as I have pointed out on previous occasions, has been frought with misunderstandings and inconsistencies. Senator BARTLETT's amendment addresses one of the most potentially divisive issues of the treaty.

This $10 million contingent payment with which article XIII, paragraph 4(c) deals, was not, in determining this figure, considered a cost for inclusion in the toll base. Payment of this $10 million per year is dependent upon the generation of revenues in excess of all other requirements.

This manner of estimating costs which the United States will be obligated to pay under the terms of the treaty, is risky business, at best. At worst, we may be faced with one of the most unfortunate issues involved in the termination process of the treaty in the year 2000. Indeed, Senator MCINTYRE stated during hearings in the Senate Armed Services Committee, "I can see all kinds of troubles on the horizon."

It is generally agreed by both the United States and the Republic of Panama, and supported in testimony before the Armed Services Committee by several witnesses, that each year, anything less than $10 million which remains unpaid will be carried over to the following year. It will accumulate over the next 22 years. Theoretically, should there be no excess revenues from which to pay the $10 million each year, the Panama Canal Commission, operated by the U.S. Government, will be obligated to pay the Republic of Panama a total of $220 million by the year 2000.

What is not generally agreed on is whether or not, on the termination of the treaty, the United States will be obligated to pay this amount in order to comply with that clause of article XIII, paragraph 1, which provides that the canal shall be turned over free of any liens and debts to the Republic of Panama.

In testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee, General Parfitt, Governor of the Canal Zone, testified that it had been our negotiator's position that since the treaty says these funds will be paid to the extent earned, if they are not earned they are not a liability of the U.S. Government and they would not be paid.

In addition, Elmer Staats, Comptroller General of the GAO testified,

> The Department of State has said the proposed Commission is obligated to make this payment only to the extent that operating surpluses exist during the treaty life and that there will be no obligations by either the Commission or the U.S. Government to pay Panama any cumulative balance after December 31, 1999.

On the other hand, Mr. President, I am afraid there has been another interpretation given this provision by the Republic of Panama. It is Governor Parfitt's understanding that to the extent the United States does not pay the surplus,

> It rolls over to the next year, and he (General Torrijos) is assuming then at the year 2000 it no longer rolls over, it is then paid off.

If the Panama Canal Commission is in fact obligated to pay any amount which has not been met at the rate of $10 million per year over the next 22 years, it could result in significant appropriations or loans from the U.S. Government which would ultimately have to be absorbed by the U.S. taxpayer, as Governor Parfitt suggested. As I noted previously this could reasonably amount to $220 million by the year 2000.

Mr. President, that amount is not so insignificant that we can leave the matter unresolved at this stage in the ratification process.

Mr. President, regardless of what is actually the case, it is obvious we have here a misunderstanding of some dimension. Senator BARTLETT's amendment would go a long way in clarifying the language we now have and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Staats indicated in his testimony that it would be most wise to make certain that the interpretation given this section by the State Department is clearly understood. He believed it should be spelled out in implementing legislation. After months of waiting, the implementing legislation is now available.

Unfortunately, the issue is not made any clearer. However, the Senate can take affirmative action on the implementing legislation at the appropriate time to clear up this problem. It would be wise, therefore, to have corresponding clarifying language in the treaty upon which the implementing legislation will be based. This is the purpose of Senator BARTLETT's amendment and I would hope it is given the serious consideration it deserves by my colleagues.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank my distinguished friend from Wyoming for his remarks. They are meaningful in this debate and are very enlightening. They provide strong support for the amendment and for the ambiguity being eliminated in an amendment and not to have an effort made to try to eliminate it in some other way which does not really do the job.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I regret very much that the distinguished Senator from Wyoming did not proceed further with the letter of the Comptroller General, Mr. Staats, a letter dated April 4, just a few days ago, because Mr. Staats then directs his attention to the exact issue which is now before us.

While the full text of the letter has been put into the RECORD, I think it is important to quote the statements of Comptroller General Staats on the very issue which is now before the body.

The distinguished Senator from Wyoming has outlined the important position which Comptroller General Staats holds, his relationship to the Congress, and has, in effect, qualified Mr. Staats as an expert witness, as they would say in court.

Comptroller General Staats went on to say:

> Some confusion has arisen concerning the interpretation by GAO and the Government of Panama of article XIII, subparagraph 4(c), which provides for an annual amount of up to $10 million per year to be paid by the commission to Panama out of canal operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the commission. By tracing our testimony with respect to this provision, we would hope to aid in clarifying the matter.

He then says that in a statement he made before the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee he indicated that a question had arisen with respect to this matter, the very question the Senator from Oklahoma now raises: Would the annual shortfall accumulate into debt to the extent it exceeds any surplus as of December 31, 1999?

The Comptroller General states:

> I indicated that we had not yet formed an opinion on this issue. I again referred to the contingent $10 million payment in my prepared statement of February 1, 1978, before the Senate Committee on Armed Services. I stated in pertinent part as follows:

And he then quotes from his testimony before the Armed Services Committee as follows:

> Last November in our testimony before the House Subcommittee on the Panama Canal, we noted the possible ambiguity concerning the treaty-specified payment to Panama of up to $10 million if operating revenues exceed expenditures. Under one interpretation, if no payments were made during the lifetime of the treaty, a lump sum payment to Panama of over $200 million could be required at the termination of the treaty. The Department of State, however, has said that the proposed commission is obligated to make this payment only to the extent that operating surpluses exist during the treaty life and that there will be no obligations by either the Commission or the United States Government to pay Panama any unpaid cumulative balance after December 31, 1999.

Comptroller General Staats goes on:

> Except for the reference to our November testimony, the above quoted portion of my statement was included in the summaries of testimony contained in the Senate Armed Services Committee Report. However, "one interpretation" was inadvertently changed to "our interpretation," in the text of the summary, thus giving the impression that GAO's interpretation of the provision was at odds with the interpretation of the Department of State.

Let me explain what happened here. This is very interesting. It shows how you can build a myth upon a myth and eventually assert that you have reality. In his statement to the committee, what Comptroller General Staats said was that there was one interpretation; in other words, this idea had been put out by someone of the accumulated payment having to be paid at the end. In the committee's report, the "one interpretation," through a typographical mistake, was changed to "our interpretation." Therefore, it became an interpretation attributed to Comptroller General Staats. As he says:

However, "one interpretation" was inadvertently changed to "our interpretation," in the text of the summary, thus giving the impression that GAO's interpretation of the provision was at odds with the interpretation of the Department of State.

He then goes on in this very letter from which the Senator from Wyoming was quoting only a few minutes ago in seeking to make the argument for the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma—in the very same letter, the Comptroller General of the United States goes on to say the following:

Our interpretation of Article XIII, subparagarph 4(c), is that the $10 million payment is contingent upon the revenues of the Commission exceeding expenditures and, therefore, a lump-sum payment would not be required at termination of the treaty.

Let me repeat that, Mr. President. This is Comptroller General Staats' letter of April 4, which the Senator from Wyoming was quoting in an effort to support the amendment, contending that it was necessary because a lump sum payment would be required at the end of the treaty term. Comptroller General Staats says, on page 6 of that letter, the first full paragraph:

Our interpretation of Article XIII, subparagraph 4(c), is that the $10 million payment is contingent upon the revenues of the Commission exceeding expenditures and, therefore, a lump-sum payment would not be required at termination of the treaty.

He then proceeds to discuss the provisions of the treaty which have led him to this conclusion. He further says:

The right to receive payment of the unpaid balance is conditioned upon the existence of an operating surplus in future years. In the event there is not an operating surplus, there would be no right to receive payment. The provision in Article XIII, paragraph 1, which requires the Canal to be turned over to Panama upon termination of the treaty "free of liens and debts" is not pertinent since there would be no debt where the condition precedent to the right to receive payment (i.e., an operating surplus) has not occurred. Accordingly, GAO's interpretation of Article XIII, subparagraph 4(c), is that there would be no obligation by either the Commission or the United States to make a lump-sum payment to Panama under this provision at termination of the treaty.

Mr. President, I think that that is a most explicit statement by the Comptroller General of the United States. I thank the distinguished Senator from Wyoming for placing the full letter of the Comptroller General in the RECORD.

I reserve the remainder of our time.

Mr. HEINZ. Will the Senator yield me some time, 4 minutes?

Mr. SARBANES. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. I thank the distinguished Senator from Maryland. I should like to address a question to Senator ALLEN if he is still here.

Let me yield back the time.

Mr. SARBANES. I shall be happy to yield it subsequently and perhaps the Senator from Oklahoma can use his time now.

Mr. HEINZ. The Senator must have seen me rising. I shall try on another occasion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I say to the distinguished Senator from Maryland that the letter from Mr. Staats to Senator STONE does mention, as he points out, errors in the Armed Services Committee summary, but I did not use that summary in preparing my arguments, nor did the Senator say I did. I did not.

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield, the Senator did not, and I hope nothing I said suggests that he did. I did have a colloquy yesterday with Senator HARRY F. BYRD of Virginia on this very point, because he had used the summary of the committee in which the phrase, "one interpretation," had been changed to "our interpretation." But the Senator from Oklahoma today, in quoting, quoted from the hearings of the committee in which the correct phrase "one interpretation" was used. I made that point only to set the record straight because it had been asserted by other Senators that this was Comptroller General Staats' own interpretation.

The Senator from Oklahoma is quite correct, he did not make that assertion today. If anything I said led him to feel that I thought he had, I certainly seek to correct that impression at this point.

Mr. BARTLETT. I wanted to make that clear, because it might have been interpreted by some people listening that I did use the error in my remarks, which I did not do. I was aware of the error and I just wanted to make that clear. As I said, I was not asserting that the distinguished Senator from Maryland had implied that in any way, shape, or form.

What I think is important, I say to the Senator from Maryland, about the Staats letter is what it does not say. Mr. Staats, in November, testified in his formal prepared remarks in the House to the effect that there exists in the treaty, then and today, an ambiguity, an ambiguity that needs to be corrected. Then, in his prepared remarks in January before the Senate Armed Services Committee, he made the same assertion. In the case of his testimony before the Armed Services Committee, on several occasions in his oral presentation or in answering questions, he made the additional assertions that, indeed, there is ambiguity in the treaty and that, indeed, this ambiguity needs correction.

I agree with that. I think what Mr. Staats is saying in his letter to Senator STONE is that he agrees with the State Department's interpretation of the American position on the matter of contingency payment.

I might say that I agree with the State Department's position, and I think that this truly does represent the American position.

But the point remains, nonetheless, as Mr. Staats said, as Governor Parfitt said, that in the treaty there is an ambiguity. I am saying that there is an ambiguity. The Senator from Wyoming pointed out the ambiguity in the very precise terms.

But what the amendment proposes to do is to eliminate that ambiguity, to correct it.

Mr. HANSEN. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, it seems strange, indeed, to me that the Senator from Maryland, or any other Senator, would be quibbling, arguing, or taking issue with the Senator from Oklahoma on this amendment.

Let me read the amendment:

Nothing in this subparagraph may be construed to commit the United States of America to pay any part of such unpaid balance to the Republic of Panama after the date of the termination of this treaty.

That is exactly what the State Department says is the case. It is exactly what the Senator from Maryland contends is the case. It is what I think the case should be.

It seems, though, as I have examined the RECORD, not to be an impression universally held by everyone. It is precisely because of that fact that I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma should be adopted.

If we all agree this is what it means, what possible harm can there be in amending the treaty to include this precise language?

If it is what the Panamanians say, and it has been contended that that is what they say, then I see no reason at all to quibble or argue over a clear, concise, precise statement that says exactly what both sides, apparently, agree is the understanding.

I thank my friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the distinguished Senator from Wyoming. I think he made his point most effectively.

I would point out to him and my colleagues that in the hearings Senator CANNON, Senator MCINTYRE, Senator THURMOND, all expressed the opinion that there was and is an ambiguity in the treaty.

In fact, Senator CANNON submitted a printed amendment dealing with the ambiguity. There were others with whom I had conversations about the testimony before the Armed Services Committee indicating that, in fact, there was a very distinct ambiguity existing here and one which needs correction in the treaty.

This is what I am proposing to do. It certainly surprises me that there are people who want to continue the ambiguity in the treaty, who do not want to eliminate it, and I cannot understand this at all.

It seems that one of the responsibilities of this body is to make certain that the treaty that is ratified is clear, understandable, without a shadow of a doubt, and that there would not be other interpretations that could be made of it in subsequent years that could lead to controversy between this Nation and the nation of Panama.

Certainly, one of the goals of the treaties is to establish a good relationship between this Nation and Panama and that good relationship will be threatened if there is, in fact, a disagreement now or later on over the meaning of one of the important payments that is mentioned in the treaty, specifically, the contingency payment of $10 million per year out of surplus.

So I feel very strongly that the treaty does need this kind of improvement by eliminating the ambiguity that does exist over the payment of the $10 million out of surplus.

This can be handled in a very simple manner. I cannot understand the reluctance on the part of some to make this clarification.

I hope that the majority of my colleagues will join with me in support of this amendment so the difference of opinion, or the different conflicting statements that are in article XIII can be resolved, so that there is not a conflict and that there is just one clear interpretation that can be made.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HODGES). Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BARTLETT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time if the Senator from Idaho is prepared to do the same.

Mr. CHURCH. Yes.

Mr. President, our position has been fully explained. In the first place, we believe that the language of the treaty does not present an ambiguity. Therefore, no amendment is necessary.

Second, the interpretation of this particular provision by the American Government and the Panamanian Government is not in conflict. Both governments understand the provision alike, which lays additional emphasis on our contention that no amendment is necessary.

Third, if, for any reason, Senators still believe some clarification is called for, the proper way for the clarification to be made is by way of amendment to the articles of ratification, not by way of an amendment which would force a change in the text of the treaty itself, thus introducing the possibility of either having to renegotiate the treaty or having to submit the amended treaty to another plebiscite in Panama.

For these reasons, we feel it would be most unwise for the Senate to adopt this amendment.

Mr. President, I am prepared to relinquish the remainder of my time and I move——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, if I might comment on the distinguished Senator's remarks before he makes any motion.

Mr. CHURCH. Yes. I withhold my motion for that purpose.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will be very brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I would point out that a reservation or an understanding, as the Senator from Idaho says, is the proper way to approach this problem. I am glad he admits that there is a problem and I assume he admits there is an ambiguity or, otherwise, there would not be a problem.

But I would point out, a reservation or understanding only adds to the resolution of Ratification a third conflicting interpretation, rather than resolving the two conflictinig provisions that create the ambiguity in article XIII.

I would also point out to the distinguished Senator that it is not clear at all what the position of Panama is on this.

Certainly, I do not think that even a Cabinet Officer of President Carter would necessarily be speaking for the President because there have been statements made by Cabinet officers of President Carter which were in conflict with final statements made by him explaining his position.

But even more than that, after sending two wires to General Torrijos asking what his interpretation of this ambiguity is, I did not receive an answer from General Torrijos. I received an answer from the Ambassador of Panama, enclosing an answer made to a question after a speech in San Francisco. To contend that that answer represents the position of Panama, I think, is a gross exaggeration. I do not think it in any way even pretends to express the position of the Government of Panama.

I believe there is real doubt as to what the position of the Government of Panama is, by the very fact that General Torrijos refused to answer the questions I asked in two wires I sent.

So I think there is good reason to resolve the ambiguity that exists in article XIII and that this would not be resolved by adding another opinion in the form of a reservation or an understanding in the resolution of ratification.

It is important to correct the problem where it exists, which is in article XIII, and I hope my colleagues will join me in doing this and in making certain that the language is clear.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, we see no problem. In the first place, General Torrijos, as chief of state, may have felt that he was following the proper protocol in replying to the inquiries of the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma through his own ambassador in Washington. That is the normal practice, I believe.

It seems to me that the representations of the ambassador, referring to the position taken by Dr. Nicolas R. Barletta, who is the Minister of Planning and Economic Development of Panama, and who, I understand, was the chief negotiator for Panama with regard to those provisions in the treaty that relate to finances, represents the authoritative position of the Government of Panama.

I do not know how the Panamanian interpretation of this particular clause could be more authoritatively expressed than through Panama's own Ambassador in Washington, who relies upon the statement of Panama's chief negotiator. He makes it perfectly clear that Panama interprets this provision as we interpret the provision. Therefore, we see no problem.

However, if Senators have any reason to believe otherwise, then I reiterate that the way to handle it is through an amendment to the articles of ratification. This is the normal procedure the Senate follows in cases of this kind.

I remind the Senate that the text of no treaty has been amended directly by the Senate, previous to the Panama Canal treaties, for the past 54 years. The proper procedure, in a matter of this kind, is the adoption of an amendment to the articles of ratification, through which the Senate confers its consent.

Again, for these reasons, Mr. President, we feel that the adoption of this amendment would be unwise as well as unnecessary.

I relinquish the remainder of my time, if the Senator is prepared to do the same, and I move that the amendment be laid on the table. In that connection, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, before the Senator makes that motion, and before I relinquish the remainder of my time, I should like to read to the distinguished Senator the letter I received from the Ambassador to Panama, Mr. Lewis. He says:

> DEAR SENATOR: General Omar Torrijos, Chief of Government of Panama has received your telegram of February 22, 1978. He has requested us to send the transcripts of recent statements made by Dr. Nicolás Ardito Barletta which answer your question.
>
> Dr. Barletta is our Minister of Planning and Economic Development and the negotiator in behalf of our country for the economic issues in the new Treaties.
>
> Hoping to have been able to serve you, I remain

I point out that he does not spell out specifically that this is the official position. He says "This answers your question," but he does not point out that this is the position of General Torrijos.

I would think that on an important issue such as this, the general would want to make a clear statement, whether he made it directly to me or made it through his ambassador, but made it clear to the Members of the Senate who are considering this issue at the present time. He has refused to do that, and I think it leaves considerable doubt as to just what the position is.

Nonetheless, even if he agreed with the position, the ambiguity of the treaty is still there, and it is going to remain there unless it is eliminated by amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CHURCH. I yield back the remainder of my time. All time having been yielded back, I move to table the amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MELCHER (when his name was called). Mr. President, on this vote I have a live pair with the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." Therefore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. ABOUREZK), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Montana (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY), the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON), the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON) and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) would each vote "yea."

Mr. BAKER. I announce that the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. CHAFEE), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), the Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 33, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 83 Ex.]

YEAS—40

Baker	Hayakawa	Morgan
Bentsen	Hodges	Moynihan
Biden	Hollings	Nelson
Case	Humphrey	Percy
Church	Inouye	Proxmire
Cranston	Jackson	Ribicoff
Culver	Javits	Riegle
Danforth	Kennedy	Sarbanes
Durkin	Leahy	Sparkman
Glenn	Long	Stafford
Hart	Mathias	Stevenson
Haskell	Matsunaga	Talmadge
Hatfield, Mark O.	McGovern	Williams
	Metzenbaum

NAYS—33

Allen	Goldwater	Randolph
Bartlett	Hansen	Roth
Burdick	Hatch	Sasser
Byrd, Harry F., Jr.	Heinz	Schmitt
Chiles	Helms	Schweiker
DeConcini	Johnston	Scott
Dole	Laxalt	Stone
Domenici	Lugar	Wallop
Eastland	McClure	Young
Ford	McIntyre	Zorinsky
Garn	Nunn
	Packwood

PRESENT AND GIVING A LIVE PAIR, AS PREVIOUSLY RECORDED—2

Robert C. Byrd, for.
Melcher, against.

NOT VOTING—25

Abourezk	Curtis	Muskie
Anderson	Eagleton	Pearson
Bayh	Gravel	Pell
Bellmon	Griffin	Stennis
Brooke	Hatfield, Paul G.	Stevens
Bumpers	Hathaway	Thurmond
Cannon	Huddleston	Tower
Chafee	Magnuson	Weicker
Clark

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

(Later the following occurred:)

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, having voted in the affirmative on the rollcall on the motion to table the Bartlett amendment, in view of the fact that it would not alter the outcome, that I may be permitted to enter into a live pair with the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON). If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay." Having voted in the affirmative, I will withdraw my vote if unanimous consent is so allowed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The foregoing rollcall vote has been corrected to reflect the above order.)

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CRANSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. May we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this debate has been going on now for some 2 months. During most of this time I have participated actively in the debate. My participation in the debate has been on an ad lib, extemporaneous basis because I believe that the issues are important enough so that Members should have informed themselves of the facts and the issues and should have been able to discuss the matter without written or prepared scripts.

I do wish to comment on the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia on the constitutional issue that we have been discussing here on the Senate floor regarding the applicability of article IV, section 3, clause 2 of the Constitution, in requiring action by Congress to authorize the disposition of property of the United States.

We have contended here on the floor that that article should be observed, that the role of the House of Representatives, not in the treatymaking process but in the disposition of property of the United States, should be recognized.

The circuit court of appeals, in a three-judge panel with appeal direct to the Supreme Court, has decided this question. By a vote of two to one, it decided that it was not necessary that Congress make this authorization, but that the Executive and the Senate, through the treatymaking process, could make disposition of the property of the United States.

So, Mr. President, inasmuch as I am commenting upon a ruling or decision of the circuit court of appeals, I should be very precise in my language and in my statement as to the effect of this decision. Therefore, I will read remarks that have been prepared for my use at this time.

Mr. President, yesterday the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia issued its opinion in the case of MICKEY EDWARDS, Member of Congress, and others against James Earl Carter, President of the United States. Mr. President, the plaintiffs in this case, some 60 Congressmen, complain that their legislative function as Members of Congress has been impaired by the action of the President—and now, I might add, by the action of the Senate in rejecting the Hatch amendment just the other day—in refusing to follow the Constitution in the matter of the proposed disposal of public property in the Isthmus of Panama. The lawsuit seeks a declaratory judgment that the exclusive means provided in the Constitution for disposal of U.S. property requires congressional action and that, therefore, the Panama Canal Zone and the public property lying therein may not be given to Panama by means of a treaty purporting itself to make that transfer.

Now, Mr. President, the decision reached yesterday is very significant and highly encouraging in several respects. Not the ultimate outcome, but the reasoning which was used in arriving at that outcome, and the prospect that it gives for a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States which up to now has been unwilling to decide this issue on the merits. First, the circuit court did not sidestep the issue and did recognize that the plaintiffs had good standing to sue, thus upholding a long line of cases which acknowledge that a complaint alleging impairment of a legislative function brought by a Member of Congress does give the Member standing to sue. So in this respect the Court of Appeals overturned the ruling of the District Court and did decide the case on its merits.

The district court had refused to decide the issue on the merits but on appeal, the circuit court of appeals does decide the issue on the merits, which is a most important circumstance and development.

Also, Mr. President, the court very properly rejected out of hand the various complex and novel arguments advanced by the administration which sought desperately to challenge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to adjudicate the merits of this important constitutional question. Thus the court rejected the argument that the case was premature or that it presented a nonjustifiable political question. In other words, Mr. President, the court faced the issue squarely and in so doing, noted that the controversy presents a pure question of constitutional law ripe for resolution by the circuit court and, I am sure, ripe also for final resolution by the Supreme Court of the United States.

So, Mr. President, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has faced up to this critical Constitutional issue, and although I disagree with the opinion of the majority of the court which supported the proposition that a treaty acting alone can be used to dispose of public property of the United States, I certainly feel that the court is to be highly commended for recognizing that the issue must be finally resolved on its merits and not avoided.

Now, Mr. President, I do disagree with the decision on the merits reached by two of the three judges on the circuit court, and naturally I regret that the court was not persuaded, as I am, that the power of Congress to dispose of public property is indeed an exclusive power. But, Mr. President, this case is going to go to the Supreme Court. There can be no doubt of that fact, and the Supreme Court will have to make an independent and new study of this critical issue, using as a point of departure, point of reference, or point of procedure, the opinions of the court below. So the significant point here is that the circuit court has faced the issue squarely and that when appeal is taken—and certainly there will be an appeal—the Supreme Court will also discharge its constitutional duty by establishing on the merits—free from political pressures—the true and proper construction to be placed on the words of the Constitution where it says, "Congress shall have power to dispose of * * * property belonging to the United States."

In reaching a decision, I believe the Supreme Court is going to be guided by the magnificent dissenting opinion written in yesterday's decision by Circuit Judge George MacKinnon. Senators will no doubt recall Judge MacKinnon's famous dissent in Buckley against Valeo—which was the public financing of elections case—which dissent was subsequently followed and endorsed by the Supreme Court. Mr. President, Judge MacKinnon's dissent in this case is an equally superb analysis—a strong dissent providing an analysis of every aspect of this question and laying to rest with finality every argument advanced to support the novel proposition that the power of Congress is not an exclusive power. So, Mr. President, I view yesterday's decision, on balance, as a victory for those of us here in the Congress—in both Houses—who are seeking to uphold the constitutional prerogatives of the House of Representatives, and to uphold the constitutional requirement that before property of the United States is disposed of, the entire Congress must act authorizing that disposition.

Now, Mr. President, I believe it would be improper for me to criticize the opinion of the majority of the circuit court given in this important case—but I recall the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) saying that this issue was whether the rights of the House of Representatives and whether the constitutional rights of the Congress as a whole would be upheld and respected. He felt that the issue involved in the Hatch amendment was more important, really, than the issue of the Panama Canal Treaty, because failure to resolve the issue correctly is going to subvert our entire constitutional process. If they on one hand can ignore the House of Representatives and the constitutional powers that it has, could they not just as easily ignore the rights of the Senate in another instance? So it is a most important issue, Mr. President, whether we are going to be a government of law and not a government of men. It is an important issue. The Senate will have the opportunity to decide this issue. It will be presented in a different form before we approve the resolution of ratification.

As I say, Mr. President, I believe it would be improper for me to criticize the opinion of the majority of the circuit court given in this important case, but since it is an opinion directly involving the legislative function of the full Congress, I will make one observation. The circuit court of appeals has made exactly the same mistake made by many others who have studied this issue.

The circuit court has regrettably confused the question of what is proper for inclusion in the treaty-making process with the question of what can be actually accomplished by means of a treaty. The circuit court—and I am speaking of the majority—relies on precedents which deal only with the constitutional scope of treaty power subject matter and which deal only with the nature of the treaty ratification process itself.

We do not say that the treaty needs to go to the House of Representatives for its consent, but in implementing the treaty and in accomplishing and authorizing that which is necessary before the treaty is put in force, there must be legislation enacted by the House of Representatives and the Senate.

No one has contended, Mr. President, that the House of Representatives should have any share whatsoever in the treatymaking process. The only contention is that Congress alone has power to cause a transfer of public property. Thus the circuit court relies mistakenly on the legislative history of the treaty power because that history deals only with the ratification process as it might be affected by particular treaty subject matter.

Of course, this subject matter can go into the treaty, but before the property can actually be disposed of, congressional authorization must be had; just as in the treaty in 1955, in article V, in three different places where the property was being disposed of in the treaty, the article says clearly that the transfer is subject to authorization by the Congress. But the circuit court does not understand this distinction. For example, when an amendment was proposed at the Virginia Ratification Convention which provided that no treaty ceding territory should be made except when ratified by three-quarters of the whole number of Members of both Houses of Congress, the only matter, Mr. President, the only matter under consideration was the ratification procedure with respect to the particular subject matter of territorial cession. The method of ratification was at issue, Mr. President, not the means of disposal. The means of actual property disposal was emphatically not before the convention. The Virginia convention understood that the means of disposal was already specified in article IV, section 3, clause 2 * * * the only question was whether also to involve the House in the ratification procedure, too.

The House of Representatives is not involved in the ratification procedures, but it must be involved in legislation authorizing the disposition of property.

Now, I regret that the court of appeals, at least the majority, was unable to understand this crucial, very crucial distinction between the precedents dealing with treaty subject matter and methods of ratification and the precedents dealing with the proper means for exercising the separate functions of a constitutional government, but I am hopeful, Mr. President, that this superb dissenting opinion by Judge MacKinnon will provide guidance to the Supreme Court in appreciating this essential distinction. The House of Representatives has no role in making treaties. The treaty power is the exclusive province of the President and the Senate. All the precedents and the Constitution establish that; but, Mr. President, the disposal power is just as equally the exclusive province of the Congress, and the two powers must be made to act together or an unconstitutional and illegal act would occur under the proposed treaty in its purported disposal of our public property in the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. President, you can recognize the consternation that would be caused in Panama if this treaty, with its purported disposition of property of the United States in the Panama Canal Zone, should be approved by the Senate yet authorization by the Congress for the disposition of that property was not had, and then the Supreme Court rules that the treaty, insofar as it pertained to disposing of the lands and waters, the canal and the contiguous land, that the treaty insofar as it purported to make disposition of this public property, was unconstitutional because the Congress had not authorized disposition. With this treaty having been solemnly ratified by the heads of the two governments and the Supreme Court announcing that the disposition of the property was unconstitutional, that it was still the property of the United States, why they would have to back up and work out something else in a hurry.

Fortunately, Mr. President, the Senate will have another opportunity to uphold the Constitution and make moot this pending litigation, because there will be another amendment offered which will call for an act of Congress before the disposition of this property and, failing in that, certainly, a reservation will be added.

There will be another amendment offered to recognize the House in the process of disposing of property of the United States, not to get the treaty to them, I trust the proponents will not indicate, as they have in the past, that that is what is involved, because it is not. It is a question of an act of Congress authorizing the disposition of this property, not a question of the treaty itself.

First, there will be an amendment offered. Failing in that, they will drop back on the reservation.

This reservation would forbid an exchange of instruments of ratification until the enactment of legislation authorizing the public property disposals which are promised in the treaty.

There are 235 Members of the House who would join in the reservation if they could, asking that they be given an opportunity to act as a part of Congress in authorizing the disposition of this property.

I hope the Senate will see the wisdom of accommodating the desires of the House of Representatives and of following the Constitution and will adopt this reservation, because this is the one reservation offered to this treaty which would have some real effect because it will guarantee that our own Constitution is followed and will make unnecessary a decision by the Supreme Court.

So if we will only take this action, if we will only allow them to require by reservation that the House and Senate pass legislation authorizing the disposition of this property, then we are going to make unnecessary and make entirely moot the question of whether or not the House has a right to act on the disposition of this public property.

If we act, if we adopt this reservation, then the question becomes absolutely moot and unnecessary to be decided.

But, Mr. President, if this reservation is turned down by the joint leadership, then the Supreme Court is going to have to resolve this question for us. If we are unwilling to face up to the matter, if we are unwilling to practice comity with the House of Representatives, then this matter is headed for resolution by the Supreme Court.

I think we ought to make the issue moot. I think we ought to grant the wishes of more than half the Members of the House of Representatives who have expressed the desire to be allowed to exercise their constitutional function as a coequal House in the Congress.

I think we ought to get the question out of the courts by facing up to the requirements of the Constitution whether we like those requirements or not. The Constitution says Congress shall have power to dispose of the property belonging to the United States. That ought to be enough, Mr. President. Let us allow Congress to exercise or not exercise that power as it sees fit. Let us here in the Senate make this issue moot. Let us get this issue out of the courts, because if we fail to act, it is obviously headed for further litigation and for resolution by the Supreme Court.

I do not want to see the day, Mr. President, when the Supreme Court tells the Senate— "Members of the Senate, these Congressmen are right; their legislative function has been impaired by the action of the President and by your failure to act." I do not want to see that day, but that day is coming, Mr. President, because the obstinance of the Senate in not acknowledging the requirements of the Constitution and the rights of the House is going to guarantee that the Supreme Court of the United States will tell us— exactly as Judge MacKinnon tells us in this superb dissenting opinion—

> It is almost impossible to understand the motivation for excluding the House of Representatives from exercising its Constitutional authority.

The Supreme Court, Mr. President, is going to look at this issue dispassionately, I believe and hope. The Supreme Court is composed of men free from political pressures. The Supreme Court is going to decide this matter fairly, I truly believe, and I am confident the Senate leadership is going to regret the decision to turn down the House of Representatives; is going to regret the decision to tell the House of Representatives, "You are going to have to go to the courts to get us to do what the Constitution says is right."

So, Mr. President, I want to commend the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia for facing up to this issue—the courts have not been willing to do it until now—and I particularly want to commend Judge George MacKinnon for his outstanding and truly magnificent dissenting opinion which, in my judgment, by the overwhelming force of its logic, will carry the day in the regrettable event this issue is not resolved properly in the Senate and is therefore finally decided in the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in Edwards v. Carter, Appeal No. 78–1166, decided April 6, 1978, be printed in its entirety in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

EXHIBIT 1

[U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, No. 78–1166]

MICKEY EDWARDS, MEMBER OF CONGRESS, OKLAHOMA, ET AL., APPELLANTS v. JAMES EARL CARTER, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

(On Motion for Injunction Pending Appeal, Motion for Summary Reversal, and Motion for Summary Affirmance (D.C. Civil 77–1733))

[Argued March 10, 1978; Decided April 6, 1978]

Daniel J. Popeo, with whom Joel D. Joseph and Paul D. Kamenar were on the motion for an injunction pending appeal and the motion for summary reversal, for appellants.

Robert E. Kopp, Attorney, Department of Justice, with whom Steven I. Frank and Brook Hedge, Attorney, Department of Justice, on the motion for summary affirmance, for appellee.

Before: Fahy, Senior Circuit Judge, and McGowan and MacKinnon, Circuit Judges.

Opinion Per Curiam.

Dissenting opinion filed by Circuit Judge MacKinnon.

Per Curiam: This is an appeal from the District Court's dismissal of a challenge to appellee's use of the treaty power to convey to the Republic of Panama United States properties, including the Panama Canal, located in the Panama Canal Zone.[1] Appellants, sixty members of the House of Representatives, sought a declaratory judgment that the exclusive means provided in the Constitution for disposal of United States property requires approval of both Houses of Congress, see Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, and that therefore the Panama Canal Zone may not be returned to Panama through the Treaty process, which invests the treaty-making power in the President by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate, see Art. II, § 2, cl. 2. Appellee contends that the Constitution permits United States territory to be disposed of either through congressional legislation or through the treaty process, and that therefore the President's decision to proceed under the treaty power is constitutionally permissible.

The District Court did not reach the merits of this controversy; rather, it dismissed the complaint for lack of jurisdiction after concluding that appellants lacked standing because they had failed to demonstrate injury in fact from the President's invocation of the treaty process. A notice of appeal and a request for a preliminary injunction pending appeal were immediately filed with this court. Appellee has moved for summary affirmance of the District Court's judgment either on the jurisdictional grounds stated by the District Court or on the merits of appellants' contention; appellants have moved for summary reversal. We have heard oral argument and have considered the case on an expedited basis.[2] For the reasons appearing below, we affirm the dismissal of the complaint, not on the jurisdictional ground relied on by the District Court but for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted.

I

In addition to its argument on the merits, appellee has presented several substantial and complex challenges to the jurisdiction of the federal courts to adjudicate the merits of the constitutional question presented in this case. We refer not only to the contentions as to lack of standing, but also to the arguments that appellants' action is both premature and presents a nonjusticiable political question. Deciding only the jurisdictional issue before us could result in this court, or the Supreme Court, remanding the case for further proceedings either on the merits or on jurisdictional issues. Because the merits of this controversy present a pure question of law, with no need of a hearing for fact development, because these merits are so clearly against the parties asserting jurisdiction, and because the judgment appealed from was based on only one of several asserted grounds of lack of jurisdiction, we believe it is appropriate to proceed directly to the merits of this case. This conclusion is bolstered when the time constraints imposed by the immediacy of Senate action on the treaties are considered. See Adams v. Vance, No. 77-1960 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 17, 1978), at 8 n.7 and cases cited therein.

Footnotes at end of article.

Consequently, the precise question we address is whether the constitutional delegation found in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 is exclusive so as to prohibit the disposition of United States property by self-executing treaty—i.e., a treaty enacted in accordance with Art. II, § 2, cl. 2, which becomes effective without implementing legislation.

II

Article IV, § 3, cl. 2 of the Constitution states in its entirety:

"The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State."

Appellants contend that this clause gives Congress exclusive power to convey to foreign nations any property, such as the Panama Canal, owned by the United States.[3] We find such a construction to be at odds with the wording of this and similar grants of power to the Congress, and, most significantly, with the history of the constitutional debates.[4]

The grant of authority to Congress under the property clause states that "The Congress shall have Power . . .," not that only the Congress shall have power, or that the Congress shall have exclusive power. In this respect the property clause is parallel to Article I, § 8, which also states that "The Congress shall have Power. . . ." Many of the powers thereafter enumerated in § 8 involve matters that were at the time the Constitution was adopted and that are at the present time also commonly the subject of treaties. The most prominent example of this is the regulation of commerce with foreign nations, Art. 1, § 8, cl. 3, and appellants do not go so far as to contend that the treaty process is not a constitutionally allowable means for regulating foreign commerce. It thus seems to us that, on its face, the property clause is intended not to restrict the scope of the treaty clause, but, rather, is intended to permit Congress to accomplish through legislation what may concurrently be accomplished through other means provided in the Constitution.

The American Law Institute's Restatement of Foreign Relations, directly addressing this issue, comes to the same conclusion we reach:

"The mere fact, however, that a congressional power exists does not mean that the power is exclusive so as to preclude the making of a self-executing treaty within the area of that power."

ALI Restatement of Foreign Relations Law (2d), § 141, at 435 (1965). The section of the Restatement relied on by the dissent merely states that the treaty power, like all powers granted to the United States, is limited by other restraints found in the Constitution on the exercise of governmental power (Rest. For. Rel. § 117).[5] Of course the correctness of this proposition as a matter of constitutional law is clear. See Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1 (1957); Geoffroy v. Riggs, 132 U.S. 258 (1890); Asakura v. Seattle, 265 U.S. 332 (1924), also relied on by the dissent. To urge, as does the dissent, that the transfer of the Canal Zone property by treaty offends this well-settled principle—that the treaty power can only be exercised in a manner which conforms to the Constitution—begs the very question to be decided, namely, whether Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 places in the Congress the exclusive authority to dispose of United States property.[6]

There are certain grants of authority to Congress which are, by their very terms, exclusive. In these areas, the treaty-making power and the power of Congress are not concurrent; rather, the only department of the federal government authorized to take action is the Congress. For instance, the Constitution expressly provides only one method—congressional enactment—for the appropriation of money:

"No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law." Art. I, § 9, cl. 7. Thus, the expenditure of funds by the United States cannot be accomplished by self-executing treaty; implementing legislation appropriating such funds is indispensible. Similiarly, the constitutional mandate that "all Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, "Art. 1, § 7, cl. 1, appears, by reason of the restrictive language used, to prohibit the use of the treaty power to impose taxes.[7]

These particular grants of power to Congress operate to limit the treaty power because the language of these provisions clearly precludes any method of appropriating money or raising taxes other than through the enactment of laws by the full Congress. This is to be contrasted with the power-granting language in Art. 1, § 8, and in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. Rather than stating the particular matter of concern and providing that the enactment of a law is the only way for the federal government to take action regarding that matter, these provisions state simply that Congress shall have power to take action on the matters enumerated.

Thus it appears from the very language used in the property clause that this provision was not intended to preclude the availability of self-executing treaties as a means for disposing of United States property. The history of the drafting and ratification of that clause confirms this conclusion. The other clause in Art. IV, § 3 concerns the procedures for admission of new states into the Union, and the debates at the Constitutional Convention clearly demonstrate that the property clause was intended to delineate the role to be played by the central government in the disposition of Western lands which were potential new states. Several individual states had made territorial claims to portions of these lands; and as finally enacted, the property clause, introduced in the midst of the Convention's consideration of the admission of new states, sought to preserve both federal claims and conflicting state claims to certain portions of the Western lands.[8]

The proceedings of the Virginia state ratifying convention provide further evidence of the limited scope of the property clause. During a debate in which the meaning of the clause was questioned, Mr. Grayson noted that the sole purpose for including this provision was to preserve the property rights of the states and the federal government to the Western territory as these rights existed during the Confederation.[9]

This history demonstrates the limited concerns giving rise to the inclusion of Article IV, § 3, cl. 2 in the Constitution. Whether or not this historical perspective might serve as a basis for restricting the scope of congressional power under the property clause, we view it as persuasive evidence for rejecting the claim that Article IV is an express limitation on the treaty power, foreclosing the availability of that process as a constitutionally permissible means of disposing of American interests in the Panama Canal Zone.

III

The debates over the treaty clause at the Constitutional Convention and state ratifying conventions even more directly demonstrate the Framers' intent to permit the disposition of United States property by treaty without House approval. As originally reported to the Convention, authority to make treaties would have been entrusted to a majority of the Senate, without even Presidential participation.[10] However, this structure was thought to entrust too much power to the Senate, and the provision was subsequently amended to include an active Presidential role. Nonetheless, concern over the extensive scope of the power remained; particularly worrisome was the potential use of treaties as a means of effecting territorial cessions. Elbridge Gerry expressed this fear when he noted that "[i]n Treaties of peace the dearest interests will be at stake, as the fisheries, territory, etc. In treaties of peace also there is more danger to the extremities of the Continent, of being sacrificed than on any other occasion."[11]

Concern about the sweeping character of the treaty clause led to several proposed amendments aimed at limiting its exercise. One amendment would have restricted this power by requiring that "no Treaty of Peace affecting Territorial rights should be made without the concurrence of two thirds of the (members of the Senate present.)"[12] For some delegates, however, merely increasing the level of Senate approval did not go far enough towards ensuring the proper exercise of the treaty power. Thus Connecticut's Roger Sherman proposed an amendment providing that "no such [territorial] rights should be ceded without the sanction of the Legislature."[13]

The Committee of Eleven, in whose hands this issue finally rested, rejected the proposed amendment for House participation. Instead, a provision requiring a two-thirds Senate vote for the passage of all treaties was adopted. This choice clearly indicates the Framers' satisfaction with a supermajoritarian requirement in the Senate, rather than House approval, to serve as a check upon the improvident cessation of United States territory.

That the two-thirds voting requirement did not affect the scope of the treaty power, but only made ratification of treaties more difficult, was clearly understood at the state ratifying conventions. An amendment proposed at the Virginia Convention provided that—

"No treaty ceding, contracting, restraining, or suspending the territorial rights or claims of the United States . . . shall be made, but in case of the most urgent and extreme necessity; nor shall any such treaty be ratified without the concurrence of three fourths of the whole number of the members of both houses respectively."[14]

This, and a similar amendment offered at the North Carolina Convention,[15] evidence the broad interpretation given Article II, § 2 at the time of its inception.[16] As was true of the effort at the Constitutional Convention to introduce House participation in ratification of treaties, these state attempts to limit the treaty power as now contained in the Constitution also failed.

That those who framed and ratified the Constitution rejected several express attempts to limit the treaty power in the manner now urged by appellants greatly undermines the interpretation of that power they press upon us. From this evidence we conclude that the disposition of property pursuant to the treaty power and without the express approval of the Houe of Representatives was both contemplated and authorized by the makers of the Constitution.

Footnotes at end of article.

IV

In view of the lack of ambiguity as to the intended effects of the treaty and property clauses, it may be surprising that judicial pronouncements over the past two centuries relating to these constitutional provisions are somewhat vague and conflicting. However, none of the actual holdings in these cases addressed the precise issue before us—whether the property clause prohibits the transfer of United States property to foreign nations through self-executing treaties. While, therefore, neither the holdings nor the dicta of these previous cases are dispositive of the case before us, we believe that in the main they support the conclusions we have stated heretofore.

One line of cases, involving the property clause, has arisen in the context of the division of power between the federal government and the states. In discussing this question, the Supreme Court has stated that Article IV "implies an exclusion of all other authority over [United States] property which could interfere with this right or obstruct its exercise." [17] We think that the most reasonable interpretation of such dicta, occurring in the context referred to, is that there is a lack of any constitutional basis for exercise of authority by individual states over United States property.[18] But that a specific congressional power is exclusive against intrusion by the states does not necessarily remove it from the sphere of the federal treaty power.

Another line of cases, involving the treaty clause, has arisen in the context of conveyances by the federal government to Indian tribes. The leading case on the power to convey such land by self-executing treaty is Holden v. Joy, 84 U.S. 211 (1872). In quieting adverse claims to certain lands west of the Mississippi which had previously been conveyed to the Cherokee nation by treaty, the Court had to determine the validity of the original grant to the Indians. The Court noted that—

"Still it is insisted that the President and Senate, in concluding [a treaty for the passage of property], could not lawfully covenant that a patent should issue to convey lands which belonged to the United States without the consent of Congress. . . . On the contrary, there are many authorities where it is held that a treaty may convey to a grantee good title to such lands, without an act of Congress conferring it." . . . Id. at 247.

Because later congressional enactments repeatedly recognized the validity of the transfer, the Court found it unnecessary to rest its decision on this constitutional point. However, the principle espoused is repeated in subsequent Supreme Court decisions.

The treaty in Holden involved a cession of non-Indian lands in return for tribal property. More common, however, were treaties in which Indian tribes ceded to the United States portions of their lands in return for, generally, some money and the creation of reservations. Usually these reservations consisted of tracts of territory originally occupied by the tribes and excepted by the treaty provisions from cession to the federal government. In order to fully comprehend the nature of the property interest transferred by the United States in these reservations it is necessary to understand the extent of the Indian's legal title prior thereto. The law early recognized the limited possessory rights of Indians in their territory. Ultimate title, that necessary to dispose of the property, rested solely in the hands of the federal government. Johnson v. McIntosh, 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 542 (1823). The purpose of the reservation treaties was to transfer the Indian tribes' possessory rights to most of their property to the United States in exchange for a fee simple title in excepted reservations. Such treaties, then, clearly disposed of United States property interests.

Supreme Court cases involving these cessions have provided dicta similar to that of Holden v. Joy. In Jones v. Meehan, 175 U.S. 1 (1899), the Court considered the nature of Indian property rights acquired by "reservation." There, Chief Moose Dung of the Chippewas had "reserved" a certain tract of land in a treaty ceding tribal territory to the United States. He subsequently leased some of that property to various individuals. A challenge was made questioning the Chief's authority to engage in that transaction. As framed by the Court, the issue for resolution was whether the treaty merely confirmed Chief Moose Dung's original right of occupancy in the reserved lands or whether the treaty granted a fee simple interest to the reservee. In holding that a fee simple passed under the treaty,[19] the court noted that "[i]t is well settled that good title to parts of the lands of an Indian tribe may be granted to individuals by treaty between the United States and the tribe, without any act of Congress, or any patent from the Executive authority of the United States." 175 U.S. at 10. Thus the Court concluded that the treaty power alone was sufficient to transfer the underlying U.S. title in the reserved lands. In a similar situation the Court in Francis v. Francis, 203 U.S. 233, 241–42 (1906), stated that "this court and the highest court of Michigan concur in holding that a title in fee may pass by treaty without the aid of an act of Congress."

As is true of most of the cases in which the Supreme Court has addressed the scope of the treaty power, Holden, Jones, and Francis involved the federal government's interaction with Indian tribes. Because of the sui generis nature of the relationship between the Indian tribes and the federal government, it might be argued that these decisions are not dispositive.[20] We think, however, that they are persuasively supportive of the authority of the President and the Senate under the treaty clause.

V

While certain earlier judicial interpretations of the interplay between the property clause and the treaty clause may be somewhat confused and less than dispositive of the precise issue before us, past treaty practice is thoroughly consistent with the revealed intention of the Framers of these clauses. In addition to the treaties with Indian tribes upheld in the cases discussed above, there are many other instances of self-executing treaties with foreign nations, including Panama, which cede land or other property assertedly owned by the United States.[21] That some transfers have been effected through a congressional enactment instead of, or in addition to, a treaty signed by the President and ratified by two-thirds of the Senate lends no support to appellants' position in this case, because, as stated previously, self-executing treaties and congressional enactments are alternative, concurrent means provided in the Constitution for disposal of United States property.

For instance, the Treaty with Panama of 1955, 6 U.S.T. 2273, transferred certain property (a strip of water and other sites within the Canal Zone) to Panama without concurring legislation by the Congress, while transfer of other property (owned by the United States but within the jurisdiction of Panama) was, under the terms of the treaty itself, dependent upon concurring legislation by the Congress. The decision to cast some but not all of the articles of conveyance in non-self-executing form was a policy choice; it was not required by the Constitution.

The transfer of property contemplated in the current instance is part of a broader effort in the conduct of our foreign affairs to strengthen relations with another country, and indeed with the whole of Latin America. The Framers in their wisdom have made the treaty power available to the President, the chief executant of foreign relations under our constitutional scheme, by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the members of the Senate present, as a means of accomplishing these public purposes. We do not think it is relevant that many previous treaties couched in self-executing terms have been different in scope, dealing with boundary issues or otherwise ceding land which was claimed both by the United States and by a foreign nation.[22] We note first that it is hardly surprising that lands transfers often involve boundaries or other disputed territory; indeed, it is in these situations that the decision to dispose of land would most often be made.

Second, the grant of power to Congress in the property clause is not predicated on the territory disposed of being on a boundary or being the subject of conflicting claims. Thus we do not understand the basis for appellant's argument that, even if that clause does not provide the exclusive means of disposing of disputed or boundary lands, it is the exclusive source of power for disposing of land concededly owned by the United States If the status of the land has any bearing on whether it may be conveyed without congressional enactment under the property clause,[23] it would seem to cut in a direction contrary to that urged by appellants, for the Western lands that were the focus of the property clause were the subject of conflicting claims by the states and the federal government.

It is important to the correct resolution of the legal issue now before us not to confuse what the Constitution permits with what it prohibits. In deciding that Article IV, Section 3, clause 2 is not the exclusive method contemplated by the Constitution for disposing of federal property, we hold that the United States is not prohibited from employing an alternative means constitutionally authorized.[24] Our judicial function in deciding this lawsuit is confined to assessing the merits of the claim of appellants that in the conduct of foreign relations in this matter, involving, inter alia, the transfer of property of the United States, the treaty power as contained in Article II, Section 2, Clause 2, was not legally available to the President. We hold, contrarily, that this choice of procedure was clearly consonant with the Constitution.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the District Court dismissing the complaint is Affirmed.

FOOTNOTES

[1] Two treaties, signed by the chief executives of Panama and the United States, were presented to the Senate for ratification. The Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal has now been ratified by the Senate, see note 2 infra. The Article conveying the Canal Zone properties to the Republic of Panama is contained in the Panama Canal Treaty:

"PROPERTY TRANSFER AND ECONOMIC PARTICIPATION BY THE REPUBLIC OF PANAMA

"1. Upon termination of this Treaty, the Republic of Panama shall assume total responsibility for the management, operation, and maintenance of the Panama Canal, which shall be turned over in operating condition and free of liens and debts, except as the two Parties may otherwise agree.

"2. The United States of America transfers, without charge, to the Republic of Panama all right, title and interest the United States of America may have with respect to all real property, including non-renewable improvements thereon, as set forth below:

"(a) Upon the entry into force of this Treaty, the Panama Railroad and such property that was located in the former Canal Zone but that is not within the land and water areas the use of which is made available to the United States of America pursuant to this Treaty. However, it is agreed that the transfer on such date shall not include buildings and other facilities, except housing, the use of which is retained by the United States of America pursuant to this Treaty and related agreements, outside such areas;

"(b) Such property located in an area or a portion thereof at such time as the use by the United States of America of such area or portion thereof ceases pursuant to agreement between the two Parties.

"(c) Housing units made available for occupancy by members of the Armed Forces of the Republic of Panama in accordance with paragraph 5(b) of Annex B to the Agreement in Implementation of Article IV of this Treaty at such time as such units are made available to the Republic of Panama.

"(d) Upon termination of this Treaty, all real property and non-removable improvements that were used by the United States of America for the purposes of this Treaty and related agreements and equipment related to the management, operation and maintenance of the Canal remaining in the Republic of Panama.

"3. The Republic of Panama agrees to hold the United States of America harmless with respect to any claims which may be made by third parties relating to rights, title and interest in such property.

"4. The Republic of Panama shall receive, in addition, from the Panama Canal Commission a just and equitable return on the national resources which it has dedicated to the efficient management, operation, maintenance, protection and defense of the Panama Canal. . . ."

[2] The Senate consented to The Neutrality Treaty on March 14, 1978. It is expected that the vote on the Panama Canal Treaty will occur in early April 1978.

[3] In addressing the merits, we assume without deciding that the Panama Canal Zone real property which would be conveyed by the Panama Canal Treaty is indeed property belonging to the United States. Appellee has not contended otherwise and neither party has briefed this issue.

[4] The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has thoroughly considered and rejected appellants' argument. That Commitee reported the treaties with Panama to the full Senate by a 14 to 1 vote, and the one dissenting Senator did not dispute the power of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer United States property. See Exec. Rept. No. 95–12 (95th Cong. 2d Sess., Feb. 3, 1978).

In addition to the American Law Institute's Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, see infra, other authorities in agreement with this conclusion include Professor Louis Henkin, see L. Henkin, "Foreign Affairs and the Constitution 159–60" (1965); Dean Louis Pollalk, see 124 Cong. Rec., No. 8, at 5729 (95th Cong., Jan. 30, 1978); Professor Covey Oliver, see Hearings Before the Committee on Foreign Relations. Part IV, at 95, 103, 112–13 (Jan. 19, 1978); and Professor John Norton Moore, see id. at 89, 93–94. The Attorney General and the State Department Legal Advisor have also issued opinions that the Panama Canal may be disposed of through self-executing treaty. See Opinion of the Attorney General to the Secretary of State, Aug. 11, 1977; Hearings Before the Subcommittee on the Separation of Powers of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Part I, at 3–25 (July 29, 1977). Professor Raoul Berger, in testimony before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers of the Senate Judiciary Committee in the fall of 1977, expressed a contrary position. His thesis seems to be that the President cannot exercise under the treaty power any power granted to Congress, see Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers, (95th Cong. 1st Sess., Nov. 3, 1977). We agree with Professor Henkin that such a narrow view of the treaty power would, by "outlaw[ing] treaties on matters as to which Congress could legislate domestically," "virtually wipe out the treaty power." L. Henkin, supra, at 149.

We note that Professor Henkin's treatise leaves no doubt but that he is in agreement with our position. The passage quoted by the dissent, as is realized upon a careful reading of the passage itself (with its references to "unilateral" presidential action and "executive order[s]"), concerns the limitations upon the President's power to dispose of property through unilateral executive action. See note 24 infra.

[5] Similarly, § 118(1) of the Restatement lends no support to the dissent's position because it is not even relevant to the issue before us. That section, consistent with Missouri v. Holland, 252 U.S. 416 (1920), indicates that the treaty power is broader than the power of Congress to enact legislation. The issue before us, on the other hand, is whether the treaty power extends to an area in which Congress, by virtue of Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, does have power to enact legislation.

[6] It is important to understand the limited scope of this inquiry. If Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 does in fact provide the exclusive means of property disposition, i.e., by legislation, clearly a self-executing treaty would be a constitutionally impermissible alternative As the dissent repeatedly indicates, the treaty power may not encroach on delegations made exclusively to Congress.

[7] The dissent argues that because the power to declare war is exclusively reserved to Congress by Art. 1, § 8, so also must be the power to dispose of United States property, which power is granted to Congress in the same language as the warmaking power. Cf. L. Henkin, supra, at 160 n.++. The sui generis nature of a declaration of war and the unique history indicating the Framers' desire to have both Houses of Congress concur in such a declaration, may place it apart from the other congressional powers enumerated in Art. 1, § 8 and in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. The history, discussed infra, of the constitutional convention and ratifying conventions with respect to the property clause and the treaty clause, on the other hand, clearly demonstrates the Framers' intention to allow disposition of the United States property through self-executing treaty. Moreover, while there are numerous instances in past treaty practice of the latter, we know of no instance in which the United States has been in a state of formally declared war without a congressional declaration thereof

[8] The states' claims to unsettled Western (trans-Allegheny) regions were based on charters granted to them from Great Britain. Landless states argued that all Western lands should inure to the benefit of all states, i.e., should be federal properties. See H. Hockett, "The Constitutional History of the United States 1776–1826," 143–46 (1939); 2 M. Farrand, The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, 461–66 (1937); 3 id. at 226–27.

[9] This issue arose in a debate over the treaty clause that was not unlike the controversy before this court. Governor Randolph of Virginia stated that he could "conceive that neither the life nor property of any citizen, nor the particular right of any state, can be affected by a treaty." He then argued that Art. IV, § 3 must be intended to protect against the dismemberment of the Union. Mr. Grayson replied that—

"[T] his clause was inserted for the purpose of enabling Congress to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting, the territory, or other property, belonging to the United States, and to ascertain clearly that the claims of particular states, respecting territory should not be prejudiced by the alteration of the government, but be on the same footing as before; that it could not be construed to be a limitation on the power of making treaties."

3 Elliot's Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Convention 504–05 (1907).

[10] The account in the text is from 2 Farrand, supra, at 540–49.

[11] Id. at 541.

[12] Id. at 543.

[13] 3 "Elliot's Debates," supra, at 500.

[14] Id. at 660.

[15] See S. Crandall, "Treaties, Their Making and Enforcement" 63 (2d Ed. 1916); 4 "Elliot's Debates" supra, at 115.

[16] James Madison stated that "I do not conceive that power is given to the President and Senate to dismember the empire, or to alienate any great, essential right." But he continued by noting "I do not think the whole legislative authority have this power. The exercise of the power must be consistent with the object of the delegation." 3 Elliot's Debates, supra, at 514. It appears, thus, that Madison was only formulating a well-recognized limitation on all of the constitutional powers, namely, that the exercise of constitutional delegations are restrained by the basic premises upon which the Union and the Constitution were created.

[17] Wisconsin Cent. R.R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U.S. 496, 504 (1890).

[18] The dissent also relies upon Alabama v. Texas, 347 U.S. 272 (1954), which upheld the Submerged Lands Act of 1953, 67 Stat. 29. The reference in that case to Congress' power to dispose of property "without limitation" had no application to whatever limitation on Congress' power may be thought to result from use of the treaty power to accomplish disposal of property. Rather, the salient question in the case was whether Congress could grant to individual states indefeasible title to and ownership of certain resources under submerged marginal ocean lands. Thus, it appears that in referring to Congress' power "without limitation", the Court was holding that Congress' authority under Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 embraces any disposition of property of the United States chosen by Congress. See also Inter-Island Co. v. Hawaii, 305 U.S. 306 (1938) (Under the Art. IV, § 3 powers to regulate, Congress has the authority to permit the Territory of Hawaii to impose taxes on petitioner's interstate business operations); United States v. Celestine, 215 U.S. 278 (1909) (Congress has power to retain federal jurisdiction over crimes committed by an Indian allottee on allotted land of an Indian reservation within the confines of a state); Wisconsin Cent. R.R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U.S. 496 (1890) (U.S. property is not subject to state taxation since enforcement of such a tax might result in states, instead of Congress, controlling the disposition of federal property, contrary to Art IV, § 3, cl. 2); Griffin v. United States, 168 F.2d 457 (8th Cir. 1948) (county resolution declaring federally owned property open for grazing is invalid encroachment upon power delegated to Congress to regulate U.S. property).

Appellants also cite several cases that, while not dealing with federal-state relations, are nonetheless inapplicable here. See United States v. Fitzgerald, 40 U.S. (15 Pet.) 405 (1841) (an individual employee of the federal government is not empowered by his position to dispose of U.S. property without further congressional authorization); United States v. Gratiot, 39 U.S. (14 Pet.) 526 (1840) (congressional authorization to lease publicly owned lead mines to individuals is within constitutional delegation permitting "disposal" of U.S. property); Sierra Club v. Hickel, 533 F.2d 24 (9th Cir. 1970), aff'd sub nom., Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727 (1972) (Congress had the power to delegate regulation of the public lands to Executive officers).

In Sioux Tribe v. United States, 316 U.S. 317 (1942), cited by appellants, the Court held that the President could not by Executive Order dispose of public lands without congressional authorization. However, the unilateral nature of presidential action by Executive Order renders that case inapposite here. Treaties involve not only presidential action but senatorial participation as well.

[19] Jones v. Meehan discussed and rejected as irreconcilable with later Supreme Court opinions the contrary views expressed by Attorney General Taney and Justice Nelson, which are also relied on by the dissent in the case before us. 175 U.S. at 12–14.

[20] Although this unique relationship has often been cited as a basis for distinguishing "Indian cases," we question the applicability of the distinction to this case. This sui generis relationship is traditionally found in the context of individual rights, and it does not seem directly relevant to the scope of the treaty power vis-a-vis other sources of federal power. The Supreme Court long ago noted that "the power to make treaties with the Indian tribes is as we have seen, coextensive with that to make treaties with foreign nations." United States v. 43 Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U.S. 188, 197 (1876).

[21] See, e.g., Florida Treaty with Spain of 1819, 8 Stat. 252 (256); Treaty Between the United States and Great Britain (Webster-Ashburton Treaty, 1842); 12 Bevans 82; Treaty between the United States and Japan (June 17, 1971), 23 U.S.T. 447, citations in note 22 infra.

[22] See, e.g., The Treaty with Mexico of 1933 (Rectification of the Rio Grande), 9 Bevans 976; The Treaty with Mexico of 1963 (Solution of the Chamizal Problem), 15 U.S.T. 21; The Treaty with Mexico of 1970 (changing position of Rio Grande to maintain boundary), 23 U.S.T. 371; Florida Treaty with Spain, supra note 21.

The dissent asserts that the treaties with Mexico cited herein were not self-executing. However, the only portions of these treaties dependent upon legislation were provisions in the latter two treaties requiring the United States to acquire certain property from private individuals prior to ceding it to Mexico. Because such acquisition necessitated appropriation of funds, implementing legislation was required, see pp. 9–10 supra. Similarly, the treaties with Panama also will require implementing legislation for the payment of annuities to Panama and certain other provisions in the treaties. See Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers, supra, at 20 (Department of State Statement of Legislation Required to Implement Proposed New Agreements with Panama).

[23] It is exceedingly difficult to understand why the constitutionality of utilization of the treaty process should depend on whether the nation to whom the land is conveyed has previously "claimed" such land.

[24] The dissent tends to obscure the distinction between the treaty power and presidential power asserted to be inherent in his authority to conduct our foreign relations. There is no doubt that the latter is more restricted than the former. As Professor Henkin notes—

"Whatever, then, [the President] might do by treaty or other international agreement . . . he cannot unilaterally regulate commerce with foreign nations, or make domestic laws punishing piracy or defining offenses against the nations or declare war. Equally, he cannot exercise, even for foreign affairs purposes, the general powers allocated to Congress: he cannot regulate patents or copyrights or the value of money, or establish post offices, or dispose of American territory or property.". . . L. HENKIN, supra at 94–96 (1972) (emphasis added). A similar view is expressed in the 1940 Opinion of the Attorney General indicating that the President could not, by executive agreement, transfer "mosquito" boats to Great Britain during the war. 39 Op. Atty. Gen. 484 (1940). Additionally, the State Department Guidelines, upon which the dissent draws, states that—

"The President may conclude an international agreement on the basis of existing legislation or subject to legislation to be enacted by the Congress.". . . Department of State, 11 Foreign Affairs Manual § 721.2(a)2. Thus these too recognize that the President, when acting alone, has only limited power. However, we are not now faced with determining the permissibility of territorial cessation by executive agreement. Before us is the much broader power established by the treaty clause of Art. II, § 2, cl. 2. Accordingly, these authorities are not applicable here.

No. 78-1166—EDWARDS v. CARTER

MacKinnon, Circuit Judge, dissenting: The United States Constitution in Article IV, § 3, cl. 2 [1] provides that "The Congress shall have power to dispose of . . . property belonging to the United States . . ." (emphasis added). Because of this specific constitutional provision, it is my opinion that the treaty clause [2] does not authorize the President to dispose of the large property interests of the United States in the Panama Canal Agreement without the approval of Congress to the transfer of the property involved. Yet the pending treaty with the Republic of Panama would violate the Constitution and disenfranchise the 435 members of the House of Representatives from voting as members of "the Congress" upon the proposal to "dispose of" eight billion dollars [3] worth of Canal "property belonging to the United States." [4] Since we are supposedly a participatory democracy, where the right and duty of the entire Congress to participate in that decision is clearly stated in the Constitution, and has been recognized by prior Presidents, it is almost impossible to understand the motivation for excluding the House of Representatives from exercising its constitutional authority.

In my opinion, Senator Connally of Texas, when he was Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, correctly interpreted the Constitution when he stated in the Senate debate on the procedure to be followed in authorizing a transfer of United States property to Panama:

The House of Representatives has a right to a voice as to whether any transfer of real estate or other property shall be made either under treaty or otherwise. 88 Cong. Rec. 9267 (December 3, 1942) (emphasis added).

Recognizing that the House of Representatives has a vote on the disposition of the Panama Canal does not operate as a restriction on the "treaty" power. The Per Curiam opinion is in error in treating this as a matter of "power" when it is merely a question of ratification procedure. Treaties may still be entered into by the President upon all subjects that are amendable to international agreement, and to become effective the "treaty provisions" must be ratified by two-thirds of the Senate; but if any treaty attempts to "dispose of . . . territory or property belonging to the United States . . ." and it is ratified by the Senate, Art. IV of the Constitution still requires the concurrence of the House of Representatives to "carry out the obligations by the enactment of legislation." Id., Senator Connally, 88 Cong. Rec. 9270 (December 3, 1942) (emphasis added). In the transfer to Panama that was the subject of Senator Connally's remarks, the Senate by its vote acquiesced in that procedure and the House joined the Senate in voting to authorize the transfer of the property to Panama before the agreement was executed.

The net result is that unless it is previously approved by the "Congress," i.e., the Senate and the House of Representatives,[5] the Constitution prohibits the effectuation of a self-executing agreement transferring the property in the Canal Zone belonging to the United States. The Per Curiam opinion reaches a different conclusion, but to my mind does not satisfactorily explain why this enormous disposition of property to the Republic of Panama should not recognize the proper role of Congress in such transfer as was followed in all prior transfers where the value of the property was infinitesimal compared to what is involved here. From its conclusion I thus respectfully dissent.

I. IS A POLITICAL QUESTION INVOLVED?

At the outset, appellee defends on the theory that this case involves a political question which this court is without authority to decide. In other words, he contends that the treaty clause of the Constitution gives him the unchallengeable option to "dispose of . . . property belonging to the United States" without the approval of "the Congress" as set forth in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2.[6] What this asserted defense amounts to is the claim that since he has already decided to proceed, and has taken certain steps that may violate the Constitution, the courts have no power to declare his conduct to be unlawful.

A question is not deemed political, however, when its resolution is committed to the courts by the Constitution. Elrod v. Burns, 427 US. 247, 351 (1976) (Brennan, J.); Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217 (1972), The issue here is plainly one that calls for a determination of which procedure is constitutionally required to approve an international agreement that will "dispose . . . of property belonging to the United States" of the value of eight billion dollars (Sen. Exec. Rpt., Exec. N, 95th Cong., 1st Sess., at 99 (Feb. 3, 1978) (hereafter "Committee Report")).

The construction of treaties is the peculiar province of the judiciary. Jones v. Meehan, 175 U.S. 1, 32 (1899). This case presents a question for which there is no "textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department." Instead, the question is purely judicial; it is committed by Art. III, § 2 to the courts established pursuant to Art. III, § 1 in which the "judicial power [is] vested." It is the type of controversy that the United States courts decide every day, and there is no lack of judicial and manageable standards for resolving it. Nor is the issue impossible for the courts to decide without a prior policy determination clearly involving non-judicial discretion. Since the issue is solely one of constitutional interpretation and both parties to the controversy are firmly committed to adhering to the dictates of the Constitution, and it is a relatively simple matter to do so, a proper declaration of the correct constitutional procedure would not embarrass or indicate any lack of respect due the two coordinate branches that are represented by the parties hereto. It should also be added that the issue is so clearly answered by the Constitution that the case does not involve any unusual need to adhere to any prior political decision. Therefore our authority to decide the issue is clear. Baker v. Carr, supra, 369 U.S. at 217.

II. THE EXCLUSIVE POWER TO DISPOSE OF PROPERTY BELONGING TO THE UNITED STATES

No contention is advanced by this opinion that "Article II treaty power stops where the power of Congress begins," (Appellee Br., p.

Footnotes at end of article.

12) but it is contended that in any international agreement the ratification or authorization procedure must conform to specific constitutional provisions. Therefore, the specific provisions of the Constitution outside of Art. I, § 8, which designate "Congress" as the body to levy taxes (Art. I, § 7), appropriate money (Art. I, § 9), and dispose of Government property (Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2) require that international agreements that transgress into these areas can only become effective by enactments of Congress. The President cannot violate any of these provisions under the claimed need or desire for a self-executing treaty.

The issue we are confronted with at the outset concerns the proposal in the Panama Canal treaty (see Appendix) what would immediately replace the interest in perpetuity of the United States in the Panama Canal to act "as though it were sovereign" with a mere 21-year operational right, would immediately transfer the entire Panama Railroad and certain other valuable structures (Appendix, Art. XIII), and would eventually provide for the automatic transfer on December 31, 1999, of whatever interest the United States still retained in the entire Panama Canal. Appellee claims all this can be accomplished by the pending Carter-Torrijos treaty with nothing more than Senate approval; and that the participation of the House in those parts of the agreement that dispose of property belonging to the United States is not required and will not be sought. Such construction conflicts directly with the above-quoted provision of the Constitution and with past practices. A number of Supreme Court decisions also contain statements which recognize the exclusive power of Congress under Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 to dispose of United States territory and property.

A. the Supreme Court decisions

The decision in Alamaba v. Texas, 347 U.S. 272 (194), involved a motion by the States of Alabama and Rhode Island for leave to file complaints challenging the constitutionality of the Submerged Lands Act of 1953. In a Per Curiam opinion, the motions were denied on the ground that Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 prohibited such suits by the states:

"The power of Congress to dispose of any kind of property belonging to the United States 'is vested in Congress without limitation.'" [Quoting United States v. Gratiot, 39 U.S. (14 Pet.) 526, 537.] 347 U.S. at 273 (emphasis added).[7]

Much earlier in Gibson v Chouteau, 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 92, 99, 20 L. Ed. 534 (1872), the Court had stated:

"With respect to the public domain, the Constitution vests in Congress the power of disposition and of making all needful rules and regulations. That power is subject to no limitations."[8] (Emphasis added.)

In Wisconsin Central Railroad Company v. Price County, 133 U.S. 496, 504 (1890), the Court remarked: "[Art. IV] implies an exclusion of all other authority over the property which interfere with this right of obstruct its exercise." This same conclusion was reached in United States v. Celestine, 215 U.S. 278, 284 (1909):

"By the second clause of § 3, art. 4 of the Constitution, to Congress;, and to it alone, is given 'power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.'" [Emphasis added.]

The Supreme Court in Sioux Tribe v. United States, 316 U.S. 317 (1942) also acknowledged the power of the Executive to withdraw lands from the territory subject to their being sold, but recognized that the power to dispose of the land rested in the Congress:

"Section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution confers upon Congress exclusively 'the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.'" 316 U.S. at 324 (emphasis added). However, Congress had previously revealed its awareness of this practice and acquiesced in it (316 U.S. at 324–25).

Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U.S. 258 (1890) remarks:

"The treaty power, as expressed in the Constitution, is in terms unlimited except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the government or its departments, and those arising from the nature of the government itself and of that of the States. It would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the government or in that of one of the States, or a cession of any portion of the territory of the latter, without its consent. Fort Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U.S. 525, 541. But with these exceptions, it is not perceived that there is any limit to the questions which can be adjusted touching any matter which is properly the subject of negotiation with a foreign country." 133 U.S. at 267 (emphasis added).

In my view, one of the "restraints" to which Geofroy refers is the Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 power vested in Congress to dispose of property. By treaty, the President could not sell or give away Alaska to another country. Similarly, in my view, the President by treaty cannot dispose of our property in the Panama Canal without authorization from Congress.

Another decision which discusses the treaty power is Asakura v. Seattle, 265 U.S. 332 (1924):

"The treaty-making power of the United States is not limited by any express provision of the Constitution, and, though it does not extend 'so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids,' it does extend to all proper subjects of negotiation between our government and other nations." Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U.S. 258, 266, 267; In re Ross, 140 U.S. 453, 463; Missouri v. Holland, 252 U.S. 416. 265 U.S. at 341 (emphasis added)

Since the treaty power does not extend so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, the power does not extend so far as to permit the disposal of our territorial and property interest in the Panama Canal without the approval of Congress as required by Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2.

If the scope of the treaty power were so broad as to permit such disposal, then the statements of the Supreme Court would be incongruent: if the treaty power were that broad, there would be a need to explain why Act. IV was not an express power limiting Art. II. Since there are no references to this possible conflict, it seems reasonable to state that the Court never conceived that the treaty power might be so broad as to permit disposition of property covered by Art. 1V. These cases are wholly consistent with the Supreme Court's rulings concerning the treaty power.

Thus, the proper construction of the constitutional provisions is straight-forward and sensible. The treaty power is not limited by any express power in the Constitution because it does not extend so far as to permit the disposition of property without an Act of Congress. The power of Congress to dispose of property has no limit—in the language of Celestine, its resides in Congress alone; and thus, the treaty power is not a restriction on Congress, because it cannot operate to dispose of United States property.[9]

B. Comparison of the powers of Congress to levy taxes, to make appropriations and to dispose of property

That Congress has exclusive power to dispose of United States property is also demonstrated by a comparative analysis of those delegated powers in which the right of Congress is admitted to be exclusive.

In overview, it is important to realize that the power to make treaties does not confer absolute authority upon the President and the Senate. It is a very broad power, but it is not unlimited. As a noted authority wrote before the form of the instant Panama Treaty became a national issue:

"Broad assertions and extravagant adjectives, some of them supported by the Supreme Court, might leave the impression that the President can exercise virtually all the national political power in foreign affairs, at least concurrently with Congress. In fact, large areas have never been claimed by him [except now in the Panama Canal Treaty]. In principle, it would be difficult for a President to dispute that by vesting in Congress 'all legislative Powers herein granted' and granting it a comprehensive array of specific powers, the Constitution barred the President from exercising these powers even as regards foreign affairs. Whatever, then, he might do by treaty or other international agreement . . . he cannot unilaterally regulate commerce with foreign nations, or make domestic laws punishing piracy or defining offenses against the law of nations, or declare war. Equally, he cannot exercise, even for foreign affairs purposes, the general powers allocated to Congress: he cannot regulate patents or copyrights or the value of money, or establish post offices, or dispose of American territory or property; he cannot enact necessary and proper laws to carry into execution the powers of Congress or even his own powers, for example, criminal laws to enforce an arms embargo. He cannot spend money on his own authority for foreign aid, or draw funds from the Treasury, without Congressional appropriation, to build an embassy. Presumably, the unexpressed lawmaking powers of Congress deriving from national sovereignty are also generally denied the President: he cannot enact general immigration laws by executive order." L. Henkin, Foreign Affairs and the Constitution 94–96 (1972) (emphasis and matter in brackets added). The foregoing quotation does not support the assertion that Henkin's treaties agrees with the conclusion of the Per Curiam opinion. Cf. Per Curiam op., at 7 n.4.[10]

The Per Curiam opinion grasps at the word "unilaterally" in one sentence and asserts therefrom that Henkin in the next sentence is also speaking solely of the President's power to act "unilaterally." Such construction cannot be supported. Henkin, in the first sentence, is referring to unilateral action by the President that transcended what "he might do by treaty or other international agreement." However, in the very next sentence, which is the critical sentence, Henkin shifts to deal with the President's entire "foreign affairs purposes" and these unquestionably refer to his powers to enter into treaties, international agreements, as well as to act unilaterally and by "executive order" as referred to in the last sentence of the quoted paragraph. In this broad context Henkin states that the President "cannot . . . dispose of American territory or property . . ." It is absurd to suggest that this statement by Henkin was only intended to state that the President was prohibited from disposing of American territory or property by executive agreement, and not by treaty, since no person has ever suggested that American territory could be disposed of by a mere executive agreement with another nation, much less by unilateral action or executive order without congressional approval. Henkin's statement with respect to the disposition of American territory and property thus included the President's power to make treaties and international agreements as well as his power to act unilaterally and by executive order. These are all encompassed within "foreign affairs purposes." It must thus be admitted that the present treaty is an attempt by the President to "dispose of American territory [and] property . . . for foreign affairs purposes"—and that Henkin states this cannot be done by treaty. Thus, Henkin is not "in agreement with [the Per Curiam] opinion." Per Curiam, at 7 n.4. Not that Henkin is authoritative or binding—he is a highly respected professor.

Footnotes at end of article.

The powers of government insofar as they may be exercised by treaty, are thus subject to the specific limitations imposed by the Constitution. First, Art. I, § 7, cl. 1, of the United States Constitution provides:

"All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills."

Second, Art. I, § 9, cl. 7 provides:

"No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time."

Henkin has stated—and the appellee recognizes—that in a treaty the Executive cannot obviate these provisions by levying taxes or appropriating money from the United States Treasury.

In 1844 the President laid before the Senate a treaty he had negotiated which for at least three years would place the power to exceed certain maximum import duties beyond the power of Congress. The Senate, however, took the view that the constitutional method of imposing regulatory duties was by Act of Congress rather than by treaty. 2 Hinds' Precedents 998–1001. In a subsequent instance when the right of the Senate to act on a treaty was questioned, the Senate observed that the right of Congress to act by legislation was admitted and therefore the Report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations recommended that the treaty be amended by inserting: "This treaty shall not take effect until the same shall have been approved by the Congress." 2 Hinds' Precedents 1001–1002. The property transfer portion of the present treaty could be handled accordingly as all governments are on notice of the constitutional requirements of Art. IV.

Appellee also recognizes, as Henkin states, supra, that a Declaration of War is subject to the same limitation: it is beyond the President's unilateral power to declare war by edict. Likewise all seem agreed that "the United States cannot declare war" by treaty. Henkin, id., 159–60. That conclusion, however, devolves from the provision of Art. I, § 8, which states "Congress shall have Power . . . To declare War." This is nothing in the Constitution which specifically forbids a President from declaring war to comply with a prior treaty. The Committee Report relies upon "the unique legislative history of the declaration of war clause" which supposedly "clearly indicates the power was intended to reside jointly in the House and Senate." Committee Report, at 74. This admits that the House of Representatives has a "share of the warmaking power," id. To read the clause as a concurrent power would unconstitutionally confer upon the President the power to declare war. However, since the President is commander-in-chief and represents the nation in our foreign relations, there is even less reason to read in the necessity for House participation in a declaration of war from the language of section 8, solely from the asserted history of the clause, than there is to give effect to the separate constitutional limitation specifically requiring an Act of Congress to dispose of United States property as set forth in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. This, unlike the war power, is one of the "general powers allocated to Congress" that Henkin recognizes the President cannot exercise in a treaty. Henkin, supra.

This then brings us to the placement of the power to dispose of Government property. This power is not specifically included in the general enumeration of powers set forth in Art. I, § 8, but it is undoubtedly one of the "general powers" "necessary and proper" for carrying into execution the previously enumerated powers and practically all other powers. In a separate provision outside Art. I, § 8 (like the taxing and appropriation provisions), Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 imposes the requirement that "The Congress shall have Power to dispose of . . . Territory or Property belonging to the United States." (Emphasis added.)

In imposing a specific procedure outside Art. I, § 8 for "Congress" to dispose of Government property, the Framers followed the same pattern as they did with respect to the other general provisions of the Constitution—levying taxes and making appropriations. Thus, Art. IV in requiring action by both Houses of Congress is cast in exactly the same mold as the tax and appropriation powers. Therefore, under the format of the Constitution, disposing of the United States' property interests in the Panama Canal by a donation is entitled to action by the Congress to the same extent as would be an appropriation for the same amount which admittedly could only be accomplished by enactment of the "Congress." It must thus be recognized that what is clearly required in the Carter-Torrijos Panama Canal Treaty is exactly what was done in the 1955 treaty involving the Panama Canal Zone: an Act of Congress was required to approve those provisions of the treaty which called for the disposition of United States property.[11]

To say that the Constitution is loose in this particular, and that it permits the President to have a free choice between bypassing the House, as is proposed here, and submitting the matter to the House and the Senate as was done in 1955, is to permit an important constitutional provision to be bypassed in the name of expediency—the exact motivation for which is not readily apparent. If there is any policy inherent in this decision, it should be to determine that at least a majority of the nation's representatives who have been elected on a one man-one vote apportionment support the property disposition portions of the treaty. Even a casual survey of the treaty (see Appendix) indicates that a great deal of implementing legislation is required and contemplated, and it has been recognized since 1796, see p. 20, infra, that the President and the Senate cannot foreclose the House of Representatives from exercising its independent constitutional authority in all respects.

There are two other obvious matters which appear to require implementing legislation that a treaty cannot assure:

(1) Art. III, § 5 requires the Panama Canal Commission (constituted by and in conformity with the laws of the United States, see Art. III, § 3) to pay the Republic of Panama for municipal services "ten million United States dollars . . . per annum." The treaty does not provide that this sum will be paid annually from Canal tolls, which in any event are covered into the United States Treasury, and an appropriation may be required. At page 9 the Per Curiam opinion states:

"Thus, agreements with other nations requiring the expenditure of funds by the United States cannot be made by self-executing treaty. . . ."

I agree. From the foregoing it also appears that this "self-executing treaty [does] require the expenditure of funds by the United States . . ." Hence, as the Per Curiam opinion states, the treaty "cannot be made . . ." and be valid in its present form.

The treaty is self-executing in that it purports to create an annual liability of the United States for the sum of $10 million. It appears, from pp. 24–25 n. 22 of the Per Curiam opinion, that the majority agree with this interpretation.

(2) Art. X, § 9 of the treaty also authorizes the affiliation of employees of the Panama Canal Commission with local and international unions, that they may negotiate collective bargaining contracts with the Panama Canal Commission, and that labor relations with employees "shall" be conducted in accordance with forms of collective bargaining established by the United States after consultation with employee unions. This apparently makes a collective bargaining contract mandatory and in operation might require all Panama Canal workers to belong to a particular labor organization. It seems to be pure legislation with respect to the employee relations of the United States' employees and is very far-reaching. The briefs do not discuss the issue and no authority has been cited in support of this obvious legislative action.

It would thus appear to be extremely doubtful that the President is authorized to commit the United States to all of this procedure without approval of Congress.

C. The restatement of foreign relations law and the constitutional requirements for the disposition of United States property

The Restatement, Second, Foreign Relations Law of the United States, is hardly authority for the proposition that the power to dispose of property concurrently resides in Art. II and in Art. IV of the Constitution. The majority cities, as the section most strongly supporting the concurrent power notion, a sentence in comment (f) to section 141:

"The mere fact, however, that a Congressional power exists does not means that the power is exclusive so as to preclude the making of a self-executing treaty within the area of that power." Per Curiam at 6.

In applying this broad single sentence to the specific constitutional power here vested in Congress, the majority ignores the general thrust of the Restatement.

The section of the Restatement which explains the relative boundaries of the treaty power and the powers delegated to Congress is section 118(1). That section states that the power of Congress to enact legislation does not limit the treaty power; but in so providing, that section does not stand for the proposition that property belonging to the United States may be disposed of by treaty without approval by the Congress. Section 118(1) states:

"An international agreement made by the United States as a treaty may deal with any matter as to which the United States has the constitutional power to make an international agreement under the rules stated in § 117." (Emphasis added).

Comment (b) to that section states:

"b. Treaty power and power of Congress compared. The treaty power of the United States is not limited by the extent of the powers delegated to the Congress by the Constitution. This follows from the fact that the treaty power is itself an independent power granted to the President and the Senate under the Constitution."

Nothing in section 118, however, supports a power to dispose of government "property" by treaty without the consent of the Congress. The Constitution vests that power in Congress by a separate provision. In so doing the grant to Congress of the power does not operate to impose a limitation on the power of the President to enter into international agreements but instead merely provides the necessary implementing procedure that must be complied with under the Constitution before certain international agreements become fully effective to accomplish their stated purpose.

This opinion does not contend for its thesis, as the Per Curiam opinion attributes (rightly or wrongly) to Professor Raoul Berger, "that the President cannot exercise under the treaty power any power granted to Congress . . ." Per Curiam, p. 6 n. 4. Admittedly such construction would "virtually wipe out the treaty power," as Henkin states. Furthermore, however, this opinion does not contend, as the Per Curiam opinion might conclude, that the President under his treaty power can exercise practically all the powers granted to Congress. That would, to paraphrase Henkin, "virtually wipe out the legislative power" in many recognized fields.

Footnotes at end of article.

To be more specific, and to deal with the facts of this case, rather than attempting to write broad dicta, this opinion does contend that the treaty power cannot wipe out powers granted to Congress with the specificity indicated in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. Beyond that this opinion draws no line, but to my mind it seems clear, for the following and other reasons, that the placement of this separate paragraph in an article and section removed from Art. I, § 8, carries with it somewhat the same purpose to indicate exclusive congressional power that one derives from the location outside Art. I, § 8 of those provisions which impart exclusivity to Congress in the exercise of the taxing and appropriation powers.

The foregoing interpretation is consistent with the language of section 117 of the Restatement, which is referred to in section 118. Section 117 provides:

"(1) the United States has the power under the Constitution to make an international agreement if,"

(b) the agreement does not contravene any of the limitations of the Constitution applicable to all powers of the United States.

Comment (d) states:

"No power granted to the United States by the Constitution is unlimited. The power of the United States to make international agreements is not an exception to this rule. The extent of each power grounded in the Constitution must be determined not only by the constitutional language granting it but also by the restrictions placed upon it by other constitutional limitations."

The comment seems to be addressed in part to such constitutional restrictions as were added by the Bill of Rights. For example, the President and the Senate could not cause a treaty to go into effect which abridges the freedom of speech of the American citizenry. The power of Congress to dispose of "property" fits precisely within this same classification but may have a stronger base in the intendment of the Framers since it was part of the original Constitution. Other constitutional limitations—here Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2—thus place restrictions upon the manner of implementing the treaty power: property cannot be disposed of without the approval of Congress. Section 117 is consistent with this.

Section 141(3) which is relied upon by the majority, does not disparage this analysis in any respect. That section provides:

A treaty cannot be self-executing under the rule stated in Subsection (1) and have the effect stated there to the extent that it involves governmental action that under the Constitution can be taken only by the Congress." (Emphasis added.)

By way of illustration, comment (f) states:

"f. Constitutional limitation on self-executing treaties. Even though a treaty is cast in the form of a self-executing treaty, it does not become effective as domestic law in the United States upon becoming binding between the United States and the other party or parties, if it deals with a subject matter that by the Constitution is reserved exclusively to Congress. For example, only the Congress can appropriate money from the treasury of the United States." (Emphasis in original)

Illustration: 8. The United States enters into a treaty with state A under which A agrees to cede a portion of its territory to the United States in return for payment of $7,200,000. Advice and consent to the ratification of the treaty is given by the Senate and it is ratified by the President. The ratification does not have the effect of appropriating the $7,200,000. Further action to this effect must be taken by both Houses of Congress. (Emphasis added).

The mere fact, however, that a Congressional power exists does not mean that the power is exclusive so as to preclude the making of a self-executing treaty within the area of that power. Thus the fact that Congress has power to regulate commerce with foreign nations does not mean that the making of a self-executing treaty dealing with foreign commerce is precluded; in fact, many provisions in treaties dealing with foreign trade and commerce are self-executing.

The comment explicitly states that a treaty cannot be self-executing if it deals with a subject that is reserved exclusively to Congress. Art. IV, § 3 provides that Congress "shall," thus exclusively, dispose of property of the United States, just the same as "only the Congress can appropriate money from the treasury of the United States." The two powers, i.e., dispose of property and appropriate money, are practically identical, and there is every reason to suspect that the Framers intended that both powers should be exclusively exercised by Congress. A disposition of Government property is to all intents and purposes an appropriation thereof. The Rules of the House of Representatives originally adopted in 1794 and amended in 1874 and 1893 have equated the appropriation of property with other appropriations:

"All . . . bills making appropriations of money, or property or requiring such appropriation to be made . . . shall first be considered in a Committee of the Whole. . . ." Rules of the House of Representatives, 95th Cong. (1977), Rule XXIII, ¶ 3, § 865 (emphasis added).

In addition, id., Rule XIII, ¶ 1, § 742, speaks of "First. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred . . . bills of a public character, directly or indirectly appropriating money or property." (Emphasis added.) See 4 HINDS' PRECEDENTS § 840, at 1050 (1907).

It is unreasonable to suggest that the Constitution is more concerned with the transfer of eight billion dollars of United States funds from the Treasury than with the transfer of eight billion dollars of United States property. And the potential earning power of the Canal makes it much more valuable even than eight billion in dollars.[12]

It was observed in the discussion of the Supreme Court precedents that it is undisputed that the treaty power is not limited by the extent of the powers delegated to the Congress. Yet this does not mean that the general treaty power, so far as it exists, can overrun specific constitutional provisions. To state the proposition otherwise, the treaty power is not so broad in the first instance that it permits the disposition of property of the United States to be made other than in the manner specifically provided for by Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. The treaty power clearly allows the President with the approval of the Senate to establish rights and obligations between this Nation and other countries. However, the actual power to dispose of property exclusively rests in the Congress—which includes the House of Representatives, i.e., a treaty cannot without the approval of both houses transfer property belonging to the United States. Justice Jackson, when as Attorney General in 1940 he advised President Roosevelt on the fifty destroyers transaction with Great Britain, held that the exchange for British bases was permissible because Congress has previously given the President such statutory authority to transfer unneeded naval vessels. He further advised, however, that since Congress had not by law given greater authority, the President was precluded from transferring new mosquito boats that were under construction. 39 OP. ATTY GEN. 484 (1940), 86 CONG. REC. 11355. This recognized that, even in those critical times, only Congress could authorize the disposition of United States property.

It is unquestioned that the negotiation of treaties rests solely in the President. As Justice Sutherland declared for the Court in 1936:

"He alone negotiates. Into the field of negotiation, the Senate cannot intrude; and the Congress itself is powerless to invade it. . . ." United States v. Curtiss-Wright Corp., 299 U.S. 304, 319 (1936).

From the earliest times of our country, however, as reflected in a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives in 1796, it has been established:

"That when a treaty stipulates regulations on any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress, it must depend for its execution as to such stipulations on a law or laws to be passed by Congress, and it is the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives in all such cases to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such treaty into effect, and to determine and act thereon as in their judgment may be most conducive to the public good." 5 Annals of Congress 782 (1796) (emphasis added).

The House of Representatives in 1871 adopted a resolution to similar effect. Cong. Globe, 42d Cong., 1st Sess. 835 (1871). Senate Document 92–83. 92d Cong., 2d Sess., 488, notes that the early precedents which prohibited a treaty from circumventing the constitutional appropriation power of Congress (Art. I, § 9), have "apparently been uniformly adhered to" since 1796.[13]

The last paragraph of comment (f), from which the majority quotes, only illustrates the necessity for analyzing each case separately. This is precisely what the majority has not done. The mere fact that a congressional power exists is not, by itself, enough to render a treaty touching that power ineffective without legislative action. However, there are some congressional powers—appropriation, revenue, and disposal of property—which are so basic to the legislative function and are so intrinsically legislative that the treaty power cannot operate without the concurrent exercise of the congressional power. The power to dispose of property is a power with specific constitutional limitations, substantially identical to the appropriation power, and by the Constitution, like the appropriation power and the power to levy taxes, it rests exclusively with the Congress. The transfer of property to the Republic of Panama requires an Act of "Congress" pursuant to Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. Section 141(3) is consistent with this approach.

In short, it does not appear that anything in the Restatement supports the proposition that the Panama Canal, the Panama Railroad, and the other United States property which the Carter-Torrijos Treaty proposes to convey to Panama, can be transferred except by the "Congress." The treaty power is thus not unlimited and any treaty which disposes of substantial government property must, in that respect, be approved by both houses of Congress before coming into full force.

D. Exclusive language and the placement of article IV

Appellees advance two other arguments for the proposition that the power to dispose of United States property rests concurrently in the Executive and the Congress. First, it is suggested that since the property disposal clause does not use the same "exclusive language" as the appropriations and revenue clauses, the power to dispose of property must be concurrent. See Appellee Br. at 9. Second, it is argued that the property disposal clause is found in

Footnotes at end of article.

Art. IV which deals with state-federal and state-state relationships. This, it is argued, strongly suggests that the provision was intended to distribute power between the state and federal governments rather than among the three branches of the federal government. Id. This argument, however, is an incomplete answer. This is so because once a power is distributed between the state and federal government it must still be distributed between the three departments that constitute the three federal departments.

The first argument, that because the property disposal clause does not use, what is termed, "exclusive" language, the power rests concurrently in the Executive and the Congress, misapprehends the nature of Art. IV.

Of course the terminology by which a power is delegated to Congress is significant, and may be completely controlling in determining the scope of the President's treaty power; but each situation must be considered separately on its peculiar facts.

If any reasonably general statement were to be formulated for drawing the line at a point where the President's treaty power terminates, it would be at that point where the Constitution indicates that a legislative power was to be exercised. That applies to the taxing and appropriation power. And it is submitted that the Constitution is addressing itself to legislative enactment in Art. IV when it confers the power on Congress "to dispose and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States. . . ." Certainly to "make all needful Rules and Regulations" refers to legislation. This clause is the source of the power that Congress exercised for more than a century in legislating for our territories, before they became states.[14] Providing for the disposition of property of the United States must also be recognized as a close counterpart to enactments providing for the appropriation of money to the United States. The paragraph is thus referring throughout to action by Congress.

Thus, the fact that the property disposal clause does not refer specifically to the "House," or to a "law" as in the taxing and appropriation clauses, is not controlling, because it otherwise indicates that the Congress shall have power to legislate for the territories and property belonging to the United States. It further lays down a very broad restriction on all acts of the legislature, executive and judiciary, i.e., that nothing said in the Constitution should be construed to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any State.[15]

It is a gross understatement to construe the constitutional powers conferred by Art. I, § 8 and Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 merely as though "these provisions state simply that Congress shall have power to take action on the matters enumerated." Per Curiam, p. 10 (emphasis added). The first error in this statement is to include the separate and special provision contained in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 with the general enumeration of powers set forth in Art. I, § 8. The difference in composition and location of these two sections indicated a difference in purpose and intent. The Constitution in Art. IV does "[state] the particular matter of concern, i.e.: the "power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States. . . ." It has long been recognized that expressly conferring this power on Congress implies an exclusion of all other authority over the property which could interfere with this right or obstruct its exercise." Wisconsin Cent. R.R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U.S. 496, 504 (1890); Van Brocklin v. State of Tennessee, 117 U.S. 151, 167–168 (1886). The specific grant of power to Congress implicitly operates to deny that the power vests elsewhere, United States v. MacCollom, 426 U.S. 317, 321 (1976); Passenger Corp v. Passengers Assn., 414 U.S. 453, 458 (1974); T.I.M.E. v. United States, 359 U.S. 464, 471 (1959); Botany Worsted Mills v. United States, 278 U.S. 282, 289, (1929).

* * * * *

The location of Art. IV, § 3, as indicated by prior discussion, was principally a function of the Framers' concern with the claims of particular states to territory granted in their original charters. This was inextricably related to state-state and federal-state relations but it also directly involved the separation of powers between the Congress and the President; and insofar as United States versus States' "claims" were concerned, the Judiciary were also very much involved. This great concern with disposition of territory and the claims thereto caused Section 3 to be placed in Article IV, but the language of the clause—which also addresses property, which did not figure as importantly in the Framers' expressed concern relative to the grants under Royal charters, should not be narrowed as a result of its mere placement. The language of the clause is unequivocal: "The Congress shall have Power to dispose of . . . Property belonging to the United States."

This indicates that exclusivity of the powers in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, is vested in the Congress because if the President and the Senate, in the absence of any specific grant to that effect, were construed to possess the power, the Congress would thereby be excluded in many instances from exercising the power and the mandatory (shall) grant of the power to the Congress would be negated. It is recognized that some of the powers vested in Congress by Art. I, § B have been the subjects of treaties and that the mandatory character of that section may thereby have been obviated to some extent. That section, however, contains a great many designated powers covering a wide spectrum of legislative activity and it is recognizable that treaties might properly involve the same subjects in a non-legislative manner.

Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, however, is very specific and limited. It refers only to territory and property (the claims also refer to territory and property). Thus, the specific nature and limited scope of the paragraph are reasons why the ratification procedure thus required should not be taken from Congress and obviated by self-executing treaties.

Such construction is also supported by the historical fact that the recognized intent of the Convention in this paragraph was to restrict the power to dispose of territory or property and this was the only place such intent is addressed. Had the convention intended to authorize the disposition of property as an incident of the treaty power, it would have been very easy to do so by merely before the semi-colon in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2: "(which may also be disposed of by treaty)." The fact that the disposition of territory clause was followed by a separate restriction of general import to the entire Constitution which critically implicated state-state and Federal-state relations—while also implicating the distribution of powers among the three branches—should not cause the separate grant of broad power to dispose of territory and property to be construed narrowly.

The contention that the placement of the power with respect to property and territory in Art. IV is an indication of a limiting effect overlooks some other significant features of the content of the paragraph and its location. Art. IV is the first Article after the three first Articles which provided for the distribution of the powers of government between the Congress, the President, and the Judiciary. Art. IV is also the last Article in the Constitution that can be said to deal with the allocation of governmental powers: the remaining Articles provide for the manner of amendment (Art. V); recognize prior debts, provide for the supremacy of federal law and the oath of office (Art. VI); and provide for the manner of ratifying the Constitution (Art. VII). The Articles after IV are thus largely procedural and declaratory, and the Articles before IV are each confined to a separate department of government.

Thus, Art. IV was the appropriate place, after those sections in Art. IV which place certain limitations on the states, and before the broad guarantee by the whole "United States" of a Republican form of Government, for the Convention to make provision with respect to "Territory [and] other Property belonging to the United States" and further to add the very broad assurance applicable to all departments, the United States, and the States that "nothing in this Constitution" shall prejudice any claims of the United States or the states. This is so because the Convention intended to restrict all three departments in some respect and it would be contrary to the arrangement of the Articles to place such restriction in any of the first three Articles that were each devoted to a single department. Article IV, § 3 was the obvious place to insert its present contents and by such placement its obvious meaning was not restricted.

Art. IV covers four areas: (1) the disposition and regulation of United States territory; (2) the disposition and regulation of United States property; (3) claims of the United States; and (4) claims of any particular state. Actually these are all closely related. With respect to these areas of concern, the Convention provided that Congress should exercise the power to dispose and regulate territory and property, and then restricted the power so conferred by providing, in effect, that none of the powers conferred on the Congress, the President, or the Courts ("nothing in this Constitution") shall be construed to prejudice "any claims of the United States or any particular State."

The claims so referred to were claims to "territory" in the West under Royal Charters which during the Convention were among the greatest concerns of some of the states. It is thus apparent that the most propitious place to restrict the power of the Congress, the President, and the Courts from dealing with this matter, was after the first three Articles and following the provision concerning Congress' power to dispose and regulate territory and property. It would not have been appropriate to place the restrictive language of Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, in any of the first three Articles, as that would have suggested that the limiting language of the clause had some special relation to one particular branch of the federal government rather than to all three branches.

Placing the provision after those Articles, and after the territory and property provision, gives the limitation greater force and clarity.[16] Therefore, the location of the territory and property clause in Art. IV does not in any way limit the effect of its plain language to confer those powers on Congress as it prescribes. Furthermore, coupling the regulatory and disposition powers over "Territory [and] other Property belonging to the United States," because the regulatory power is so completely legislative, is indicative of an intent to refer to the disposition power also in its legislative context.

III. ESTABLISHED STATE DEPARTMENT PROCEDURES FOR INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS

In bypassing the House of Representatives, the pending agreement does not conform to established procedures of the Department of State. These have been codified, set forth, and designated as the "Circular 175 Procedure." Department of State, 11 Foreign Affairs Manual § 700 et seq. (Oct. 25, 1974).

In its Circular 175 Procedure, the Department of State recognizes four types of International Agreements: Treaties which may be ratified by the Senate where to do so would not "contravene the United States Constitution . . ." (Id., § 721.2(a), emphasis added). The Procedure also recognizes three types of agreements other than treaties:

Footnotes at end of article.

(1) Agreements Pursuant to Treaty.—

The President may conclude an international agreement pursuant to a treaty brought into force with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose provisions constitute authorization for the agreement by the Executive without subsequent action by the Congress;

(2) Agreements Pursuant to Legislation.—

The President may conclude an international agreement on the basis of existing legislation or subject to legislation be be enacted by the Congress; and

(3) Agreements Pursuant to the Constitutional Authority of the President—

The President may conclude an international agreement on any subject within his constitutional authority so long as the agreement is not inconsistent with legislation enacted by the Congress in the exercise of its constitutional authority. Department of State, 11 Foreign Affairs Manual § 721.2(a) (Oct 25, 1974) (emphasis added).

The Circular 175 Procedure also provides in the "Considerations for Selecting Among Constitutionally Authorized Procedures" for international agreements that consideration shall be given to:

c. Whether the agreement can be given effect without the enactment of subsequent legislation by the Congress;

d. Past U.S. practice as to similar agreements. (Id., § 721.3).

Following these guidelines established by the Department of State, it is obvious that those portions of the treaty providing for the transfer of property to Panama are in effect outside the treaty power. This follows because the United States Constitution requires the additional approval of the House of Representatives, or the reference to the necessity for the enactment of subsequent legislation by Congress, because Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 provides that "The Congress shall have Power to dispose of . . . Property belonging to the United States . . ." (emphasis added). No party to this case questions that the treaty in its present form seeks to dispose of property belonging to the United States without approval by Congress.[17] This is true both as to the right to act as sovereign in the territory and as to our actual ownership of soil and fixtures which constitute property. The instant Panama Canal Treaty, insofar as it purports to dispose of the Canal territory and property, thus includes provisions of the second type, section 721.2(a)2, supra, which the State Department procedure correctly interprets the Constitution to provide that:

"The President may conclude . . . subject to legislation to be enacted by the Congress. . . ."

Thus, the property disposition portion of the treaty under the Constitution constitutes a severable international agreement that cannot constitutionally come into force unless the entire "Congress" approves that transfer.

Obviously Congress may not be required to approve other parts of the treaty. It should also be recognized that attempting to bypass the House of Representatives with the scheme which is framed as a "self-executing treaty" ignores that part of the Department of State Procedure which states that "[p]ast U.S. practice as to similar agreements" shall be followed. Id., § 721.3d. And, lest the Per Curiam opinion insist that its attempt to distinguish "executive agreements" was successful and authorizes the treaty procedure presently being followed, the "past practices" in Panama were in complete accordance with the views expressed in this opinion. See Part IV, infra; but cf. Per Curiam op., n.24.

IV. PAST U.S. PRACTICES INVOLVING SIMILAR AGREEMENTS WITH PANAMA

A. Prior Panamanian treaties

The procedure to be used in conveying United States property to Panama confronted President Eisenhower in 1955 in the Eisenhower-Remon Treaty with the Republic of Panama which, inter alia, disposed of some "property of the United States" in Colon and Panama City. That Eisenhower-Remon Treaty provided in Art. V:

The United States of America agrees that, subject to the enactment of legislation by the Congress, there shall be conveyed to the Republic of Panama free of cost all the right, title and interest held by the United States of America or its agencies in and to certain lands and improvements in territory under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama [etc.] . . . The lands and improvements referred to in the preceding sentence and the determinations by the United States of America respecting the same, subject to the enactment of legislation by the Congress, are designated and set forth in Item 2 of the Memorandum of Understandings Reached which bears the same date as this Treaty. The United States of America also agrees that, subject to the enactment of legislation by the Congress, there shall be conveyed to the Republic of Panama free of cost all its right, title and interest to the land and improvements in the area known as PAITILLA POINT and that effective with such conveyance the United States of America shall relinquish all the rights, power and authority granted to it in such area under the Convention signed November 18, 1903.

Treaty of Mutual Understanding and Cooperation Between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, 6 U.S.T. 2274, 2278–79 (Jan. 25, 1955) (emphasis added).

Thereafter, Congress enacted Public Law 85–223, 71 Stat. 509 (1957), which authorized such disposition.[18] This is the most substantial example of United States past practices that exists. It also transferred land to Panama. The treaty itself called for congressional enactment. In my opinion, that same procedure is required here by the property disposition provision of the Constitution and by the Department of State's Circular 175 Procedure.

The Committee Report asserts that Articles VI and VII of the Eisenhower-Remon Treaty of 1955 is an example of a self-executing treaty which authorizes the transfer of territory or property belonging to the United States to other nations without a "prior Congressional act authorizing such transfer." Committee Report at 68, 69 (emphasis added). Close examination does not support that conclusion. Naturally, enactment of an act prior to the treaty is not necessary—but the Committee Report suggests that an act prior to the transfer is not necessary; and the intent of the Committee Report, the Attorney General's Opinion, and the wording of the present Treaty provide for the transfer of the property the instant the instruments of ratification are exchanged, thereby completely eliminating the House of Representatives from any constitutional role in the transfer of United States property. Art. V of the 1955 treaty belies the Senate's and appellee's position. And the two provisions in Articles VI and VII only related to minor boundary matters. Art. VI [19] concerned the modification of a boundary line between the City of Colon and the Canal Zone; this article replaced Article V of the Boundary Convention of September 2, 1914 [20] and modified Art. VIII of the Hull-Alfaro Treaty, which had been signed on March 2, 1936.[21] Art. VII concerned a boundary modification near Manzanillo Island.[22]

The asserted "self-executing" nature of Articles VI and VII of the 1955 treaty therefore do not provide precedential authority for disposing of the Panama Canal property without Congressional approval. First, rectification of boundaries is a distinct matter from the disposition of the staggering amount of property in question here.[23] Boundary rectification ordinarily involves a dispute about which country owns the property; the subsequent agreement is more like a disposition of claims than of property, for the question of whether there even exists "United States property" is the entire matter in dispute.[24]

Second, in comparing the amount of property allegedly disposed of by Articles VI and VII to the amount being disposed in the present treaties, it is clear that the 1955 disposition, in relative terms, was even less than de minimus. Third, and most significantly, Congress did approve Articles VI and VII in its 1957 statute.[25] Section 102(b) of the statute in its last line "authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be required for the necessary replacement of property or facilities . . . conveyed or rendered excess as the result of the treaty or memorandum. . . ." Unlike Section 102(a) which only addressed the matters contained in Art. V of the treaty, section 102(b) addressed all three articles—V, VI and VII—and the authorization of appropriations for replacement of conveyed property constituted approval by Congress of the content of Articles VI and VII.

However, even if Articles VI and VIII did involve a disposition of property which Congress did not initially approve, it may be that those Articles were themselves unconstitutional. Even Congress' silent acquiescence in that small disposition—assuming that is what may have happened temporarily—cannot alter the proper constitutional procedures mandated under Art. IV of the United States Constitution for the transfer by the Panama Canal treaty of United States property of the staggering value here being disposed of.

It is also convincing that in 1932, in another transfer of property to Panama, the Government considered it to be necessary to obtain prior specific congressional authorization even for a minor disposition of property from the Canal Zone to the Republic of Paama. Public Law No. 117, 47 Stat. 145 (May 3, 1932), authorized the Secretary of State to effect with the Republic of Panama a modification of the boundary line.[26] This slight alienation was not a boundary correction but was in fact a cession of land made necessary by the requirements of international law with respect to embassies.[27]

During World War II, there were discussions between Panama and the United States concerning disposition of bases and the transfer of waterworks and railroad lots. On May 18, 1942, an agreement on the lease of defense sites was made between the two countries. [28] A more significant agreement was reached that same day,[29] which, based upon an exchange of notes, provided:

When the authority of the Congress of the United States shall have been obtained therefor, the Government of the United States will transfer to the Government of the Republic of Panama free of cost all of its rights, title and interest in the system of sewers and waterworks in the cities of Panama and Colon." 59 Stat. at 1289 (emphasis added).

The agreement also provided:

The President will seek the authority of Congress of the United States to transfer to the Republic of Panama free of cost all of its rights, title and interest to the lands belonging to or of which the Panama Railroad Company now has usufruct in the cities of Panama and Colon which are not currently or prospectively needed for the maintenance operation, sanitation and protection of the

Footnotes at end of article.

Panama Canal, or of its auxiliary works, or for the operation of the Panama Railroad." 59 Stat. at 1290 (emphasis added) .

These agreements thus recognized the constitutional necessity for Congress to approve the disposition of United States property. On May 3, 1943, Congress enacted the legislation necessary to effectuate the transfer. Public Law No. 48, 57 Stat. 74 (May 3, 1943).[30] These are thus not examples of self-executing transfers by treaty.

Appellee also cites the "Convention of May 24, 1950 [with the Republic of Panama] for Change in the Boundary and the Grant of Certain Corridors, 6 U.S.T. 462," Appellee's Supplemental Memorandum, March 17, 1978, at 3, as an example of a treaty which demonstrates "that under well established historical practice treaties with foreign countries have ceded rights to property of the United States," id., at 4. Reference is also made to Art. VI in the 1955 treaty with respect to "a small portion of the Colon and of the Colon corridor." Id., at 4.

The Convention of August 9, 1950 is entitled "Colon Corridor and Certain Other Corridors Through the Canal Zone." 6 U.S.T. 461. In Art. II thereof the Republic of Panama transferred certain tracts of land from the city of Colon to the Canal Zone as a boundary change and provided that said property would be incorporated "to form part of the Canal Zone in the same manner as though [said lands] had been included within the grants contained in the [boundary] convention of November 18, 1903 . . ." 6 U.S.T. 465.

Thereafter in Art. III the United States transferred to the Republic of Panama "jurisdiction over the corridor" (emphasis added). This included the Colon corridor and another corridor through a small portion of the Canal Zone. The purpose of these transfers was so that "the city of Colon may enjoy direct means of land communication under Panamanian jurisdiction with other territory under jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama . . ." 6 U.S.T. 465. This was something less than a transfer of "territory or property" because Art. V of the convention provided that the provisions previously referred to [conferring jurisdiction over corridors] "shall not affect the rights and obligations of either of the two high contracting parties under the treaties or other international agreements now in force between the two countries, nor be considered as a limitation, definition, restriction or restrictive interpretation of such rights and obligations . . ." 6 U.S.T. 469.

The reference to prior "treaties or other international agreements now in force between the two countries . . ." included reference to the treaty of November 18, 1903 which provides that the grants to the United States by the Republic of Panama should not "interfere with the rights of way over the public roads passing through the said Zone . . . unless said rights of way . . . shall conflict with rights . . . granted to the United States." Art. VI, 33 Stat. 2235. Thus, there being no conflict with United States' rights, the convention of 1950 insofar as it related to highway corridors was dealing with a subject in which the Republic of Panama had reserved certain rights from the earliest treaty. Therefore, the recognition of Panama's "jurisdiction" over a highway corridor, which the agreement provided the United States had a right to use, and which did not take any land out of the Canal Zone proper, is not an instance where property owned by the United States was disposed of. From the inception of the 1903 treaty, the United States had never possessed the right to "interfere with the rights of way over public roads passing through said Zone" (Art. VI). The necessity for appellee to attempt to rely upon such unsupporting authority is an indication of the great weakness of his position.

The present case boils down to this: President Eisenhower in 1955 recognized his constitutional obligation to obtain authority from Congress to transfer a depot of the Panama Railroad to the Republic of Panama; but the appellee presently contends he does not need congressional approval to transfer the entire Panama Railroad and very substantial amounts of other property to the same party, and to reduce the entire interest of the United States in the colossal Panama Canal to a 21-year partnership with Panama solely in its operation.

With respect to prior treaties and agreements between the United States and Panama. the "past U.S. practice," as demonstrated above, has recognized the necessity of approval by Congress and has sought such approval by legislation whenever United States territory or property was conveyed to Panama. Heretofore every transfer of United States' property to Panama has been authorized in advance or subsequently ratified by action of Congress.[31] The proposed agreement flies in the face of all these "past U.S. practices" and this violates established procedures of the State Department.

B. Senate debate in 1943 over transfer of United States property to Panama.

The Joint Resolution of 1943 which transferred the waterworks and some of the property of the Panama Railroad to Panama (57 Stat. 74) was the subject of debate in the Senate in which some Senators expressed the opinion that the disposition should have been made by Treaty, and not by resolution of both Houses (see 88 CONG. REC. 9320 et seq.). The scope of Art. IV was discussed at considerable length. Senator Hiram Johnson of California argued that the resolution was dealing with "property of the United States" and that the Senate should "perform its constitutional function" by disposing of it by treaty. However, his views did not prevail against those pointing to the specific character of the language in Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2.

On December 3, 1942, Senator Connally of Texas, Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, discussed the pending Senate Joint Resolution 162, which was to similar effect as the House Joint Resolution which eventually authorized the transfer. He quickly addressed the sentiment that a treaty should be the implementation instead of a Joint Resolution by the Congress:

"Mr. President, I am and have been and in the future shall continue to be ardent in my maintenance of the integrity and the rights of the Senate of the United States in all its proper functions as a branch of the Government; but the matter covered by the joint resolution has to be passed by the Congress sooner or later in some form, for the simple reason that under the Constitution of the United States, Congress alone can vest title to property which belongs to the United States. The Constitution itself confers on Congress specific authority to transfer territory or lands belonging to the United States. So, if we had a formal treaty before us and if it should be ratified, it still would be necessary for the Congress to pass an act vesting in the Republic of Panama the title to the particular tracts of land; because "the Congress" means both bodies. The House of Representatives has a right to a voice as to whether any transfer of real estate or other property shall be made either under treaty or otherwise." 88 CONG. REC. 9267 (Dec. 3, 1942) (emphasis added).

Senator Vandenberg of Michigan then intervened to inquire why the disposition of the waterworks and some property owned by the Panama Railroad could not be by executive agreement. They became somewhat sidetracked, whereupon Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming queried why the disposition should not be by treaty? In the course of responding, Senator Connally stated:

"Mr. President, I referred earlier in my remarks to the constitutional requirement that Congress shall exercise consent in the case of the disposal of real estate. Article IV, section 3, of the Constitution, among other things, provides:

"The Congress shall have authority to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

"So that, in any event, it would be necessary to have congressional action even though there were a treaty. In this case it would be necessary to have congressional action parting with title to these properties." 88 CONG. REC. 9269 (Dec. 3, 1942) (emphasis added).

In response to a query from Senator Taft of Ohio, Senator Connally made the point that a treaty could be substituted for the joint resolution if there was subsequent enacting legislation:

Mr. TAFT. I am somewhat hazy on the subject of why an executive agreement should be confirmed by legislation instead of being made the subject of a treaty. I myself have had considerable difficulty in drawing the line. It does not seem to me that the mere fact that some legislation is necessary to implement this particular agreement necessarily excuses it from being made the subject of a treaty.

Mr. CONNALLY. As a legal proposition I think the Senator from Ohio is correct. The mere fact that legislation is required does not necessarily mean that we could not first, by means of a treaty, assume the obligations, and then carry out the obligations by the enactment of legislation. I will say very frankly to the Senator from Ohio—I do not think he was present awhile ago when we discussed that question—that the Senator from Texas is not prepared with the accuracy of a civil engineer to draw the boundary line between what can be done by executive agreement and what can be done by a treaty. 88 CONG. REC. 9270 (Dec. 3, 1942). (Emphasis added).

The next day, Senator Johnson of California spoke against the resolution, as described above. Senator Tunnell responded:

"There are different methods, apparently, by which questions of international moment are met. This is not a new question. Sometimes those who have objected to the course of the Executive have been more fortunate than those who are now making this objection. In this instance the Constitution specifically provides for this method. In article IV, section 3, second paragraph, I find this language:

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.

"It seems to me that if any other method than that of transfer by Congress had been attempted, we should have been met by the objection that Congress was the only power by which this territory or this property could be disposed of. There is no other method or authority to dispose of property of the Nation than that which is reposed in the Congress." 88 CONG. REC. 9322 (Dec. 4, 1942) (emphasis added). The Joint Resolution passed 40 to 29. 88 CONG. REC. 9329 (Dec. 4, 1942).

It cannot be said from this that the procedure there adopted by the President and the Congress to transfer property to Panama has the same effect as a binding judicial precedent. It must be recognized, however, that the Senate did understand the nature and importance of the issue and its constitutional—and political—ramifications; and in an instance where United States property of much less value than is here involved was being transferred, the Senate did decide that the proper procedure called for legislative action of the Congress. In our review of past practices, it is also important that this was another case involving the transfer of land to Panama.

Footnotes at end of article.

V. THE HISTORY OF THE TREATY CLAUSE IN THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION AND ITS RELATION TO THE DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY BELONGING TO THE UNITED STATES

Appellee contends that the Constitutional Convention "adopted a proposal that required two-thirds of the Senate to concur in all treaties, including peace treaties involving cessions of territory. 2 Farrand, supra, at 544, 549 . . . [which] demonstrate[s] that the framers of the Constitution contemplated the transfer of United States territory and property by treaty." Appellee Br. at 11 (emphasis added).

No such proposal was finally adopted. On September 4, 1787 the working draft of the proposed Constitution provided:

"Sec. 4. The President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall have power to make treaties . . . But no Treaty shall be made without the consent of two-thirds of the Members present." 2 FARRAND, THE RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, 495 (rev. ed. 1929) (hereafter "FARRAND").

On September 7, the words "(except Treaties of Peace)" were added after the word "Treaty."[32] 2 FARRAND, 533. Under this amendment, a majority vote of the Senate could have ratified a peace treaty. Thereupon a motion was made to add the following amendment:

"But no Treaty of Peace shall be entered into, whereby the United States shall be deprived of any of their present Territory or rights without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the Senate present." 2 FARRAND, 534. This amendment was defeated by adjournment, 2 FARRAND 534, 543, and was never offered again.

The very next day, as the first order of business, the convention struck the previously adopted amendment, i.e., "(except Treaties of Peace)" from then section 4 by a vote of eight states to three. 2 FARRAND 544, 548–549. Thus, even that clause never became part of the treaty provision.

Thus, the convention eventually rejected the proposal that peace treaties should be ratified by a majority vote of the Senate, and by adjourning, it also rejected the proposal to add a specific provision that treaties of peace transferring United States Territory or rights would require a two-thirds vote if other peace treaties could be ratified by majority vote. Appellee's brief and argument overlook these facts.

The mere offering, consideration, and rejection of the amendment as to United States "territory and rights" does not support appellee's claim "that the framers of the Constitution contemplated the transfer of United States territory and property by treaty."[33] Appellee Br. at 11 (emphasis added). Had the amendment with respect to the "territory and rights" become part of the treaty clause of the Constitution, appellee's interpretation would have been correct, but that amendment, contrary to appellee's representation, never even reached the voting stage. 2 FARRAND, 534, 543. Thus, the convention proceedings with respect to that amendment do not support appellee's present contention, and the temporary inclusion of peace treaties does not support an interpretation that the naked treaty power which was eventually voted included the right to cede territory. Even if a "Peace Treaty" could, they are a peculiar breed with their own characteristics, and insofar as they cede property they are usually recognizing that the property has already passed from their domain. The conclusive answer to that argument, however, is that we are not here concerned with a "Peace Treaty."

Doubtlessly, the two members who offered the amendment with respect to "territory and rights" were of the view that treaties could transfer territory and rights of the United States (to be) and of the particular states; but these amendments were defeated and there is no indication that the movers (Williamson and Spaight, 2 Farrand 543) took cognizance of the provision of present Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, which at that time was in its present form, except for its reference to "Legislature" which was later changed to "Congress" (2 FARRAND 459, 466).

In this matter, however, we should be guided more by the action of the Convention as a whole and by the interpretation evident from rejection of the proposed amendment by a substantial majority of states. In this inquiry there is nothing in the convention proceedings to refute the conclusion that the majority rejected the amendment because it interpreted the then-existing broader language that became Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 as providing better protection for their interests through Congress than would have been possible through the defeated addendum to the treaty clause. Any member who relied on what became the property disposition clause of Art. IV would have voted for adjournment on September 7 against the territorial amendment discussed above, and would have had no reluctance to vote for the Constitution in the form in which it was submitted with Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 as at present.[34]

The majority also refers to the history of the state ratifying conventions, and concludes therefrom that the states—in addition to the Framers—were satisfied that a two-thirds requirement in the Senate, rather than full congressional approval, served as an adequate check on the alienation of United States territory.

Such a broad conclusion cannot be drawn from the history of the state conventions. Typical of the majority's position is reliance on a proposed amendment at the Virginia ratifying convention, which read in full as follows:

"[N]o commercial treaty shall be ratified without the concurrence of two thirds of the whole number of the members of the Senate; and no treaty ceding, contracting, restraining, or suspending, the territorial rights or claims of the United States, or any of them, or their, or any of their rights or claims to fishing in the American seas, or navigating the American rivers, shall be made, but in cases of the most urgent and extreme necessity; nor shall any such treaty be ratified without the concurrence of three fourths of the whole number of the members of both houses respectively." 3 Elliot's Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Convention 660 (1907).

Irrespective of the statements of the participants of the Virginia convention, who may well have been laboring under the mistaken pretense that Art. IV was not operative in this area or who may not have even thought about that section at all, a wholly permissible conclusion to be drawn from the rejection of this amendment was that the provision in Art. IV for a vote of the full Congress for disposition of territory or property was an adequate safeguard. The statements of parties who suggested such amendments, in their honest but mistaken fear that the treaty power alone allowed the disposition of territory or property in circumstances such as are here present, and then had their amendment defeated, do not constitute an authoritative interpretation of the scope of Art. II.

VI. ELEVEN PRIOR TREATIES

Appellee's brief and the Committee Report[35] both refer to eleven treaties supplied by the Department of State and argue that such treaties were couched in self-executing terms and constitute examples of the transfer of United States territory or property to other nations, and in some instances to individuals, without a prior Congressional act authorizing such transfer. It is further asserted that these instances support the contention that Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 of the Constitution permits the President through a treaty to dispose of property belonging to the United States without approval of "the Congress."[36] We examine each of these treaties for verification of the asserted interpretation; and we find little or no support therefor.

A. Indian treaties

1. The Treaty with the Cherokee Nation of December 29, 1835 (78 Stat. 478).—This treaty was preceded by the Act of May 28, 1830, by which Congress authorized the exchange of western lands for the Cherokee's eastern lands in connection with their removal to lands west of the Mississippi River. However, the 1835 treaty, in some respects, exceeded the statutory authorization as to the lands that were to be transferred, and citizens who took title to some lands subsequently transferred from the Indians were subjected to attacks upon their title. Holden v. Joy, 84 U.S. (17 Wall.) 211 (1872), involved such a controversy. The Court held, in effect, that those who received land from the Indians acquired good title because Congress, by appropriating some four-and-one-half million dollars to carry out the treaty, had in effect ratified the ultra vires acts of the treaty negotiators. In so ruling, the Court's opinion recognized the issue as to whether a treaty could convey lands belonging to the United States, but then stated:

"It is not necessary to decide the question in this case [whether the treaty conveyed title without Congressional approval] as the treaty in question has been fully carried into effect, and its provisions have been repeatedly recognized by Congress as valid." 84 U.S. (17 Wall.) at 247.[37]

Thus, far from holding that a treaty can transfer property belonging to the United States without Congress, the case recognizes the requirement of Congressional authorization and holds that when land is transferred in a treaty in excess of statutory authorization, the transfer may be legalized by a subsequent act of "Congress" which in some affirmative manner indicates approval of the otherwise ultra vires act.

2. The Treaty of October 2, 1863, with the Red Lake and Pembina Bands of Chippewa Indians (13 Stat. 667).—Appellee points to Art. IX of this treaty signed by President Lincoln as an alleged transfer of property not consented to by Congress. That article provided: "there shall be set apart from the tract hereby ceded [to the United States by the Bands of Chippewa Indians] a reservation of (640) six hundred and forty acres near the mouth of Thief River for the Chief 'Moose Dung' . . ." The validity of the reservation to Chief Moose Dung was involved in Jones v. Meehan, 175 U.S. 1 (1899),[38] which considered the validity of a subsequent lease made by one who inherited from the chief. Appellee cites the court's decision upholding the lease for the rule that property of the United States may be transferred to individuals by treaty between the United States and Indian tribes without any act of Congress or any patent from the President. When the facts of this Indian treaty are analyzed, it is clear, however, that the authority of the case is limited to reservations of land made in treaties between the United States and Indian tribes, which were treated as being akin to nations. See following discussion of the Indian treaties.

Footnotes at end of article.

3. Summary.—The early treaties with Indian tribes are sui generis as treaties. They are not treaties in the ordinary sense of the word as all have recognized since Congress in 1871 enacted a law prohibiting any "contract by treaty" with any Indian tribe or nations:

"That hereafter no Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power with whom the United States may contract by treaty: Provided, further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to invalidate or impair the obligation of any treaty heretofore lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe." Act of March 3, 1871, 16 Stat. 566.

Had Indian treaties been true treaties in the constitutional sense Congress could not have prohibited the President from so contracting by treaty. While the Act took the form of providing that Indian tribes shall not be "acknowledged or recognized" as "independent," the statute clearly prohibited the President from negotiating treaties with any Indian tribe that was "independent." The Act was thus in form a clear restriction on the treaty power, but actually it recognized that the Indian treaties were something different than the treaties referred to in the Constitution.

They have special features that generally make them inapplicable as authority that a treaty can dispose of other types of United States property without an Act of Congress. This is true because generally the subject of the Indian treaties was land owned and occupied by the Indians, which the United States was buying or acquiring. The treaty "reserved" some of the land for the Indians. Thus, property of the United States was not disposed of by the treaty.

Attorney General Taney in an opinion on September 20, 1833 stated: "These reservations [of Indian land in treaties] are excepted out of the grant made by treaty and did not pass by it. Consequently the title remains as it was before the treaty, that is to say the lands reserved are still held under the original title." 175 U.S. at 12. Mr. Justice Nelson in Gains v. Michelson, 50 U.S. (9 How.) 356 (1850), pointed out that in such transactions, "it was so much carved out of the territory coded, and remained to the Indian occupant, as he had never parted with it. He [the Indian] holds strictly speaking not under the treaty of cession but under his original title confirmed by the government in the act of agreeing to the reservation." 50 U.S. (9 How.) at 365.

In the Per Curiam opinion a statement in Jones v. Meehan, supra, 175 U.S. at 12–14, is cited as authority that the Taney opinion and the decision in Gaines v. Michelson, supra, were "irreconcilable with later Supreme Court opinions . . ." Per Curiam, n.19). This may be explained by virtue of a change in the statute after Jones v. Meehan, supra, which eliminated the prohibition against individuals purchasing or leasing from any individual Indian. Act of June 30, 1834, c. 161, § 12, 4 Stat. 730.

But whether the treaty confirmed the Indian right or granted a new right is not dispositive of the question as to whether there was a disposition of territory or property belonging to the United States. These treaties dwelt with territory and property and in doing so they dwelt with sovereignty over the territory and the right to individual patches of soil, as Chief Justice Marshall noted in Johnson v. McIntosh, 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 542 (1823). They also in some instances involved disputed claims to both territory and soil. In settling on the tribes the reserved territory the sovereign rights of the respective parties were involved, but in the "reservation" of specific acreage of soil to individual Indians, different claims were involved and this phase of the agreements was more concerned with what might be termed "property." It is clear that at one time such "reservations" were considered as a recognition of land already owned by the Indians. This would be particularly true where the Indian at the time actually occupied the soil.

In any event even Jones v. Meehan, supra, recognized that the land reserved to Chief Moose Dung on his death passed to his eldest son "by the laws, customs, and usages of the tribe . . ." What the Per Curiam opinion, and many other opinions in this field fail to recognize is that the individual Indians acquired title by virtue of the treaty and that it is not completely correct to say that the United States granted the title. The treaties were the act of two governments. The Indians as possessors had far the greater claim to the extent that they actually occupied the soil and the grantors in the treaty were not solely the United States but included both signatories.

And insofar as the right to the soil was concerned more came from the Indians than from the United States. It would hardly be correct to consider that soil actually occupied by an Indian for centuries was property belonging to the United States. The United States generally recognized the rights of such possessors, and though Indian claims to broad territory were only recognized as a right of occupancy, the reservation of individual tracts was on a different footing and generally by one device or another were found to be vested in fee simple in the actual Indian occupant. Jones v. Meehan, supra, 175 U.S. at 32, is a good example.

By way of conclusion on all these Indian treaties, in short, I deny that recognizing the ancestral right of Chief Moose Dung to pitch his teepee by the waters of Thief River is sufficient legal authority to give away the entire Panama Canal without benefit of Congress. Claiming support from such decision indicates the weakness of appellee's case because the character of the two treaties, the relationship of the signatories, the consideration involved, the nature of our interest or claim to the property involved and our relationships to them are all different in material respects.

Therefore, the treaties with the Cherokees, the Chippewa Indians, and the transfer to Chief Moose Dung do not constitute authority that the Panama Canal Zone property of the United States may be transferred to Panama without the approval of the Congress. The same general modus operandi was followed in other Indian treaties.

This also disposes of the decision in Francis v. Francis, 203 U.S. 233 (1906), cited in the Per Curiam opinion. That is another Indian treaty case which interpreted one of the usual "reservations" that the Indians customarily made when they transferred some of their lands to the United States by treaty. As in the other Indian treaty cases, the first Justice Harlan's opinion did not overturn the Chancellor's ruling that the named Indian "and his heirs" obtained a fee simple estate in Indian lands which were "reserved [and] did not pass to the United States by Treaty" (emphasis added) because under a rule of property in Michigan where the lands were located "[t]he term reservation was equivalent to an absolute grant."

The result in that respect was not disturbed. Thus, again the peculiarities of a reservation by Indians of their own lands in a joint treaty with the United States, belies the fact that the title passed by the treaty was to property (soil) that actually belonged to the United States. A more accurate description of the actual situation would be that the Indians never relinquished their claim and the treaty confirmed their title. These Indian treaties thus, to a certain extent, fall within treaties dealing with disputed claims. The citation of Francis by the Per Curiam opinion, p. 21, overlooks the fact that it was the treaty of both parties that vested complete title, not the sole act of the United States. The case does not hold that the United States could transfer the soil by deed.

It also goes without saying that even if the Indians and the United States could jointly convey property to an Indian by a reservation of soil that he claimed, that such precedents are not authority for the United States transferring property to Panama that is owned outright by the United States. The Panama Canal Treaty is an unquestioned disposition of property of the United States. The Indian treaties disposed of disputed territory and recognized claims of individual Indians to particular soil.

This case is of interest though for another reason: it holds that the President, "without the authority of an act of Congress," was not authorized to agree in the Treaty to a proviso that none of the reserved Indian lands could be conveyed without his consent. To a certain extent this recognizes that in Indian treaties the title is not conveyed to reservees but more accurately is merely recognized. See 50 U.S. (9 How.) 365, supra.

B. Treaties with foreign nations

1. Treaty of February 22, 1819 between the United States and Spain (8 Stat. 252).—Spain ceded all of east and west Florida to the United States. The parties also agreed upon a boundary west of the Mississippi River beginning at the mouth of the Sabine River in the Gulf of Mexico, thence generally north and west to the Red River and the Arkansas River, and thence to the source of that river, and thence due west along the 42nd line of latitude to the South Sea (Pacific Ocean). On both sides of that boundary line, the respective parties ceded to each other their claims and pretentions to the territory in question. The treaty indicated that the parties did not know the precise source of the Arkansas River and, particularly in the mountain areas, neither nation was sufficiently familiar with much of the areas traversed by the newly drawn boundary lines to know precisely what was accomplished. This indicated the "claim" nature of the asserted rights.

Taken by its four corners, this treaty is hardly a disposition of United States property. It is a mutual relinquishment of boundary claims which is a usual subject of diplomacy, particularly in undeveloped areas. The settlement of many boundary disputes are more the settlement of claims rather than transfers of property.[39]

2. Treaty of August 9, 1842 between the United States and Great Britain (Webster-Ashburton Treaty) 8 Stat. 572.—This settled the boundary between the United States and Canada from the east through the Great Lakes, the present boundary waters and thence to the Rocky Mountains along the 49th parallel. Like the prior treaty, the parties here did not know where the boundary line they drew would begin to run westward from the Lake of the Woods. One result of this arrangement was the odd "Northwest angle" in Minnesota, which is completely separated by water from all United States territory. The treaty recognized prior grants of land by both countries in disputed areas. This agreement is within the traditional treaty-making function and does not qualify as a disposition of territory. It would be hard to point to the transfer of any property that belonged to the United States. This treaty is a perfect example of the settlement, in many respects, of highly questionable claims and not of the transfer of territory or property.

3. The Treaty of June 15, 1846 between the United States and Great Britain. The Oregon-Washington boundaries (9 Stat.

Footnotes at end of article.

869).—The treaty recited that there was "doubt and uncertainty . . . respecting the sovereignty and government of . . . the northwest coast of America . . . west of the Rocky Mountains." The treaty continued the boundary line westward from the Rocky Mountains along the 49th parallel, and recognized the navigational rights on the Columbia River of the Hudson Bay Company and of British subjects on an equal footing with American citizens. This is another example of the settlement of doubtful and uncertain claims of the respective parties and not a transfer of property.

4. Treaty of February 1, 1933 between the United States and Mexico (84 Cong. Rec. 9824).—This treaty rectified the boundary along the Rio Grande River in the vicinity of El Paso and the Juarez Valley. The treaty involved a typical, minor boundary matter. Nevertheless, this Treaty looked to congress for approval: Art. VIII provided that "[e]ach Government shall respectively secure title. . . ." Art. VII also provided that "Lands within the rectified channel . . . [that] pass from . . . one country to . . . the other . . . shall be acquired in full ownership by the [respective] Government . . ." The treaty was thus executory and, moreover, since it required the appropriation of money, looked to supporting enactments by the Congress of the United States and did not purport to be self-executing.

5. Treaty of August 29, 1963 between the United States and Mexico: Solution of El Chamizal, 15 U.S.T. 21.—This relocated the shifting channel of the Rio Grande River in the vicinity of El Paso and Juarez, and drew a boundary line at the center of a new channel for the river. By this arrangement, 823.50 acres of former United States land was ceded to Mexico by the treaty. However, far from this being an instance where the President attempted to transfer United States territory or property by a self-executing treaty without prior congressional act, the treaty in Art. 6 specifically recognized the constitutional requirement and provided that the acquisition of the lands be transferred to Mexico and the rights of way for that portion of the new river channel in the territory of the United States shall not occur until "after . . . the necessary legislation has been enacted for carrying it out . . ." This treaty thus supports appellant's contentions and not those of the appellee. That appropriations were also required may have been an additional reason for recognizing the constitutional role of Congress but that apparent necessity here has not caused the President to recognize the role of Congress. Cf. Per Curiam opinion, p. 24 n.22. In its discussion of this Mexican treaty the Per Curiam opinion recognizes the necessity in that instance for approval by Congress because the treaty required implementing legislation (Per Curiam op., n.22). The implementing legislation required by the Panama Canal Treaty will make that necessitated by the Mexican Treaty pale into insignificance.

6. Treaty of November 23, 1970 between the United States and Mexico (23 U.S.T. 371).—This is another instance where the treaty resolved boundary differences arising from the shifting of channels. This treaty likewise was contingent and not self-executing; Article ID provided, i.e., that "the necessary legislation has been enacted for carrying it out." 23 U.S.T. 377. This is another treaty that supports appellants' contention and not those of the appellee.

7. Treaty of November 22, 1971 between the United States and Honduras: Swan Islands (23 U.S.T. 2631).—Both governments claimed sovereignty of the Swan Islands, but the United States had for many years maintained a navigation and communications facility there. By the treaty, the United States recognized the sovereignty of Honduras and transferred certain land, buildings, and equipment to Honduras. There was a second cooperative agreement whereby the United States was to operate the navigational facilities and Honduras was to assume responsibility for a dock and landing strip. The United States retained title to a great number of buildings and equipment except the land, and by the treaty Honduras made the areas—sites—available to the United States. This was a cooperative program for continuation of meteorological and communication facilities in Swan Islands. To the extent that any property was transferred, it was certainly minimal and hardly justified legislation. It cannot be considered as authority for transferring eight billion dollars of United States property.

8. Treaty of June 17, 1971 between the United States and Japan (23 U.S.T. 447).—This related to the reversion of the Ryukyu (includes Okinawa) and Daito Islands. Some of this property may have been transferred pursuant to prior congressional enactments, i.e., 40 U.S.C. §§ 511 and 512. Section 511 authorizes federal agencies having foreign excess property to dispose of such property. That is definitely authorization for the transfer of what would be excess property of the United States after the reduction of our military operations on Okinawa. The treaty relinquished in favor of Japan all rights and interests under Art. III of the Treaty of Peace with Japan of September 8, 1951. Japan in turn granted to the United States the use of facilities and areas in accordance with the treaty of January 19, 1960, which was the Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security providing for collective self-defense. Art. IX of this treaty terminated our temporary right of military occupation. It is hard to construe this treaty as authority for transferring United States property by treaty without implementing legislation.

9. Treaty of January 25, 1955 between the United States and Panama (6 U.S.T. 2283).—This treaty, as discussed earlier, provided for the transfers of certain property. Art. V provided for the conveyance to Panama of certain lands and improvements set forth in item 2 of the Memorandum of Understanding. This included certain specified lands, including the railway terminal operations in the city of Panama, and the railway passenger station, and Paitilla Point. The treaty, however, was not self-executing as Art. V recognized the need to comply with Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 of the Constitution, as that Article provided that the transfer of property was "subject to the enactment of legislation by the Congress," and with respect to the small amount of property in Art. VI and Art. VII, Congress did enact legislation with respect thereto.[40]

It must be recognized that no court has had any opportunity to pass on the validity of many of these provisions, because when property or rights are transferred in a foreign country pursuant to asserted or de facto authority, as a practical matter, it is difficult, if not impossible thereafter, to litigate or rescind the transfer.

C. Treaty summary

In sum, no substantial support can be found in any of the 11 treaties for appellee's contention. The Indian treaties do not support his position because of their very nature, i.e., the land allegedly transferred to the Indian is his land which he reserves from transfer to the United States under the treaty. The treaties with Spain and Great Britain involved the settlement of boundary claims and this is not a boundary controversy.

* * * * *

CONCLUSION

From the foregoing it is concluded that a political question is not involved, that established procedures of the Department of State and past United States procedures involving similar agreements with Panama and others recognize and require that Congress approve the transfer of United States property, that the Restatement of Foreign Relations Law reaches the same conclusion, and that the adjudicated cases hold that the power to dispose of United States property is vested exclusively in the Congress. In my opinion, we should accordingly declare the law to be that those provisions of the pending treaty which dispose of territory or property belonging to the United States to the Republic of Panama cannot come into force under the Constitution of the United States until approved by the Congress. In my view, because of the parties involved, it would not be necessary to issue an injunction.

The Report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations of a much earlier date has much advice that could well be followed by the relevant parties in the present controversy:

"The question has been debated how far Congress would be bound to give effect, in cases requiring its cooperation, to regulations by treaty on subjects put within its express province by the Constitution. Whichever may be the better opinion, the doubt supplies reason enough against putting the question to trial in other circumstances than those in which the concurrence of Congress may be safely assumed. And the reason is the stronger for this forbearance from the fact that in the contingency of conflict it would be not the interests only, but the faith, too, of the nation which might be compromised, as this would have been committed by the adoption of the treaty regulations.

"The condition of the Government at this point is of peculiar delicacy as regards the arrangement of its imposts. Parties have been arrayed with vehemence and the greatest sensibility awakened on the subject. Regulation by treaty in these circumstances would doubtless be carried into effect by the House of Representatives. But the temper in which the supposed intrusion might be expected to be received would be anything but cordial or placid. Ought not the occasion to be considerable, the motive urgent, to warrant the exercise of the authority at this cost? This is a topic requiring only to be displayed, not dwelt on." 2 HINDS' PRECEDENTS 1000.

What is the great urgency for not recognizing the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives to pass on the transfer of the rare property here involved? The United States by the narrow margin of one vote was enticed into accepting Panama as the first choice over Nicaragua for the location of the Canal and the operating rights promised by Panama in the 1903 treaty were purposely designed to assure that the United States would build the Canal in Panama and not in Nicaragua.[41] Thereafter, a national treasure beyond compare in the form of an engineering marvel was created by the ingenuity and genius of American statesmen, builders, and doctors who persevered where all others had failed miserably, or failed even to begin.

* * * * *

The transfer of United States territory and property in the Panama Canal Zone directly affects immense vital interests of the entire nation involving as it does significant commercial concerns and our national security. Some of these matters were pointed out by Senator Hiram Johnson of California in 1939, when, in speaking on the ratification of the Hull-Alfaro Treaty, which proposed certain amendments in our relations with Panama, he remarked:

Footnotes at end of article.

"The Panama Canal will be protected, if protected by us. The Panama Canal, if it be retained, and if it serve its purpose [as "the life line of the Republic," id., 9838], will do so because of our efforts; and the Panama Canal, because of the peculiar relation we have to it, should not be in any degree tied, or hamstrung, or put in a strait jacket by a treaty made by the United States of America." 84 CONG. REC. 9838 (1939).

The momentous nature of these national interests peculiarly qualify the House of Representatives for its constitutional role because it directly represents our entire citizenry on a uniform basis—which was the principal reason that the Framers of the Constitution directed that the entire Congress should pass on such matters.

However, regardless of disputes on other issues, one conclusion is certain. That is that if the present attempt successfully usurps the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives to vote on the disposition of United States' property of the tremendous magnitude and value of our Panama holdings a precedent of such enormity will be created that the constitutional right of the House of Representatives to vote on transfers of property to foreign nations need never again be seriously recognized.

To the extent that the President may have discretion to choose between proceeding by treaty or other forms of international agreement, he cannot avoid the constitutional requirement that the entire Congress pass on all attempts to dispose of United States' territory and property to other nations. All past practices in this field indicate that prior Presidents have recognized that obligation even when property of much less value and significance was involved.[42]

FOOTNOTES

[1] "The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State." U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3, cl. 2.

[2] "He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties . . ." U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

[3] Sen. Exec. Rept. 95–12, Executive N, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. at 99 (Feb. 3, 1978) (hereafter "Committee Report").

[4] This opinion is confined to the Panama Canal Treaty and does not involve the Neutrality Treaty (for text of both agreements, see Appendix).

[5] Since the merits of the case are reached, the discussion of standing is set forth in footnote 42, infra.

[6] See note 1 supra.

[7] The per curiam understates the significance of many of the cases discussed here. For example, the majority concedes that United States v. Gratiot, 39 U.S. (14 Pet.) 526 (1840), does not involve a question of state-federal relations. While Gratiot did not involve the precise situation presented by this case, the principle relied upon therein—that the power to dispose of property rests exclusively with the Congress—should similarly, in my view, guide our disposition here. The majority seeks to distinguish away many of the Supreme Court's statements by noting that the context in which they were made involve state-federal relations and not separation of powers. Gratiot, among other cases, does not involve state-federal relations. While the holdings in those cases may not control our facts, it is submitted that the principle relied upon in those cases accurately states the proper construction of the provisions of the Constitution involved in this case.

[8] See Sierra Club v. Hickel, 433 F.2d 24, 28 (9th Cir. 1970), aff'd, 405 U.S. 727 (1972): "Article IV, Section 3 of The United States Constitution commits the management and control of the lands of the United States to Congress. That congressional power is unlimited." The Court stated in United States v. San Francisco, 310 U.S. 16, 29 (1940): "The power over the public land thus entrusted to Congress is without limitations." The Court has also stated:

"[C]ongress has the same power over [territory] as over any other property belonging to the United States; and this power is vested in congress without limitation; and has been considered the foundation upon which the territorial governments rest." United States v. Gratiot, 39 U.S. (14 Pet.) 526, 536–37 (1840) (emphasis added).

[9] When Jefferson was Secretary of State, he issued instructions on March 18, 1792 to the American Commissioners negotiating with Spain as to the boundary between Georgia and the Floridas, stating that the right to alienate even an inch of territory belonging to a member of the Union did not exist in the central government. American State Papers For. Rel., I 252. Jefferson was undoubtedly referring in part to the limitations imposed by Art. IV.

[10] The Per Curiam opinion states at note 4 that among the authorities agreeing with its position is Prof. Henkin. The quotation above is from a subsection entitled "Exclusive Powers of Congress." The subsequent section on "Concurrent Powers" does not contain a statement that the general powers addressed in the "exclusive power" section can be exercised concurrently by treaty. This opinion does not contend that the Executive lacks the power to make a treaty disposing of property but rather that such treaty requires an act of Congress to become effective. Henkin does not address this question directly, and his comments are not inconsistent with this position. See Henkin, supra, at 149. The passage to which the majority refers as indicating that Prof. Henkin is in accord with its position begins with the statement: "Some obligations, it is accepted, cannot be executed by the treaty itself." Examples follow: appropriation of funds, enactment of criminal laws, and probably declaration of war. Nothing in that passage states or implies that the list is exhaustive.

It is not surprising that those promoting the present treaty also decide that they have power to accomplish the result they seek. It is ever thus with usurped authority. Cf. Per Curiam, n.4. The Senate precedent, however, is directly contrary. See Part IV, and particularly pages 41 to 44.

[11] At that time Congress, in accordance with the language of the treaty, did enact legislation enabling the transfers agreed to in the treaty to be perfected. Pub. L. 85–223, 71 Stat. 509 (August 30, 1957) had the purpose of "authoriz[ing] and direct[ing] the fulfillment of those provisions of the [1955 Treaty], which, subject to authorization by the Congress, provided for the conveyance of various lands and improvements to the Republic of Panama. . . ." (Emphasis added).

[12] In footnote 7, the Per Curiam opinion states that "there are numerous instances in past treaty practice [of the] . . . disposition of United States property through self-executing treaty." The correctness of this statement is challenged. See VI hereof. There is no instance in the entire history of the United States that has been brought to our attention where any disposition of United States property even approaching the character and magnitude here involved was ever handled by a self-executing treaty.

Said footnote further states that "we know of no instance in which the United States has been in a formally declared war without a congressional declaration thereof." That is a safe statement because a "formally declared war" can never exist without a congressional declaration thereof. Thus, the statement by its limitations implicitly carries its own proof. However, if the statement was intended to convey the impression that the President has never usurped the Congressional power to declare war, it must be recognized that there is no difference in the format of the grant of that exclusive power to Congress from the grant to Congress of the power to dispose of territory and property. Therefore, by the same token, the President has no more power from the wording of the Constitution to dispose of U.S. territory and property than he does to declare war.

[13] Citation is made to: S. Crandall, Treaties, Their Making and Enforcement (Washington: 2d ed. 1916), 171–182; 1 W. Willoughby, The Constitutional Law of the United States (New York: 2d ed. 1929), 549–552. See also H. Rept. 4177, 49th Cong., 2d sess. (1887). Cf. De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 1, 198 (1901).

[14] E.g., Dorr v. United States, 195 U.S. 138, 149 (1904) ("We conclude that the power to govern territory, implied in the right to acquire it, and given to Congress in the Constitution in article 4, § 3, . . . does not require that body to enact for ceded territory, not made a part of the United States by congressional action, a system of laws which shall include the right of trial by jury, and that the Constitution does not, without legislation, and of its own force, carry such right to territory so situated." [emphasis added]); Benner v. Porter, 50 U.S. 235, 240 (1850) ("'[The territorial governments] are not organized under the Constitution, nor subject to its complex distribution of the powers of government . . . but are the creations, exclusively, of the Legislative Department, and subject to its supervision and control." [emphasis added]); American Insurance Co. v. 356 Bales of Cotton, 26 U.S. 511, 542 (1828) ("Florida continues to be a territory of the United States; governed by virtue of that clause in the Constitution which empowers Congress 'to make all needful rules and regulations, respecting the territory, or other property belonging to the United States.'" [emphasis added]).

[15] In the passage of Henkin relied upon the majority, the following statement appears in a footnote:

"It has been suggested that treaties that deal with matters on which Congress could legislate could not be self-executing . . . In the numerous instances in which acts of Congress were held to supersede treaty provisions . . ., there was no suggestion that the treaty was not law anyhow since it could not be self-executing." Henkin, supra, at 159 (in note).

This section is discussing the effect of treaties as law—and not where the power to implement the treaty resides. In this regard, a later statement in the footnote is relevant:

Congress has often insisted that treaties modifying tariffs are not self-executing and require Congressional implementation, and the Executive has generally acquiesced. Crandall, Treaties 195–200. . . . In recent years tariffs have been the subject of executive agreements authorized by Congress or requiring Congressional implementation.

Id. At best, one could say that Henkin has made some statements, which if read out of their context, might lead to conflicting results. It is my view that his statement at 94–96, quoted above, is definitive and conclusive—the Executive may not use his foreign affairs powers to dispose of United States territory or property, since that power is specifically vested in the Congress by Article IV—and points to a position opposite to the per curiam.

[16] The rules applicable to the construction of a statute also apply to the construction of a Constitution. Badger v. Holdale, 88 F. 2d 208, 211 (8th Cir. 1937) (construing Minnesota Constitution); Davis v. Synhorst, 225 F. Supp. 689, 691 (S.D. Iowa 1964) (construing Iowa Constitution: "Rules applicable to statutory construction are similar to constitutional construction"). "The established rule is that if there exists a conflict in the provisions of the same act, the last provision in point of arrangement must control." Lodge 1858, American Federation of Government Employees v. Webb, No. 76-1821, slip op. at 30 (D.C. Cir. March 20, 1978) (emphasis added), and cases cited at id., slip op. at 30-32, n. 31. Here, the fact that Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 was placed after Articles I, II, and III is entitled to some weight in construing the intendment of Art. IV; it points to the conclusion that the language of the property disposition clause is not concerned simply with state-state and state-federal relations.

[17] Indeed, it is beyond serious dispute that if the treaty becomes effective, the United States will dispose of property. Art. XIII of the Treaty provides: "The United States of America transfers, without charge, to the Republic of Panama all right, title and interest the United States of America may have with respect to all real property, including nonremovable improvements thereon . . ." We may take judicial notice of the public dispute as to the nature of the interest this country presently possesses in the territory of the Canal Zone from its treaty right to act in perpetuity as though sovereign—whether it be a fee interest or a leasehold. In any event, the interest is a "property interest." Irrespective of the nature of this interest, this nation is definitely transferring a property interest in the fixtures and other improvements made on the real property. This includes the entire Panama Railroad, which the United States purchased as authorized by Congress (32 Stat. 481) and all the other real property that the United States purchased from the individual owners of the land, including the property and other interests of the French Canal Company for which the U.S. paid $40 million. (See 32 Stat. 481). All of this is property within the meaning of Art. IV. A substantial payment was also made to Colombia

[18] Public Law 85-223 of August 30, 1957 provided:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—CONVEYANCE OF PROPERTY TO THE REPUBLIC OF PANAMA AND FISCAL ADJUSTMENTS BY PANAMA CANAL COMPANY

SEC. 101. It is hereby declared to be the purpose of this title—

(1) to authorize and direct the fulfillment of those provisions of the Treaty of Mutual Understanding and Cooperation between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama signed on January 25, 1955, and of the memorandum of understandings reached signed on the same date, which contemplate, subject to authorization by the Congress, the conveyance of various lands and improvements to the Republic of Panama, including, but not limited to, conveyance of the lands and improvements in, and simultaneous relinquishment of all right, power and authority in, the area known as Paitilla Point, and including the removal of the railway terminal operations of the Panama Canal Company from the city of Panama and the conveyance of the lands and improvements known as Panama Railroad Yard in the city of Panama; and

(2) to authorize and provide for the adjustments in the fiscal obligations of the Panama Canal Company necessitated by the aforesaid conveyances.

SEC. 102. (a) In accordance with and subject to the provisions of article V of the Treaty of Mutual Understanding and Cooperation between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama signed on January 25, 1955, and item 2 of the memorandum of understandings reached signed on same date—

(1) the Secretary of State is authorized and directed to convey to the Republic of Panama free of cost all the right, title, and interest held by the United States of America or its agencies in and to the land and improvements in the area known as Paitilla Point and in the areas designated in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of paragraph (a) of said item 2; and

(2) the Panama Canal Company is authorized and directed to remove its operations and withdraw from the other lands and improvements designated in said item 2, and to convey to the Republic of Panama free of cost all the right, title, and interest held by the Panama Canal Company and the United States of America in and to said other lands and improvements.

(b) The market value of the property of the Panama Canal Company conveyed under this directive or by operation of articles VI or VII of the treaty and the net capital loss, if any, as established by the Panama Canal Company and approved by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, sustained in the disposal, relocation, or ——— of any facility or other property of the Panama Canal Company rendered excess, wholly or in part, by operation of articles V or XII of the treaty or items 2, 6, 9, or 10 of the memorandum of understandings reached shall be treated as extraordinary expenditures and losses incurred through directives based on national policy and not related to the operations of the corporation, within the meaning of section 246(d) of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code, as added by the Act of June 29, 1948 (ch. 706, 62 Stat. 1075). The market value of Canal Zone Government property conveyed under this directive shall be removed from the capital investment of the United States in the Canal Zone Government without charge to the costs of operation of that agency. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be required for the necessary replacement of property or facilities of the Panama Canal Company or Canal Zone Government conveyed or rendered excess as the result of the treaty or memorandum, such amounts to be charged to the Panama Canal Company or the Canal Zone Government, respectively.

Approved August 30, 1957. (71 Stat. 509)

[19] 6 U.S.T. at 2279-85.

[20] 38 Stat. 1900.

[21] The treaty is reprinted at 84 Cong. Rec. 9825-33 (1939).

[22] 6 U.S.T. at 2285.

[23] The per curiam opinion at notes 22-23 and the accompanying text addresses the boundary rectification point, and concludes that whether there is a dispute about the property or territory has nothing to do with whether the President can dispose of the same. This, in my opinion, is not correct: (1) the prior practices in this unique area are relevant, as the Circular 175 Procedure provides; (2) a bona fide boundary dispute is clearly not the same thing as disposing of our undisputed property in the Panama Canal. The point that the Western lands were the subject of conflicting claims, which causes the majority to conclude that status has no bearing on whether Congressional enactment is required to convey land, is not analogous: it is not so much the status of the land itself that is crucial but the nature of the dispute and its relation to that status—that is, in all prior boundary settlements which appellee contends involved a cession, the dispute concerned claims of the grantor and grantee, and the settlement was of those claims. A dispute between two states, or between two private individuals, over a tract does not, by itself, give the land a peculiar status that removes it from the Art. IV requirement; thus, land that is subject to competing claims of two states of the United States would still require an act of Congress for conveyance to a foreign country.

Note 23 of the per curiam opinion, asserts difficulty in understanding how the validity of using the treaty process should in any way depend upon whether the nation to whom the land is conveyed previously "claimed" the land. The explanation is not difficult but the statement of the per curiam opinion involves a false assumption, i.e., that the property which the treaty recognizes as belonging to a prior claimant would be "conveyed" by the treaty. To so state is an inaccurate description, particularly of those treaties in the early days to which the per curiam opinion refers at p.23, n.21, where there was considerable ignorance of the territory involved. Since, for instance, Spain claimed the western lands to the 42nd parallel, the fact of their claim, based as it was on the recognized right of discovery, some minimal exploration in the most far reaching regions and very minor settlement, when that claim is recognized in a treaty by the United States it is almost impossible to conclude in view of our negligible exploration or settlement of the fringes of the Spanish claim that the United States was actually disposing of territory or property belonging to it. What rights we did possess in the eastern area flowed from the Louisiana Purchase from France of what had originally been territory claimed by Spain. Such situations are generally recognized as not being an alienation of territory but merely a recognition of the particular claim and a determination of the validity of the losing claim. See n.24. It follows, that since we admitted our claim was inferior, that the treaty in that respect did not dispose of any territory or property belonging to the United States. Here, however, the title of the United States to the property in question is recognized by all.

[24] Writing in 1929, Willoughby stated: "In several treaties in settlement of boundary disputes areas previously claimed by the United States as its own have been surrendered to foreign powers. These, however, can scarcely be considered as instances of the alienation of portions of its own territory, for the fact that the treaties were assented to by the United States is itself evidence that it was conceded that the claim that the areas in question belonged to the United States was unfounded. There has been no instance in which territory, indisputably belonging to the United States, has been alienated to another power." 1 W. Willoughby, The Consitutional Law of the United States 572 (2d ed. 1929) (emphasis added).

Crandall writes that resolutions were introduced in the House in 1820 following the Florida treaty of 1819, which would have asserted that no treaty purporting to alienate any portion of the territory belonging to the United States could be valid without the concurrence of Congress, but no vote was taken on the matter. In the debates on the resolution, Mr. Clay, who introduced the resolution, stated that a treaty could fix the boundaries of the United States without the concurrence of Congress "when the fixation of the limits simply was the object . . . In all these cases, the treaty-making power merely reduces to certainty that which was before unascertained. It announces the fact; it proclaims in a tangible form the existence of the boundary; it does not make a new boundary; it asserts only where the new boundary was. But it cannot under color of fixing a boundary previously existing, though not in fact marked, undertake to cede away, without the concurrence of Congress, whole provinces." He stated that if the subject was mixed, i.e., partly cession and partly fixing a boundary, the consent of Congress was necessary. Mr. Clay believed that the Florida treaty was more than a boundary determination.

Mr. Lowndes, of South Carolina, took a different position and contended there could be no adjustment of a claim to a boundary without some cession of supposed right by one or the other party. Mr. Anderson, of Kentucky, believed that the treaty power must permit boundary settlements: "Its frequent operation on the settlement of differences of this kind, must have been contemplated by the Convention; and it could never have been intended, that, in a general grant of power, it should be construed not to apply to cases, which had been invariably, in all countries, the subjects of its operation."

Boundary rectification is not an example of cession of territory. In addition to being an adjustment of claims, it is supported by prior practices, as Mr. Anderson points out: the prior practice of boundary rectification involves a matter different from the wholesale relinquishment of large areas of undisputed territory.

S. Crandall, Treaties, Their Making and Enforcement 227–29 (1916).

[25] See note 17 supra, § 102(b).

[26] Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That with respect to that parcel of land in the Panama Canal Zone known as the Paitilla Point Military Reservation, title to which was acquired by the Government of the United States under the conventions concluded on November 18, 1903, and September 2, 1914, between the United States and Panama, the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to effect with the Republic of Panama, a modification of the boundary line between the Panama Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama so that such line shall then run as follows: [Property description]

SEC. 2. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to authorize the Secretary of State to convey or to surrender to the Government of Panama the title which the Government of the United States now holds in that parcel of land which may be detached from the Panama Canal Zone by virtue of the provisions of section 1 of this Act.

SEC. 3. No civil or criminal case that may be pending in the courts of the Panama Canal Zone at the time this Act shall become effective shall be affected thereby, either as to its present status or as to future proceedings, including final judgment or disposition.

Approved, May 3, 1932.

[27] This boundary change was not a boundary dispute where there would be no cession. See note 24 supra. Instead, the United States wanted to build a new legation in Panama, and the chosen site was in the Zone. A legation could not be built on United States territory; hence, the property was alienated to Panama, which then retransferred the property back to the United States' jurisdiction, but with diplomatic immunity and immunity from local jurisdiction for use as a legation. 75 CONG. REC. 4652–57 (1932).

[28] Agreement for the Lease of Defense Sites in the Republic of Panama, 57 Stat. 1232 (May 18, 1942).

[29] Agreement between the United States of America and Panama respecting general relations. 59 Stat. 1289 (May 18, 1942).

[30] Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to transfer to the Republic of Panama all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to water and sewerage systems installed by the United States in the cities of Panama and Colon: Provided, however, That pending the establishment of an independent water-supply system, and so long as the Republic of Panama desires to utilize a supply of water from the Canal Zone, it shall pay quarterly to the appropriate Canal Zone authorities the rate of B/0.09 per one thousand gallons or such other reasonable rate as may be agreed upon by both Governments: And provided further, That the turning over to the Government of the Republic of Panama of the physical properties of the water and sewerage systems and the administration thereof, including the collection of the water rates, does not in any way modify the existing arrangement in respect to responsibility for the public health services of the cities of Panama and Colon as specified in the second paragraph of article VII of the Convention between the United States of America and Panama, signed at Washington, November 18, 1903.

SEC. 2. The Panama Railroad Company is hereby authorized to convey to the Republic of Panama, in whole or in part, all of its right, title, and interest in and to so much of the lands of the Panama Railroad Company located in the cities of Panama and Colon as, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, are no longer needed for the operation of the Panama Railroad or for the operation, maintenance, sanitation, or defense of the Panama Canal: Provided, That any such instruments of conveyance shall contain a provision under which the Panama Railroad Company and any of its successors in interest agrees to fully protect the Government of the United States against any claims for damages or losses heretofore or hereafter incurred by any lessee of any of the lands covered by such conveyance. The authority conferred by this section shall not be exercised after June 30, 1944.

(a) Any conveyance of any land in pursuance of the authority contained herein shall be deemed to release any and all reversionary rights of the United States in said property.

(b) The provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the disposal of certain lands held by the Panama Railroad Company on Manzanillo Island, Republic of Panama," approved July 10, 1937, so far as they may conflict with the provisions of this joint resolution, are hereby modified accordingly.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $2,700,000, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Republic of Panama an amount equivalent to the principal and interest paid by that government on account of the credit of $2,500,000 made available to it by the Export-Import Bank for the construction of Panama's share of the Chorrera-Rio Hato Highway, and to pay to the Export-Import Bank an amount sufficient to liquidate the remaining obligation of the Republic of Panama to that bank on account of the aforesaid credit.

Approved May 3, 1943.

[31] Appellee's claims with respect to the minor matters referred to in Articles VI and VII of the 1955 Eisenhower-Remon Treaty are answered at 34–36, supra.

[32] 2 Farrand 533 states: "which passed in the affirmative." See also, id., 541.

[33] None of the debates or amendments at the convention referred to United States "property." The concern of the delegates was with territorial and other rights, such as navigational rights on rivers and offshore fishing rights and the rights of sovereignty over such land and areas. Property rights, such as the United States owns in the physical property of the Panama Railroad and the Panama Canal which were purchased or constructed on land that was purchased, were not debated in the convention. The clarity of the reference to "property" eliminated need for debate.

[34] In other words, appellee's argument reasons as follows: At the outset, the draft of section 4 under consideration said that a treaty required for approval a two-thirds vote of the Senate. A majority thought that peace treaties were good, and therefore adopted an amendment excepting peace treaties from the two-third requirement (and thereby requiring only a majority). But at least two of the Framers thought that this authorized the transfer of territory with only a majority vote, and therefore sought to except peace treaties that transferred territory from the peace treaty exception (which would require a two-thirds vote to transfer property). Eventually all amendments were defeated, and a two-thirds vote was required for all treaties. Appellee reasons that since the two Framers above "got their way," the Convention believed that territory could be transferred by treaty without an Act of Congress. This does not necessarily follow, as the text demonstrates. It may have been that when the two Framers proposed their amendment, a substantial number of the convention realized that the amendment could well pass, and that that would create a conflict—or perhaps erase—the action taken earlier, namely Art. IV, sec. 3, cl. 2, which allowed only Congress to dispose of property and territory. Faced with this prospect, a majority might have decided to abandon the peace treaty exception altogether, so as to preserve the language in Art. IV without compromise. Their reconsideration of the peace treaty exception, and its eventual rejection, is consistent with this interpretation.

[35] Committee report, at 68.

[36] Id.

[37] At 17 U.S. 247, the Court stated:

"[T]here are many authorities where it is held that a treaty may convey to a grantee a good title to such lands without an act of Congress conferring it, and that Congress has no constitutional power to settle or interfere with rights under treaties, except in cases purely political."

The cases cited in the footnote to this statement do not support the argument that the President by Treaty is empowered to transfer the Panama Canal and Railroad. The cases cited are:

1. Wilson 1. Wall, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 83, 89 (1867). This case is only authoritative on part of the Holden statement, and has no significance for the transfer of the Panama Canal and Railroad. A treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Indian Tribe entitled each Choctaw head of family to a section of land. The treaty was signed in 1830; in 1834, Wall, a Choctaw, entered into an agreement with Wilson to transfer the land to him as soon as he obtained it. He made the transfer in 1836, and was paid $750. Wall's children then sued Wilson for the land, alleging a constructive trust in their favor. Wilson claimed a bona fide purchaser defense. The Alabama Supreme Court held for plaintiffs, and the Supreme Court reversed.

Congress became involved in 1841; complaints concerning the Indians losing the land in the manner above caused Congress to enact a statute clarifying part of the treaty. The Court said what Congress did would not affect the case:

"Now, while it is freely conceded that this construction given to the treaty should form a rule for the subsequent conduct of the department, it cannot affect titles before given by the government, nor does it pretend to do so. Congress has no constitutional power to settle the rights under treaties except in cases purely political. The construction of them is the peculiar province of the judiciary, when a case shall arise between individuals. The legislature may prescribe to the Executive how any mere administrative act shall be performed, and such was the only aim and purpose of this act." 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) at 89.

Thus, this case merely holds that a subsequent act of Congress cannot affect titles that were valid when conveyed. It does not control or even offer any assistance on the facts in the instant case.

2. American Insurance Co. v. 356 Bales of Cotton, 26 U.S. (1 Pet.) 511, 542 (1828), involved the validity of the judgment of a Territorial Court which ordered the purchaser of cotton salvaged from a shipwreck off Key West to make restitution to the insurer. The court held in an opinion by Chief Justice Marshall that the treaty with Spain ceded Florida to the United States and thereafter Congress was authorized to provide for the creation of territorial courts with admiralty jurisdiction. This upheld the establishment of a territorial court by the territorial legislature. The Court simply noted that Congress passed an act authorizing a Territorial Government, and that such government was thereby authorized to establish the court in question.

3. Foster v. Neilson, 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) 254 (1829): This case involved a dispute over land that was located in territory acquired by the Louisiana Purchase (the Treaty of Paris, 1803). Plaintiffs claimed under a grant from the Spanish Governor in 1804; defendants answered that the land had been ceded to the United States by France in 1803, and that plaintiffs grant was void. The dismissal of the petition was affirmed by the Supreme Court. First, the Court said that the "Legislature" had undertaken certain acts amounting to a construction of the 1803 Treaty which the court could not oppose. The Acts were passed by Congress and concerned rules and regulations for the management of the new territories.

A question like this respecting the boundaries of nations, is, as has been truly said, more a politicall than a legal question; and in its discussion, the courts of every country must respect the pronounced will of the Legislature. [i.e., Congress]." 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) at 309.

Part of the case also involved the construction of Art. VI of the 1819 Treaty with Spain which provided in effect that grants from Spain prior to the Treaty would be respected by the United States i.e., "ratified and confirmed." The question was whether the treaty was self-executing with respect to the grants, or whether an Act of Congress was necessary to "ratify and confirm" and thereby respect the grants. The Court said the Legislature must act; that it had not done so here, and thus prior laws would be respected. The Court stated:

"A treaty is in its nature a contract between two nations, not a Legislative Act. . . . Our Constitution declares a treaty to be the law of the land. It is, consequently, to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an Act of the Legislature, whenever it operates of itself without the aid of any legislative provision. But when the terms of the stipulation import a contract—when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act—the treaty addresses itself to the political, not the judicial department; and the Legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for the court."

27 U.S. (2 Pet.) at 314 (emphasis added). This is not inconsistent with the position that a legislative provision is necessary under Art. IV to convey property of the United States. This case is not authority for the proposition that Congress has not role; if anything, it tends the other way.

4. Worcester v. Georgia, 31 U.S. (6 Pet.) 515 (1834). This case concerns a treaty with the Cherokees. Petitioner (a missionary) was a prisoner who claimed that the law under which he was convicted was void, being repugnant to the United States Constitution. The opinion stated:

"[The Constitution] confers on Congress the powers of war and peace: of making treaties, and of regulating commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes. The powers comprehend all that is required for the regulation of our intercourse with the Indians. They are not limited by any restrictions on their free actions. . . The Constitution, by declaring treaties already made, as well as those to be made, to be the supreme law of the land, has adopted and sanctioned the previous treaties with the Indian nations, and consequently admits their rank among those powers who are capable of making treaties . . ."

This language of the case does not approach the issues raised by the attempt to transfer and convey the Panama Canal and Railroad and other United States property.

5. Crews v. Burcham, 66 U.S. (1 Black) 352 (1861) is another case involving a reservation of Indian lands. The decision holds that the reservation creates an equitable estate. The opinion does not discuss the authority or power of Congress.

6. The Kansas Indians, 72 U.S. (5 Wall.) 737 (1866): The issue here was whether land belonging to the Shawnees was taxable by a county government. It was held that so long as the "treaties and laws of Congress" protect the Indians, they are immune from the operation of state laws. This recognizes the authority of treaties and Congress in said matters. The scope and authority of Congress was not otherwise discussed.

7. Mitchel v. United States, 34 U.S. (9 Pet.) 711 (1895) similarly does not control here. Mitchel and the United States both claimed certain land in Florida under deeds of conveyance. Mitchel's claims were based on deeds from Indian tribes, and the United States claims were asserted on the basis of the treaty with Spain. The issue was whose deed was superior. In stating the facts, the Court remarked:

"In taking possession of Florida pursuant to the treaty, and in establishing a government in and over it, Congress have acted on the same principles as those which were adopted by this court in the former cases. In the Act of 1821, for carrying the treaty into execution, Congress authorizes the vesting the whole power of government in such person as the president may direct for the maintaining the inhabitants in the free enjoyment of their property." 34 U.S. (9 Pet.) at 736 (emphasis added).

In so acting Congress was relying upon Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2, which was the source of its power to "make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory . . ." (Emphasis added). Thus, the power to make rules and regulations concerning the proper management of the new territories was recognized as existing in Congress, and since the power to dispose of United States property is subject to the same language of the Constitution, there is some support for concluding that such power was also vested exclusively in Congress. Of course, there are some inherent differences between the acquisition of property and the government of property after it is acquired; but we are not dealing here with a contemporaneous disposition of property that is being acquired, but instead are dealing with property that has belonged to the United States for a long time, some of it since 1903. So any reason for applyingg a different rule as to exclusivity is non-existent.

Thus there is no reason why Congress should not be recognized as possessing the exclusive power to dispose of Government property. In other words, if disposition of property is a concurrent power, the power in general must be concurrent with respect to all aspects of Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. Since such power is not concurrent with respect to rules and regulations of newly acquired territory, it should not be concurrent with respect to the other powers in the relevant paragraph.

8. United States v. Brooks, 51 U.S. (10 How.) 442 (1850), involved the construction of a supplemental article to a treaty with the Caddo Indians. It held that Indian lands reserved to Indians by treaty were held by them in fee simple since they acquired perfect title by treaty. Since it involves land reserved for Indians, it is in the same category as the other Indian treaty cases and it does not affect this case.

9. Doe v. Wilson, 64 U.S. (23 How.) 457, 461 (1859), involved Indian lands, but contains no reference to the scope of Congress' authority to dispose of property. The decision holds the Indian was a tenant-in-common with the United States and that the deed of conveyance by the Indian, which he executed prior to the selection of the lands, conveyed the interest he would have taken if living.

10. The last two cites are Blair v. Pathkiller, 2 Yerg. 407 (1830), and Harris v. Doe, 4 Blackf. 369 (1837). They are state cases.

Blair v. Pathkiller, a Tennessee decision, involved a claim of title and the effect of Indian Treaties and state statutes enacted before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. The reservation of 640 acres to the head of each Indian family was held valid pursuant to treaties with the Cherokees of 1817 and 1819. The court pointed out that part of the consideration paid to the Cherokee Nation for its title to the land ceded was the reservation to the Indians of certain lands which were the subject of the litigation.

Harris v. Doe is an Indiana Supreme Court decision on an action in ejectment from land ceded by the Miami Indians by treaty to the United States and by the same treaty granted to Lafontaine and son, the predecessors in title of the defendant. The trial judge charged the jury that it could consider as evidence a special law of Congress as confirming the fee in the predecessor of the defendant. This decision is subject to the same infirmities as support for appellee's treaty contention as the other Indian Treaty cases and is additionally weakened by the fact that Congress did find it necessary to enact a law to confirm the title of one who claimed under a treaty.

[38] In the Supreme Court, Later-Secretary of State, Frank B. Kellogg, was a counsel on the brief of appellee and Cushman K. Davis, one of the Plenipotentiaries of the United States in the 1898 Treaty with Spain, argued the case.

[39] See notes 23 and 24, and accompanying text.

[40] See note 18 supra.

[41] Bunau-Varilla, Envoy Extraordinary for the Republic of Panama, in a negotiation of the treaty for the Canal decided that the prior treaty draft would not do:

The "indispensable condition of success" was to write a new treaty "so well adapted to American exigencies" that it would be certain to pass in the Senate by the required two-thirds majority. A failure to obtain that two-thirds majority, he was convinced, could still mean a Nicaragua canal after all. The major difference in the new treaty must be in the share of sovereignty attributed to the United States within the canal zone. [Perpetuity was already provided for.] D. McCullough, The Path Between the Seas 391 (1977).

[42] The Standing of the Members of the House of Representatives to Request a Declaration of the Law.

The district court concluded that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction over plaintiff's complaint because, in its view, plaintiffs had not met the " 'irreducible constitutional minimum' of a concrete injury in fact to their legislative roles." Memo. Op. at 12–13. I disagree with this conclusion.

Recently, we have considered cases involving standing of Congressmen to bring actions in the federal courts. Judge Wilkey's opinion in Harrington v. Bush, 553 F.2d 190 (D.C. Cir. 1977), provides a thorough discussion of the applicable analytical framework:

"The most basic point to consider is that there are no special standards for determining Congressional standing questions. Although the interests and injuries which legislators assert are surely different from those put forth by other litigants, the technique for analyzing the interests is the same.

"There is no single test or formula to be derived from the case law to determine if a particular complaining party has standing to sue. Rather, the case law provides a series of inquiries designed primarily [as] to determine if the complaining party has suffered some injury in fact." 553 F. 2d at 204, 205–06 (emphasis original).

The injury in fact requirement is constitutionally mandated; it is one of the requirements designed to implement the Art. III "case or controversy" limitation on federal judicial power. Association of Data Processing Service Organizations, Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 151 (1970); Harrington v. Bush, supra, 553 F. 2d at 206. Footnote 68 in the Harrington opinion outlined the four separate inquiries demanded by the Supreme Court cases on standing: (1) first, and most important, that there be an injury in fact; (2) that the interests being asserted by the plaintiffs are within the zone of interests to be protected by the statute or constitutional guarantee in question; (3) that the injury result from (or be caused by) the challenged "illegal" action; and (4) that the injury be capable of being redressed by a favorable decision. 553 F. 2d at 205–06 n. 68. The district court found no injury in fact, and therefore had no reason to consider the other three inquiries. As to the critical question of whether an injury in fact exists, it is my conclusion that it does.

The prior cases in this circuit provide examples of how the analytical scheme articulated in Harrington applies to particular situations. Kennedy v. Sampson, 167 U.S. App. D.C. 192, 511 F. 2d 430 (1974), involved Senator Kennedy's suit against the Administrator of the General Services Administration and the Chief of the White House Records seeking a declaration that the Family Practice of Medicine Act became law on December 25, 1970, and an order requiring appellants to publish the Act as a validly enacted law. The question on the merits was the effect of President Nixon's pocket veto; a preliminary question was the standing of Sen. Kennedy to bring the suit. The court found that Kennedy had standing, as a "logical nexus" existed between the status he asserted and the claim sought to be adjudicated:

"If appellants' arguments are accepted, then appellee's vote in favor of the bill in question has been nullified and appellee has no right to demand or participate in a vote to override the President's veto. Conversely, if appellee's interpretation of the veto clause is correct, then the bill became law without the President's signature. In short, disposition of the substantive issue will determine the effectiveness vel non of appellee's actions as a legislator with respect to the legislation in question." 511 F.2d at 433.

Thus, in Kennedy, the facts presented a situation where the Executive's action had in effect nullified the Senator's vote; the validity of the action was determinative on the effect of the vote. And particularly he had been prevented from exercising his constitutional right to vote on the motion to overrule. In such circumstances, this court concluded that Senator Kennedy had standing to challenge the vote. In Mitchell v. Laird, 159 U.S.App.D.C. 344, 488 F.2d 611 (1973), in dictum we recognized the standing of thirteen members of the House of Representatives to litigate presidential war powers, when we stated that a declaratory judgment "would bear upon the duties of plaintiffs to consider whether to impeach defendants, and upon plaintiffs' quite distinct and different duties to make appropriations to support the hostilities, or to take other legislative actions related to such hostilities, such as raising an army or enacting other civil or criminal legislation. In our view, these considerations are sufficient to give plaintiffs a standing to make their complaint." 488 F.2d at 614.

We concluded that plaintiffs lacked standing to bring their claims in both Harrington, supra, and in Metcalf v. National Petroleum Council, 553 F.2d 176 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Neither plaintiff had demonstrated a cognizable injury to his person or to his ability to function as a legislator. Nothing impeded the legislative process whatsoever. Representative Harrington sought a declaration that certain foreign and domestic activities of the Central Intelligence Agency were illegal and also an injunction prohibiting the CIA from using the funding and reporting provision of the Central Intelligence Agency Act of 1949 in connection with allegedly illegal activities. After an extensive analysis of the supposed injuries claimed by the plaintiff, we concluded:

"Since the appellant in this case has suffered no injury in a constitutional sense, he is in effect seeking to use the court to vindicate his own political values and preferences. By so doing, appellant is asking us in large part to usurp the legislative function and to grant him the relief which his colleagues have refused him." 553 F.2d at 215 (emphasis added).

Since appellant failed to show an injury in fact in the constitutional sense, we affirmed the district court's dismissal of his complaint.

A similar situation was posed in the Metcalf case, where Senator Metcalf sought declaratory and injunctive relief, alleging that the National Petroleum Council was unlawfully functioning as an advisory committee in violation of the Federal Advisory Committee Act and the Federal Energy Administration Act. He contended that the Council was not fairly balanced in membership and was improperly influenced by certain petroleum industry interest groups. We noted that his complaint was a generalized grievance that did not allege any specific, objective, present harm or threat of harm; the nature and effect of the unspecified harm was indeterminate. 553 F.2d at 187–88. Nothing impeded the functioning of Sen. Metcalf in his role as legislator, and we affirmed the district court's dismissal of the complaint.

We next considered a claimed controversy involving seventeen Congressmen who challenged General Services Administration regulations developed from federal funds. Our decision in Public Citizen v. Sampson, 169 U.S.App.D.C. 301, 515 F.2d 1018 (D.C. Cir. 1975), affirmed without opinion the decision of the district court, reported at 379 F. Supp. 662, granting the defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint. In evaluating plaintiffs' standing as Congressmen, the district court stated:

"It is beyond peradventure that plaintiff Congressmen could tomorrow propose legislation regulating the contractual authority of the General Services Administration." 379 F. Supp. at 667.

The powers of the plaintiff Congressmen in that case as Representatives were not diminished in any respect.

As noted above, an injury in fact is required for standing in all cases; with respect to Congressmen as plaintiff, the case law in this circuit, not surprisingly, demonstrates that this court will demand a showing of an injury in fact. We could not otherwise justify our jurisdiction. In all cases, this requirement helps guarantee that the "controversy" has sufficient adverseness and that the parties have sufficient interests to make out a justifiable dispute that satisfies the Art. III case or controversy requirement. Yet in the Congressmen cases, another dimension underlies our insistence on an injury in fact. Our prior cases express concern that Congressmen might seek redress in the courts simply because they failed to persuade their colleagues in making a particular legislative judgment, or they fear that they cannot succeed in a future vote on a particular matter of legislative concern. To grant such Congressmen standing to litigate their claims in the judicial system would have the effect of circumventing the legislative process. In cases in which this court has found the existence of standing, which means that an injury in fact was found to exist, there is no apparent risk that the legislative process will be circumvented or evaded by deciding the case on the merits. It is my opinion that the Congressmen in this case have suffered and are presently suffering an injury in fact, and that the concern which underlies our prior cases—namely, that we have no jurisdiction where a Member of Congress is seeking to evade the legislative process—is simply not a factor in this case.

On September 16, 1977, President Carter transmitted to the Senate for advice and consent to ratification two treaties—the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal, and the Panama Canal Treaty. In our opinion we only consider the transfer of property provided for by the Canal Treaty and not any of the rules and regulations concerning the operations of the Canal that are in the Neutrality Treaty. The transmittal of the Senate was made without the inclusion of the usual provisions that is inserted in treaties and international agreements when any participation by the House of Representatives is called for. By this act, President Carter conformed to an earlier opinion of August 11, 1977 by the Attorney General stating that the approval of the treaties by the House of Representatives even "absent statutory authorization" was not necessary even though the Canal Treaty disposed of United States property. The procedures implemented for obtaining the Senate's advice and consent, which continue today, did not and do not contemplate approval by the House of Representatives to any portion of the treaties. It is my view that the injury in fact to the members of the House of Representatives occurred when President Carter transmitted the treaty in the form described above, i.e., without the customary provisions for enactment of necessary legislation by Congress where United States property was to be transferred. At this point, because of the form of the treaty, it was clear that the House of Representatives could not participate, and insofar as Art. IV required its participation, that this constitutional requirement was being violated. This is a sufficient injury to accord standing. This injury in fact was further substantiated when the Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate acceded to the opinion of the Attorney General of August 11, 1977. Senate Executive Report N, No. 95–12, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. 65–69, February 3, 1978.

The central point posed by the Congressmen's claim is that Art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 requires that the House participate in the disposition of property: an Act of Congress, it is alleged, is required by the Constitution. The submission of the treaty to the Senate in its present form (See Appendix) clearly obviates any participation of the House and since the Senate is presently concurring in that decision, whatever action the House may take is effectively blocked by the President and the Senate. It appears extremely unlikely—a near-certainty—that the Senate will amend the treaty as submitted to permit House participation in the disposition of property. The Report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations states:

"The Committee finds that the . . . Panama Canal Treaty can validly transfer to Panama property belonging to the United States without a need for implementing legislation." Committee Report at 69.

It is extremely unlikely that the Committee will change its position on this issue and recommend that implementing legislation be sought. It is extremely unlikely that the Senate as a whole will reject the recommendation of its Committee on this point. The injury that occurred when the advise and consent procedures were initiated continues so long as the treaty remains in its present form and House concurrence is not sought. Thus, the entire membership of the House of Representatives is suffering present injury to its constitutional rights.

On August 11, 1977, Attorney General Bell issued his opinion on the procedures necessary for disposition of property, with special reference to the ratification procedures for the Panama Canal Treaty. This opinion was cited and relied upon by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Committee Report, at 69. Therein, Attorney General Bell opined that a treaty may dispose of territory or property belonging to the United States absent statutory authorization. While an Attorney General's opinion is not binding on a court, see Harris County Commrs. v. Moore, 420 U.S. 77, 87 n. 10 (1975); McElroy v. Guagliardo, 369 U.S. 281, 285 (1960); Romero v. Coldwell, 455 F.2d 1163, 1165 (5th Cir. 1972), there is considerable authority that it is binding on an executive official who requests the opinion on a matter of law. Here, the Secretary of State requested the opinion, and the Bell opinion is definitive on the ratification procedure to be employed.

A long line of Attorney General opinions state that the teaching in the opinion is binding as a matter of law on those who request it. 5 Op. Atty Gen. 97, 97 (1849); 6 Op. Atty Gen. 326, 334 (1854); 20 20 Op. Atty Gen. 654, 659 (1893); 25 Op. Atty Gen. 301, 303–04 (1904). In Smith v. Jackson, 246 U.S. 388 (1918), the Court stated:

"[W]e are of opinion that it is obvious on the face of the statement of the case that the auditor had no power to refuse to carry out the law, and that any doubt which he might have had should have been subordinated, first, to the ruling of the Attorney General, and second, beyond all possible question, to the judgments of the courts below" 246 U.S. at 390–91.

United States Bedding Co. v. United States, 55 Ct. Cl. 459, 460–61 (1920) is to the same effect. The general rule does not apply when the matter is within the proper discretion of a department official; hence, the statement has been made that opinions are only entitled to weight and are not controlling. In those circumstances, the point is simply that an opinion is not controlling in a proper area of discretion. See Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., 232 Minn. 350, 359–60, 45 45 N.W.2d 640, 646–47 (1951); 17 Op. Atty Gen. 332, 333 (1882).

Hence, it is clear that the opinion of Attorney General Bell with respect to the procedure by which the treaties would be ratified was, in effect, binding on the Secretary who requested it. This buttresses our conclusion that the procedure, which did not and does not involve the House, was solidified at the beginning of the transmittal process, and the injury in fact was suffered at that time.

This injury has some similarities to that suffered in Kennedy; the right to vote is effectively denied by the challenged action. It is claimed by appellee that the House is free to vote on any version of the treaty; but the procedure is already decided, and the ratification process is underway. As far as the President and Senate are concerned, any action taken by the House is irrelevant and inconsequential. The House is, in fact, being denied its right to participate, and the existence of this circumstance is enough to confer standing on this court to declare the law. This is quite distinct from the situation in Metcalf and Harrington where the plaintiffs were free to enact subsequent legislation which could affect the merits of the issues. Here, there is nothing the House can do which will alter the fact that they are being denied any present role in the process, as may be required by the Constitution. Moreover, there is no suggestion here that a judicial ruling on the merits will circumvent the legislative process in any way. Rather, the judicial ruling sought here would protect and implement the constitutional legislative process.

Under these circumstances, applying the relevant precedents in this circuit and the general principles outlined by the Supreme Court, it must be said that the plaintiffs have suffered an injury in fact sufficient to confer standing. A self-executing treaty means that if it is ratified, and the exchange of documents with Panama causes it to come into force, any objection by the House of Representatives or any other person as to its validity will receive the reply that Buanu-Varilla gave to Federico Boyd in 1903 that protestations would be pointless "as everything is finished." D. McCullough, supra note 41, at 395.

There can be no serious dispute about plaintiffs satisfying the other three inquiries relating to standing. Clearly, the denial of the Congressmen's participatory role in the disposition of property is "within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the . . . constitutional guarantee in question." Ass'n of Data Processing Serv. Organization, Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153 (1970). Also, the injury must be such "that fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant, and not injury that results from the independent action of some third party not before the court." Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U.S. 41–42 (1976). Here, it is the President's submission of the treaties to the Senate without provisions calling for Congress to act in the disposition of United States property which has caused the denial of the plaintiffs' participatory role under the Constitution in the disposition of property. Finally, the injury must be one "likely to be redressed by a favorable decision." Id., 426 U.S. at 38. A judicial decision interpreting the Constitution and declaring the law on the controversy can afford the plaintiffs the precise relief that they request—their participation in the disposition of property to the extent that same is provided for by the Constitution.

It is my view that plaintiffs have standing to bring this action.

APPENDIX

TEXTS OF TREATIES RELATING TO THE PANAMA CANAL

PANAMA CANAL TREATY

The United States of America and the Republic of Panama.

Acting in the spirit of the Joint Declaration of April 3, 1964, by the Representatives of the Governments of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, and of the Joint Statement of Principles of February 7, 1974, initialed by the Secretary of State of the United States of America and the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Panama, and

Acknowledging the Republic of Panama's sovereignty over its territory,

Have decided to terminate the prior Treaties pertaining to the Panama Canal and to conclude a new Treaty to serve as the basis for a new relationship between them and, accordingly, have agreed upon the following:

Article I

Abrogation of Prior Treaties and Establishment of a New Relationship

1. Upon its entry into force, this Treaty terminates and supersedes:

(a) The Isthmian Canal Convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, signed at Washington, November 18, 1903;

(b) The Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation signed at Washington, March 2, 1936, and the Treaty of Mutual Understanding and Cooperation and the related Memorandum of Understandings Reached, signed at Panama, January 25, 1955, between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama;

(c) All other treaties, conventions, agreements and exchanges of notes between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama concerning the Panama Canal which were in force prior to the entry into force of this Treaty; and

(d) Provisions concerning the Panama Canal which appear in other treaties, conventions, agreements and exchanges of notes between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama which were in force prior to the entry into force of this Treaty.

2. In accordance with the terms of this Treaty and related agreements, the Republic of Panama, as territorial sovereign, grants to the United States of America, for the duration of this Treaty, the rights necessary to regulate the transit of ships through the Panama Canal, and to manage, operate, maintain, improve, protect and defend the Canal. The Republic of Panama guarantees to the United States of America the peaceful use of the land and water areas which it has been granted the rights to use for such purposes pursuant to this Treaty and related agreements.

3. The Republic of Panama shall participate increasingly in the management and protection and defense of the Canal, as provided in this Treaty.

4. In view of the special relationship established by this Treaty, the United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall cooperate to assure the uninterrupted and efficient operation of the Panama Canal.

Article II

Ratification, Entry Into Force, and Termination

1. This Treaty shall be subject to ratification in accordance with the constitutional procedures of the two Parties. The instruments of ratification of this Treaty shall be exchanged at Panama at the same time as the instruments of ratification of the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal, signed this date, are exchanged. This Treaty shall enter into force, simultaneously with the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal, six calendar months from the date of the exchange of the instruments of ratification.

2. This Treaty shall terminate at noon, Panama time, December 31, 1999.

Article III

Canal Operation and Management

1. The Republic of Panama, as territorial sovereign, grants to the United States of America the rights to manage, operate, and maintain the Panama Canal, its complementary works, installations and equipment and to provide for the orderly transit of vessels through the Panama Canal. The United States of America accepts the grant of such rights and undertakes to exercise them in accordance with this Treaty and related agreements.

2. In carrying out the foregoing responsibilities, the United States of America may:

(a) Use for the aforementioned purposes, without cost except as provided in this Treaty, the various installations and areas (including the Panama Canal) and waters, described in the Agreement in Implementation of this Article, signed this date, as well as such other areas and installations as are made available to the United Sates of America under this Treaty and related agreements, and take the measures necessary to ensure sanitation of such areas;

(b) Make such improvements and alterations to the aforesaid installations and areas as it deems appropriate, consistent with the terms of this Treaty;

(c) Make and enforce all rules pertaining to the passage of vessels through the Canal and other rules with respect to navigation and maritime matters, in accordance with this Treaty and related agreements. The Republic of Panama will lend its cooperation, when necessary, in the enforcement of such rules;

(d) Establish, modify, collect and retain tolls for the use of the Panama Canal, and other charges, and establish and modify methods of their assessment;

(e) Regulate relations with employees of the United States Government;

(f) Provide supporting services to facilitate the performance of its responsibilities under this Article;

(g) Issue and enforce regulations for the effective exercise of the rights and responsibilities of the United States of America under this Treaty and related agreements. The Republic of Panama will lend its cooperation, when necessary, in the enforcement of such rules; and

(h) Exercise any other right granted under this Treaty, or otherwise agreed upon between the two Parties.

3. Pursuant to the foregoing grant of rights, the United States of America shall, in accordance with the terms of this Treaty and the provisions of United States law, carry out its responsibilities by means of a United States Government agency called the Panama Canal Commission, which shall be constituted by and in conformity with the laws of the United States of America.

(a) The Panama Canal Commission shall be supervised by a Board composed of nine members, five of whom shall be nationals of the United States of America, and four of whom shall be Panamanian nationals proposed by the Republic of Panama for appointment to such positions by the United States of America in a timely manner.

(b) Should the Republic of Panama request the United States of America to remove a Panamanian national from membership on the Board, the United States of America shall agree to such request. In that event, the Republic of Panama shall propose another Panamanian national for appointment by the United States of America to such position in a timely manner. In case of removal of a Panamanian member of the Board at the initiative of the United States of America, both Parties will consult in advance in order to reach agreement concerning such removal, and the Republic of Panama shall propose another Panamanian national for appointment by the United States of America in his stead.

(c) The United States of America shall employ a national of the United States of America as Administrator of the Panama Canal Commission, and a Panamanian national as Deputy Administrator, through December 31, 1989. Beginning January 1, 1990, a Panamanian national shall be employed as the Administrator and a national of the United States of America shall occupy the position of Deputy Administrator. Such Panamanian nationals shall be proposed to the United States of America by the Republic of Panama for appointment to such positions by the United States of America.

(d) Should the United States of America remove the Panamanian national from his position as Deputy Administrator, or Administrator, the Republic of Panama shall propose another Panamanian national for appointment to such position by the United States of America.

4. An illustrative description of the activities the Panama Canal Commission will perform in carrying out the responsibilities and rights of the United States of America under this Article is set forth at the Annex. Also set forth in the Annex are procedures for the discontinuance or transfer of those activities performed prior to the entry into force of this Treaty by the Panama Canal Company or the Canal Zone Government which are not to be carried out by the Panama Canal Commission.

5. The Panama Canal Commission shall reimburse the Republic of Panama for the costs incurred by the Republic of Panama in providing the following public services in the Canal operating areas and in housing areas set forth in the Agreement in Implementation of Article III of this Treaty and occupied by both United States and Panamanian citizen employees of the Panama Canal Commission: police, fire protection, street maintenance, street lighting, street cleaning, traffic management and garbage collection. The Panama Canal Commission shall pay the Republic of Panama the sum of ten million United States dollars ($10,000,000) per annum for the foregoing services. It is agreed that every three years from the date that this Treaty enters into force, the costs involved in furnishing said services shall be reexamined to determine whether adjustment of the annual payment should be made because of inflation and other relevant factors affecting the cost of such services.

6. The Republic of Panama shall be responsible for providing, in all areas comprising the former Canal Zone, services of a general jurisdictional nature such as customs and immigration, postal services, courts and licensing, in accordance with this Treaty and related agreements.

7. The United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall establish a Panama Canal Consultative Committee, composed of an equal number of high-level representatives of the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, and which may appoint such subcommittees as it may deem appropriate. This Committee shall advise the United States of America and the Republic of Panama on matters of policy affecting the Canal's operation. In view of both Parties' special interest in the continuity and efficiency of the Canal operation in the future, the Committee shall advise on matters such as general tolls policy, employment and training policies to increase the participation of Panamanian nationals in the operation of the Canal, and international policies on matters concerning the Canal. The Committee's recommendations shall be transmitted to the two Governments, which shall give such recommendations full consideration in the formulation of such policy decisions.

8. In addition to the participation of Panamanian nationals at high management levels of the Panama Canal Commission, as provided for in paragraph 3 of this Article, there shall be growing participation of Panamanian nationals at all other levels and areas of employment in the aforesaid commission, with the objective of preparing, in an orderly and efficient fashion, for the assumption by the Republic of Panama of full responsibility for the management, operation and maintenance of the Canal upon the termination of this Treaty.

9. The use of the areas, waters and installations with respect to which the United States of America is granted rights pursuant to this Article, and the rights and legal status of United States Government agencies and employees operating in the Republic of Panama pursuant to this Article, shall be governed by the Agreement in Implementation of this Article, signed this date.

10. Upon entry into force of this Treaty, the United States Government agencies known as the Panama Canal Company and the Canal Zone Government shall cease to operate within the territory of the Republic of Panama that formerly constituted the Canal Zone.

Article IV

Protection and Defense

1. The United States of America and the Republic of Panama commit themselves to protect and defend the Panama Canal. Each Party shall act, in accordance with its constitutional processes, to meet the danger resulting from an armed attack or other actions which threaten the security of the Panama Canal or of ships transiting it.

2. For the duration of this Treaty, the United States of America shall have primary responsibility to protect and defend the Canal. The rights of the United States of America to station, train, and move military forces within the Republic of Panama are described in the Agreement in Implementation of this Article, signed this date. The use of areas and installations and the legal status of the armed forces of the United States of America in the Republic of Panama shall be governed by the aforesaid Agreement.

3. In order to facilitate the participation and cooperation of the armed forces of both Parties in the protection and defense of the Canal, the United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall establish a Combined Board comprised of an equal number of senior military representatives of each Party. These representatives shall be charged by their respective governments with consulting and cooperating on all matters pertaining to the protection and defense of the Canal, and with planning for actions to be taken in concert for that purpose. Such combined protection and defense arrangements shall not inhibit the identity or lines of authority of the armed forces of the United States of America or the Republic of Panama. The Combined Board shall provide for coordination and cooperation concerning such matters as:

(a) The preparation of contingency plans for the protection and defense of the Canal based upon the cooperative efforts of the armed forces of both Parties;

(b) The planning and conduct of combined military exercises; and

(c) The conduct of United States and Panamanian military operations with respect to the protection and defense of the Canal.

4. The Combined Board shall, at five-year intervals throughout the duration of this Treaty, review the resources being made available by the two Parties for the protection and defense of the Canal. Also the Combined Board shall make appropriate recommendations to the two Governments respecting projected requirements, the efficient utilization of available resources of the two Parties, and other matters of mutual interest with respect to the protection and defense of the Canal.

5. To the extent possible consistent with its primary responsibility for the protection and defense of the Panama Canal, the United States of America will endeavor to maintain its armed forces in the Republic of Panama in normal times at a level not in excess of that of the armed forces of the United States of America in the territory of the former Canal Zone immediately prior to the entry into force of this Treaty.

Article V

Principle of Non-Intervention

Employees of the Panama Canal Commission, their dependents and designated contractors of the Panama Canal Commission, who are nationals of the United States of America, shall respect the laws of the Republic of Panama and shall abstain from any activity incompatible with the spirit of this Treaty. Accordingly, they shall abstain from any political activity in the Republic of Panama as well as from any intervention of the internal affairs of the Republic of Panama. The United States of America shall take all measures within its authority to ensure that the provisions of this Article are fulfilled.

Article VI

Protection of the Environment

1. The United States of America and the Republic of Panama commit themselves to implement this Treaty in a manner consistent with the protection of the natural environment of the Repuublic of Panama. To this end, they shall consult and cooperate with each other in all appropriate ways to ensure that they shall give due regard to the protection and conservation of the environment.

2. A Joint Commission on the Environment shall be established with equal representation from the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, which shall periodically review the implementation of this Treaty and shall recommend as appropriate to the two Governments ways to avoid or, should this not be possible, to mitigate the adverse environmental impacts which might result from their respective actions pursuant to the Treaty.

3. The United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall furnish the Joint Commission on the Environment complete information on any action taken in accordance with this Treaty which, in the judgment of both, might have a significant effect on the environment. Such information shall be made available to the Commission as far in advance of the contemplated action as possible to facilitate the study by the Commission of any potential environmental problems and to allow for consideration of the recommendation of the Commission before the contemplated action is carried out.

Article VII

Flags

1. The entire territory of the Republic of Panama, including the areas the use of which the Republic of Panama makes available to the United States of America pursuant to this Treaty and related agreements, shall be under the flag of the Republic of Panama, and consequently such flag always shall occupy the position of honor.

2. The flag of the United States of America may be displayed, together with the flag of the Republic of Panama, at the headquarters of the Panama Canal Commission, at the site of the Combined Board, and as provided in the Agreement in Implementation of Article IV of this Treaty.

3. The flag of the United States of America also may be displayed at other places and on some occasions, as agreed by both Parties.

Article VIII

Privileges and Immunities

1. The installations owned or used by the agencies or instrumentalities of the United States of America operating in the Republic of Panama pursuant to this Treaty and related agreements, and their official archives and documents, shall be inviolable. The two Parties shall agree on procedures to be followed in the conduct of any criminal investigation at such locations by the Republic of Panama.

2. Agencies and instrumentalities of the Government of the United States of America operating in the Republic of Panama pursuant to this Treaty and related agreements shall be immune from the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama.

3. In addition to such other privileges and immunities as are afforded to employees of the United States Government and their dependents pursuant to this Treaty, the United States of America may designate up to twenty officials of the Panama Canal Commission who, along with their dependents, shall enjoy the privileges and immunities accorded to diplomatic agents and their dependents under international law and practice. The Unite States of America shall furnish to the Republic of Panama a list of the names of said officials and their dependents, identifying the positions they occupy in the Government of the United States of America, and shall keep such list current at all times.

Article IX

Applicable Laws and Law Enforcement

1. In accordance with the provisions of this Treaty and related agreements, the law of the Republic of Panama shall apply in the areas made available for the use of the United States of America pursuant to this Treaty. The law of the Republic of Panama shall be applied to matters or events which occurred in the former Canal Zone prior to the entry into force of this Treaty only to the extent specifically provided in prior treaties and agreements.

2. Natural or juridical persons who, on the date of entry into force of this Treaty, are engaged in business or non-profit activities at locations in the former Canal Zone may continue such business or activities at those locations under the same terms and conditions prevailing prior to the entry into force of this Treaty for a thirty-month transition period from its entry into force. The Republic of Panama shall maintain the same operating conditions as those applicable to the aforementioned enterprises prior to the entry into force of this Treaty in order that they may receive licenses to do business in the Republic of Panama subject to their compliance with the requirements of its law. Thereafter, such persons shall receive the same treatment under the law of the Republic of Panama as similar enterprises already established in the rest of the territory of the Republic of Panama without discrimination.

3. The rights of ownership, as recognized by the United States of America, enjoyed by natural or juridical private persons in buildings and other improvements to real property located in the former Canal Zone shall be recognized by the Republic of Panama in conformity with its laws.

4. With respect to buildings and other improvements to real property located in the Canal operating areas, housing areas or other areas subject to the licensing procedure established in Article IV of the Agreement in Implementation of Article III of this Treaty, the owners shall be authorized to continue using the land upon which their property is located in accordance with the procedures established in that Article.

5. With respect to buildings and other improvements to real property located in areas of the former Canal Zone to which the aforesaid licensing procedure is not applicable, or may cease to be applicable during the lifetime or upon termination of this Treaty, the owners may continue to use the land upon which their property is located, subject to the payment of a reasonable charge to the Republic of Panama. Should the Republic of Panama decide to sell such land, the owners of the buildings or other improvements located thereon shall be offered a first option to purchase such land at a reasonable cost. In the case of non-profit enterprises, such as churches and fraternal organizations, the cost of purchase will be nominal in accordance with the prevailing practice in the rest of the territory of the Republic of Panama.

6. If any of the aforementioned persons are required by the Republic of Panama to discontinue their activities or vacate their property for public purposes, they shall be compensated at fair market value by the Republic of Panama.

7. The provisions of paragraphs 2–6 above shall apply to natural or judicial persons who have been engaged in business or non-profit activities at locations in the former Canal Zone for at least six months prior to the date of signature of this Treaty.

8. The Republic of Panama shall not issue, adopt or enforce any law, decree, regulation, or international agreement or take any other action which purports to regulate or would otherwise interfere with the exercise on the part of the United States of America of any right granted under this Treaty or related agreements.

9. Vessels transiting the Canal, and cargo, passengers and crews carried on such vessels shall be exempt from any taxes, fees, or other charges by the Republic of Panama. However, in the event such vessels call at a Panamanian port, they may be assessed charges incident thereto, such as charges for services provided to the vessel. The Republic of Panama may also require the passengers and crew disembarking from such vessels to pay such taxes, fees and charges as are established under Panamian law for persons entering its territory. Such taxes, fees and charges shall be assessed on a nondiscriminatory basis.

10. The United States of America and the Republic of Panama will cooperate in taking such steps as may from time to time be necessary to guarantee the security of the Panama Canal Commission, its property, its employees and their dependents, and their property, the Forces of the United States of America and the members thereof, the civilian component of the United States Forces, the dependents of members of the Forces and the civilian component, and their property, and the contractors of the Panama Canal Commission and of the United States Forces, their dependents, and their property. The Republic of Panama will seek from its Legislative Branch such legislation as may be needed to carry out the foregoing purposes and to punish any offenders.

11. The Parties shall conclude an agreement whereby nationals of either State, who are sentenced by the courts of the other State, and who are not domiciled therein may elect to serve their sentences in their State of nationality.

Article X

Employment With the Panama Canal Commission

1. In exercising its rights and fulfilling its responsibilities as the employer, the United States of America shall establish employment and labor regulations which shall contain the terms, conditions and prerequisites for all categories of employees of the Panama Canal Commission. These regulations shall be provided to the Republic of Panama prior to their entry into force.

2. (a) The regulations shall establish a system of preference when hiring employees, for Panamanian applicants possessing the skills and qualifications required for employment by the Panama Canal Commission. The United States of America shall endeavor to ensure that the number of Panamanian nationals employed by the Panama Canal Commission in relation to the total number of its employees will conform to the proportion established for foreign enterprises under the law of the Republic of Panama.

(b) The terms and conditions of employment to be established will in general be no less favorable to persons already employed by the Panama Canal Company or Canal Zone Government prior to the entry into force of this Treaty, than those in effect prior to that date.

3. (a) The United States of America shall establish an employment policy for the Panama Canal Commission that shall generally limit the recruitment of personnel outside the Republic of Panama to persons possessing requisite skills and qualifications which are not available in the Republic of Panama.

(b) The United States of America will establish training programs for Panamanian employees and apprentices in order to increase the number of Panamanian nationals qualified to assume positions with the Panama Canal Commission, as positions become available.

(c) Within five years from the entry into force of this Treaty, the number of United States nationals employed by the Panama Canal Commission who were previously employed by the Panama Canal Company shall be at least twenty percent less than the total number of United States nationals working for the Panama Canal Company immediately prior to the entry into force of this Treaty.

(d) The United States of America shall periodically inform the Republic of Panama, through the Coordinating Committee, established pursuant to the Agreement in Implementation of Article III of this Treaty, of available positions within the Panama Canal Commission. The Republic of Panama shall similarly provide the United States of America any information it may have as to the availability of Panamanian nationals claiming to have skills and qualifications that might be required by the Panama Canal Commission, in order that the United States of America may take this information into account.

4. The United States of America will establish qualification standards for skills, training and experience required by the Panama Canal Commission. In establishing such standards, to the extent they include a requirement for a professional license, the United States of America, without prejudice to its right to require additional professional skills and qualifications, shall recognize the professional licenses issued by the Republic of Panama.

5. The United States of America shall establish a policy for the periodic rotation, at a maximum of every five years, of United States citizen employees and other non-Panamanian employees, hired after the entry into force of this Treaty. It is recognized that certain exceptions to the said policy of rotation may be made for sound administrative reasons, such as in the case of employees holding positions requiring certain non-transferable or non-recruitable skills.

6. With regard to wages and fringe benefits, there shall be no discrimination on the basis of nationality, sex, or race. Payments by the Panama Canal Commission of additional remuneration, or the provision of other benefits, such as home leave benefits, to United States nationals employed prior to entry into force of this Treaty, or to persons of any nationality, including Panamanian nationals who are thereafter recruited outside of the Republic of Panama and who change their place of residence, shall not be considered to be discrimination for the purpose of this paragraph.

7. Persons employed by the Panama Canal Company or Canal Zone Government prior to the entry into force of this Treaty, who are displaced from their employment as a result of the discontinuance by the United States of America of certain activities pursuant to this Treaty, will be placed by the United States of America, to the maximum extent feasible, in other appropriate jobs with the Government of the United States in accordance with United States Civil Service regulations. For such persons who are not United States nationals, placement efforts will be confined to United States Government activities located within the Republic of Panama. Likewise, persons previously employed in activities for which the Republic of Panama assumes responsibility as a result of this Treaty will be continued in their employment to the maximum extent feasible by the Republic of Panama. The Republic of Panama shall, to the maximum extent feasible, ensure that the terms and conditions of employment applicable to personnel employed in the activities for which it assumes responsibility are no less favorable than those in effect immediately prior to the entry into force of this Treaty. Non-United States nationals employed by the Panama Canal Company or Canal Zone Government prior to the entry into force of this Treaty who are involuntarily separated from their positions because of the discontinuance of an activity by reason of this Treaty, who are not entitled to an immediate annuity under the United States Civil Service Retirement System, and for whom continued employment in the Republic of Panama by the Government of the United States of America is not practicable, will be provided special job placement assistance by the Republic of Panama for employment in positions for which they may be qualified by experience and training.

8. The Parties agree to establish a system whereby the Panama Canal Commission may, if deemed mutually convenient or desirable by the two Parties, assign certain employees of the Panama Canal Commission, for a limited period of time, to assist in the operation of activities transferred to the responsibility of the Republic of Panama as a result of this Treaty or related agreements. The salaries and other costs of employment of any such persons assigned to provide such assistance shall be reimbursed to the United States of America by the Republic of Panama.

9. (a) The right of employees to negotiate collective contracts with the Panama Canal Commission is recognized. Labor relations with employees of the Panama Canal Commission shall be conducted in accordance with forums of collective bargaining established by the United States of America after consultation with employee unions.

(b) Employee unions shall have the right to affiliate with international labor organizations.

10. The United States of America will provide an appropriate early optional retirement program for all persons employed by the Panama Canal Company or Canal Zone Government immediately prior to the entry into force of this Treaty. In this regard, taking into account the unique circumstances created by the provisions of this Treaty, including its duration, and their effect upon such employees, the United States of America shall, with respect to them:

(a) determine that conditions exist which invoke applicable United States law permitting early retirement annuities and apply such law for a substantial period of the duration of the Treaty;

(b) seek special legislation to provide more liberal entitlement to, and calculation of, retirement annuities than is currently provided for by law.

Article XI

Provisions for the Transition Period

1. The Republic of Panama shall reassume plenary jurisdiction over the former Canal Zone upon entry into force of this Treaty and in accordance with its terms. In order to provide for an orderly transition to the full application of the jurisdictional arrangements, established by this Treaty and related agreements, the provisions of this Article shall become applicable upon the date this Treaty enters into force, and shall remain in effect for thirty calendar months. The authority granted in this Article to the United States of America for this transition period shall supplement, and is not intended to limit, the full application and effect of the rights and authority granted to the United States of America elsewhere in this Treaty and in related agreements.

2. During this transition period, the criminal and civil laws of the United States of America shall apply concurrently with those of the Republic of Panama in certain of the areas and installations made available for the use of the United States of America pursuant to this treaty, in accordance with the following provisions:

(a) The Republic of Panama permits the authorities of the United States of America to have the primary right to exercise criminal jurisdiction over United States citizen employees of the Panama Canal Commission and their dependents, and members of the United States Forces and civilian component and their dependents, in the following cases:

(i) for any offense committed during the transition period within such areas and installations, and

(ii) for any offense committed prior to that period in the former Canal Zone.

The Republic of Panama shall have the primary right to exercise jurisdiction over all other offenses committed by such persons, except as otherwise provided in this Treaty and related agreements or as may be otherwise agreed.

(b) Either Party may waive its primary right to exercise jurisdiction in a specific case or category of cases.

3. The United States of America shall retain the right to exercise jurisdiction in criminal cases relating to offenses committed prior to the entry into force of this Treaty in violation of the laws applicable in the former Canal Zone.

4. For the transition period, the United States of America shall retain police authority and maintain a police force in the aforementioned areas and installations. In such areas, the police authorities of the United States of America may take into custody any person not subject to their primary jurisdiction if such person is believed to have committed or to be committing an offense against applicable laws or regulations, and shall promptly transfer custody to the police authorities of the Republic of Panama. The United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall establish joint police patrols in agreed areas. Any arrests conducted by a joint patrol shall be the responsibility of the patrol member or members representing the Party having primary jurisdiction over the person or persons arrested.

5. The courts of the United States of America and related personnel, functioning in the former Canal Zone immediately prior to the entry into force of this Treaty, may continue to function during the transition period for the judicial enforcement of the jurisdiction to be exercised by the United States of America in accordance with this Article.

6. In civil cases, the civilian courts of the United States of America in the Republic of Panama shall have no jurisdiction over new cases of a private civil nature, but shall retain full jurisdiction during the transition period to dispose of any civil cases, including admiralty cases, already instituted and pending before the courts prior to the entry into force of this Treaty.

7. The laws, regulations, and administrative authority of the United States of America applicable in the former Canal Zone immediately prior to the entry into force of this Treaty shall, to the extent not inconsistent with this Treaty and related agreements, continue in force for the purpose of the exercise by the United States of America of law enforcement and judicial jurisdiction only during the transition period. The United States of America may amend, repeal or otherwise change such laws, regulations and administrative authority. The two Parties shall consult concerning procedural and substantive matters relative to the implementation of this Article, including the disposition of cases pending at the end of the transition period and, in this respect, may enter into appropriate agreements by an exchange of notes or other instrument.

8. During this transition period, the United States of America may continue to incarcerate individuals in the areas and installations made available for the use of the United States of America by the Republic of Panama pursuant to this Treaty and related agreements, or to transfer them to penal facilities in the United States of America to serve their sentences.

Article XII

A Sea-Level Canal or a Third Lane of Locks

1. The United States of America and the Republic of Panama recognize that a sea-level canal may be important for international navigation in the future. Consequently, during the duration of this Treaty, both Parties commit themselves to study jointly the feasibility of a sea-level canal in the Republic of Panama, and in the event they determine that such a waterway is necessary, they shall negotiate terms, agreeable to both Parties, for its construction.

2. The United States of America and the Republic of Panama agree on the following:

(a) No new interoceanic canal shall be constructed in the territory of the Republic of Panama during the duration of this Treaty, except in accordance with the provisions of this Treaty, or as the two Parties may otherwise agree; and

(b) During the duration of this Treaty, the United States of America shall not negotiate with third States for the right to construct an interoceanic canal on any other route in the Western Hemisphere, except as the two Parties may otherwise agree.

3. The Republic of Panama grants to the United States of America the right to add a third lane of locks to the existing Panama Canal. This right may be exercised at any time during the duration of this Treaty, provided that the United States of America has delivered to the Republic of Panama copies of the plans for such construction.

4. In the event the United States of America exercises the right granted in paragraph 3 above, it may use for that purpose, in addition to the areas otherwise made available to the United States of America pursuant to this Treaty, such other areas as the two Parties may agree upon. The terms and conditions applicable to Canal operating areas made available by the Republic of Panama for the use of the United States of America pursuant to Article III of this Treaty shall apply in a similar manner to such additional areas.

5. In the construction of the aforesaid works, the United States of America shall not use nuclear excavation techniques without the previous consent of the Republic of Panama.

Article XIII

Property Transfer and Economic Participation by the Republic of Panama

1. Upon termination of this Treaty, the Republic of Panama shall assume total responsibility for the management, operation, and maintenance of the Panama Canal, which shall be turned over in operating condition and free of liens and debts, except as the two Parties may otherwise agree.

2. The United States of America transfers, without charge, to the Republic of Panama all right, title and interest the United States of America may have with respect to all real property, including non-removable improvements thereon, as set forth below:

(a) Upon the entry into force of this Treaty, the Panama Railroad and such property that was located in the former Canal Zone but that is not within the land and water areas the use of which is made available to the United States of America pursuant to this Treaty. However, it is agreed that the transfer on such date shall not include buildings and other facilities, except housing, the use of which is retained by the United States of America pursuant to this Treaty and related agreements, outside such areas.

(b) Such property located in an area or a portion thereof at such time as the use by the United States of America of such area or portion thereof ceases pursuant to agreement between the two Parties.

(c) Housing units made available for occupancy by members of the Armed Forces of the Republic of Panama in accordance with paragraph 5(b) of Annex B to the Agreement in Implementation of Article IV of this Treaty at such time as such units are made available to the Republic of Panama.

(d) Upon termination of this Treaty, all real property and non-removable improvements that were used by the United States of America for the purposes of this Treaty and related agreements and equipment related to the management, operation and maintenance of the Canal remaining in the Republic of Panama.

3. The Republic of Panama agrees to hold the United States of America harmless with respect to any claims which may be made by third parties relating to rights, title and interest in such property.

4. The Republic of Panama shall receive, in addition, from the Panama Canal Commission a just and equitable return on the national resources which it has dedicated to the efficient management, operation, maintenance, protection and defense of the Panama Canal, in accordance with the following:

(a) An annual amount to be paid out of Canal operating revenues computed at a rate of thirty hundredths of a United States dollar ($0.30) per Panama Canal net tons, or its equivalency, for each vessel transiting the Canal after the entry into force of this Treaty, for which tolls are charged. The rate of thirty hundredths of a United States dollar ($0.30) per Panama Canal net ton, or its equivalency, will be adjusted to reflect changes in the United States wholesale price index for total manufactured goods during biennial periods. The first adjustment shall take place five years after entry into force of this Treaty, taking into account the changes that occurred in such price index during the preceding two years. Thereafter, successive adjustments shall take place at the end of each biennial period. If the United States of America should decide that another indexing method is preferable, such method shall be proposed to the Republic of Panama and applied if mutually agreed.

(b) A fixed annuity of ten million United States dollars ($10,000,000) to be paid out of Canal operating revenues. The amount shall constitute a fixed expense of the Panama Canal Commission.

(c) An annual amount of up to ten million United States dollars ($10,000,000) per year, to be paid out of Canal operating revenues to the extent that such revenues exceed expenditures of the Panama Canal Commission including amounts paid pursuant to this Treaty. In the event Canal operating revenues in any year do not produce a surplus sufficient to cover this payment, the unpaid balance shall be paid from operating surpluses in future years in a manner to be mutually agreed.

Article XIV

Settlement of Disputes

In the event that any question should arise between the Parties concerning the interpretation of this Treaty or related agreements, they shall make every effort to resolve the matter through consultation in the appropriate committees established pursuant to this Treaty and related agreements, or, if appropriate, through diplomatic channels. In the event the Parties are unable to resolve a particular matter through such means, they may, in appropriate cases, agree to submit the matter to conciliation, mediation, arbitration, or such other procedure for the peaceful settlement of the dispute as they may mutually deem appropriate.

Done at Washington, this 7th day of September, 1977, in duplicate, in the English and Spanish languages, both texts being equally authentic.

ANNEX—PROCEDURES FOR THE CESSATION OR TRANSFER OF ACTIVITIES CARRIED OUT BY THE PANAMA CANAL COMPANY AND THE CANAL ZONE GOVERNMENT AND ILLUSTRATIVE LIST OF THE FUNCTIONS THAT MAY BE PERFORMED BY THE PANAMA CANAL COMMISSION

1. The laws of the Republic of Panama shall regulate the exercise of private economic activities within the areas made available by the Republic of Panama for the use of the United States of America pursuant to this Treaty. Natural or juridical persons who, at least six months prior to the date of signature of this Treaty, were legally established and engaged in the exercise of economic activities in the former Canal Zone, may continue such activities in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 2–7 of Article IX of this Treaty.

2. The Panama Canal Commission shall not perform governmental or commercial functions as stipulated in paragraph 4 of this Annex, provided, however, that this shall not be deemed to limit in any way the right of the United States of America to perform those functions that may be necessary for the efficient management, operation and maintenance of the Canal.

3. It is understood that the Panama Canal Commission, in the exercise of the rights of the United States of America with respect to the management, operation and maintenance of the Canal, may perform functions such as are set forth below by way of illustration:

a. Management of the Canal enterprise.

b. Aids to navigation in Canal waters and in proximity thereto.

c. Control of vessel movement.

d. Operation and maintenance of the locks.

e. Tug service for the transit of vessels and dredging for the piers and docks of the Panama Canal Commission.

f. Control of the water levels in Gatun, Alajuela (Madden) and Miraflores Lakes.

g. Non-commercial transportation services in Canal waters.

h. Meteorological and hydrographic services.

i. Admeasurement.
j. Non-commercial motor transport and maintenance.
k. Industrial security through the use of watchmen.
l. Procurement and warehousing.
m. Telecommunications.
n. Protection of the environment by preventing and controlling the spillage of oil and substances harmful to human or animal life and of the ecological equilibrium in areas used in operation of the Canal and the anchorages.
o. Non-commercial vessel repair.
p. Air conditioning services in Canal installations.
q. Industrial sanitation and health services.
r. Engineering design, construction and maintenance of Panama Canal Commission installations.
s. Dredging of the Canal channel, terminal ports and adjacent waters.
t. Control of the banks and stabilizing of the slopes of the Canal.
u. Non-commercial handling of cargo on the piers and docks of the Panama Canal Commission.
v. Maintenance of public areas of the Panama Canal Commission, such as parks and gardens.
w. Generation of electric power.
x. Purification and supply of water.
y. Marine salvage in Canal waters.
z. Such other functions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out, in conformity with this Treaty and related agreements, the rights and responsibilities of the United States of America with respect to the management, operation and maintenance of the Panama Canal.

4. The following activities and operations carried out by the Panama Canal Company and the Canal Zone Government shall not be carried out by the Panama Canal Commission, effective upon the dates indicated herein:

(a) Upon the date of entry into force of this Treaty:

(i) Wholesale and retail stores, including those through commissaries, food stores, department stores, optical shops and pastry shops;

(ii) The production of food and drink, including milk products and bakery products;

(iii) The operation of public restaurants and cafeterias and the sale of articles through vending machines;

(iv) The operation of movie theaters, bowling alleys, pool rooms and other recreational and amusement facilities for the use of which a charge is payable;

(v) The operation of laundry and dry cleaning plants other than those operated for official use;

(vi) The repair and service of privately owned automobiles or the sale of petroleum or lubricants thereto, including the operation of gasoline stations, repair garages and tire repair and recapping facilities, and the repair and service of other privately owned property, including appliances, electronic devices, boats, motors, and furniture;

(vii) The operation of cold storage and freezer plants other than those operated for official use;

(viii) The operation of freight houses other than those operated for official use;

(ix) The operation of commercial services to and supply of privately owned and operated vessels, including the construction of vessels, the sale of petroleum and lubricants and the provision of water, tug services not related to the Canal or other United States Government operations, and repair of such vessels, except in situations where repairs may be necessary to remove disabled vessels from the Canal;

(x) Printing services other than for official use;

(xi) Maritime transportation for the use of the general public;

(xii) Health and medical services provided to individuals, including hospitals, leprosariums. veterinary, mortuary and cemetery services;

(xiii) Educational services not for professional training, including schools and libraries;

(xiv) Postal services;

(xv) Immigration, customs and quarantime controls, except those measures necessary to ensure the sanitation of the Canal;

(xvi) Commercial pier and dock services, such as the handling of cargo and passengers; and (xvii) Any other commercial activity of a similar nature, not related to the management, operation or maintenance of the Canal.

(b) Within thirty calendar months from the date of entry into force of this Treaty, governmental services such as:

(i) Police;
(ii) Courts; and
(iii) Prison system.

5. (a) With respect to those activities or functions described in paragraph 4 above, or otherwise agreed upon by the two Parties, which are to be assumed by the Government of the Republic of Panama or by private persons subject to its authority, the two Parties shall consult prior to the discontinuance of such activities or functions by the Panama Canal Commission to develop appropriate arrangements for the orderly transfer and continued efficient operation or conduct thereof.

(b) In the event that appropriate arrangements cannot be arrived at to ensure the continued performance of a particular activity or function described in paragraph 4 above which is necessary to the efficient management, operation or maintenance of the Canal, the Panama Canal Commission may, to the extent consistent with the other provisions of this Treaty and related agreements, continue to perform such activity or function until such arrangements can be made.

TREATY CONCERNING THE PERMANENT NEUTRALITY AND OPERATION OF THE PANAMA CANAL

The United States of America and the Republic of Panama have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE I

The Republic of Panama declares that the Canal, as an international transit waterway, shall be permanently neutral in accordance with the regime established in this Treaty. The same regime of neutrality shall apply to any other international waterway that may be built either partially or wholly in the territory of the Republic of Panama.

ARTICLE II

The Republic of Panama declares the neutrality of the Canal in order that both in time of peace and in time of war it shall remain secure and open to peaceful transit by the vessels of all nations on terms of entire equality, so that there will be no discrimination against any nation, or its citizens or subjects, concerning the conditions or charges of transit, or for any other reason, and so that the Canal, and therefore the Isthmus of Panama, shall not be the target of reprisals in any armed conflict between other nations of the world. The foregoing shall be subject to the following requirements:

(a) Payment of tolls and other charges for transit and ancillary services, provided they have been fixed in conformity with the provisions of Article III(c);

(b) Compliance with applicable rules and regulations, provided such rules and regulations are applied in conformity with the provisions of Article III;

(c) The requirement that transiting vessels commit no acts of hostility while in the Canal; and

(d) Such other conditions and restrictions as are established by this Treaty.

ARTICLE III

1. For purposes of the security, efficiency and proper maintenance of the Canal the following rules shall apply:

(a) The Canal shall be operated efficiently in accordance with conditions of transit through the Canal, and rules and regulations that shall be just, equitable and reasonable, and limited to those necessary for safe navigation and efficient, sanitary operation of the Canal;

(b) Ancillary services necessary for transit through the Canal shall be provided;

(c) Tolls and other charges for transit and ancillary services shall be just, reasonable, equitable and consistent with the principles of international law;

(d) As a pre-condition of transit, vessels may be required to establish clearly the financial responsibility and guarantees for payment of reasonable and adequate indemnification, consistent with international practice and standards, for damages resulting from acts or omissions of such vessels when passing through the Canal. In the case of vessels owned or operated by a State or for which it has acknowledged responsibility, a certification by that State that it shall observe its obligations under international law to pay for damages resulting from the act or omission of such vessels when passing through the Canal shall be deemed sufficient to establish such financial responsibility;

(e) Vessels of war and auxiliary vessels of all nations shall at all times be entitled to transit the Canal, irrespective of their internal operation, means of propulsion, origin, destination or armament, without being subjected, as a condition of transit, to inspection, search or surveillance. However, such vessels may be required to certify that they have compiled with all applicable health, sanitation and quarantine regulations. In addition, such vessels shall be entitled to refuse to disclose their internal operation, origin, armament, cargo or destination. However, auxiliary vessels may be required to present written assurances, certified by an official at a high level of the government of the State requesting the exemption, that they are owned or operated by that government and in this case are being used only on government non-commercial service.

2. For the purposes of this Treaty, the terms "Canal," "vessel of war," "auxiliary vessel," "internal operation," "armament" and "inspection" shall have the meanings assigned them in Annex A to this Treaty.

ARTICLE IV

The United States of America and the Republic of Panama agree to maintain the regime of neutrality established in this Treaty, which shall be maintained in order that the Canal shall remain permanently neutral, notwithstanding the termination of any other treaties entered into by the two Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE V

After the termination of the Panama Canal Treaty, only the Republic of Panama shall operate the Canal and maintain military forces, defense sites and military installations within its national territory.

ARTICLE VI

1. In recognition of the important contribution of the United States of America and of the Republic of Panama to the construction, operation, maintenance, and protection and defense of the Canal, vessels of war and auxiliary vessels of those nations shall, notwithstanding any other provisions of this Treaty, be entitled to transit the Canal irrespective of their internal operation, means of propulsion, origin, destination, armament or cargo carried. Such vessels of war and auxiliary vessels will be entitled to transit the Canal expeditiously.

2. The United States of America, so long as it has responsibility for the operation of the Canal, may continue to provide the Republic of Colombia toll-free transit through the Canal for its troops, vessels, and materials of war. Thereafter, the Republic of Panama may provide the Republic of Colombia and the Republic of Costa Rica with the right of toll-free transit.

ARTICLE VII

1. The United States of America and the Republic of Panama shall jointly sponsor a resolution in the Organization of American States opening to accession by all nations of the world the Protocol to this Treaty whereby all the signatories will adhere to the objectives of this Treaty, agreeing to respect the regime of neutrality set forth herein.

2. The Organization of American States shall act as the depositary for this Treaty and related instruments.

ARTICLE VIII

This Treaty shall be subject to ratification in accordance with the constitutional procedures of the two Parties. The instruments of ratification of this Treaty shall be exchanged at Panama at the same time as the instruments of ratification of the Panama Canal Treaty, signed this date, are exchanged. This Treaty shall enter into force, simultaneously with the Panama Canal Treaty, six calendar months from the date of the exchange of the instruments of ratification.

Done at Washington, this 7th day of September, 1977, in the English and Spanish languages, both texts being equally authentic.

ANNEX A

1. "Canal" includes the existing Panama Canal, the entrances thereto and the territorial seas of the Republic of Panama adjacent thereto, as defined on the map annexed hereto (Annex B),[1] and any other interoceanic waterway in which the United States of America is a participant or in which the United States of America has participated in connection with the construction or financing, that may be operated wholly or partially within the territory of the Republic of Panama, the entrances thereto and the territorial seas adjacent thereto.

2. "Vessel of war" means a ship belonging to the naval forces of a State, and bearing the external marks distinguishing warships of its nationality, under the command of an officer duly commissioned by the government and whose name appears in the Navy List, and manned by a crew which is under regular naval discipline.

3. "Auxiliary vessel" means any ship, not a vessel of war, that is owned or operated by a State and used, for the time being, exclusively on government non-commercial service.

4. "Internal operation" encompasses all machinery and propulsion systems, as well as the management and control of the vessel, including its crew. It does not include the measures necessary to transit vessels under the control of pilots while such vessels are in the Canal.

5. "Armament" means arms, ammunitions, implements of war and other equipment of a vessel which possesses characteristics appropriate for use for warlike purposes.

6. "Inspection" includes on-board examination of vessel structure, cargo, armament and internal operation. It does not include those measures strictly necessary for admeasurement, nor those measures strictly necessary to assure safe, sanitary transit and navigation, including examination of deck and visual navigation equipment, nor in the case of live cargoes, such as cattle or other livestock, that may carry communicable diseases, those measures necessary to assure that health and sanitation requirements are satisfied.

[1] Not printed here.

Mr. ALLEN. Now, Mr. President, on another matter, I will say that I have read in the paper that Mr. Torrijos is said to be dissatisfied with the DeConcini reservation.

Well, I do not see where he should be dissatisfied. I feel sure he knew the reservation was coming because there was an exchange of notes on March 15 between the President and the dictator. As I pointed out, when they finally came up with the letters, both of them were dated on the 15th. They must have been cables, or something of that sort. But Torrijos was raising the proposition that he did not feel they ought to make any changes, that he had heard rumors of reservations and the like.

The letters are in the record, but I am now recalling from memory. The President said:

> Yes, the reservations are being considered and are going to be accepted, but I assure you nothing will be done. These reservations will not interfere with the spirit of the treaty that we have worked out.

It is the same as to say, Mr. President, that the reservations really are not going to change the agreement; therefore, they have very little effect.

As we recall, the DeConcini reservation was offered as an amendment to the treaty and turned down by the very people who accepted it as a reservation.

An interesting thing came to light in correspondence with me. Reed Irvine, of a concern called Accuracy in the Media, wrote the Washington Star, I believe Mr. Beveridge of the Washington Star, about the fact that he had been informed by a reporter for the Washington Star that he, the reporter, had these letters on the 15th of March, this exchange of letters between the President and the Dictator as to the meaning and effect of the reservations that were going to be agreed to—that he had these letters but that "the desk" stopped their publication.

Mr. Irvine was asking the question, "If you had the letters"—and in colloquy on the floor, I pointed out that if those letters had been made public on the 15th, inasmuch as we did not vote until the 16th, if we had had those letters on the 15th in which the President was saying that the reservation was not going to adversely affect the agreement that they had, then we might have taken a different view of these reservations and possibly in turn the treaty. Accuracy in Media was requesting—I have the letter here and I shall ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that this letter, dated March 22, 1978, from Mr. Reed Irvine to Mr. George Beveridge, who is Ombudsman of the Washington Star, be printed in the RECORD. Mr. Irvine frequently takes Mr. Beveridge to task for improper or inadvisable activities on the part of the newspaper. Mr. Irvine was asking why, if they had these letters on the 15th, why was it they waited until the 17th to run it in the paper? He asks a question or two about it. I quote from the letter:

> If the Star had these letters and deliberately withheld from its readers any mention of them, it would appear to subject itself to the charge that it was withholding a news story because publication might have influenced a vote, as Senator ALLEN suggested.

I read the Star almost every afternoon and Saturday morning and Sunday morning, but I have not seen any reference to this letter, asking them why they withheld these letters that could have had an influence on the vote on the first treaty, why they withheld that from their readers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter and the item in the Star referring to Mr. Torrijos' dissatisfaction, back in March, with these reservations—this publication in the Star was on March 17, 1978—that both be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATSUNAGA). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. ALLEN. First, Mr. Torrijos said he was not concerned about the debate on the treaties, they were both going to be approved. Now, as we come to the close of the debate on the Panama Canal Treaty, Dictator Torrijos voices concern with the DeConcini amendment. He is not satisfied with the way that amendments are being turned down here in the Senate just as rapidly as they are offered. He must have some sort of fear that there is danger that constructive amendments might be passed on this other treaty. So he is rushing in and saying, "Well, I am dissatisfied with what you have already done; therefore, you had better not do anything else."

It seems to me that is just a ploy on the part of Dictator Torrijos to continue to influence the action of the Senate. He has had more influence, as I see it; his wishes have had more influence on the final action of the Senate in these matters of amendment than have the Senators. It looks like everything that has happened has had to be cleared with Torrijos—"Clear it with Omar."

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. The Senator just touched on a point that has been raised by the Senator from Kansas. The Senator from Kansas has been told time after time that our amendments are redundant and unnecessary. We have been assured by the leadership from time to time that everything has been worked out, everything is understood, clearly understood. It seems to this Senator that perhaps it is now time for the leadership on both sides to get a clarification from Mr. Torrijos. I think it would be very helpful to those of us who have offered our amendments in good faith and had them shot down by the floor managers and the leadership. It would also provide a service to the American people. I hope we could have some clarification of this issue. I think perhaps the leadership ought to help us get that clarification.

They have been burying our amendments one after another. Perhaps now they can find out from General Torrijos what his real thoughts may be.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. I call his attention to the fact that there has been no doubt about the position of Dictator Torrijos on the leadership amendment. He adopted a different view than that which the United States had.

When the memorandum, which has now become the leadership amendment, which is now in the Neutrality Treaty, was agreed to between him and President Carter, he went back to Panama and said:

> Oh, that memorandum did not give the United States the right to intervene in Panama to protect the canal; it just gave them the duty to intervene when and if I press the button to call on them to come down and defend it.

He has never recanted from that attitude. Apparently, now, with respect to the DeConcini amendment, he still has this same view. So there never really has been a meeting of minds. That is the reason we need it, not just as a reservation to the treaty, as the DeConcini amendment was. It ought to have been a direct amendment to the treaty. But the leadership saw fit to turn down our efforts to put it directly in the treaty.

Mr. President, I think that is what Dictator Torrijos' present-day attack is aimed at, preventing amendments or meaningful, if there be such, reservations being added to the resolution of ratification. That is his strategy. He will convince the proponents of the treaties that he is dissatisfied with what the Senate has already done. Any you know he is laughing up his sleeve, because, just as quickly as these treaties are approved, $100 million a year will be coming in to uphold and protect and maintain the dictatorial regime of Dictator Torrijos. So he is putting up this smokescreen, saying, "I am dissatisfied with what the Senate has done," in an effort to see to it that we do not attach meaningful amendments and meaningful reservations to the resolution of ratification.

I dare say he will succeed. He has succeeded thus far. He has succeeded thus far in seeing to it that no amendments are added to these treaties other than the leadership amendment on which he disagrees as to its interpretation by the United States.

He has a pretty fair record. No amendment has been adopted, not a single one, except the two meaningless, or well-nigh meaningless, leadership amendments based on the memorandum. Of course, it had a little paragraph in there that took care of Dictator Torrijos. It said we could not interfere with the internal affairs of Panama, we could not impinge on their territorial integrity, and we could not interfere with the independence of Panama. That is the same as saying we are going to do nothing to upset the dictatorial regime there.

So he has a pretty good track record here, in the Senate, in getting what he wants. I predict he will get, so far as amendments are concerned, pretty well what he wants with no amendments.

But I am hopeful, Mr. President, because there were 32 votes cast against the first treaty, and only 34 are needed to defeat the second treaty, a defeat which would also defeat the first treaty, even though it has already been approved.

It is not altogether inconsistent, I would think, for a Senator, who voted for the Neutrality Treaty or the Defense Treaty on the assumption that the other treaty also would be approved, to vote for the Neutrality Treaty to provide for the defense of the canal starting in the year 2000 without being in the lest for giving the canal away.

That is the issue now, the main issue. Are we going to give the canal away?

All that has been decided is that if we give it away we are going to defend it. So if a Senator voted to defend it, there is nothing wrong with that. I said here on the floor that I thought if they would reverse the treaty, got the Panama Canal Treaty approved first, then there would have been possibly up to 99 affirmative votes for the other treaty.

But they insisted in putting the cart before the horse and 32 votes were cast against the treaty that nearly everybody approved of because it was part and parcel of the whole question of giving the canal away.

I would hope that the 68 Senators who voted to approve the first treaty will become somewhat disillusioned with Mr. Torrijos' mastery of this question, mastery of the results that takes place here in the Senate. I hope they will quit opposing every attempt at trying to shape these treaties, will quit trying to keep them in a shape approved by the Dictator, and will agree to amend these treaties for the best interests of the American people and the taxpayers of this Nation.

I am hopeful that two of the Senators who voted for the first treaty will recognize that even though they have voted to defend the treaty, that does not necessarily mean they are going to vote to give the canal away.

I would like to call attention to the parable that Jesus related that is somewhat analogous to the situation of Senators that come here at the last moment, before the realization of what is involved, and will vote against giving the canal away.

On one occasion, Jesus gave the parable about the master of the vineyard, that early in the morning he employed workmen to go out and work in the vineyard and be given reward or pay, I believe, which was said to be a penny—it was an English coin in the King James translation.

Then in the third hour, he employed men to go into the vineyard, and at the 6th hour, and finally the 11th hour he employed people to go in and work in the vineyard.

When the day was up, he paid them all the same and said that those who came at the 11th hour were going to get the same reward that those received that worked all day.

So I believe these Senators who voted for the first treaty, but now come at the 11th hour, Mr. President, I say to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii (Mr. MATSUNAGA) who is presiding, if they came at the 11th hour—I am not talking about a Senator personally, but Senators who voted for the treaty—if they come at the 11th hour and vote against the Panama Canal Treaty, they will come in for as much credit as those who have been working in the vineyard since dawn.

I am hopeful that they will come in for the same reward, the same acclamation, that might be accorded to the disguished Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH) who has been working even before the first hour.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 2

ACCURACY IN MEDIA,
March 22, 1978.

Mr. GEORGE BEVERIDGE,
Washington Star,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BEVERIDGE: Attached is a copy of a story by Jerry O'Leary that appeared in The Star on Friday, March 17. You will note that it quotes from the letters exchanged by President Carter and General Torrijos on the previous Wednesday.

This correspondence became the subject of a serious discussion on the Senate on Friday. On page 7432 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 17, 1978, I find Senator ALLEN saying: "I say to the distinguished majority leader, if the letters were dated the 15th, it might have been of some benefit to the Senate to have had them up here on the 16th. They might have influenced a vote."

Senator BYRD responded. "Mr. President, that could be said both ways. We could say what might have been."

Senator ALLEN. "I doubt if it would have made votes for the treaty."

Senator BYRD. "I do not know. I have not read them yet. I have tried to secure them for the Senator because of his interest. Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these: 'It might have been.'"

Mr. O'Leary told me in a phone conversation that I had with him on Saturday that he had obtained the letters that Senator ALLEN was referring to on Wednesday from the Panamanian Embassy. He said that "the desk" made a decision to hold up publication of the story mentioning or quoting them until Friday, after the Senate vote on the treaties.

I would appreciate it if you would investigate this matter. If The Star had these letters and deliberately withheld from its readers any mention of them, it would appear to subject itself to the charge that it was withholding a news story because publication might have influenced a vote, as Senator ALLEN suggested.

The question is, why were these letters news on Friday and not on Thursday? Why was publication delayed? Was there any discussion about the desirability of publication with administration officials, senators or others who might have influenced this decision?

I shall be looking forward to your reply.

Sincerely yours,

REED IRVINE.

[From the Washington Star, Mar. 17, 1978]

PANAMA COOL TO TREATY ALTERATIONS

(By Jeremiah O'Leary)

Brig. Gen. Omar Torrijos has hinted displeasure at a last-minute amendment to the neutrality treaty on the Panama Canal and his nation is giving a cool reception to the Senate's ratification of the first portion of the pact.

But the Panamanian leader declared that he will withhold judgment until the Senate has voted on both treaties.

Torrijos expressed concern over an amendment by Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., because it spells out too specifically the right of the United States to use military force if the Panama Canal is ever shut down for any reason.

"We all understand the realities of what the U.S. would do if the canal was threatened from any quarter," said one Panamanian bitterly, "but this amendment rubs our noses in it."

Torrijos and other Panamanian officials made it clear that there is no elation among them over the narrow administration victory on the first phase of the treaties. Torrijos telephoned his ambassador, Gabriel Lewis, in Washington shortly after the 68–32 vote and curtly instructed him to return to Panama City immediately for consultations.

Hundreds of thousands of Panamanians, including Torrijos, monitored the radio broadcast of the Senate vote, which interpreters of the Organization of American States rendered in Spanish over a 52-station nationwide hookup.

First reports indicated that there were no demonstrations of either joy or outrage, probably because most Panamanians are uncertain of the meaning of the amendments.

Shortly after Torrijos called Lewis home, Lewis was called to the White House where he and his counsellor, Ricardo Bilonick, had a 10-minute meeting with President Carter.

The Panamanians gave Carter a copy of a letter from Torrijos in response to a Carter message about the changes being made in the treaties.

Lewis thanked the president and aide Hamilton Jordan for working so hard for ratification of the treaties.

The exchange of correspondence took place late Wednesday, well before yesterday's vote, but the letters typified the concerns of both Carter and Torrijos about the Senate's changes in the language previously agreed upon by the two leaders.

Carter's letter in effect suggested that Torrijos not be concerned with the changes the Senate was likely to make in the treaty language.

He said, "The Senate will almost certainly attach a number of reservations, conditions or understandings reflecting certain of its concerns. We have made every effort and have been successful to date in insuring that these will be consistent with the general purposes of our two countries as parties to the treaty. I hope you will examine them in this light.

"I know that the long public discussion of the treaties in the U.S. has involved difficulties for you and your country. It has been a necessary element in informing the American public of the reasons for negotiating the treaties."

Torrijos' reply referred both to the Carter letter and to a phone conversation Carter held with the Panamanian leader Wednesday afternoon.

Torrijos replied, "In your letter and conversation you have informed me that the Senate will introduce some reservations but that they do not alter or lessen the contents of what was agreed upon in the Neutrality Treaty or in our statement of October 14, 1977. On this matter, I wish to express that the Government of Panama will proceed to carefully study these reservations and will determine its position once the Senate concludes voting on both treaties."

Torrijos informed Carter he would wait until the Senate acts on the second part of the treaties, probably in April, because Panama's plebiscite was voted on jointly, not separately.

But Torrijos said, "it will be unacceptable for Panama to have any reservation staining the national dignity, which changes the objectives of the treaty or which impedes the effective exercise of Panama's sovereignty over all its territory. That is why I receive with high regard your words that these objectives will not be changed at all through amendments or reservations. The Panamanian people would not accept words, improperly placed commas, or ambiguous phrases which have as its purpose or meaning the occupation in perpetuity disguised as neutrality or an intervention in its internal affairs."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I also rise to speak on the issues raised by the distinguished Senator from Alabama, who has played a noble role on the floor for these past weeks and who has been one of the great leaders, in my opinion, not only in this issue, but in many other issues as well. I appreciate the comments that he made.

This morning's Washington Star has an article on the front page entitled "Canal Treaty Critics Lose Suit on House Vote." It reads:

Critics of the Panama Canal treaties have sustained what probably is a fatal setback in efforts to block the controversial agreements in the House.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District, in a split decision, ruled yesterday that the United States may cede the waterway to Panama through constitutionally prescribed treaty ratification procedures—thus, without concurrence by the House.

Mr. President, the distinguised Senator from Alabama has mentioned that yesterday a three-judge panel of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled, in the case of Edwards against Carter, that the President has the authority to dispose of property by a self-executing treaty. The decision was 2 to 1. Justice George MacKinnon was the lone dissenter.

It is now clear, then, contrary to the views expressed by the managers of this treaty, that the constitutional issue raised in my amendment is a valid one. Moreover, I believe that the position taken on April 5 by 38 Senators has been fully vindicated by Judge MacKinnon who supported our arguments in a 97-page opinion that contains many new points of law and is a tribute to his skills as a highly respected legal craftsman.

The per curiam opinion of the majority, which seems to be little more than a summary of the specious arguments propounded by the State Department and the five-page statement of the Foreign Relations Commitee, does not, in my judgment, offer any new insights or challenge any of the countless facts and precedents that we have raised here in Congress and Judge Mackinnon has brought to light in his searching analysis of the case.

Judge MacKinnon, as my colleagues will recall, was also one of the few dissenters in the landmark decision of Buckley against Valeo. His argument that the provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act respecting the Federal Election Commission violated the separation of powers was later upheld by the Supreme Court, and I am confident that the Court will uphold him once again when it considers this case.

At the same time, I would like to share with Senators a matter which gives me some concern and raises a question of possible conflict of interest in the case of Edwards against Carter.

It is my understanding that the 85-year-old senior circuit judge who presided over this case, the Honorable Charles Fahy, has a long history of State Department connections that date back nearly 40 years. According to Who's Who in Government, Judge Fahy served as an adviser to the U.S. delegation to the San Francisco Conference in 1945 which drafted the U.N. Charter, and subsequently was an adviser to the U.S. delegation to the U.N. and an alternate representative of this Government to the U.N. Moreover, Charles Fahy was the legal adviser to the State Department from 1946 to 1947.

Mr. President, I do not know Judge Fahy, and I am confident that he is a man of honesty and integrity. I assure my colleagues that I am making no accusations or charges that would in any way cast aspersion on his character as a Federal judge. But I do find it somewhat disconcerting that he was formerly associated with the very same office of the State Department with which we are presently contending, and am puzzled by the fact that he did not disqualify himself from this case.

Be that as it may, a Federal appellate court has decided that, "Because the merits of this controversy present a pure question of law * * * it is appropriate to proceed directly to the merits of this case." The Supreme Court of the United States will now be called upon to examine the constitutional merits of the State Department's arguments. It is hoped that we shall at last get an answer to the many issues raised in this controversy that the Foreign Relations Committee and two Federal judges have thus far managed to avoid.

Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues the opinions of the circuit court of appeals in the case of Edwards against Carter, and I ask unanimous consent that the per curiam opinion of the court and the dissenting oinion of Justice MacKinnon be printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, obviously, I would not object ordinarily to such a request; but the Senator from Alabama already has put that material in the RECORD, and I was thinking of doing so. The Senator from Alabama has done it.

Mr. HATCH. If it already has been offered, I am happy that the distinguished Senator from Maryland brought the fact to my attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah withdraws his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. HATCH. I certainly do.

And I might add that I think it is important to be in the RECORD so that every Senator who has to vote on the ultimate decision in this matter will be able to read it. I think they will reason in their own minds, after reading it, that Justice MacKinnon has done a tremendous job and has not given the kind of cursory treatment to the issue that the Foreign Relations and the two majority judges, the per curiam opinion judges, have given in this matter.

I think what is important is for everyone to know that in the district court this case was dismissed, because the district judge said that the plaintiffs had no standing, that there was not a pure question of law to be decided.

What is interesting is that all three of these judges basically have admitted that there is. Two of them have disagreed with our position, that we have advocated on the floor, but now the stage is set for the U.S. Supreme Court to make the final decision. I hope with all my heart that they will also agree that it is important to have a decision on this pure question of law if the Senate does not reverse yesterday's vote on my amendment, and thereby make the issue moot.

So I am happy to have the opinion of the judges and frankly I am pleased that one of the judges accepts the merits of our position. But above all I think I should make it clear that rather than have the courts decide this, I would prefer that the Senate fully address this issue and not defer to the courts.

I think everyone in America should be looking with a great deal of anticipation as to what the Supreme Court of the United States will finally decide with regard to this monumental constitutional issue, if we fail to make the issue moot in our attempt to amend this treaty to require congressional approval for the disposal of property.

I think that the case law, the statutory law, the historical precedents, the congressional precedents, and the other precedents which we raised are overwhelming. I think that the minority opinion from the Circuit Court of Appeals is overwhelming when one considers it in the light of the majority opinion which seems to just parrot the tired arguments of the State Department.

In addition, I also comment on what the distinguished Senator from Alabama and my friend and colleague from Kansas have said. It is amazing to me that Mr. Torrijos, who is getting everything that he wants because my colleagues on the floor of the Senate, the majority of them, are constantly shooting down every substantive amendment and stonewalling every other amendment regardless of substance, in fact stonewalling all amendments, has come out and made such a fuss about the DeConcini reservation.

I think it does raise the point, because we have been told here that these treaties are so well understood by both sides that there just cannot be any points of conflict or difficulties in the future. "We cannot imagine how anyone is going to have any problem arise as a result of these wonderful treaties." which have been negotiated by the State Department.

The fact of the matter is as to something like the DeConcini reservation, which was pretty simple and basically reinforces what the majority amendments or the leadership amendments have said and we would get anyway in the very least, I think it is important for us to understand that these treaties are not easily understood, that they are filled with ambiguities, that there are substantive defects in these treaties which will cause great problems, great contradictions, and great upheavals in the future, if not downright warfare, and that there are translation difficulties in both treaties. As to the amendment which have been offered, I cannot think of one which has not been substantive, which has not been important, which has not been offered for the purpose of protecting the United States of America and really protecting Panama as well. After all, if we do not on both sides know what these treaties stand for, we are going to be in trouble in the future.

So I think this fuss presently being raised by the dictator down there in Panama is pretty important, because I think what he is saying is "We want it all our way, we do not want any amendments, we do not even want the leadership amendments, and we do not understand that the leadership amendments really mean anything."

What bothers me is that I am afraid that people on our side are telling us, "Do not even worry about the DeConcini reservation, because it does not mean anything unless you have a plebiscite to honor it," which is true, incidentally, under Panamanian law. But apparently they want it even more true that it is.

But what I wish to say is that I am concerned, very concerned, about the stonewalling which has gone on with substantive, decent, corrective, rational, and valid amendments which have been offered during these last number of weeks. I have had people come to me and say:

> Senator, why offer any more? They are going to stonewall everything. They have the votes. You are just wasting your time and butting your head up against brick walls.

The answer to that is that we have an obligation to this country to set the record straight to do everything we can to point out the defects in these treaties and hopefully try to convince our colleagues that what they are doing is wrong for America. If we have to have these treaties, then let us at least have them be good treaties and not the invalid, poorly drafted, and unprotective treaties that they are.

That is what is at stake here.

Frankly, the constitutional issue is not over in any way, shape, or form. It looms ever stronger and ever more powerful after the Circuit Court of Appeals decision yesterday, because now we know that the Supreme Court has to face it fair and square and there has to be a decision if the Senate fails to follow the Constitution. That decision may come down against us, but if it does the Supreme Court better know that they are extending the President's power beyond that which was contemplated by the Founding Fathers when they wrote the Constitution of the United States and beyond that which it should be extended by any good sense or logic.

I think it is important to realize this is one of the most monumental, important constitutional issues raised in this country; and it is not over.

As a matter of fact, it will not be over if the Supreme Court came down on the same side as the majority in the Circuit Court of Appeals did yesterday, because the final say is really going to come from the House of Representatives anyway, because implementing legislation will have to be considered and enacted pursuant to many other provisions of these treaties. The House could say, "We are sorry, fellows, you over there in the Senate and President Carter, but we are not going to implement any of the other provisions of the treaty because you have ignored the House of Representatives and have excluded the disposition of the property as a matter for House action. Remember 235 Members have demanded the right to pass on the transfer of $10 billion of American property, a colossal transfer of American territory and property by treaty without approval of Congress—meaning both Houses.

If they want to they can hold up legislation in these other areas until some cognition is given to their property disposal rights under the Constitution. I do not know that they will do that, but I would be sorely tempted to do it if I were a representative representing my people back home and representing the rest of the people in this country, because the issue is that important.

Maybe sometimes the legislative branch has to teach some lessons to the President of the United States and even the State Department, as powerful as it is and, it seems to me, in some ways more powerful than almost any other branch of Government, at least in this matter.

I think it is a new low in our country's history for a President and the State Department and the ambassadors and, yes, the proponents of this treaty, to refuse to allow the Senate to advise as well as consent on this point of law when the Constitution is so clear.

I think to come here and say that we cannot have treaties until we have exactly what the dictator wants is wrong.

Mr. President, as Congressman JOHN MURPHY, Chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee said yesterday:

> The action of the Senate yesterday in rejecting an amendment to the Panama Canal Treaty that would have recognized the Constitutional role of Congress in disposing of the property of the United States provided in the treaty, should be a matter of profound concern to every Member of the House and of the Senate as well.
>
> The action flies in the face of the plain provision of article IV, section 3, clause 2 of the Constitution and the uniform practice of this Government from the earliest days of the Republic. It represents a radical departure from the theory of the Constitution establishing a balance of power between the three branches of the Government. It is especially in derogation of the role of the House of Representatives in the structure of Government in that Senate concurrence in the action of the Executive is substituted for enactment of legislation by the House and the Senate as the Constitution requires.

The denial to the House of the opportunity to exercise its constitutional authority will bring into question the legal effect of the treaty, inasmuch as the Supreme Court has repeatedly found that a treaty, like any other law, is invalid to the extent that it violates any provision of the Constitution.

The language of the Constitution is plain and unambiguous in committing to the Congress the authority to dispose of property of the United States. The action of the Senate in arrogating this power to the President and the Senate should not and cannot be accepted by this body.

Meaning the House of Representatives.

The wisdom of the Senate vote in refusing to recognize the legitimate role of the Congress must be questioned when it is recognized that the vote adopts a constitutional interpretation which has been advocated by the Executive and which has historically been opposed by the Congress from the First Congress.

Whether or not a vote of the House of Representatives can be taken with respect to the congressional property disposal power before the Senate disposes of the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977, it remains of paramount importance that House Members sign discharge petition No. 6, relative to House Concurrent Resolution 347. The discharge petition is the most expeditious means of bringing the resolution to this floor and allowing all Members to express a position on a matter that vitally affects the powers of which we are trustees.

I think Congressman MURPHY laid it out pretty fairly, and I urge my fellow Members of Congress in the House of Representatives to do exactly that and to bring this matter to a head.

Mr. President, the point is to be made that this article in the Washington Star, though well written, is incorrect in saying that this circuit court decision was a fatal setback. This decision clears the air and has rejected the idea that these Congressmen lacked standing or that this is a "political question." It sets the stage that there is a real issue raised, a constitutional issue, if you will, which cannot now be ignored by the Supreme Court of the United States—unless, of course, we make it moot.

I have confidence that the Supreme Court, in looking into this, in looking upon the record which has been made here on the floor this week and in the past and in looking at the opinion, the cursory per curiam opinion, which is not nearly as well reasoned or as well founded as the dissenting opinion, will decide in favor of the Constitution.

AMENDMENT NO. 38

Mr. President, at this time, with the express understanding that no motion will be made or any vote be taken upon my amendment until Monday, and after we have been given a reasonable time in which to make our case in the matter, I call up my amendment No. 38 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, this is the understanding that we will make no motion with respect to the amendment today, and the Senator will certainly have a reasonable time next week. I wish to note that Senator DOLE has an order entered for the consideration of his amendment on Monday.

Mr. HATCH. We would be delighted to set it aside for Senator DOLE's amendment, and we will certainly cooperate in every respect. We will call it up at this time and ask for its immediate consideration under that agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH) proposes an amendment numbered 38:

In paragraph 3 of article III, at the end of the text immediately above subparagraph (a), add the following: "The operating revenues of the Panama Canal Commission shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States of America.".

In the first sentence of paragraph 5 of article III, strike out "Panama Canal Commission shall reimburse" and insert in lieu therof "United States of America shall reimburse, only after the amount of such reimbursement has been appropriated,".

Mr. HATCH. I shall not argue the merits of my amendment today, but I think my colleagues should know that this amendment raises another very important constitutional issue which is that the United States of America cannot contribute in any way to the operation of the Panama Canal in the future, assuming that these treaties are ratified, without the money coming directly from the Treasury.

So this amendment will correct what happens to be a serious constitutional defect, and we will talk about this in great detail next Monday.

With that I yield the floor to the able Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I would be happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS).

Mr. HELMS. I listened to the eloquent remarks of my friend from Utah, and I was struck again, when he was talking, about the fact that I suppose all of us will admit that there is a wide gap between the perception of the American people and the perception of so many of their representatives in the U.S. Senate with regard to this giveaway of the Panama Canal.

I am wondering if the distinguished Senator from Utah saw the editorial in the Wall Street Journal of this morning headed "Panama and Pax Americana"?

Mr. HATCH. I did indeed.

Mr. HELMS. I commend it to the consideration of all Senators regardless of the side they may take on this issue.

I am also reminded, I will say to my friend from Utah, that only last month the prestigious Opinion Research Corp. of Princeton, N.J., reported in a nationwide poll that 72 percent of the people of the United States—this is based upon a scientific sample—are opposed to giving up ownership and control of the canal.

Then we have the anomaly of two-thirds of the Senate, in face of all of this, having already agreed to the Neutrality Treaty, in other words, the perception of the American people and the perception of two-thirds of the U.S. Senate, it would seem to me, are, in reverse.

The author of the article in the Wall Street Journal to which I have just alluded addressed himself to this paradox.

What accounts for these perceptions being so much at odds? Are the American people so dumb and so emotional, while so many of the U.S. Senate are so wise and objective? The Senator from North Carolina has seen little evidence to support that contention.

The difference, it seems to me, may be accounted for by a lag in perception by many Members of the Senate of the true situation of the United States around the world. I suspect that some Senators, because they live at the very seat of power, bombarded with information from the national media and from official Government sources, make the assumption that they are more up to date and more sophisticated than some of their constituents who do not have access to the same information.

Yet there is a built-in bias in the information that we receive from these so-called up-to-date sources. They are all institutional sources—the national news media, the universities, official Government agencies, international organizations. All are staffed with people, particularly at the decisionmaking or interpretative level, who were trained 5, 10, 15 years ago. Their experience is from another time, not from today. So, consciously or unconsciously, they apply a screen, a bias in judgment, to the "facts" which form the basis of their estimates.

Now of course, experience can be good or bad, depending on the nature of the experience. It may no longer be a reliable guide if experience is not evaluated in the light of the present day. The practice of judgment may train a person to make a good judgment at the present time; but if present judgments are based on the facts of the past, those judgments will be faulty.

Mr. President, we have been talking about the economics of the treaty today. But what do those economics represent? And what will be the impact in the world of our taking such steps?

Mr. President, today's Wall Street Journal carries an article that goes into this problem very carefully. It is a very perceptive piece by Jude Wanniski, an associate editor of the Journal.

Mr. Wanniski summarizes the calculations of President Carter and treaty supporters as follows:

For the last dozen years or so, unhappily the cost of membership in the Pax Americana have been rising and the benefits have been falling. American imperialism has been getting a bad name. People are trading in dollars for yen. France and Italy are on the brink of switching to the other guys. German citizens are taking up collections to help support our tattered legions stationed there. And when Omar Torrijos rattles his Panamanian saber, our Kissingers tremble.

President Carter and two-thirds of the U.S. Senate are correct in their calculations. A shrinking Pax Americana cannot keep clients against their will. One must cut the empire down to size, smiling as we wave bye-bye to former customers. So long, Cuba. Goodbye. Vietnam and Indochina. Adios, Angola. Goodbye, Canal. Shrink the U.S. Navy to bathtub size. Ban the neutron bomb. Take what you can get at SALT, and start thinking about kissing Taiwan goodbye.

That is Mr. Waniski's summary of the protreaty forces. Now here is what he says the American people are thinking:

The American people are making different calculations, and seem to be saying it is too soon to throw in the towel on Yankee world leadership. Heck, we hardly had a decent run at it, and when the President and Senate reach so far down into the barrel to give away the Canal, it seems premature. Sure, if the economy continues to bleed itself with inflated currencies and debt finance, we'll have no choice but to retreat, to lighten the load. But so soon?

Now, Mr. President, Mr. Wanniski comes to the economic issues:

The chief reason by far that the people of Panama want the canal is economic. In addition to getting a big bag of money to take the Canal off our hands, Panama gets the right to boost Canal tolls, and milk it for everything the traffic will bear. The people of Panama seem to have a vague hope the revenues will go to reducing their domestic taxes.

Why are Panamanians taxes so high? The main reason is that for the last decade Gen. Torrijos ran the government the way Nelson Rockefeller ran New York State. Spend and tax, spend and borrow. Mr. Torrijos was advised that this was the best way to build a modern economy by his friend Nelson Rockefeller, who a decade ago sent a team of experts to Panama to help him out. Panama's external debt is at least $2 billion and debt service takes 37 cents of every dollar of national revenue. For the most part, New York banks hold the paper. Mr. Rockefeller is the only American we know who exhibits genuine passion on behalf of the treaties and Mr. Torrijos.

Mr. President, Mr. Wanniski admits that the picture is not quite as he paints it. He goes on in the following manner:

We shouldn't pin this to Mr. Rockefeller, either. He was, after all, only one of a crowd of Americans who circled the globe since World War II selling a British brand of economics. It never occurred to the American Keynesians that the British Empire crumbled under the idea that public debt and high tax rates were the correct, modern formula for growth. Mr. Rockefeller was honest. He practiced what he preached. New York has not recovered, just as the former British colonies have not recovered, just as Panama has not recovered. And observe the prosperity of Egypt 22 years after Mr. Nasser grabbed Suez from the dying Pax Britannica.

Mr. President, Mr. Wanniski's presents an ingenious solution to the problem of the treaties, but it is a solution I do not think that the Senate is yet ready to accept. Further, he believes that Keynesianism is on its last laps, in the perceptions of the American people, even if the President and his advisers do not seem to think so. This entire column is very well worth reading.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article "Panama and Pax Americana" by Jude Wanniski, from the Wall Street Journal, of today, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PANAMA AND PAX AMERICANA

(By Jude Wanniski)

One of the most puzzling political phenomena of the year is the wide gap between the people and the politicians on what to do with the Panama Canal.

Who doubts that if there were provision in the Constitution for a national referendum, and one were held on the Canal treaties, that the voters would bury them? The opinion polls suggested the public opposes the treaties by roughly a two-to-one margin. Yet the representatives of the people, in the White House and in the U.S. Senate, by an astonishingly lopsided margin of roughly 70% to 30%, back the treaties, interpreted by the people as "giving away" the Canal.

Of course it's true that in a representative form of government we expect as natural the frequent discrepancies between the apparent wishes of the citizens and the votes of their delegates. This is because we expect our political delegates to weigh the intellectual arguments and passions of their constituents in addition to the numerical majority. In other words, Americans accept the idea that majority rule is not inconsistent with the notion that the squeaky wheel gets the grease.

But how can we explain this Canal voting? Not only has antitreaty sentiment among the citizenry amassed a wide numerical majority. It also commands the passion of that majority. There is scarcely any intensity among the minority of citizens who support the treaties. Senators Howard Cannon of Nevada and Paul Hatfield of Montana, for example, can hardly find any of the citizens who they represent agreeing with their protreaty votes.

AN EXPLANATION

There must be a rational explanation. And there is, I think, an honest difference of opinion here between the people and their representatives. When you come right down to it, President Carter and two-thirds of the Senate base their decision on the idea that "imperialism" is a bad thing and that the Panama Canal (which we "stole fair and square") is a symbol of American imperialism (Teddy Roosevelt, gunboat diplomacy and all that). Furthermore, they believe imperialism is antihistorical, as witness the crumbling of the Roman and British empires.

The American people, on the other hand, still think Yankee-style imperialism is not a bad thing, all things considered. By this we'd mean an extension of hegemony not by conquest, but through superior example, leadership and salesmanship. Americans more or less think our system of government is the best in the world. For 60 years the U.S. economy has been preeminent. For a good part of that time U.S. military power has protected the interests of democracy and freedom. The U.S. dollar has been the world currency. American culture has become an international language. A benign imperialism, mostly.

Nor do Americans, generally speaking, believe "imperialism" is antihistorical. On the contrary, if the world is going to be unified someone has to be in the lead. If it is not the United States it looks to the man in the street, that it will be the Soviet Union. The problem with empires, like any club, is that they are good only as long as people really want to belong to them. Previous empires broke down because the costs of belonging finally overtook the benefits.

For the last dozen years or so, unhappily, the costs of membership in the Pax Americana have been rising and the benefits have been falling. American imperialism has been getting a bad name. People are trading in dollars for yen. France and Italy are on the brink of switching to the other guys. German citizens are taking up collections to help support our tattered legions stationed there. And when Omar Torrijos rattles his Panamanian saber, our Kissingers tremble.

President Carter and two-thirds of the U.S. Senate are correct in their calculations. A shrinking Pax Americana cannot keep clients against their will. One must cut the empire down to size, smiling as we wave bye-bye to former customers. So long, Cuba. Goodbye, Vietnam and Indochina. Adios, Angola. Goodbye, Canal. Shrink the U.S. Navy to bathtub size. Ban the neutron bomb. Take what you can get at SALT, and start thinking about kissing Taiwan goodbye.

The American people are making different calculations, and seem to be saying it is too soon to throw in the towel on Yankee world leadership. Heck, we hardly had a decent run at it, and when the President and Senate reach so far down into the barrel to give away the Canal, it seems premature. Sure, if the economy continues to bleed itself with inflated currencies and debt finance we'll have no choice but to retreat, to lighten the load. But so soon?

What, though, is the alternative? It goes without saying that internal economic disintegration must be halted and real expansion renewed. But even if Mr. Carter and two-thirds of the Senate had a clue as to how this could be done, it would not be enough to boom the host country of this empire. The American failure of the last 30 years, as an imperialist host, is that it unwittingly poisoned the poor countries of the world with unfortunate advice. In the next run at a Pax Americana, this has to change.

Consider Panama. The chief reason by far that the people of Panama want the Canal is economic. In addition to getting a big bag of money to take the Canal off our hands, Panama gets the rights to boost Canal tolls and milk it for everything the traffic will bear. The people of Panama seem to have a vague hope the revenue will go to reducing their domestic taxes.

Why are Panamanian taxes so high? The main reason is that for the last decade Gen. Torrijos ran the government the way Nelson Rockefeller ran New York State. Spend and tax, spend and borrow. Mr. Torrijos was advised that this was the best way to build a modern economy by his friend, Nelson Rockefeller, who a decade ago sent a team of experts to Panama to help him out. Panama's external debt is at least $2 billion and debt service takes 37 cents of every dollar of national revenue. For the most part, New York banks hold the paper. Mr. Rockefeller is the only American we know who exhibits genuine passion on behalf of the treaties and Mr. Torrijos.

A BETTER WAY

There must be a better way of redeeming Mr. Rockefeller for his dreadful advice to his friend than giving up the Canal and a lot of money. Sen. Harry Byrd of Virginia thinks the U.S. taxpayer costs will hit $10 billion before the deed is done in the year 2000. And chances are slim that Mr. Torrijos will use the money to relieve his people of oppressive taxes. He'll buy a lot of military trinkets and build a replica of the Albany Mall.

Why not pay off Panama's $2 billion debt if the government agrees to cut tax rates by 37% (the amount of revenues now going to debt sevice). The Panamanians would love it.

We shouldn't pin this to Mr. Rockefeller, either. He was, after all, only one of a crowd of Americans who circled the globe since World War II selling a British brand of economics. It never occurred to the American Keynesians that the British Empire crumbled under the idea that public debt and high tax rates were the correct, modern formula for growth. Mr. Rockefeller was honest. He practiced what he preached. New York has not recovered, just as the former British colonies have not recovered, just as Panama has not recovered.

And observe the prosperity of Egypt 22 years after Mr. Nasser grabbed Suez from the dying Pax Britannica.

Imperialism becomes malign when the Empire disseminates poisonous advice. Lucky for us that countries like Germany, Japan, Taiwan and several others ignored our advice, and kept the Western economy buoyant.

Perhaps this partly explains why there is such a gap between the people and the politicians on the Canal. The citizenry may sense that Keynesianism is on its last laps, and we'll soon abandon the idea that an American hegemony can succeed with economic theories that destroyed the British Empire. American global leadership must surely become more attractive once we stop advising the Panamas of the world to search for happiness in debt, devaluation and taxation.

This is an optimistic view. The President and the Senate clearly do not believe any of this foolishness, which is why they vote the way they do. The people haven't given up on another run at a Pax Americana, which is why they are putting up such a fuss.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. HATCH. I appreciate the remarks of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I intend to take just a few moments to address the matter of the opinion of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia which was handed down yesterday, on an issue which has been of considerable interest to the Senate in recent days.

I must say, Mr. President, that in a way I am gratified that the court's opinion came after the consideration of this issue in the Senate, and after we had reached our own decision on it.

The time at which the amendment was laid down, before the Easter break, gave Members an opportunity to go home to their constituencies and then resume again, at the beginning of this week, the extended debate on Monday and Tuesday, and to vote on Wednesday morning. The decision which the Senate made on this matter on Wednesday corresponded with the decision and judgment reached by a majority of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit on yesterday, but our judgment was reached prior to the court's opinion, and I think the Members of the Senate participating in that consideration, who reached that independent judgment, can now refer to the court's opinion to sustain their position. Members on both sides, of course, can refer to the court's position in support of the positions they have reached on the Senate floor; but it is interesting that a very clear majority here on the floor and a 2-to-1 majority on the court of appeals reached the same conclusion.

The court of appeals affirmed the judgment in the case of Edwards versus Carter in the District Court for the District of Columbia dismissing an action brought by 60 Members of the House of Representatives. The plaintiffs sought a declaratory judgment that the Constitution requires the approval of both Houses of Congress for the disposal of U.S. property, and that the Panama Canal Zone may not, therefore, be returned to Panama by treaty.

In rejecting that contention the court decided the question directly on the merits—in part, it said:

Because these merits are so clearly against the parties asserting jurisdiction. . . .

The district court had decided the case against the plaintiffs, but it had decided it on a procedural matter, which dealt with the timing and their right to bring the suit at a particular point. But the court of appeals did not proceed on the procedural ground; they went to the merits in contention, in part, the court said:

Because these merits are so clearly against the parties asserting jurisdiction.

The court found the construction the plaintiffs were asserting for, that the approval of both Houses of Congress was necessary for the disposal of U.S. property, "to be at odds with the wording of" the property clause as well as "similar grants of power to the Congress and, most significantly, with the history of the constitutional debates."

Of course, Mr. President, those were among the very points that were asserted in the debate on the floor of the Senate on this very issue. The court observed, in its opinion, that the Committee on Foreign Relations—

Has thoroughly considered and rejected appellants' argument. That Committee reported the treaties with Panama to the full Senate by a 14 to 1 vote, and the one dissenting Senator did not dispute the power of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer United States property.

I think in fairness to Senator GRIFFIN, if I understand his position, he did not contend that it was constitutionally required that both Houses act on the transfer of property. He did contend that as a matter of policy, simply of comity between the Senate and the House of Representatives, we should decide here to send the matter over to the House for their approval as well; but he did not assert that as a constitutional argument and a constitutional requirement.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. SARBANES. Yes, I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I might add that Senator GRIFFIN did vote for our amendment, or he voted against tabling it, and he did tell me personally that he would have voted for our amendment on the merits, because it did involve a very important constitutional principle. I think the record should stand corrected on that particular point.

Mr. SARBANES. I do not quarrel with any statement the Senator has just made. I tried to be fair to Senator GRIFFIN, because this point was not raised by him, the purported constitutional question, and I recall quite clearly during the debate his stating that while he was not asserting it as a constitutional question, he felt it to be the better course as a matter of congressional policy. That is different from the position asserted by the amendment, that this was constitutionally required.

Mr. HATCH. That is true. But it was the opinion of Senator GRIFFIN expressed to me personally that that position was constitutionally sound. And although Senator GRIFFIN did not raise the issue in the committee report, he did support it here.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Maryland for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. SARBANES. In its opinion, Mr. President, the court, after reviewing the language of the Constitution, concludes that—

On its face, the property clause is intended not to restrict the scope of the treaty clause, but, rather, is intended to permit Congress to accomplish through legislation what may concurrently be accomplished through other means provided in the Constitution.

So the court, in effect, endorsed the theory of concurrent powers, and Senators will recall that the committee report, in dealing with this issue, stated:

The constitutional text is no reason to assume that the power to dispose of property may be exercised only by statute and not by treaty.

The court, in discussing the property clause, concluded that the property clause "was not intended to preclude the availability of self-executing treaties as a means for disposing of U.S. property. The history of the drafting and ratification of that clause confirms this conclusion. The debates in the constitutional convention clearly demonstrate that the property clause was intended to delineate the role to be played by the Central Government in the disposition of Western lands which were potential new States."

(Mr. RIEGLE assumed the chair.)

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, the committee report came under such an attack in the course of our debate that I think I ought to observe that on this very point on which I have just been quoting the court's opinion, the committee report stated:

The Framers evidenced no intent to preclude the United States from disposing of governmental property by treaty. A review of the discussion of the disposal-of-property clause indicates that the Framers' concern was that the Federal government have primacy over the States in resolving disputes among the States over certain Western lands—suggesting, again, an intent to delineate Federal power versus that of the States. A number of statements, indicating that territory and other property could be transferred by treaty, were made by the Framers during the debate on the treaty power after Article IV was adopted.

The court, in discussing judicial authorities, concluded that, "Those cases were persuasively supportive of the authority of the President and the Senate under the treaty clause."

Members will recall that that was the contention that was made here on the floor by this side in the debate, and it was the contention put forth in the committee report with respect to judicial authorities, where the report stated:

The Supreme Court appears to have favored a construction of the Constitution which would permit the disposal of property by self-executing treaties.

We also discussed past treaty practice. Of course, the court in that area concluded:

Past treaty practice is thoroughly consistent with the repealed intention of the framers of those clauses.

Mr. President, there were some very sharp attacks on the quality of the work of the Committee on Foreign Relations during the course of the debate. My distinguished and able colleague from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH) spoke to that matter towards the close of that debate. In fact, he then said:

Upon examination, the statements made in the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the legal basis on which this treaty has been drafted, have been shown to be well founded.

Mr. President, I think it is very clear that the majority opinion of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia fully bolsters that conclusion. The opinion has been included in full in the RECORD so that Members will have the opportunity to read it for themselves and carefully examine all of the court's reasoning.

I am gratified in two respects by this opinion: One, that it came after we finished the debate and vote here so that we had our debate straightforwardly with respect to the merits of this matter without a court opinion to make constant reference to; and, two, that the court opinion, now that it has come, fully supports the position taken in the committee report. I think it really answers the charges which were made against the quality of that work. The court's opinion fully supports the position that was taken by the clear majority of the Members of the Senate in voting to table the amendment which had been offered by the distinguished Senator from Utah.

● Mr. LAXALT. Mr. President, the Senate has recently been focusing its attention on the Panama Canal Treaty. This is the treaty which would actually turn the Panama Canal over to Panama.

It is appropriate that most of our attention be focused on the canal treaty since it is the pending business of the Senate, and because it is still important to fully debate the question of whether it is a good idea to turn such a vital asset over to another nation.

However, Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there still remains unresolved problems relating to the Neutrality Treaty, which the Senate considered and approved, but only by the narrowest of margins, I might add.

It is fair to say, Mr. President, that the Neutrality Treaty would not have been approved were it not for the agreement of the administration to accept the DeConcini reservation to the instrument of ratification. Therefore, the true effect of the DeConcini reservation is a very important question for anyone concerned about the effectiveness of the Neutrality Treaty.

It is in this effect, Mr. President, that I find of great interest recent developments with respect to the DeConcini reservation. I refer to the recent reaction of the Panamanian Government to the DeConcini reservation.

I have had a chance to review the materials that the Panamanian Government recently sent to the United Nations with respect to the Neutrality Treaty, and this material raises questions in my mind, and I am sure also in the minds of others, concerning the intentions of Panama with respect to the treaty and, particularly, with respect to the DeConcini reservation.

If Panama agrees with the nature of U.S. defense rights embodied in the DeConcini reservation, then why has it sent documents to the United Nations, which I shall submit for the RECORD, and to other heads of state raising questions about this reservation? In light of these actions by Panama, would it consider itself bound by the reservation, or would it feel free to reject it at the time we sought to exercise our supposed rights?

Mr. President, these latest developments reinforce the position that treaty opponents have taken all along, which is that U.S. defense rights were not adequately protected under the Neutrality Treaty and that there had been no meeting of the minds between the two sides on the crucial question of our defense rights after the year 2000.

Mr. President, I urge all Senators to carefully review these latest developments and consider once more the basic question of whether the proposed treaties adequately protect our interest in the continuous and efficient operation of the Panama Canal; and whether Panama agrees with the administration's interpretation of the treaty. The inescapable conclusion is in the negative of both of these questions.●

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes, as in legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SARBANES). Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Michigan is recognized to proceed for 15 minutes, as in legislative session.

EMBARGO OF MILITARY SALES TO TURKEY

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise to raise a subject of great concern to me. That is the recommendation by the President and his chief advisers to lift the arms embargo which has been in place against the country of Turkey and to begin new arms shipments in large quantities to that country. I think this is a serious error in policy judgment. I think its implications go so deep that it is a matter of great concern to me, and I think it became a matter of increasing concern to the country as a whole.

As a result of this recommendation by the administration, which I must frankly say I was surprised to have them put forward, I have written a letter to the President which I conveyed to him a couple of days ago. I now want to share with the Senate the text of that letter. It is addressed to him and is as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, D.C., April 4, 1978.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I urge you not to lift the embargo on the sale of military weapons to Turkey. Such action, if taken by your Administration, could lead to further armed aggression by the government of Turkey against the people of Cyprus and would result in a strengthening of anti-American sentiment and political forces in Greece, possibly resulting in the withdrawal of that nation from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

At present, more than 30,000 Turkish troops illegally occupy a large portion of Cyprus and daily violate both international law and United Nations' Resolution 3212 (calling for the removal of troops and the return of refugees and the reestablishment of independence for the island). Additionally, the Commission on Human Rights of the Council of Europe has determined that Turkey has been guilty of systematic killing of civilians, rape, massive looting, deportation and the separation of individuals from their property and homeland, and torture. Surely, such conduct is not worthy of the support of an Administration which has been applauded for its stand in favor of the establishment and maintenance of basic human rights.

Further military aid to Turkey will likely bring about the downfall, or swing to the Right, of the government in Athens. Considerable anti-American sentiment is already present as the result of our support of the military junta which has displaced the previous democratic government. Arms to Turkey may well dislodge the most military important NATO ally in southern Europe.

The threat of Turkey's withdrawal from NATO must be faced, but with many reservations. It is Turkey, not Greece, which daily violated the NATO Charter by its armed occupation of Cyprus. It is Greece which has shown itself to be the loyal and strong ally of the United States, not Turkey. The need for Turkey in the framework of the NATO alliance is questionable, and the relative unimportance of the country has been demonstrated with the closing of U.S. intelligence bases. Since that time, the United States and NATO have functioned quite well, gaining necessary data through alternative means. It is the naval bases and support facilities of Greece which are important, not the Asian land mass of Turkey.

The actions of Turkey violate the United Nations Charter, Chapter I, which calls for the peaceful settlement of international disputes and prohibits the use of threats of force. Turkey violates with its military activities the First Article of the NATO Charter, which also requires peaceful settlement of disputes and the restraint of force by one member against another. And the trampling of human rights and the colonial activities of Turkey in Cyprus are in violation of Public Law 94–329 which forbids security assistance to nations which engage in the gross destruction of basic human rights.

We have heard that suicide squads are forming on Cyprus. The intent of the people is clear: self-determination. Continued support for the illegal occupation threatens to turn that beleaguered island into another Palestine. Bloodletting begets bloodletting. Terror gives birth to terror. The solution to the problems which plague that island and its people, Greek and Turk alike, is a negotiated settlement with full respect for the rights of either party. It is toward that end that the United States should work. Our role should be that of peacemaker, not arms merchant.

Sincerely,

DONALD W. RIEGLE, Jr.,
U.S. Senator.

It is signed by myself and conveyed, as I said, to the President.

In addition to that, Mr. President, there are several other things at stake here, not the least of which is the fact that the Carter administration, when it was the Carter campaign in 1976, was very clearcut and very straightforward on this issue. The problem is that the position which was taken at that time was fundamentally at odds with what has just been announced as the new position. I think this change in position is really unacceptable. It is unwarranted in terms of the facts of the case, which I tried to outline in the letter that I just made reference to. But, more than that, if the President hopes to have credibility, if his foreign policy advisers hope to have credibility on major issues with Members of the Senate and people across the country, it seems to me that they have to stand firm and foursquare on thoughtful, well-reasoned policy statements and pledges that they made a few short months ago in the Presidential campaign when they were seeking election.

If we were to follow the advice of the administration and suspend the arms embargo, we should certainly undermine the rule of law in the discussion of our foreign policy. It would certainly raise the most serious kinds of doubts about arms commitment, recently greatly reemphasized by Carter on the subject of human rights. It would certainly call into question our national commitment to the control of U.S. arms sales abroad. It also clearly would make far more difficult the achievement of a Cyprus settlement and a just resolution of the refugee problem.

It is clear to me, also, that it could only encourage the growth of anti-American forces in Greece. I think it is fair to say that it would make virtually impossible the normalization of relationships among Turkey, Greece, and Cyprus, and between each of the three of them and the United States.

Finally, as I was saying a moment ago, it seems to me if this were done, if the administration, in a sense, violates the pledges and the word it gave just months ago on this issue in the course of the campaign, it cuts a great big hole in what is left of the credibility of the administration in the area of foreign policy. I do not want to see that happen.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks, two news items, the first being an editorial in the New York Times, dated Friday, March 31, 1978, entitled 'The Way Back From Cyprus."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. RIEGLE. The second is from Time magazine dated April 3, 1978, an article entitled "A Dying See." I ask unanimous consent to have that printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. RIEGLE. The administration has its hands full with a number of controversial issues at the moment—not the least of which is the Panama Canal Treaty ratification fight, which we have been involved in here earlier today in debate, and the energy package, which is a difficult one. We have the arms package from the Middle East coming at us. We have the SALT talks, which may pretty well produce a move later in the year to act in that area. We have the Humphrey-Hawkins legislation, labor law reform legislation, the need to reorganize CETA legislation, CSC legislation. The list goes on and on of critical items that are going to have come before the U.S. Senate for action.

For the administration at this point to change direction in terms of what they have said in the past and what would otherwise be consistent with the basic policy positions they have taken on fundamental issues like human rights and arms sales abroad, and the questions of equity and justice, just does not make any sense at all. So I hope that anyone who represents the President in foreign policy who would come across these remarks in the RECORD or might be within earshot at the moment, would understand that they are taking on a fight in this area that they may very well not win. But that is less important than the fact that they are taking on a fight that they ought not to be taking on.

They are on the wrong side of this issue. It is inconsistent with everything else they are saying. I view it as an inexcusable breach of confidence. Their supporters were out there months ago, in the fall of 1976, supporting the Carter campaign because of their forthright position on the Cyprus issue, and they are now left to try to understand and explain this sudden complete change of direction. It does not make sense.

It is bad policy and I am deeply troubled about it. Therefore, I shall be involved, with others who feel likewise, in bringing to bear all the strength and muscle we have in rejecting, turning aside this recommended policy initiative by the country.

I hope that the Secretary of State and the President and others will reconsider, while they have time to reconsider, the meaning and the message of this particular step that they have proposed. I think that we find ourselves at a point right now where, unless something is done to shift this direction, the administration has put itself in a head-on collision course with its own past commitments, as well as most of its best friends here in the Senate of the United States.

This is the sort of sad moment that we find ourselves in at the present time. I hope a way can be found to resolve it. But clearly, if we are going to keep faith with the basic principles that the administration has put forward on the fundamental questions of equity and justice and humane decisions and just treatment for people around the world, this decision is going to have to change. If it is not changed by the administration, those of us who feel strongly about it are going to have to try to change it here. Speaking as one Senator, I am going to do all I can to try to bring that about.

EXHIBIT 1

THE WAY BACK FROM CYPRUS

Since 1974, when Turkish troops, using American weapons, occupied two-fifths of the island of Cyprus, relations between Ankara and and Washington have been sour. Congress has limited the flow of additional arms until Turkey pulls back its forces; successive Turkish Governments have refused to define their conditions for withdrawal under such pressure. Both the United States and Turkey will end up losers if no way can be found to break out of this bind. Turkey could point the way by revealing its proposals for a Cyprus settlement.

Turkey's invasion was scarcely unprovoked. The 18 percent Turkish minority on Cyprus had never been well treated by the Greek majority. And in July 1974, a coup brought to power a hard-line Greek-Cyprot faction that seemed likely to take even less account of Turkish-Cypriot rights. Although the insurgent regime lasted only a few days, that was long enough to precipitate Ankara's invasion.

Ankara has reacted to the limit on arms sales—$175 million this year—by sharply restricing American use of NATO facilities in Turkey. Under steady pressure from Greek-Americans. Congress has remained firms. But the Ford Administration strongly deplored the Congressional restrictions as harmful to NATO—and thus caused the Greek Government to curtail its military cooperation with NATO. The Carter Administration has tried to straddle the issue. It has continued discussions for a defense agreement that would substantially increase American military aid to Turkey. But it has implied that it would not conclude the agreement until there had been progress on Cyprus. Early this month, Secretary of State Vance was explicit: Washington would not move, he told Congress, until it had examined proposals for Cyprus promised by Turkey's new Prime Minister, Bulent Ecevit.

More intolerable "linkage," responded Mr. Ecevit—this time from the Administration, not merely from Congress. He countered with reverse linkage: no Cyprus proposals until the heat is off. That message, and subsequent hints that Turkey might withdraw its half-million men from NATO's command and even sign a nonaggression pact with Moscow, caused a high-level American delegation to hurry to Ankara this week to attempt to set things right.

That won't be easy. Strong sentiment continues in Congress that Turkish concessions are necessary before normal military relations can resume. That sentiment is justified. Turkey broke United States law and violated the spirit of its alliance when it used American weapons to expel Greek Cypriots from their homes and farms. Having made its point, Ankara should now fall back. Greek Cypriots—and Greece—realize there can be no return to the old arrangements on Cyprus. They acknowledge that Turkish Cypriots should enjoy nearly complete autonomy, including a territorial zone of their own, but one roughly proportionate to the size of the Turkish-Cypriot population.

There is every reason to believe that both Prime Minister Ecevit and the Turkish military leadership would like to pull back. Because the Turkish occupation force is the central issue in contention, the first moves must come from Ankara. Since the issue continues to be the most explosive one in Turkey's politics, such a move would be painful. But Mr. Ecevit is in a strong parliamentary position; unlike his predecessor, he does not depend upon ultranationalists for his majority.

Turkish dissociation from NATO would be costly to the United States. But it is the Turks who should calculate the benefits of full participation in NATO; it is they who face the risks of weakened ties to the West. Meanwhile, those would support NATO by lifting the restrictions on arms to Turkey should remember that Cyprus is just as emotion-wrenching an issue in Greece. It would not strengthen the alliance to appease Turkey at the expense of turmoil in Greece.

EXHIBIT 2

A DYING SEE: PATRIARCHATE FADES IN TURKEY

He bears ancient and august titles: Ecumenical Patriarch and Archbishop of the "New Rome" in Constantinople, the mother church of Eastern Orthodoxy since the 4th century. He is the symbolic leader of the world's 85 million Orthodox Christians. Yet when His Holiness Demetrios I presides over the Sunday Eucharist at the Church of St. George in Istanbul, the giant chandeliers cast their feeble light across ranks of empty pews. The congregation numbers only a dozen or so worshipers, most of them elderly. The historic see, once the center of half the Christian world is dying.

The Ecumencial Patriarchate has been caught up in the latest phase of the long-standing feud between Turk and Greek. After the Byzantine capital fell to the Ottomans in 1453, Constantinople (now Istanbul) became the heart of a once vast community of Christian Greeks, or Rum* (rhymes with tomb), in Turkey. Terrible cruelty set in with the 1821–29 war, in which Greece won its independence from Turkey. During that period Patriarch Gregory V was hanged at the gate of his palace. Even so, the Rum still numbered 1.5 million by World War I. Today only 7,000 are left.

Physical attacks are now rare. Still, the Patriarch and his parishioners have suffered continual harassment. Last May, when 150 youths broke into the courtyard of the Patriarch's residence to shout Greeks-go-home slogans, it took local police half an hour to answer calls for help. Greeks tell of job discrimination, unjustified evictions, expropriation of property, telephone threats and demands for "protection" money. Few would remain if the law allowed them to leave with their wealth. Says one: "All we have is tied up in the business. We have sent our daughter to university in Athens, and I hope she doesn't come back." Most youths do not.

Last year the Turkish government slapped new taxes on all 50 Greek churches and 28 parish schools, threatening them with financial collapse. Church carpets, linens and tableware were attached for tax default, even at the Patriarch's quarters. Buildings have deteriorated because the regime must approve all repairs costing more than $13.

The Ecumenical Patriarchate has had great difficult operating as an international Orthodox center. Turkey has shut down the patriarchate's press and its once renowed seminary. The regime has tightly controlled overseas travels of the Rum clergy. Last September, officials even yanked the passport of Metropolian Meliton, the see's chief envoy, just as he was leaving for talks at the Vatican. Meliton is also engaged in crucial negotiations for a historic Great Synod of the world's Orthodox bishops.

When a new Patriarch had to be chosen in 1972, the government exercised its power and vetoed the strongest candidates. That is why the 58-year-old Demetrios, a man with the qualities of a simple parish priest, was selected, though he was the junior archbishop. He thereby assumed jurisdiction over millions of Greeks in the West and became "first among equals" of the Orthodox patriarchs.

The worsening conditions in his see led to outcries in recent months from Eastern Orthodox and Roman Catholic prelates in the U.S., and the American State Department may have indicated its concern to the newly installed regime of Premier Bülent Ecevit. Finally Ecevit met with patriarchal leaders on March 7 and two days later with Greece's Premier Constantine Caramanlis. As a result, Ecevit, who raised the issue of similar grievances of ethnic Turks in parts of Greece, is now promising a new era of moderation in Turkish treatment of the Rum. The list of proposed reforms clearly defines the range of past harassment. It includes freedom to repair buildings, possible reopening of the press and seminary, an end to the new church tax and removal of travel restrictions on the clergy.

That gives the Ecumenical Patriarchate some breathing room, but the prospects for its long-range survival remain dim. One day there may be no Rum youth entering the priesthood and no community for the church to serve. Some Americans have proposed that Demetrios move the holy see to one of three sites in Greece already under his jurisdiction: Rhodes, Crete or the spectacular monastery complex atop Mount Athos. Constantinople's historic rival, the huge Orthodox Church of Russia, might offer a locale in a Soviet satellite country like Rumania or Bulgaria. But such a shift might merely mean a worse form of oppression. Demetrios has good reason to try to hold on. If he forsakes the "New Rome," the ancient patriarchates of Alexandria and Antioch might refuse to recognize him as the Ecumenical Patriarch.

*From an ancient word for Byzantine "Romans."

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RIEGLE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now may be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, as in legislative session, not to extend beyond 30 minutes, with statements therein limited to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorom.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OIL IMPORT FEES WOULD CAUSE RAMPANT INFLATION

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, 2 days ago I received a study I had requested from the Congressional Research Service in regard to the economic impact of an oil import fee of $5 per barrel that has been suggested by high-ranking members of the administration.

The study showed that imposition of such an import tax could have a devastating effect on the economy. It could cause an increase of between 1.5 percent to 2.6 percent in the inflation rate. It could put an annual burden of between $19.3 billion to $33.8 billion on consumers. It could cause an immediate increase in gasoline prices of between 7 to 12 cents per gallon.

Members of the New England congressional caucus came out in opposition to the import fees the same day and cited the tremendous impact it would have on their region due to the heavy use of fuel oil.

Within 24 hours of the release of the CRS study, I was furnished with a copy of a letter that the president of Southern California Edison, one of the Nation's largest electric utilities, had written to Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger on the same subject.

In the letter the utility president points out the fact that imposition of the import fee could mean an increased cost to its customers of $155 million in the rest of 1978 alone. This is due to stringent air pollution agreements that result in heavy use of imported oil in the firm's generating plants.

Mr. President, I think this is only the tip of the iceberg. As more and more Americans realize what this ill-advised proposal could result in, it will become clear that our economy cannot stand such a burden. I urge the administration to remove the import fee from its list of options.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter to Secretary Schlesinger be printed the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON CO.,
Rosemead, Calif., March 30, 1978.

Dr. JAMES R. SCHLESINGER,
Secretary, Department of Energy, White House, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: It has come to our attention that Federal Reserve Board Chairman G. William Miller and Treasury Secretary Blumenthal have recently stated that the President may impose an import fee on foreign source crude oil products of $5 per barrel. The Executive imposition of an import quota system has also been discussed as being under consideration. We understand that these suggestions are premised on the need for a significant reduction of the use of foreign-source petroleum or products. While we would applaud this premise as a national goal, it should be brought to your attention that such a program may have an unintended adverse economic impact on our customers. Therefore, we respectfully suggest that before such a program be implemented by executive action, the following facts and suggestions be considered.

Southern California Edison Company (Edison) had dedicated its electric utility facilities to provide necessary and essential public utility electric service to nearly eight million residents of Central and Southern California. This service is provided through the generation of electricity from a variety of energy sources, including hydroelectric facilities as well as those fuels by coal, nuclear, oil and gas, with oil and gas providing an estimated 77% of currently installed capacity. This amounts to 9842 megawatts of oil-fired generating facilities, most of which are located in Southern California's South Coast Air Quality Management District.

The operations of Edison's oil- and gas-fueled plants have, for many years, been subject to stringent air pollution control regulations which now require use of low sulfur fuel oil containing not more than 0.25 percent sulfur by weight. Edison's requirement for very low sulfur fuel oil has steadily increased as a result of a decline in natural gas supply. Oil represented only 20 percent of the total oil and gas consumed by Edison in 1970 while it is estimated that for 1978, oil use at our generating plants will represent approximately 75 percent of the total oil and gas burned or nearly 41 million barrels of very low sulfur fuel oil (0.25 percent or less). Edison projects that it will utilize approximately 50 million barrels of low sulfur fuel oil in 1979.

Due to the lack of adequate supplies of domestic low sulfur crude oil from which environmentally acceptable very low sulfur fuels can be manufactured for electric generation, Edison is highly dependent upon imported low sulfur crude oil for domestic processing into very low sulfur residual oil, and on direct imports of very low sulfur residual oil. Alaska North Slope crude oil, while in abundant supply, is too high in sulfur content to permit refining by existing facilities to meet air quality restrictions. In order to produce adequate supplies of low sulfur fuel oil complying with air quality regulations from Alaska North Slope crude oil, it will require the addition and operation of new desulferization facilities at existing California refineries which, in most cases, would not be permitted under the existing Clean Air Act relative to areas which exceed National Ambient Air Quality Standards as administered by the Environmental Protection Agency and other air quality control agencies having jurisdiction.

Therefore, an import fee alone cannot alter Edison's dependency upon foreign oil and, hence, would have little influence in discouraging our imports. Because of the fuel use would only serve to increase the financial burden on our customers whose rates have doubled and, in some cases, tripled, over the last five years due to the increased cost of foreign oil. The estimated impact of a $5 per barrel import fee would amount to, for the remainder of the year, an additional cost for our customers of approximately $155 million.

If import fees or quota systems on oil imports are imposed, parallel modifications in the environmental controls that will permit modification of existing refineries to desulfurize domestic crude oil are required to replace foreign low sulfur feedstock. Accordingly, Edison respectfully suggesst the following modifications to either an import fee or quota program which, Edison believes, will treat all consumers of oil equally on a nationwide basis, and which Edison can support.

Specific goals should be established for reduction of oil imports. As an example, if the target is to reduce oil imports 4.5 million barrels per day by 1985 or a reduction of about 640,000 barrels per day per year or 8% per year, it should be prorated nationally. Of this, about 105,000 barrels per day of fuel oil should apply to California electric generation. Therefore, crude oil desulfurization capacity in California should expand by that amount or new refinery construction in District 5 should be authorized to meet this need.

On this basis, Edison could support such a program. If such cannot be met, Edison would be compelled to ask for an exemption. Absent incorporation of these suggested modifications, Edison would strongly support a provision under either an oil import fee or quota program which would exempt low sulfur crude oil when specifically imported for refining into very low sulfur fuel oil, and very low sulfur fuel oil imported directly for use by utilities to provide electric service provided: (1) such oil is required to meet air pollution regulations; and (2) such low sulfur oil supply is not available domestically.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM R. GOULD.

PLAQUE MARKING ORIGINAL LOCATION OF LIBRARY OF CONGRESS—S. RES. 430

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have a resolution at the desk, cosponsored by the distinguished majority leader, to authorize the installation of a historical plaque in the Senate wing. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may proceed to its immediate consideration at this time.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what is the request?

Mr. BAKER. It is a resolution to authorize the installation of a historical plaque denoting a particular space in the Senate.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. It has a provision that precludes Senators from castigating the leadership at any time. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. Is there an environmental impact study?

Mr. BAKER. As a matter of fact, and for the benefit of the record and the edification of my colleague from Alabama, the environmental impact was severe at the time; because this plaque is to designate the location of the first Library of Congress, which happens to be the space my office now occupies in the Capitol and which was the site in which the British troops set fire to the building on August 27, 1814. So the environmental impact was very severe, indeed.

Mr. ALLEN. I accept the explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 430) providing for a plaque to be placed in the Capitol marking the original location of the Library of Congress.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, in view of the colloquy that occurred, I ask that the clerk read the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Commission on Art and Antiquities of the United States Senate is authorized and directed to procure and have placed in the Senate wing of the Capitol a plaque marking the original location therein of the Library of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TIME FOR VOTE ON FARM BILL CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the majority leader and the minority leader about the 11 o'clock vote on the farm bill. I was unaware that that time had been set. My plane will land at 11 o'clock.

I wonder whether the vote could be extended enough so that some of us could get here and vote at, say, 11:20 or 11:25—something like that. I have spoken with Senator CRANSTON about it, and he thought something could be worked out.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. It would be agreeable to me, under the circumstances, to ask that the rollcall vote which will occur at 11 a.m. on Monday, under the previous order, be a 20-minute vote, rather than a usual 15-minute rollcall vote.

The quality of mercy is not strained. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. With the understanding that the warning bell will sound at the expiration of 12½ minutes, under the rollcall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TROOP WITHDRAWAL FROM SOUTH KOREA

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I have long had serious reservations about the President's decision to withdraw U.S. ground troops from South Korea in 4 to 5 years. The North Korean military buildup, concern about the security of South Korea, and the need for continued stability and peace on the Korean peninsula have all led me to the conclusion that the troop withdrawal policy is unwise.

The President may soon be deciding whether or not to delay for a year the beginning of the pullout of U.S. troops. I urge him to postpone the withdrawal indefinitely.

The President will find it difficult this year to arouse support for the large increases in military aid to South Korea required by the troop withdrawals. The alleged corruption of some Members of Congress by South Korean nationals has created an unfavorable climate for billion dollar aid packages for South Korea, to say the least.

I think it is unwise to link the issue of U.S. support for the security of South Korea with the issue of alleged bribery of U.S. officials, as reprehensible as that activity may be. But the so-called "Koreagate scandal" and aid to South Korea are linked in the mind of the public. To proceed with withdrawals with no assurance that U.S. aid will be forthcoming would be destabilizing and counterproductive to peace.

The military buildup of North Korea is well-documented by the administration's own reports to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. One unclassified report states definitively, "North Korea continues to threaten the stability of the region." North Korea's aggressive posture requires strength and perseverance on the part of the United States—not withdrawal. Reports indicate that the balance of power has shifted to North Korea since 1970.

I think, Mr. President, it might be interesting for the Senate to hear about a visit my office received from a religious group concerned about human rights in South Korea. This group has missionaries in South Korea who are well integrated into the society and who know the country well. The group told me it opposes U.S. troop withdrawals from South Korea. Why? Because its members feel that the United States will lose leverage with the South Korean Government and will not be able to exert serious influence on its human rights policies. They were also concerned that a heightened sense of external threat might cause the government to restrict even further the freedoms that do exist in South Korea. I think these are valid concerns.

Reasons for opposing the troop withdrawal abound. But the most important is that the U.S. long-term interest centers on maintaining a strong deterrent to the North's ambitions and keeping the peace on the Korean peninsula.

I have long had reservations about the proposed troop withdrawals from South Korea, and I have personally expressed this view to both the President and the Secretary of State.

HERBERT PELL, COURAGE, AND THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, CLAIBORNE PELL is an extremely able and respected colleague, and is also a good friend of mine. But it was only recently that I learned of a courageous stand which his father, Herbert Pell, took as a member of the United Nations War Crimes Commission from 1943 to 1945. An article by Michael Blayney in the American Historical Jewish Quarterly entitled "Herbert Pell, War Crimes, and the Jews," recounted the story.

Herbert Pell was appointed to the War Crimes Commission in June of 1943 by President Roosevelt. The Commission had been established less than a year earlier, and was charged to investigate war crimes which had been committed against members of the United Nations. It was not only instructed to report those crimes to the United States, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union, but was also to try and identify the guilty parties.

In joining the Commission, Herbert Pell felt strongly that all those directly responsible for the commission of war crimes should be punished; not only those Nazis at the upper echelons of rank.

The State Department was less than enthusiastic about the presence of Herbert Pell on the War Crimes Commission. Pell felt strongly that the Commission should adopt a position which would consider crimes against Axis nationals committed by the Nazis as war crimes, a definition which would have meant that the genocide then occurring in Nazi Germany would be handled as a war crime. Secretary of State Hull felt that the Commission should restrict itself to a fact finding role, and should not concern itself with the trial of alleged war criminals.

Pell wished to urge the War Crimes Commission to take steps to punish those engaged in the destruction of the Jewish race, but was unable to obtain any instructions along those lines from the State Department. President Roosevelt himself, however, gave Pell the instructions for which he had been hoping. The President wrote:

> There can be little reason for disagreement on the general proposition that Germany and her satellites should be required to answer for atrocities against the Jews . . . Presumably it (the Commission's jurisdiction) would extend to any cases arising during the War period . . .

Senator PELL's father, Herbert Pell pushed vigorously for the Commission to consider "crimes against humanity" as war crimes. These crimes against humanity were to be crimes committed "against any person because of their race or religion." His efforts were not in vain.

The Commission adopted the strong position which he called for, and further proposed that military tribunals be used in the trials of alleged war criminals. This would allow for much greater expediency in bringing those charged to trial.

Pell's outspoken posture and his status as a Presidential appointee rather than a State Department employee did not endear him to those at the Department. Pell had great difficulty receiving his instructions from the Department, and was also a victim of the mixed loyalty his staff was wont to show. The Department worked for his ouster, and finally achieved that end in January of 1945.

Once removed from public service, Pell did not shy away from repeating his stance that all those directly responsible for genocide should be tried. The day after Pell's removal from the Commission, the New York Post reported that Pell may have been fired because of his desire to avenge the Jews.

Public support for Pell's position grew strong, and on February 1, 1945, Secretary of State Grew issued a statement which said in effect that the persecution of the Jews would indeed be considered as a war crime.

Herbert Pell had won. His courageous stand, with virtually no support from the State Department, had now become a matter of Department policy.

Mr. President, as I read of the courageous actions against genocide by the father of Senator CLAIBORNE PELL, I was reminded that the Senate this year has the opportunity to take a strong stand against this horrible crime. The Genocide Convention is a treaty which would make genocide an international crime, and for 30 years now, the treaty has been awaiting the action of the Senate.

As I said over and over again, every President, President Truman, President Eisenhower, President Kennedy, President Johnson, President Nixon, President Ford, and President Carter have all called for its ratification.

I hope that this year, the Senate will at long last take the courageous step of ratifying this treaty, and show that 33 years later, we abhor the crime of genocide just as vigorously as Herbert Pell did then. I urge the Senate to ratify the Genocide Convention as soon as possible.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT QUARTERLY REPORTS

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Federal Election Campaign Act requires that quarterly reports from Senate candidates and their political committees must be filed on April 10, July 10, October 10 and January 31.

The Secretary of the Senate's Office of Public Records will be open Monday, April 10, 1978 from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. to accept the April 10, 1978 report as required by that act. The Public Records Office is located in room A–623, 119 D Street, NE., Washington, D.C. 20510.

Reports submitted after the close of business may be placed in a clearly identified depository located outside the door of room A–623. Additional information may be obtained from that office at (202) 224–0329.

PROGRAM

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, on Monday, the Senate will convene at 8:45 a.m.

After the prayer—there being no orders at this time for the recognition of Senators—with unanimous consent, there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 9 a.m., with statements therein limited to 3 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. At 9 a.m., the Senate will take up the conference report on the farm bill, under the previous agreement, with a 2-hour limitation on debate, and a vote to occur at 11 a.m.

After the disposition of the conference report on the farm bill, the Senate will resume consideration of the treaty, at which time the pending question will be on the adoption of the amendment by Mr. HATCH. Is that not correct,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Rollcall votes will occur on Monday, beginning as early as 11 o'clock in the morning.

Throughout the week, the Senate will continue its action on the treaty. Through Thursday of next week, the Senate will remain in the Committee of the Whole and will continue its action on the treaty, with debate thereon and amendments thereto. At the close of business on Thursday, the Senate will go out of the Committee of the Whole.

On Friday, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the resolution of ratification, and rollcall votes are expected daily.

On Monday, Mr. DOLE will be recognized at 1 p.m. to call up his amendment, and on Wednesday, Mr. STEVENS will be recognized at 1 p.m. to call up his amendment.

RECESS UNTIL 8:45 A.M., MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1978

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, in accordance with the request of the distinguished majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate, in executive session, do now recess until Monday next at 8:45 a.m.

There being no objection, at 4:35 p.m., the Senate, in executive session, recessed until Monday, April 10, 1978, at 8:45 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 7, 1978:

AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

David Bronheim, of the District of Columbia, to be an Assistant Administrator of the Agency for International Development, vice Frederick T. Van Dyk, resigned.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

Anita Miller, of New Jersey, to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for the remainder of the term expiring June 30, 1978, vice Thomas R. Bomar, resigned.

Anita Miller, of New Jersey, to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for the term of 4 years expiring June 30, 1982 (reappointment).

THE JUDICIARY

Cristobal C. Duenas, of Guam, to be judge of the district court of Guam for a term of 8 years (reappointment).

Len J. Paletta, of Pennsylvania, to be U.S. district judge for the western district of Pennsylvania, vice Herbert P. Sorg, retired.

Leonard B. Sand, of New York, to be U.S. district judge for the southern district of New York, vice Charles M. Metzner, retired.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Peter J. McLaughlin, of Delaware, to be U.S. marshal for the district of Delaware for the term of 4 years, vice John J. Smith.

Glen E. Robinson, of California, to be U.S. marshal for the northern district of California for the term of 4 years, vice Frank X. Klein, Jr.

FEDERAL COUNCIL ON THE AGING

The following-named persons to be members of the Federal Council on the Aging for the terms indicated:

For a term expiring December 19, 1979:

Nelson H. Cruikshank, of the District of Columbia, vice Seldon G. Hill, term expired.

For a term expiring June 5, 1979:

Hobart Calvin Jackson, Sr., of Pennsylvania, vice Frell M. Owl, term expired.

Walter L. Moffett, of Idaho, vice Lennie-Marie P. Tolliver, term expired.

James T. Sykes, of Wisconsin, vice Frank B. Henderson, term expired.

For a term expiring June 5, 1980:

Fannie B. Dorsey, of Kentucky, vice Nelson Hale Cruikshank, term expired.

Mary A. Marshall, of Virginia, vice Hobart C. Jackson, term expired.

Bernice L. Neugarten, of Illinois, vice Sharon Masaye Fujii, term expired.

Fernando Manuel Torres-Gil, of California, vice Bernard E. Nash, term expired.

Wesley C. Uhlman, of Washington, vice Garson Meyer, term expired.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PRESERVE A SCENIC RIVER

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, April 7, 1978

● Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues a recent editorial from the Bethlehem, Pa., Globe-Times entitled, "Preserve a Scenic River."

The National Parks Subcommittee of the House Interior Committee will shortly be marking up an omnibus parks and rivers bill. I am sponsoring a provision of the bill which will provide adequate protection for the free-flowing Delaware, and settle the Tocks Island Dam controversy. The reasoning of the Globe-Times is persuasive, and I trust the House will support those of us who have cosponsored this legislation.

[From the Bethlehem (Pa.) Globe-Times, Mar. 28, 1978]

PRESERVE A SCENIC RIVER

The debate on the fate of the Delaware River has been with us for a long time. John F. Kennedy was president when the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers was directed by Congress to build an earth and rock dam across the river a few miles upstream from the Delaware Water Gap.

Today's youngest voters were babies when, in 1962, it was decided that the best way to provide flood protection, water supply and hydroelectric power was to dam the last free-flowing river in the Northeast.

A narrow strip of scrubland in the middle of the river, Tocks Island, was to be the original site of this dam. In the past 16 years, it has lent its name to a controversy that has touched on the issues of conservation, environmental engineering, and the basic question of whether this region of the country must now stop growing.

Voters, legislatures and governors of four states have argued over whether to build the Tocks Island Dam. The U.S. Congress and federal agencies have allocated funds to do studies and buy land over the years.

Through it all, the longer view has had difficulty winning a hearing. Only until the early 1970s did anyone consider the negative environmental impact of the dam and its 30-mile long lake. And only recently are there advocates of the viewpoint that the area affected by any Tocks-type project must include the wide basin stretching from the Catskill Mountains in New York to the salt-water bay off the State of Delaware, nearly 300 miles away.
